THE KNIGHTLY NEWSBOY.

BY BORTICKE.

A dear and stormy night,
The rain is streaming down, The wind is howling round the corners of the old town, The fire is crackling in the hearth, and the clock is ticking on the wall.

A little newsboy chap is out and about,
Selling his wares,
And shouting out,
"Buy my paper, please!"

He is a brave and bold
little fellow,
And he is not afraid
of the rain or the cold,
For he knows that he must earn his money.

He is a true and loyal
little fellow,
And he is not afraid
of the rain or the cold,
For he knows that he got no cavalry but this year consigned to the "Wily," inquired the captain, aiming his long gun at the man on the horse, "Is Crooked Pine such a dangerous place to get into?"

"You bet!" exclaimed Bing. "Why, cap'n, it's just the dearest town you ever heard tell on. It's grown powerful fast, it did. There was only a coyote-hole at first, and the city sort of grew up around that—a little the quickest you ever seen. Allers full of human creatures, too, arter they'd skeered off the four-footed ones. I've been there more'n once, and now I'm gwine agin.
I'm gwine right into that town."

"But what do you want to go there for if it's such a dangerous sort of place?" asked the captain.

"Wall, you see, cap'n," said Bing, with a species of snarl, "that's just whar the rub comes. You see, Crooked Pine's just the dearest sort of town, and it's the only place whar the boys ever made out to get a white skeer onto old Bing. They just did that more'n a year ago. They gobbled my pile fust, and then they run me clean out of Crooked Pine, and thus I took to the mountains, and I've been there pretty much ever since. I've had the tallest kind of good luck, but I ain't to be confortable in my mind till I've been back to Crooked Pine. I'm gwine to ride this 'ere old mule right into that town, tawny, I am, sure as my name's Bing, and we're most thar, now."

The captain's curiosity was evidently somewhat excited by what he had heard, and his long nose was aimed pointedly up the valley, which was widening out upon a sort of plateau of no very wonderful extent, and there were certainly evidences of some sort of settlement.
The land around, here and there, looked even as if at some time or other an effort had been made to put it under fence and cultivation.

"Is that the city of Crooked Pine?" asked the captain of the mule-ride.

"No, sir-ree," replied Bing. "We ain't into Crooked Pine. Not yet we ain't; but I'm gwine to ride right in thar on this 'ere old mule. This 'ere place is only the graveyard, and I tell you, they need one, for it's just the dearest town you ever seen."

"Is that a healthy place?" asked the captain, with an uneasy twitch of the point of his nose.

"Healthy?" exclaimed Bing. "Did you ever hear of an unhealthy place among these mountains? Crooked Pine's healthy place, you bet, on'y fellers don't seem to live long thar, that's all. It's just the dearest place you ever seen, and I tell you they scared old Bing, they did. But I'm gwine to ride right in thar, I am."

"Thought you said this place was the graveyard," remarked the captain, veer-ing his nose slowly around the compass.

"Wall, an' so it is," said Bing; "but overboarder's the one that's dead, 'pears to me. Look at them skeels! Lots of 'em!
Them with a holered into 'em means a revolver. Then that's notched so deep all round says how the feller himself got notched, over to Crooked Pine. Thar's some on 'em looks as if the boys didn't know whar hurt 'em. You see, cap'n, Crooked Pine is just the dearest town; but I'm gwine to ride right in thar onto this old mule."

And now, as they rode somewhat more rapidly forward, the captain's nose became more pointedly inquiring than ever. Houses there were, scattered here and there, with some wild sort of reference to a possible street, and some of them were even of that terminations sort where one story tries to climb to the dignity of two. There were frame buildings, with marvelously sprawlings—most of them "hotels," "halls," "shades," and miners' para-dises of that sort, but some were apparently intended for legitimate business—"dry goods emporiums," and the like, not to speak of the four or "banks," and a "Crooked-Pine branch-mint and assay-office."

"That thar's whar they used to keep the tiger," said Bing. "It was right about thar that the skeer took me. But whar on yearth are all the boys gone to?"

Well he might ask, for, although the captain's nose had pointed everywhere, not the first sign of an inhabitant had as yet made its appearance.

"What can be the matter?" exclaimed the captain. "Are you sure that it was such a healthy place?"

"Healthy?" said Bing. "Wall, now, you kin fast bet. Anyhow, I've come and rid right straight into Crooked Pine. Hullo, if thar ain't someboddy stirrin'! Tell ye whar, cap'n, I was beginning to get a little skeered agin, everything looked so consarned lonesome."

Even as he was speaking, a battered, grizzled, unkempt specimen of elderly humanity came limping toward them, bearing in his hand a rusty old double-barreled shot-gun.

"Look out," whispered Bing to the captain; "thar's no counting onto these yer Crooked-Pine boys. They're most likely layin' low for somethin'."

Then he added, aloud:
"I say, stranger, whar hev all the boys gone ter? What's got inter Crooked Pine?"

"Is that you, Bing?" drawled the man with the shot-gun. "Why, whar hev you been? Nothin' ain't got inter this yer place—that ain't what the matter is—every livin' soul 'cept me has got out of it. Old Bing, I tell yer, Crooked Pine is a dead town."

"You don't say!" exclaimed Bing, with what the captain took for a growl; but the latter aimed his nose at the man with the shot-gun, and asked him:

"What did the town die of, and what made you stay here after it was dead?"

"Die of?" drawled the shot-gun man.
"Die of? Why, they've made man-another town, twenty mile away, over onto the new roleraid; and they do say it beats this yer city all hollow. What made me stay? Why, stranger, I never seen a roleraid, and I don't want to;
and so, when the boys begun to clart out for that new city, I just bought thar improvements. I got some on 'em powerful cheap, I did, an' I won three hotels at one raffie, I did. Biggest luck you ever seen! And I kep on and on, buyin' and waddin', till I reckon I own the whole town, and the graveyard, too.

It's a fine graveyard, and it's got an awful good start; but it's just the dearest town you ever seen. What do I stay for? Why, what should I go for? Don't I own the hull of Crooked Pine?"

"Cap'n," said Bing, mournfully, "I reckon he's tellin' the truth. I've known this yer sort of thing to happen before.
Do ye know what I'm gwine to do?"

"No, I don't," said the captain.

"Wall, you kin wait for yer cavalrymen, if you want ter. I'm gwine to ride right on into that thar other town, on this old mule. I'll ride right in thar, Mebbe I kin find some of the boys, and anyhow I want to see if that thar roleraid kin put another white skeer onto old Bing. Cap'n, Crooked Pine's just the dearest town I ever see."

"Whack!" went the stub-whip on the tough hide of the old mule, and on went Bing, as if he knew his way and didn't need further information; and, while the old man with the shot-gun stood looking dreamily and wistfully after him, the captain wheeled his horse, gave him a sharp dig of the spur, and galloped briskly away down the valley, from the lower end of which there came just then the far away, faint, ghostly notes of a cavalry-bugle. It was as if even music refused to be lively in so dead a town as Crooked Pine.—Appleton's Journal.

A Dutiful Son in Prison.

The Philadelphia Sunday Dawn tells this story:

A lady who was some ten years ago left a widow with a small family of children, after much tribulation succeeded in bringing up to manhood one son, who proved himself able and willing to be a support not only to her, but to his younger brothers and sisters.

About a year before becoming of age he was offered a lucrative position in the west, and he emigrated thither, and settled there permanently, soon married. New ties, however, did not absorb old affections, and as he prospered in his business, he sent regularly to his mother the means necessary for her support and that of her family.

The years passed on and brought many changes, but still regularly as the quarter came, so also did the ample remittance of this model son and brother.

When the last of emigration turned to the far west, this son was carried with it to Omaha, where he invested his earnings in town lots which speedily rose in value and made him a man of wealth. At least this was the intelligence he sent his mother. Later, while visiting Auburn, his parent was invited to make the tour of the State Prison, and whilst passing through the various wards he accidentally encountered one whose presence caused her cheeks to pale and her heart to temporarily stop its beating.

It was her son—her good and well-beloved boy—who for years had been her pride and support; for a moment she was speechless, but at length bursting into a torrent of tears, in which the prisoner joined, she said: "O, my son, how came you here?"

His being told developed the fact that he had by trading with strangers come into the possession of a large quantity of counterfeit money, and that in ignorance of its character, he being on a visit to New York, had attempted to pass it, had been arrested as a chief of a gang of counterfeiters, and having been identified as having endeavored to circulate it, was, in spite of all evidence of previous good conduct offered, convicted and sentenced to serve out a term in State Prison. His wife, with whom he was in constant correspondence, had aided him in keeping his counterfeit a secret from his mother, and had regularly remitted the quarterly allowance to her from the prison by letter. But for this unfortunate visit the mother would have remained forever unaware that her son was serving out a penal sentence for a crime never committed by him. She learned, however, that by the rise of corner lots in Omaha he had been made a wealthy man, and when he should come out of prison, he would be in a few months, he, through the skillful stewardship of his wife, not less than two hundred thousand dollars in United States bonds.

Life in Greenland.

(From the New York Resource.) The climate of Greenland is considered by the Danes as very healthy, and the natives seldom die of any other disease than consumption, which is very prevalent among the Esquimaux, and is no doubt contracted through their careless habits. The hut is a simple building of stone (boarded up on the inside), with a layer of turf on the outside, and a long, low tunnel entrance, about 10 or 15 feet in length, opening to the south.
This hut is about 12 feet square and 6 feet high, with two windows in the side which are blocked up with turf during the winter, so as to keep the cold out.
This room is generally supplied with a stove, in which peat is burned, for they have no other kind of fuel. There is always in these huts a close, depressing atmosphere, while outside, especially on a foggy day, the atmosphere is cold.

These people sit in the house sewing, etc., with their heavy seal skin clothing on, and will run in and out of doors, make visits, and attend their dances, without making any addition to their clothing, or reducing it when they return to their homes. Then a family of six or eight sleep in this same room, on a platform which serves as a bed, lying very close together, and breathing the same atmosphere over and over again.

Value of Timber Lands.

It has been estimated that timber increases in value each day. In the year 1872 the value of the timber lands in the United States was estimated at one hundred and twenty million dollars. One half of this value is due to the fact that the timber is a daily consumption of nineteen thousand two hundred cords. Sixty thousand miles of road require two thousand five hundred ties to the mile; and assuming their life to be five years, an annual consumption of thirty millions of ties is required; and it may be safely said that the waste in getting out these ties is one-third of the tree.

One Hundred and Forty-five Years Old.

(From the Philadelphia Bulletin.) At the southeast corner of Fifth and Locust streets stands the grocery of Mr.
James Clark. A very unpretending grocery and an unpretending grocer. But now the grocery has a place in antiquity, and all through the laying of a foot-walk.

Mr. Clark had served out dried beans, measured molasses, sliced ham, and weighed salt mackerel at said corner for twenty years and odd. This house was occupied by his father before him, and has an aged appearance—the house has.

The sidewalk surrounding the store and the two houses on Locust street were very much dilapidated, and it was deemed advisable to lay a new one. The work was commenced yesterday. As long as Mr. Clark can remember, the house No. 450 Locust street, immediately back of his establishment, has had in front of the door an old marble or comestone slab. When the pavement was removed, this of course was taken up. The bricklayer, upon turning it over, was surprised to find that it was a veritable tombstone, on which was the name and age of a person who died full of years.

It contained the following inscription:

In memory of Miss Alice
Wife of Robert Allen
Who departed this life
April 23rd, 1768,
Aged 145 years.

The stone is about three feet high and eighteen or twenty inches wide.
The words given are all very plain, but where the dashes occur the inscriptions have been effaced by age and the wearing away of the soft stone. The age of the venerable lady shows that she was born in the year 1624.

If it can be established that Mrs.
Allison was 145 years old when she died, she was certainly older than any person who has lived in modern times, of whom there is any account, except "Old Thomas Parr," who was born in 1683, and died in London, Nov. 15, 1835, aged 152 years.

Some interesting and important statistics of casualties occurring to emigrant ships dispatched from England during the last twenty-one years have been furnished by the Emigration Commissioners. The result for the entire period shows that 15,057 ships were sent to sea with 4,741,669 persons on board, and the total losses to have been $19,999,999, with 4,998 lives, or about one-tenth of one per cent. of the whole number who sailed.

An Eccentric Land Owner.

S. B. Clover, in an October magazine, tells the story of a member of the Van Rensselaer family who lately died, at the age of 76, as follows:—

Some said he was miserably and pensionary; the poor declared he was kind and generous, and forbearing and indignant to a fault. That he was averse to improvements or changes of any kind, the dilapidated condition of the house in which he lived, and the decaying and tottering fences around, most clearly proved. No railroad was ever constructed, no manufacturing ever built upon a foot of his land, save under protest. Owing to a disappointment in his early life, due to the opposition of his relatives to his marriage with a young girl in the humble walks of life, to whom he was warmly attached, he lived and died a bachelor.

The General Government had essayed many years ago to tempt him by a munificent offer to sell a portion of his lands for the establishment of an arsenal. The prospect of increased wealth, the assurance that the sale of his land, and the erection thereon of buildings by the United States Government, would greatly enhance the value of his large estate surrounding, had no effect.
His refusal to sell was positive, and the purchase of land was made, and the arsenal erected, at Watervliet.

But a darker hour came. A passenger who crossed from Albany on the Greenbush ferry-boat brought the startling report that it was in contemplation to construct a railroad along the east bank of the Hudson river from the city of New York through Greenbush to Albany. When the survey was made for this road, it took in five acres of the Van Rensselaer land, which yielded the owner little or no profit. Efforts were made by the directors of the road, but without success, to effect a purchase of the land. Persistent refusal to sell on the part of the owner compelled them to call upon disinterested parties living in the neighborhood to appraise the land. The sum fixed upon as a fair valuation was three hundred dollars per acre, which was offered to the owner, but he peremptorily declined, under protest, with the assurance added, that if the company took his land he would never tolerate a dollar of their money.

The land was taken, the road completed, and nearly a quarter of a century passed away; and though on many occasions greatly pressed for ready money, he was faithful to his promise even unto death. To the surprise of his executors, a short time after his decease, they were notified by an officer of one of the banks in Poughkeepsie that fifteen hundred dollars had been on deposit to his credit since the road was first surveyed, and was then submitted to their order. Thus, for that long period, was the interest, which, added to the original amount, would have accumulated to a handsome sum, entirely lost to this eccentric man while living, and to his heirs after his departure.

The Sharp Man.

The sharp man is mistaken for the wise one, but he is just as different from an honest one.

He trusts his cunning for success, and this is the next thing being a rogue.

The sharp man is like a razor—generally too sharp for any thing but a slate.

The men are not few to be trusted—they are so constituted that they must cheat somebody, and rather than be idle or lose a good job, they will pitch onto their best friends.

They are not exactly outcasts, but living on the borders of criminality, and are liable to step over at any time.

It is but a step from cunning to rascality, and it is a short step that is always within take.

Sharp men have but few friends, and seldom a confident. They have learned few fears treachery by studying their own natures.

They are always bizz, but like the honey, want a heap of sharp watching.
The sharp man is always a vain one.
He prides himself upon his cunning, and had rather do a shrewd thing than a kind one.—Josh Billings.

A Falling Off in Exports from Great Britain to the United States.

A Washington telegram says: From a statement received at the Treasury Department from the British Legation, relative to the principal articles of export, and manufactured goods, exported from Great Britain to the United States during the eight months ending Aug. 31 last, in comparison with the corresponding period of the year 1872, it appears that there were exported to this country 281 tons of iron, 309 tons less than in 1872, almost 200 tons of which decrease is in the exportation of railroad iron.
The decrease in the exportation of wool to this country last year amounted to 630,000 pounds, a decrease of over 900,000 pounds in woolen cloths. The decrease was nearly 1,000,000 yards in woolen carpets, almost 1,500,000 yards in worsted stuffs, nearly 5,250,000 yards in cotton piece goods, nearly 21,000,000 yards in linen piece goods, more than 8,750,000 yards in silk and broadcloths,

Type and spaces—
Trampled where they fell—
By this Plato, Doomed to go to Printers' batter "hell."

Running hither,
Darting thither,
Tail of all the Staff,
Out and in doors,
Doing all chores,
Bringing telegraph.

Runs for copy, Nor dare stop he
For his paper hat;
All the journeymen,
Save the foreman,
Yelling for some "fat."

How to Keep Eggs.

Much has been written in regard to the best mode of keeping eggs, and a great variety of methods have been suggested, but the following from the London Farmer contains sound suggestions:

For storing eggs a very good plan is to have a large board pierced with holes in regular rows. Many breeders keep them in bran; and this latter method is, perhaps, best for those meant only to be eaten, but for setting hens the pierced board has obvious conveniences. They should be always kept with the large end downwards. This direction being exactly contrary to that usually given, we should state that our attention was first called specially to the subject by a most intelligent lady, who advocated this plan, alleging as the probable reason of its superiority, "keeping eggs on the small end appears to me to cause the air-bubble to spread, detaching it from the shell, or rather from its membranous lining, and after being so kept for a fortnight the air-bubble will be found to be much spread, and the eggs to have lost much vitality, though still very good for eating." She then described her success the other way, adding, "Owing to this method of storing, such a thing as a stale egg has never been known in my house; and as regards success in hatching, for several seasons, when I was able to attend to my poultry myself, of many broods set every egg produced a chick." We were by no means hasty in adopting or recommending this plan, but after careful observation and comparison for two seasons, have proved indisputably, that both for eating or setting, eggs do keep much better the large end down. There is, after a week, a marked difference in eggs kept in the two positions as regards the spreading of the air-bubble—which is well known to affect both the freshness for eating, and vitality for setting of stored eggs—and after three weeks the difference can be discerned even by the taste alone. It will, of course, matter little which mode is adopted, provided the eggs are used for either purpose within a short time; but the longer kept, the more the difference from the two positions increases, and while eggs stored with the small end down cannot be depended upon after a fortnight to produce more than a proportion of chickens, those kept in the way we now advocate will keep perfectly good for hatching a month, or even more.

Send for Mother.

"Dear me! it wasn't enough for me to nurse and raise a family of my own, but now, when I am old, and expect to have a little comfort here, it is all the time 'Send for mother!'"

And the dear old soul growls and grumbles, but dresses herself as fast as she can, notwithstanding. After you have trotted her off and got her safely in your home, and she flies around, administering rebukes and remedies by turns, you feel easier. It's all right now, or soon will be—Mother's come!

In sickness, no matter who is there, or how many doctors quarrel over your case, everything goes wrong, somehow, till you send for mother.

In trouble, the first thing you think of is to send for mother.

But this has its ludicrous as well as its touching aspect. The verdant young couple, to whom baby's extraordinary grimaces and alarming yawns, which threaten the dislocation of its chin; its wonderful sleeps, which it accomplishes with its eyes half open, and no perceptible flutter of breath on its lips, causing the young mother to imagine it is dead this time, and to shriek out, "Send for mother!" in tones of anguish—this young couple, in the light of the experience which three or four babies bring, find that they have been ridiculous, and given mother a good many "trots" for nothing.

Did any one ever send for mother, and she fail to come? Never! unless sickness or the infirmities of age prevented her. As when, in your childhood, those willing feet responded to your call, so they do, and will continue to do, as long as they are able. And when the summons comes which none yet disregarded, though it will be a happy day for her, it will be a very dark and sad one for you, when God, too, will send for mother.

A farmer living in Titusville, Pa., who has two or three very courtly girls, placed a notice on his front door the other night, which read, "Shut down for thirty days. No stove in the parlor, and but one lamp."

Cider may be kept sweet for years in air-tight cans, after the manner of preserving fruits, etc. It should be settled and racked off, free of drugs, but not allowed to ferment before it is canned.

A small child, being asked by her Sunday-school teacher, "What did the Israelites do after they had crossed the Red Sea?" answered, "I don't know, Ma'am, but I guess they dried themselves."

Growing Old.

When we remember the rose tint of romance with which the freshness and vividness of every new impression tinged our early days, and now, at middle age, find that existence is no longer a dream, but a reality, and and there is so little to look forward to, is it any wonder that we cast a lingering look behind? The character of our life is fixed, and our occupations and associations promise in the future very much what they now are. Do we notice how much more rapidly each succeeding year seems to pass away? Cannot we remember how, in our childhood, the term of a year appeared interminable, and thought we could compress into that great space almost any amount of work and play? But as we grow older, how is it that, with all our industry, time seem too short for the work we take in hand? We become so engrossed that holy days and holidays are alike invaded; and after all is done, how much is left unfinished, how many schemes remain untried!

"It is the solemn thought connected with the middle life," says the late eloquent F. W. Robertson, "that life's last business is begun in earnest; and it is then, midway between the cradle and the grave, that a man begins to marvel that he let the days of his youth go by so half enjoyed. It is the pensive autumn feeling, it is a sensation of half sadness that we experience when the longest day of the year is past, and every day that follows is shorter, and the light fainter, and the feeble shadows that that nature is hastening with gigantic footsteps to her winter grave. So does man look back upon his youth. When the first gray hairs become visible, when the unwelcome truth fastens itself upon his mind that he is no longer going up hill, but down; and that the sun is always westerling, he looks back on things behind. When we were children we thought as children. But there lies before us manhood, with its earnest work, and then old age, and then the grave, and then home. There is a second youth for man better and holier than the first, if he will only look on and not back."

Old Newspapers for sale at this office at 10 cents per dozen.

Manhood; How Lost, How Restored!

Just published, a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical cure (without medicine) of SPERMATORRHEA or Seminal Weakness, Involutionary Seminal Losses, Impotency, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc.; also CONSUMPTION, EPILEPSY and Fits, induced by self-indulgence or sexual extravagance.

Price in a sealed envelope only six cents.

The celebrated author, in this admirable essay, clearly demonstrates from a thirty years' successful practice, that the alarming consequences of self-abuse may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain, and effectual, by means of which every sufferer may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land. Sent under seal, in a plain envelope, to any address, post-paid, on receipt of six cents, or two post stamps.
