Death of William Cullen Bryant.

BY ELMER E. ROGERS.

Now he's resting from his works,
Since his heart has ceased to beat,
As the peace of Time is with the larks
When their songs have ceased to be.

Ah, never more will he depart
From this wide world of sorrow!
Never more his works of morrow
Recreate their common part.

Yes, my friends, nevermore
His eyes can gaze on earth or sky,
Or the fresh of nothing more
From earth or sea or pleasant sky.

Life is short, so memory hath engraven
On the friends lingering 'round his tomb
Shedding tears on the silent graven
Of the big earth rolling bosom!

Shall he turn and overturn
Since the larks sang for him?
Now, to-day, they mourn for him—
He lying dead within his cell.

Great poet! So the nations say,
While he's floating down Life's tide,
Neath the yew tree shade by day
Till he rests with silent guide.

Betrayed; or, Wealth and Poverty.

BY C. F. P.

CHAPTER III.

Though tired in mind and body, it was a long time before William Judson found repose in the arms of "Old Morphens." The events which had just transpired, and those which were to transpire, had occasioned his thinking machine considerable activity, to say nothing of his anxiety concerning Amabel.

Before the bright rays of the sun appeared above the horizon on the following morning, William was up and was making preparations to follow the trail of the two redskins and their captive.

It had rained a little during the night, but that morning not a cloud was visible. The landscape presented a beautiful appearance, the birds had already begun to twitter among the trees and the joyous notes they caroled, combined to produce a pleasing effect on the mind of William, yet he did not entirely overcome his moroseness.

He partook of what food he desired, and then carefully prepared a small quantity of food to take with him. Being thus provided with food he would not be forced to abandon the trail to satisfy the cravings of hunger.

Taking down his rifle and a good supply of ammunition, he strode in the direction of the spot where he had been told Amabel had been captured. When he had proceeded a suitable distance from his house he discharged his rifle and put in a fresh load.

He searched for the trail and soon had the satisfaction of finding it, although it would probably have been a difficulty, had he lacked the sagacity of the Indians.

He calculated that the pursued were not a great distance from him, for they had doubtless encamped for the night as their prisoner being a female, would soon be overcome with fatigue if they persisted in having her travel a portion of the night.

Will though not a noted pedestrian, could walk with a rapidity not very often beheld, but on this occasion, he was compelled to go pretty slow in order not to loose the trail.

He noticed that the trail extended in a north-westerly direction and from what he had previously learned there was an Indian village about thirty miles ahead, in the same direction.

Should the savages reach the village before they were overtaken it would not be a very easy matter to accomplish what Will had undertaken to do, viz: the re-capture of Amabel.

What the object of the Indians was, in capturing Amabel, was not known, they were aware she was beautiful and would, as a wife suit their sagamore. They were also aware that if they succeeded in getting her to the village, they would receive a handsome reward as a recompense for their daring (?) exploit.

When the sun had reached the zenith the trail was comparatively fresh and Mr. Judson was in hopes he would not have to travel much farther.

It was between three and four o'clock in the afternoon when a sound started Will, and as quick as thought he obtained the shelter of a tree, after the fashion of the Indians, so as to prevent his being seen, and as a protection against the bullets of the Indians should they have seen him. He waited awhile and as no more sounds reached his ear, he ventured to look in the direction from which the sound had proceeded.

Not more than twenty rods from him were the two Indians he was in pursuit, and between them was the fair form of Amabel.

Will cautiously followed them and was more than careful in order to avoid making any noise that would be likely to warn the savages of his presence. He had not followed them more than half an hour before he perceived that they intended to halt so that Amabel could rest and partake of some refreshments of which the savages had a good supply. They seemed kindly disposed toward her and had apparently treated her kindly, though Amabel manifested no interest in their proceedings.

The savages seated themselves on Mother Earth in front of their captive and conversed with each other. Will learned from what they said that it was only ten miles to their village, so he came to the conclusion that it was time to act in behalf of the maiden who was dear to him.

Our hero thought of going to the spot and if necessary, to fight the two savages in a hand to hand encounter, but he yielded to the dictations of prudence and determined to pursue another course which would be more safe.

The savages were seated in such a position that both could probably be killed by the single discharge of Will's rifle.

Will raised his rifle, took deliberate aim and fired, and without waiting to see what the effect was, rushed from behind the cover of a large tree.

Two fearful yells—almost deafening—could be heard, and Will saw that both his enemies were severely if not fatally wounded.

He had no cause to fear the prostrate and motionless forms before him, so he turned to Amabel, who had not yet fully realized she was free once more, he assured her of his good intentions.

Amabel listened to his story in silence, and henceforth she regarded him with an interest which she had never manifested before.

"You must be very tired Miss C—," said Will, "as you have had such a long walk with unpleasant company, therefore I advise you to take a short rest, in the meanwhile I will try and procure some water for you."

The water was soon found, and filling a tin cup which Will happened to have with him, he returned to his charge.

Having quenched her thirst Amabel was induced to partake of some food and as she ate more heartily than when she was a captive, she soon felt more buoyant.

They walked homeward as fast as the circumstances would permit, and arrived safe at their destination sooner than could be expected.

Agriculture and the Professions.

BY ELMER E. ROGERS.

Agriculture is, or should be regarded as more important than the professions. For all the agricultural men to retire from their farms, and all the other men to disregard agriculture, would in my opinion, result in almost as great a famine as it would if the vegetable kingdom were swept from our earth.

All the presidents, kings and queens are supported on the products of the farm—in short the farm supports every one. The professions will not raise "bread and butter" for us. Some think that when they are adopting the professions, they are going above farming. They think that they are one step higher in life; and perhaps, think that their professions give them wings with which they can fly that step without much labor.

Whatever you adopt for a living you are still what you were—"men subject to the curse to earn your bread by the sweat of your brow." It does not necessarily mean manual labor; it may be "brain labor." Manual labor is such as agricultural labor; and "brain labor" is generally professional labor—that which makes men gray headed.

There are at present, about 7,000,000 pupils attending the public schools of America. After finishing their schooldays, a part of them will adopt the professions for a living; and the remainder, or perhaps the poorer part, will pursue agriculture. You see from this, that agriculture is becoming too much neglected, although our agricultural colleges are preparing young men to fill the vacancies.

Educated labor in our fields, our shops and our factories is worth really more than that which is only so much brute force. There is room for intelligence and education everywhere, and the idea the young man who is possessed of a college education must in order to oblige his learning, enter professional life, is in my judgment one of the lamentable heresies which prevail in the atmosphere about our institutions of learning.

The educated talent of our country is for the most part turned into the unproductive channels while its material interests are suffering for the want of the very intelligence and skill which are practically wasted elsewhere.

Clamoring for wealth, courting notoriety, or seeking place and position is not likely to result in satisfactory success. But honor earned whether bestowed or not, brings a self-consciousness of well doing which will last and furnish encouragement for constant effort. Therefore, I would have you understand that there are more occupations than the professions, in which we can make ourselves useful as well as ornamented.

"Do you say your prayers every night and morning?" asked a sympathetic lady to a little shoeblack to whom she had just given a trifle. "I allus sez 'um at night, mum; but any smart boy can take care of hisself in the day time," was the little rogue's reply.

A little boy from New York went into the country visiting. He had a bowl of bread and milk. He tasted it, and then hesitated for a moment when his mother asked him if he didn't like it, to which he replied, smacking his lips: "Yes, ma, I wish our milkman kept a cow."

Thorns and Flowers.

There is no pathway from any cradle to any grave that is not lined with thorns—thorns that tear the poor, tired limbs of the weary traveler and pierce even the soul. The pathway may be short, but the thorns are there; it may wind over the hills the deserts, the plains, or by the murmuring streamlets, but the thorns are there. The flesh and the soul quiver beneath the scars, and when the end is drawing near—when the eye catches a glimpse of the waiting grave—when the snows of wintery age lie heaped upon the brow, there is many a disfigurement which the piercing thorns have left upon both. Sometimes the path is trod for many days and sometimes for many years, and no thorn is seen among the paradise of flowers. But we cannot escape them. They appear at last, and pierce the deeper when they do. In the cemetery is the new made grave, upon which the gentle spring has not yet spread its mantle of green. Baby is asleep there. Husband's arms are folded beneath that frowning mound. Wife, the sweet light of the household, is at rest there. What a piercing thorn! How it tears its way through the very heart! The churchyard is filled with thorns. Cover the graves with roses, and the thorns will show; mantle them with verdure and the thorns will disguise the beauty.

Go to the neighbor's fireside and look at the thorns—go to your own fireside and look at them. The dear old mother, with wrinkled cheeks and frosted brow, is weeping with pain. The thorns have pierced deeply. Daughter, the darling girl, has been gone many, many years. She went out over the hill, out of sight of mother and never came back again. Lost somewhere in the great world, and mother cannot find her. Perhaps heaven will remove the thorn and mother will find her daughter there.

Or maybe the boy has wandered off into the far country. Poor prodigal—poor mother. The deep ravines the tears have washed in that pale, thin, sad face, tell how mother loves the wanderer and how the thorn hurts. Thus we will find the thorns all along the pathway.

But there are flowers, too sweet and charming flowers. The human heart, bubbling over with sympathy and fraternal love, is a delightful flower that sheds its beauty and spreads its perfume all the way along the pathway and among all ugly thorns, it is always blooming—always fresh. In the midnight it relieves darkness with its beauty, and in the morning it shades the very sunbeams. But better than all is the hope of a coming endless morning, when the flowers will bloom without thorns, and will never be watered by scalding teardrops. Thank heaven for the beautiful flowers of life.

The wild Knight of the razor had his trial on last Monday—he plead guilty—Justice Noyes fined him $10 and costs. We hope this will be a warning to all, to keep cool, and have a command over their temper.

We omitted to mention in our last issue, that our friend F. F. We mentioned in our last issue, that the Chelsea flour mill had "burst"—it is not so—there were parties here from Saginaw, talking about buying the machinery—but they came to no conclusion—nor it is likely there will be any. The proprietors say, if the inhabitants will only encourage "home industry," there will be no danger of losing the mill.

Manhood: How Lost, How Restored

Just published, a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical cure (without medicine) of SPERMATORRHOEA or Seminal Weakness, Involuntary Seminal Losses, Impotency, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc., also, Consumption, Epilepsy and Fits, induced by self-indulgence or sexual extravagance, &c.

Price, in a sealed envelope, only six cents.

The celebrated author, in his admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from a thirty years successful practice, that the alarming consequences of self-abuse may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife: pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain, and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately, and radically.

This lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

MEDICAL.

AGE OF ENLIGHTENMENT.—In the age of enlightenment like the present, the value of electricity, and compounds containing an electric principle as remedial agents, is widely appreciated. Foremost among the latter, both as regards the thoroughness and safety of its effects, and the rapidity of its action, is THOMAS' ELECTRIC OIL, a widely popular external and internal remedy for coughs, colds sore throat, asthma, croup, and other affections, of the breathing organs; an invaluable outward specific of lame back, soreness and contraction of the muscles, and every variety of sore or hurt; a prompt source of relief for pain, and a medicine upon which the public can also implicitly depend in cases of inflammatory affections, dysentery, and many other ailments. Its persistent use eradicates the most obstinate of the disorders to which it is adapted. Physicians speak of it in the highest terms. Moreover, horsemen and stock raisers administer it with the greatest success for diseases and hurts of horses and cattle. Sold by all medicine dealers. Price 50 cents and $1; trial size, 25 cents.

CATARRH!

ELY'S CREAM BALM

A Decided Cure.

A Local Remedy. HARMLESS, EFFECTUAL, SIMPLE. Application easy and agreeable.

The effect is truly magical, giving instant relief, and as a curative, is in advance of anything now before the public. The disagreeable operation of forcing a quart of liquid through the nose, and the use of snuffs that only excite and give temporary relief, are already being discarded and condemned.

CREAM BALM has the property of reducing local irritation. Sores in the nasal passage are healed up in a few days. Hence, the effect of Catarrh is dissipated in an almost magical manner. Expectoration is made easy. Sense of taste and smell is more or less restored. Bad taste in the mouth and unpleasant breath, where it results from Catarrh, is overcome. The nasal passages, which have been closed up for years, are made free.

Great and beneficial results are realized in a few applications of the Balm, but a thorough use of it, in every instance, will be attended with most happy results, and generally a decided cure.

Fifty cents will buy a bottle, and if satisfaction is not given, on application the proprietors will cheerfully refund the money. Trial size, 10c. Ask your druggist for it ELY BROS., Oswego, N. Y., Proprietors.

MESSRS. ELY BROTHERS.—I cheerfully add my testimony to the value of your Cream Balm as a specific in the case of my sister, who has been seriously debilitated with Catarrh for eight years, having tried ineffectually, Sanford's Remedy, and several spec. aly doctors in Boston. She improved at once under the use of your discovery, and has regained her health and hearing, which had been considered irremediable.

Don't Be Deceived.

Many persons say "I haven't got the consumption" when asked to cure their cough with Shiloh's Consumption Cure. Do they know that coughs lead to consumption, and a remedy that will cure consumption will certainly and surely cure a cough or any lung and throat trouble? We know it will cure when all others fail, and our faith in it is so positive that we will refund the price paid if you receive no benefit. Is not this a fair proposition? Price 10 cts, 50 cts, and $1 per bottle. For lame chest, back or side, use Shiloh's Porous Plaster. Price 25 cts. Sold only by Glazier & Armstrong.
