At a Christian, do despise.

That's a feller see;

There was little Pete, a "Pach" boy,
Which he had around the camp,
In Arizona, in '70,
An' I've learned that smoking scamp.

JOHN YATES BEALL.

In Trial and Execution for Piracy—An Interesting Leaf from the History of the Rebellion.

(From Harper's Magazine.)

The young Virginian, an officer of the Confederate army, was hung as pirate and spy on Governor's Island, New York harbor, Feb. 24, 1865. The sentence was just, and its execution a necessary part of the discipline of war. Yet now that years have elapsed, and we can review the past without that terrible feeling which then made our hearts burn within us, there is something worthy of recognition in the story of this man, who, young, wealthy, and educated, threw himself, as it were, into the jaws of death from sincere, though mistaken love for his native country.

John Yates Beall was a native of Jefferson county, Virginia. He graduated at the University of Virginia, Charlottesville, and at the breaking out of the rebellion owned a large plantation in his native county; his property was estimated at $1,500,000, and in addition he was said to be the heir of an estate in England. In the earliest days of the war Beall organized Company G, Second Virginia Infantry, and his regiment afterward formed part of the original "Stonewall" Brigade, under Stoneman's command. It took part in many battles, but it was distinguished especially in the practical expedition upon the islands of Lake Erie which brings him within the range of our subject—an expedition which ended in disaster and death. It will be remembered along the lake shore that the "Detroit," and Cleveland were filled with excitement; the citizens paraded the streets by night, and visions of a piratical craft sailing boldly in and all eyes. Excitement Ohio had sent into the field regiment after regiment beyond her quota, but her northern frontier was being exposed, and it seemed an easy matter to sail across from Canada and pounce down her towns. Looking back upon it now, it still seems easy; and yet it was never done, although Canada swarmed with conspirators, under the leadership of Jacob Thompson, secret agent of the Confederate Government.
The United States had but one war vessel on the lakes, the Michigan, a paddlewheel steamer carrying eighteen guns.
The capture of this boat would enable a small body of men to carry destruction from one end of the lake to the other.
In September, 1864, the Michigan was lying off Johnson's Island, Sandusky Bay, which had been used since 1862 as a depot for prisoners of war; here were confining 2,480 men, all with the exception of about one hundred, officers of the Confederacy, enough to command an army of 80,000 men. The little island was naturally uppermost in the thoughts of the rebel officers in Canada. It was near at hand, a steamer could run across the night, and in the winter a land force could attack it, for the ice was strong, and nowhere was there more than five miles between island and island, stretching like stepping-stones across the lake from Pelee to the Ohio mainland. No other person was on an exposed frontier like this, and were it not for the guards of the Michigan, a rescue might be effected; the Michigan, therefore, must be captured.

the group, suddenly four men came toward the boat, and in the absence of the captain and command of the boat, and leveled revolvers at his head; at the same moment the black trunk was opened, and the whole party armed themselves with navy revolvers, bowie-knives and hatchets, and took possession of the defenseless boat. The course was then changed, and after cruising about at random for some time the pirates turned back to one of the islands.— Middie Bass—and stopped at the dock.
While here the Island Queen, a steamer plying between Sandusky and the islands, came alongside, and, suspecting nothing, threw out a plank in order to land some freight. Instantly the pirates warmed up her sides, calling upon the captain to surrender; shots were fired—apparently more for the purpose of intimidation than for any real injury—knives and hatchets were held over the passengers, among whom were thirty or forty one-hundred-days' men on their way to Toledo to be mustered out. The pirates were few in number, but they were well armed, and held both stencers at their mercy. The captain of the Island Queen made sturdy resistance, endeavoring in vain to cut the ropes that bound his boat to the Parsons; and the engineer, refusing to obey the orders of the pirates, was shot in the cheek. Resistance was evidently useless; the passengers were put into the hold, with a guard over them, and the captain was asked if many strangers had come to Sandusky that morning, and if there was any excitement there. After some delay and discussion among themselves the pirates decided to exact an oath of secrecy for twenty-four hours from the women and citizen passengers, and allow them to go on shore, together with the hundred-days men, which they paroled, and then the two steamers, lashed together, started out toward Sandusky, the captain of the Island Queen being retained, with the hope that he could be forced to act as pilot. When four or five miles out the Island Queen was scuttled and abandoned, and the Parsons set at liberty.
A debate sprung up among the pirates as to whether or not they should run into Sandusky Bay; evidently something had failed them, some one had disappointed them. At length the captain was again put into the hold, the boat's speed was slackened, and she was kept cruising up and down outside as if waiting for a signal.

Chief in command of these raiders was John Yates Beall; his appearance and manner rendered him conspicuous among the others, who are described, in the language of one who saw them, as "a mean, low-lived set; Burke, the second in command, being a perfect desperado." In the report of Jacob Thompson, secret agent of the Confederacy in Canada, a document belonging to the rebel archives, the whole plot is related.
There were two parts, the first being the expedition by water under Beall, and the second a conspiracy on shore, by means of which the officers of the Michigan were to be thrown off their guard, so that upon a given signal Beall could seize rapidly in, surprise them, and capture the boat. A cannon-shot sent over Johnson's Island was to tell the prisoners that the hour of rescue had come; Sandusky was to be attacked, and after horses had been secured, the prisoners were to mount and make for Cleveland, the boats co-operating, and from Cleveland strike across Ohio for Wheeling and the Virginia border. The key to the whole movement was the capture of the Michigan.

The plot on shore was headed by a Confederate officer named Cole. As has been related, Beall formed his part with equal success; and had the other head possessed equal capacity, no doubt the plan would have been successful, and the whole North taken by surprise at this daring raid and rescue upon a hitherto peaceful and unguarded border.
The 2,000 young officers riding for their lives through the heart of Ohio, where there was no organized force to oppose them, would have seemed like a phantom band to the astonished inhabitants.
Even the famous raid of John Morgan, well-remembered in the great red-brick farm-houses of the central counties, would have been eclipsed by this flying troop, the flower of the Southern army.
On the lake Beall would have held the whole coast at his mercy, and the familiar old Michigan, turned into a pirate's craft, would have carried terror into every harbor.

But a short respite was afforded, granted by President Lincoln to enable the mother to see her son; but on the afternoon of the 24th of February the execution took place upon Governor's Island, New York harbor, the prisoner responding to the prayers of the Episcopal service for the dying, but otherwise remaining apparently unmoved. One item in the newspaper accounts of the day is worthy of note. During the whole of the long proceedings before the execution the young man kept his eyes steady fixed upon the southern horizon, as if looking toward the very heart of the country for which he was giving up his life.

Beall was finely formed, about five feet eight inches in height, with hazel eyes, brown hair and beard, and a firm compressed mouth. He was 32 years old at the time of his death.

Weighing the Evidence.

A short time since a worthy magistrate of New Orleans had a rather difficult question to decide, in the solution of which he struck out a path hitherto unknown in jurisprudence. It seems that twelve negroes appeared before him each one of whom swore positively that himself and the other eleven had done a certain amount of work on a steambark, and was entitled thereby to wages. It was a steady streak—each of the dozen swearing precisely the same.
On the other side appeared the mate of the boat and eleven deck hands, who all swore directly and point blank to an opposite state of facts to that testified to by the twelve plaintiffs. Here the evidence closed, leaving the judge to make up his mind.

The Political Crisis in France.

The political crisis which has threatened France for several months has finally been precipitated in a sudden and unexpected manner. M. Thiers has yielded to the trifling majority against him in the Assembly, and his Ministry has resigned, and Marshal MacMahon has been elected President of the Republic.

The withdrawal of M. Thiers must be regarded as a serious blow to the Republic, and the election of Marshal Mac-Mahon as a very decided step in the direction of some kind of monarchical restoration. MacMahon has always been a Monarchist. He is essentially a soldier. He has been the pet and the pride of the French army for twenty years, and every Government has recognized it. The reverses and defeats which he met in the Prussian war, in common with all French officers, did not affect him as it did the others. He was the man to whom President Thiers intrusted the work of reorganizing the army, and there is little doubt that he has set it on its feet again. If Napoleon were alive, and there were strong Bonapartists party, it is probable that MacMahon would attach himself to the Imperialists. As Napoleon is dead, and his dynasty has no organized strength in France at this time, it is probable that MacMahon will go for the Constant Party—whether it be for the Comte de Chambord (Henry V.) or one of the Orleans Princes. He has been elected as the representative of the Monarchists, his personal attachments are with them, and, as the head of the Government and the chief of the army, he will play an important part in the drama, or perhaps tragedy, that shall decide what the next permanent Government of France shall be.

Driving Snipe.

Among our own hunters was a trapper named Shep Medary—a lively, roystering mountaineer, who liked nothing better than to get a joke upon any unfortunate "pilgrim" or "lender-foot" who was verdant enough to confide in his stories of mountain life.

"What a night!" said Shep, as the moon rose broad and clear—"what a glorious night for drivin' snipe!"

Here was something new. Two of our young men were eager to learn all about the mystery.

"Drivin' snipe! what's that, Shep?"
"Tell us about it."

"Did ye never hear?" replied Shep, with a face expressive of wonder at their ignorance. "Why, it's as old as the mountains, I guess; we always choose such weather as this for drivin' snipe.
The snipe are fat now and they drive better, and they're better eatin', too. I tell you a breakfast of snipe, broiled on the buffalo chips, is not bad to take; is it, Dick?"

Beaver Dick, who had just arrived in camp, thus appealed to, growled an assent to the proposition contained in Shep's question; and the boys, more anxious than ever, pressed Shep for an explanation.

"Maybe," said one of them, "maybe we can drive the snipe to-night and get a mess for breakfast; what have we got to do, Shep?"

"Oh, well," responded Shep, "if you're so plaguey ignorant, I'm afear'd you won't do. Howsoever, you can try. You boys get a couple of them gunny-sacks and caniles, and we'll go out and start 'em up."

Elated with the idea of having a mess of snipe for breakfast, the two young men, under Shep's direction, each equipped with a gunny-sack and canile, followed him out upon the plain, half a mile from camp, accompanied by some half dozen members of our party. The spot was chosen because of its proximity to a marsh, which was supposed to be filled with snipe. In reality it was the swarming-place for mosquitoes.

"Now," said Shep, stationing the boys about ten feet apart, "open your sacks, be sure and keep the mouths of 'em wide open, and after we leave you light your candles and hold 'em well into the sack, so that the snipe can see, and the rest of us will drive 'em up." It may take a little spell to get 'em started, but if you wait patiently they'll come."

With this assurance the snipe-drivers left them and returned immediately to camp.

"I've got a couple of green 'uns out there," said he, with a sly wink. "They'll wait some time for the snipe to come up, I reckon."

The boys followed directions—the sacks were held wide open, the caniles kept in place. There they stood, the easy prey of the remorseless mosquitoes.
An hour passed away, and yet from the ridge above the camp the light of the candles could be seen across the plain.
Shep now stole quietly out of camp, and making a long circuit, came up behind the victims, and raising a warwhoop, fired his pistol in the air.

The boys dropped their sacks and started on a two-forty pace for camp, coming in amid the laughter and shouts of their companions.—"Ascend of Mount Hayden," by R. P. Langford, in Scraper.

Another Man Wanted.

Old Farmer Pettigill went into his house one day and caught John, the hired man, hugging Mrs. P.

The farmer said nothing, and went out into the field.

After dinner he wanted John for something, but John was not to be found.

He went at last into John's room, where the latter was on his knees packing his trunk.

"What's the matter, John?" said P.

"O, nothing," replied John.

"What are you packing your trunk for?"

"I'm going away."

"Going away? What are you going away for?"

"O, you know," answered John.

"No, I don't know," rejoined P., "come, give me the reason of your sudden desire to go away."

"Well," meekly answered John, "you know what you caught me doing this forenoon!"

"O, pshaw!" laughed Pettigill; "do not be so foolish. If you and me can't lug the old woman enough, I'll hire another man."

To Make Fabrics Water-Proof.

A writer in an English paper says:
"By the way, speaking of water-proofs, I think I can give travelers a valuable hint or two. For many years I have worn India rubber water-proofs, but will buy no more, for I have learned that good Scotch tweed can be made entirely impervious to rain, and, moreover, I have learned how to make it so; and for the benefit of readers, I will give the recipe: In a bucket of soft water put half a pound of sugar of lead and half a pound of powdered alum; stir this mixture until it becomes clear, then pour it off into another bucket, and put the garment therein, and let it be in for twenty-four hours, and then hang it up to dry without wringing it.
Two of my party, a lady and a gentleman, have worn garments thus treated in the wildest storms of wind and rain without getting wet. The rain hangs upon the cloth in globules. In short, they were really water-proof. The gentleman walked nine miles in a storm of wind and rain, such as you rarely see in the South; and when he slipped off his overcoat, his underclothes were as dry as when he put them on. This, I think, is a secret worth knowing; for the cloth, if it can be made to keep out wet, is, in every way, better than what we know as water-proof."

A Popular Theory Upheld.

The long-received and familiar theory that the temperature of northern contents is modified by that of the sea-currents which pass near them is receiving the reasonable opposition which it seems to deserve. Among the most forcible of these opposing views is that advanced and supported by Prof. Whielon, that the modifying currents exist in the air, not the sea; and one of the most effective of the arguments advanced in his support is, that the accounts of arctic voyagers show sudden rises of temperature when moving past an unlimited extent of ice is near, while the temperature of the neck open water was nearly that of freezing. The theory of Prof. Whielon, as briefly stated, is that open water, melting ice, rain after snow, and other phenomena in arctic regions are not caused by winds warmed by an open sea, but by circulation of air in which warm winds descend from upper atmospheres, which winds are heated at the equator, and, following the known laws of atmospheric circulation, reach the poles. Although this theory threatens to deprive the Gulf Stream of one of its most worthy functions—that of keeping England warm, it is so far in accordance with probability that it merits discussion if not acceptance.—Appleton's Journal.

Shine as a Force.

A good illustration of man's inability for self-support, independently of sunshine, is afforded by the following calculation: The mechanical equivalent of the vertical sunshine upon a square mile of the earth's surface is computed to be 3,333,000,000 pounds raised a foot high in a second. Under the most favorable circumstances, a square mile of terrestrial soil receiving this amount of sunshine, if planted with bananas, would yield, according to the estimate of Baron Humboldt, 50,000 tons of nutritious food yearly. This is the greatest amount of food-producing power of which the earth appears to be capable.
But this quantity of food would suffice only 100,000 men, whose united mechanical force would not raise more than 10,000,000 pounds a foot high in a second.
It would therefore not be possible for any number of men, by their mechanical force, to produce anything like sufficient light and heat in the absence of sunshine to raise from the soil the food needful for their own support.

Dress of American Ladies.

The correspondent of the London Penny Free writes to that paper: The Paris dress women in Paris are not the Parisians, but the Americans. They have all the taste of the French, and far more boldness and originality. They invent combinations which frighten you at the first glance and delight you at the second—and they are almost always pretty, which is no small element in a toilet.

Reminiscence of Alexis.

The tender of the appointment to the Russian mission to ex-Gov. Marshall Jewell, of Connecticut, brings to mind the fact that when the Grand Duke Alexis visited the United States, taking in Hartford on his trip, Mr. Jewell then occupied the gubernatorial chair of Connecticut, and extended to the royal visitor the courtesies of the occasion.
After inspecting the wonders of Colt's great pistol factory, Alexis was taken to the immense leather belting manufactory belonging to Gov. Jewell, his father and brother. After explaining the processes, the Governor informed the Grand Duke that he had once been a tanner himself. This was a practical example of republican institutions which Alexis was rather unprepared for, and looking at his companion in wonder, he exclaimed: "A tanner, and now Governor?" If he had been informed that the President of the United States had the same humble occupation, his astonishment would have, no doubt, been almost too great for utterance.
His acquaintance formed with the son of the Czar would, no doubt, make Gov. Jewell's residence at St. Petersburg very pleasant.

WHEN A DIKAR CUMES TRUE.

BY CARL GRENZER.

I hold your hand in mine, my darling, darling;
I look within your eyes;
I ask you idle questions, only caring
To hear your low replies.

And all the while the slimmer of a wonder—
A moon-like ray of dawn—Flits over my forehead of joy, while under Its stars my soul is bound.

I think low of the future will require it—
"Ah, how then did it seem?"
To-morrow and to-morrow will desire it Vainly as any dream.

What is it more? In dreams the eyes are hidden;
They know not what's from far;
I wake with outlandish arms, a shadow fading—
And such are life's visions rare.

It is but touch and slight a little plainer,
A voice that telling, bids;
I doubt, "O heart, art thou so much a gainer?
For something still divides."

O fire of God, O living, winged creature
That in this day dost rise,
How canst thou warn to thy divine nature
These eyes and hands and eyes?

Too eager thou, that hastest to their meeting,
Hoping desire to fill,
Thou standest half asleep, in latestest greeting, Yet finding welcome still.

With stilled breath the life-long hunger staying,
With fasting visions bright,
With longing that of thee is perpetual praying,
A stranger here confessed.

If yet, O dearest heart, the world grows dearer, Because 'tis sweet to stand
While that which never has enough cries, nearer
Our moment hand to hand.

What will it be when every barrier breaking Lies heart to heart across?
Will heaven leave one corner for an aching
When the loud dream comes true?

The Weather of By-gone Ages.

The late Mr. Babbage, of calculating machine fame, had a singular faculty of suggesting avenues to knowledge. We are told by one who knew him well that it seemed possible to him to obtain an exact record of the succession of hot and cold years for long periods in bygone ages. His plan was as follows: Among the stumps of trees in some ancient forests he proposed to select one in which both the number and the size of the rings that have been annually produced were clearly marked. He proposed to write down the succession of hot and cold summers so marked in the tree, assuming that the larger the ring in each case, the hotter has been the summer. He then proposed to examine other trees of about the same date, until he found some which recorded a series of hot and cold seasons exactly similar to that which he had already noted down, and until the series extended far enough for him to be sure that the resemblance was not accidental, but that he had before him a natural register of the same seasons which had been recorded in the first tree. As some of these trees would be somewhat older than the first tree, while others would have survived it, he considered that it would be possible, so to say, to piece out the information obtained from one tree by means of the others; and that, after examining a great number of trees, his record of warm and cold seasons

A Reminiscence of Alexis.

The tender of the appointment to the Russian mission to ex-Gov. Marshall
Jewell, of Connecticut, brings to mind
the fact that when the Grand Duke Alexis visited the United States, taking
in Hartford on his trip, Mr. Jewell then
occupied the gubernatorial chair of Connecticut, and extended to the royal
visitor the courtesies of the occasion.
After inspecting the wonders of Colt's
great pistol factory, Alexis was taken to
the immense leather belting manufactory belonging to Gov. Jewell, his
the processes, the Governor informed
Alexis was rather unprepared for, and
looking at his companion in wonder, he
exclaimed: "A tanner, and now Gov-
the same humble occupation, his astonishment would have, no doubt, been almost too great for utterance.
His acquaintance formed with
the son of the Czar would, no doubt,
make Gov. Jewell's residence at St. Petersburg very pleasant.

WHEN A DIKAR CUMES TRUE.

BY CARL GRENZER.

I hold your hand in mine, my darling, darling;
I look within your eyes;
I ask you idle questions, only caring
To hear your low replies.

And all the while the slimmer of a wonder—
A moon-like ray of dawn—Flits over my forehead of joy, while under
Its stars my soul is bound.

I think low of the future will require it—
"Ah, how then did it seem?"
Vainly as any dream.

What is it more? In dreams the eyes are hidden;
They know not what's from far;
I wake with outlandish arms, a shadow fading—
And such are life's visions rare.

It is but touch and slight a little plainer,
A voice that telling, bids;
I doubt, "O heart, art thou so much a gainer?
For something still divides."

O fire of God, O living, winged creature
That in this day dost rise,
How canst thou warn to thy divine nature
These eyes and hands and eyes?

Too eager thou, that hastest to their meeting,
Hoping desire to fill,
Thou standest half asleep, in latestest greeting, Yet finding welcome still.

With stilled breath the life-long hunger staying,
With fasting visions bright,
With longing that of thee is perpetual praying,
A stranger here confessed.

If yet, O dearest heart, the world grows dearer,
Because 'tis sweet to stand
While that which never has enough cries, nearer
Our moment hand to hand.

What will it be when every barrier breaking
Lies heart to heart across?
Will heaven leave one corner for an aching
When the loud dream comes true?

FASHION.

BY W. E. GILBERT.

Dame Fashion is a goddess queer; A queer old goddess she; We, men and women are her dupes, Her silly dupes are we.

She often issues her decrees, In terms of tyranny— Regardless of our happiness, And of our modesty.

She, sitting on her royal throne, A random scepter wields; Beneath whose sway in sad extremes Each man and woman yields.

Each, do we say? Ah! so it is, We all bow at her shrine; Accept her edicts—own her rule— With borrowed lustre shine.

'Tis fashion teaches man drink— To while his time away— To squander wealth, his soul to sink In endless misery.

'Tis fashion teaches man to smoke— To chew as well as swear; These all are Fashion's stepping-stones, Down Degradation's stair.

This goddess Fashion, worship we, Absurdly to extremes; While virtue, modesty, and truth, ON treat as idle dreams.

My Wife's Piano.

The deed is accomplished. My wife got a piano, and now farwell the tranquil mind. It came on a dray. Six men carried it into the parlor, and grunted awfully. It weighs a ton, shines like a mirror, has carved Cupids climbing up its limbs. And such lungs—when! My wife has commenced to practice, and the first time she touched the machine, I thought we were in the midst of a thunder storm, and the lightning had struck the crockery chest. Cat with tail erect took a bee-line for the back fence, demolishing a six shilling pane of glass. The baby awoke, and the little fellow tried his best to beat the instrument, but he couldn't do it. It beat him.

A teacher has been introduced into the house. He says he is the last of Napoleon's grand army. He wears a huge moustache, looks at me fiercely, smells of garlic, and goes by the name of Count Run-ne'-er-come-back-again. He played an extracted opera the other night. He ran his fingers through his hair twice, then grinned, then turned up his eyes at the ceiling like a monkey hunting flies, and then came down one of his fingers, and I heard a delightful sound similar to that produced by a cockroach dancing upon the tenor string of a fiddle.

Down came another finger, and I was reminded of the wind whistling through a knot hole in a hen coop. He touched his thumb, and I thought that I was in an orchard listening to distant braying of a jackass. Now he ran his fingers along the keys, and I thought of a boy rattling upon a stove or on a picket fence. All of a sudden he stopped, and I thought something had happened. Then came down both fists, and O! such a noise was never heard before. I thought a hurricane had struck the house and the walls were caving in. I imagined I was in the cellar and a ton of coal was falling about my head. I thought the machine had burst, when the noise stopped, and I heard my wife ejaculate: "Exquisite!"

"What the deuce is the matter?" I enquired. "Why, my dear, that is La Sonnambula." "Confound Sonnambula!" thought I, and the Count rolled up his sheet of paper. He calls it music; but for the life of me I cannot make it look like anything else than a rail fence with a lot of juvenile negroes climbing over.

Royal Curiosity.

During the earlier visits of the royal family to Balmoral, Prince Albert, dressed in a very simple manner, was crossing one of the Scotch lakes in a steamer, and was curious to note everything relating to the management of the vessel, and among other things looking. Approaching the "galley," where a brawny Highlander was attending to the culinary matters, he was attracted by the savory odors of a compound known by Scotchmen as "hodge-podge," which the Highlander was preparing.

"What is that?" asked the prince, who was not known to the cook. "Hodge-podge, sir," was the reply. "How is it made?" was the next question. "Why, there's mutton-intill, and turnips intill, and carrots intill, and—"

"Yes, yes," said the prince, who had not learned that "in till it" meant "into it," expressed by the contraction "intill"; "but what is intill?" "Why, there's mutton-intill, and turnips intill, and carrots intill, and—"

"Yes, I see; but what is intill?" The man looked at him, and seeing that the Prince was serious, he replied: "There's mutton intill, and turnips intill, and—"

"Yes, certainly, I know," urged the inquirer; "but what is intill-intill?" "Ye daft gowk!" yelled the Highlander, brandishing his big spoon; "am I no tellin' ye what's intill? There's mutton intill, and—"

Here the interview was brought to a close by one of the Prince's suite, who was fortunately passing, who stepped in to save his royal highness from being rapped over the head with the big spoon, in search for information from the cook.

It takes two boys to go to school nowadays—one to study and the other to carry the books. A Tahiti schooner reached San Francisco one day last week laden with 250,000 oranges. Don't go to law unless you have nothing to lose; lawyers' houses are built on fools' heads.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla, FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD. The reputation of this excellent medicine enjoys, many of which are truly marvellous. Scrofulous disease, where the system is saturated with morbid humors, has been purified and cured by it. Scrofulous affections and disorders which were aggravated by the scrofulous contamination with which they were afflicted have been radically cured in such great numbers in almost every section of the country, that the public scarcely need be informed of its efficacy. Scrofulous poison is one of the most destructive enemies of our race. Often, this unseen and silent enemy of the organism undermines the constitution, and invites the attack of enfeebling or fatal diseases, without exciting a suspicion of its presence. Again, it seems to breed infection throughout the body, and then, on some favorable occasion, rapidly develop into one or other of its hideous forms, either on the face or among the viscera. In the latter, tubercles may be suddenly deposited in the lungs or heart, or tumors formed in the liver, or it shows its presence by eruptions on the skin, or foul ulcerations on some part of the body. Hence the occasional use of a bottle of this Sarsaparilla is advisable, even when no active symptoms of disease appear. Persons afflicted with the following complaints generally find immediate relief, and, at length, cure, by the use of this Sarsaparilla: St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Sore Eyes, Itch, Sores, and other eruptions or visible forms of Scrofulous disease. Also, in the more concealed forms, as Syphilis, Dropsy, Heart Disease, Fits, Epilepsy, Neuritis, and the various Uterous affections of the muscular and nervous systems.

Scrofulous disease is cured by it, though a long time is required for subduing these obstinate maladies by any medicine. Its efficacy continues in the use of this medicine well cured by its purifying and invigorating effect. Minute directions for each case are found in our Almanac, supplied gratis. Rheumatism and Gout, when caused by accumulations of excrementous matters in the blood, yield quickly to it, and also Leucorrhoea, Forpity, Congestions or Inflammation of the Liver, and Jaundice, when arising, as they often do, from the impurities in the blood. This Sarsaparilla is a great restorer for the strength and vigor of the system. Those who are Languid and feeble, Depressed, Sleepless, and troubled with Nervous Applications or Fevers, or any of the affections symptomatic of Weakness, will find immediate relief and convincing evidence of its restorative power upon trial.

BRIEF MENTION.

To Subscribers.—On and after July 1st, 1878, all subscribers receiving the Chelsea Herald at the Chelsea Post-office, will take notice to the above date, and call up at the printing office for their papers.

N. B.—There will be quite a number we presume, that will not understand the above "Subscribers Notice."

The new Postal Law requires five cents a quarter, or twenty cents per year, for all bona fide subscribers, receiving their papers through the mails, (home or foreign). This will save the subscribers (who receive their papers at our village Post-office), twenty cents per year. We have erected a young Post-office of our own, and invite all of our home subscribers to call and see us, on and after the above date.

The press of Chelsea join in thanking Mr. Martin McKune, for a valuable present.

TRANSFER.—Charles H. Wines has purchased the property of Jacob Henschelwardt, on the corner of Main and Summit streets, in our village, for $1,400.

Cattle, horses, hogs, geese, hens and potato bugs are roaming our streets at will, and having a festive time. Have we a pound master in our midst?

Wool.—The Eastern markets are dull and the prospect at this time is not very encouraging for the farmers getting very high prices this year.

Picnics and fishing parties in the sporting past time in Chelsea this season. We advise all those who are in for sport to call at Billy J. Billings, Jr., and get their fishing rods, tackle, etc.

Many of the farmers have been obliged to replant their corn, in consequence of poor seed, caused by the freezing of the corn in their cribs, during the past severe winter.

Why don't our business men join hands, go into their pockets semi-occasionally after a loose scrip, and have our streets sprinkled? We think one of our draymen would be glad to undertake the job. Who will start the ball a rolling?

The races of the Ann Arbor Horse Breeders' Association, came off last week in the city of Ann Arbor. There was a large attendance. The speed of the horses being reported good, and in the whole it was considered a success.

A finished coquette at a ball, that came off a few days ago in the neighborhood of Chelsea, asked a gentleman near her, while she adjusted her tucker, whether he could flirt a fan which she held in her hand. "No, madam," he replied, "but I can fan a flirt."

We are informed by Mr. John Stype, that three hundred dollars has been raised for our Fourth of July celebration, and he is still canvassing for a little more. We may safely say the Chelsea people are rejoicing to celebrate that memorable day. Hip! hip! hurrah!!!

CAUTION.—Don't use an ounce of Paris Green unless you know it to be pure. Its purity may easily be determined by taking a few grains of it yourself. If it does not kill you before you get home, there is no use trying to kill potato bugs with it.—Dexter Leader.

Wanted, a dozen healthy American Eagles, of the breed that spread their wings over the United States, and make the eternal lion sing pretty considerably small. Also, two or three good orators to fly the above. Apply to John H. Stype, in our village.

The present weather is about as warm as is wished for by even the old chronic grumblers. Sitting-room fires have been permitted to die out, over coals have been hung up for the season, and Glazier & Armstrong's soda fountain is pouring out to the thirsty and dry, the beautiful nectar.

A double marriage was celebrated on Monday last, at the Catholic Church, in Chelsea, by the Rev. J. Van Gempt, Mr. ALKIN CORWAY to Miss MAGGIE DORAN; Mrs. M. EDWARD SAVAGE to Miss MARY E. GORMAN, daughter of James Gorman of Lyndon. We wish the happy couple long lives, happiness and prosperity.

There is a young lady in this town so fond of "bull heads," a fish contiguous to these waters, that she offered a youngster a kiss for one. The offer was accepted, and the exchange made, to the satisfaction of both we presume. There are young men of a larger growth, we know of, who would be willing to exchange a whole string of "bull-heads" at the price paid for this one—and a pretty long string at that.

Eternity.

Deep! dark! boundless! unfathomable! mysterious! eternity! shoreless! bottomless! awful! incomprehensible! eternity! Where is the mind, the Herculean mind, that can grasp and measure eternity? In the effort the mind is lost—it reels, staggers, becomes confounded, overwhelmed, and shrinks from the task, appalled and shuddering, as from a fallen mountain. Eternity is future. Time like an Island in the midst of a shoreless ocean, stands in the ocean of eternity. Of eternity we can give no description. Language is too meager. No picture can portray it. It can neither be weighed or measured. It is beyond the kin of human intellect. If we attempt to launch into the mysterious ocean, we are lost in the awful and profound abyss. If we attempt to gaze upon its illimitable fields, the mind becomes dizzy, the heart grows sick and felters, we have no time to measure it, no scales to weigh it—no chronometer to compute it—no chronologist to explain it—nothing with which we can compare it. A minute bears some comparison to a myriad of years; but time admits of no comparison with eternity. It had a beginning—it will have an end. When myriads and millions of years have intervened, and three ten thousands millions more have passed the sunny eternity, will but have appeared gleaming in the horizon! Eternity has no morn, no noon, no night. 'Tis everlasting forever, and ever. ALPHA.

CURE FOR CANCER.—Mr. Thomas Anderson gives the following recipe for cancer, which he has been of great service in several dangerous cases:

"Boil fine Turkey figs in new milk, which they will thicken; when they are tender, split and apply them as warm as they can be borne to the part affected, whether broken or not; the part must be washed every time the poultice is changed with some of the milk; use a fresh poultice night and morning, and at least once during the day, and drink a quart of a pint of the milk the figs are boiled in, twice in twenty-four hours. If the stomach will bear it, this must be persevered in for three or four months, at least. A man age one hundred and five was cured, six months before his death with only six pounds of figs. The cancer, which began at the corner of his mouth had eaten through his jaw, cheek, and half way down his throat; yet he was so perfectly cured as never to show any tendency to return. Should it ever do so, the figs should again be applied. The first application gives a great deal of pain but afterward each dressing gives relief. A woman cured by this remedy had been afflicted ten years, her breast bled excessively; ten pounds cured."

HONESTY.—They that cry down moral honesty, cry down that which is a great part of religion—my duty towards God, and my duty towards man. What care I to see a man run after a sermon if he cozen and cheat, as soon as he comes home? On the other side, morality must not be without religion; for, if so, it may change, as I see convenient. Religion must govern it. He that has not religion to govern his morality is not a drachm better than my nastif dog; so long as you coax and please, he will play with you as fine as may be; he is a very good moral minister; but, if you hurt him, he will fly into your face and tear out your throat!

To Purify a Room.—Set a pitcher of water in a room, and in a few hours it will have absorbed all the respired gases in the room, the air of which will have become purer, but the water utterly filthy. The colder the water is, the greater capacity to contain these gases. At ordinary temperatures, a pint of water will contain a pint of carbonic acid gas and several pints of ammonia. The capacity is nearly doubled by reducing the water to a temperature of ice. Hence, water kept in the room while it is always unfit for use. For the same reason, the water from a pump should always be pumped out in the morning, before any of it is used. Impure water is more injurious than pure air.

What a wonderful thing is love to a woman! How it helps her to know that some one is always fond of her, and rejoices when she rejoices and sorrows when she grieves; to be sure that her faults are loved, and that her face is fairer to one, at least, than faces that are more beautiful—that one great heart holds her sacred to its innermost recesses above all other women; she can do anything, suffer anything, thus upheld. She grows prettier under the sweet influences, brighter, kinder, stronger, and life seems but a foretaste of heaven; and all her dreams are golden.

A gentleman of "elegant leisure," and a bachelor at that, has been amusing himself with matrimonial statistics, and reports that out of two hundred marriages published in Michigan Journals last week, only two of the ladies had old-fashioned names—such as Mary and Susan. All the others were Mollies, Dollies, Pollies, Libbies, Tibbies, Biddies, Hatties, Patties, Matties, Carries, Lizzies, and so on. He says if he can hear of some girl with a familiar "Christian name," he shall "start for her."

SAD ACCIDENT.—On Saturday last, while raising a hay barn and shed for Mr. Geo. Taylor, two and a half miles west of the village of Chelsea, Mr. Charles Young had his leg broken below the knee. He was in the act of holding the foot of one of the posts of the first bent—while raising it; and when raised to about an angle of forty-five degrees, his lever slipped out of the moorice, and down came the bent—his right leg being caught between the beam and sill—breaking both bones of the lower leg, and dislocating the knee joint. Mr. Young is an active and excellent hand on such occasions; but accidents overtake the best of us. Dr. Parsons being present, the leg was soon cared for.

DEFAULT having been made in the condition of a certain mortgage, executed by Laura Bates to Chandler Dunning, on the twenty-second day of January, A. D. 1870, and recorded in the office of Register of Deeds, for Washtenaw county and State of Michigan, in Liber 43 of mortgages, on page 154, on the 24th day of January, 1870. And the power of sale therein contained having become operative by reason of said default; and said mortgage containing a special interest clause, providing that in case any payment of interest falling due on said mortgage, should remain unpaid for the space of thirty days, then the principal and all arrearages of interest should at the option of the obligee, become immediately due and payable.
