THE WHITE HORSE.

One night in June, ten years ago, ne sentinel pacing up and down bethe northeastern part of Arizona, suddenly heard the hoof-beat of a horse, the challenge, but there was no an-

It was a starlight night. Two or three hundred feet away the sentine! caught sight of a white horse approaching him at a brisk walk. When he could see the horse, he could also see that it had no rider. Droves of wild horses and still wilder mustangs were frequently seen from the fort and the sentinel was rather pleased that one of them was being led by curiosity to approach the gate.

The horse grew whiter and larger as he came nearer, and when he halted he was not over ten feet from the guard. He was tall and powerfully built, mane hanging almost to his knees, and tail sweeping the ground, and he was as white as snow. Head up, ears pointed forward, and eyes opened to their widest extent, the wild horse stood for a long minute and looked into the soldier's face. His nostrils dilated, his tail moved this way and that, and the muscles in his powerful chest and legs stood out in bold relief. The soldier's surprise and admiration were so great that he stood like a statue, musket on his shoulder, and his mind almost doubting what his eyes saw. Suddenly, and without an instant's warning the horse sprang forward to the attack. Catching the sentinel by the shoulder with his teeth, he raised him clear off the ground, and shook him right and left as if he was an empty grain bag, and then hurled him against the heavy gate with terrible force. The yell of pain and alarm uttered by the sentinel had scarcely died away before relief came hurrying out.

They found him lying in a heap beside the stockade, unconscious, and his uniform in tatters. There was no enemy in sight-not even a wolf skulked away through the darkness. A general alarm was sounded, the drums beat to arms, and for a quarter of an hour. the excitement was intense, every one believing that a large force of Indians was on the point of making an assault. When the sentinel recovered his senses, and related his adventure, no one would believe his story, until a sergeant examined the earth and discovered the book prints of the horse overed the hoof prints of the horse. It was, however, such a singular adventure, that no one felt easy until morning came. Then the trail of the white horse could be followed far out on the prairie, and soon after sunrise e horse himself was discovered bearing down on the fort from the direction of the mountain range thee miles away.

As the word went round every man turned out to catch sight of the animal about which so much had been said.

The scout related that the horse before them came to his notice about five years before, when the Indians made several attempts to capture him. He was singled out from the drove and pursued for several days, and in despair of securing him, one of the red men sought to kill him, so no one else should secure the prize. The horse was meant to take his life. He at once sepraated himself from the drove, and followed his former pursuers like a shadow. He dashed into their camps at night, attacked their ponies when he found them grazing, and had on several occasions attacked lone Indians and quickly killed or disabled them.

"I'll give two hundred dollars to the man who captures that horse for me!" said the commander, as he noted every horse on pursuit, and then wheeled and returned over his route of the previous day. Men were waiting for him, but he scarcely appeared that the same time.

In gor him, but he scarcely appeared before he was out of sight. He was pacing and trotting by turns, and not until he reached the end of that eighty-mile chase did he break into a run. When near the foot he crossed the ridge, shook off the last pursuer, and entered a dark canon in the mountains. The Indians traced him until the canon split into three or four rocky defiles, and then they camped down with the determination to wait until hunger and thirst should drive the fugitive out.

EXTRICATING A JUDGE.—Chief Justice Marshall was peculiarly great in his faculty of mental abstraction. Riding along in his sulky, the vehicle came to a full stop by the wheels run As the word went round every man turned out to catch sight of the animal about which so much had been said. He came forward at a sweeping, trot head up, tail streaming far behind, and his knee-action as perfect as if he had been trained on the course for years. He swerved neither to the right nor left, and never halted until he was within pistol shot of the crowd at the stockade.

The sentinel had not exaggerated in his statements. The color was snow-white, and such strength and symmetry, no one had ever before seen in a horse. The cars were pointed, eyes as bright as stars, and the sun glistened on his hide as if it had been varnished. For two or three minutes not a word was spoken by any man, and the horse did not move a foot. Then a scout and hunter, who had come into the fort about half an hour before, said to the commander:

Lake Navigation.

During the first twenty years of steam lake navigation, with sixty-seven steamboats in service, only eight lives were lost, while from 1837 to 1852 six hundred lives were lost. Previous to that date no law had been enacted to protect life on steam vessels. In 1852 or '53 a law passed Congress, intended to provide for the protection of life on board of steamboats carrying passen-gers. During the first eight years following the passage of the law to protect life and property by a board of inspectors, 2,500 lives were lost on the following law steamers: The Niagara, by fire, 300; the Atlantic, by collision, 600; the Lady Elgin, by collision, 600; the E. K. Collins, by fire, 400, and on the Keystone State and Chesapeake each 100. Since 1853 the character of the steam craft on the lakes, except Ontario, has almost entirely changed. The magnifi-cent floating palaces which had furn-ished the most luxurious travel known to our water ways have disappeared, and a class of propellers, devoted more to freight then passengers, have taken heir place. The chief travel is by rail, but as far as like travel has been-sustained, the disasters and loss of life have continued in about the same ratio. It does not appear, therefore, that the law for the protection of life and property on the lakes has fully subserved its intended purpose, and it may be well for Congress to institute some inquiry into that matter for the purpose of ascertaining the causes that have led to this failure, with a view to applying a remedy.

To My Friends and Patrons.

I would say do not be alarmed about high prices, and the great advance that is talked about that is said will happen in the near future. It is mostly talk, for "any reasonable thinking person" will see at once that there is no excuse for it. The piece goods for Ready-Made Clothing for Spring and Summer Wear, was purchased by manufacturers last Fall when there was scarcely any advance, and with the great competition in the United States, one can see at once that there is no reasonable reason for an advance this Spring, and I intend (if not in person) in reality, to remain in the

The Latest Marvel.

Dr. H. E. Licks, of old South Bethlenem, after three years' labor claims that he has perfected an instrument by which forms and colors can be sent by wire the same as words are sent. Dr. Licks gave detailed account of the many experiments undertaken to determine the ler.-London Times. proper composition and arrangement of the mirror and speculum. For the former he had finally selected an amalgam of selenium and iodide of silver, and for the latter a compound of selenium and chromium. The peculiar sensitiveness of iodide of silver and chromium to light has long been known, and their practical use in photography suggested their application in the diaphote. The theoretical action of the instrument appears to be the following: The common experience at a dinner party waves of light from an object are conducted through an ordinary camera, so that they fall on certain of the divisions of the mirror when the electric circuit is closed. The light and accompanying heat produce momentary chemical changes in the amalgam of the mirror, which modify the electric current and cause similar changes in the corresponding partitions of the remote speculum, thus reproducing a similar image, which by a second camera may be readily seen by the eye or thrown upon a screen. Dr. Licks explained how the proportions of selenium in the mirrer and speculum should be scientifically adjusted to the size of the divisions and the resistance of the electric circuit, so as to avoid any blending of the portions of the reproduced image. This he said had been the problem which had caused him the most difficulty, and which at one time had seemed almost indulgence in the claret which is soft

"The Man of the Caverns" was the subject of lasts night's London Institution lecture, which was delivered in the theatre by Prof. Boyd Hawkins, F. R. S., who fills the Chair of Geology in Owens College, Manchester. He said that, while the river-drift men and the cave men were living in Britain, the hills and valleys in the south of England presented the same outlines, as they did now. Could we take our stand in those times on Shooter's Hell or on the Essex Heights, and look over the Thames Valley in the direction of London, we should see a dense forest of oak, ash and Scotch fir, and the the course of the Thames marked by lines of willews and alders. A few thin columns of smoke rising over the tops of the trees would mark the camping places of the primeval mar. In the forest wild boars, mammoths and rhinoceroses, wild horses, stags and Irish elks would meet our eyes and in the summer time countless herds of bisons, like those now ranging over the plains of Northwestern America. In the winter were vast numbers of reindeer and a few musksheep, the most Arctic of the mam-malia in its habits. In the rivers were otters and beavers, and the explorer would be startled by the snort of the hippopotamus in the reaches of he Thames near Brentford. Beasts of prey also abounded-lions, leopards, yenas, grizzly bears, wolves and foxes, If we penetrated to one of the camp fires we should have seen the river drift hunter chipping or using some of those rude fliat implements which lie buried in the London gravels along with the remains of the animals which he hunted. The river-drift man, in the long course of ages, was succeeded by the man of the caverns, like him a hunter, living on the same animals, and more highly equipped for the bat-tle of life. In the course of time the cave man disappeared, the climate and geography of this country become almost what it, was now, the hunter progress of man had been unbroken in gradual series of changes by which civilization succeeded civilization, and yielding place unto the new." because the new order was higher and nob-

Musical Criticisms

The San Francisco Post thus cleverly hits off the fashionable bosh which appears daily in some newspapers as musical and dramatical criticism: Of Carlotta Patti herself we regret we can say very little in praise. Her first number, a symphony in B-gorry, by dear old Jim Bethoven, was given with much apparent nervousness. In fact, this well-known soprano (we think she is a soprano) seemed to realize that she stood in the presence of one of those cultured and critical San Francisco audiences we read about, many of whom have walked in from Hayes Valley and Laguna street a purpose. The result was that her knees knocked together with such force as to throw the accompaniment out several times. Her voice had several paramount faults, and we will endeavor to render our meaning clear to our unprofessional readers by using as few musical phrases as possible. In the first place, her technique is bad, besides being too small When a brandnew technique can now be had for $3 and a good second hand one, holding two quarts, for $1.75, there is no excuse for this. Of course we all know-all we critics-that there are no tears in Mrs. de Munckey's voice, which is the reason for her having to wet her whistle so early and often. There is a marked deficiency in breadth and depth and thickness in the upper register, which does not admit the air freely in consequence, and a far-off nearness, a sort of inanimate aftertasto, so to speak, in the diminuendo of her nats, particularly her French flat. Her singular mannerism of holding her chin lopsided during her G ups is in bad form, and the first thing she knows one of her sharps will come out edgeways and cut her throat Taen she opens her mouth too much and too often when she sings, which makes her chest notes mouthy and her mouth notes chesty. It would be much better, to say nothing of more artistic, if she were to open only one side of her mouth at a time. This would save wear and tear of her teeth, and at the same time give the other corner time to rest and brace up. She exerts herself too much in her trills, and it would save both breath and expense if she had them hereafter done behind the scenes by a boy with a dog-whistle or something

The Boy Farragut. Farragut's first battle was in 1849

when the Essex was captured by the Phœbe Cherub of the British navy in the bay of Valparaiso. On board the Essex was a young lad of 12 years, who had received a midshipman's warrant when he was only 9, and who had already, at the age of 11, had command of a ship as a prize-master. From the journal of this lad, written out after he had become the greatest sailor of his generation, we learn the feeling of quick boyish perceptions in the face around him the hopelessness of the case; of the sickening horror with cannot make as good speeches upon which he saw the first man torn water or milk as he does when offered to pieces by a ball; and of the steadiness of nerve which action at once to make a speech in Maine, where the drew out from a bravery in the gristle temperance laws are stringent. The hint was understood, and ball he saw coming, and pulled him to- the Judge had not gotten far on in his ward himself, but not in time to save the sailor's leg. A report was brought to the captain that a guarter gunner had deserted his post. The only reply of the captain, addressed to the boy, 'Do your duty sir;' whereupon he seized a pistol and went in pursuit of the fellow, but did not find him. The next morning he went on board the Phæbe "so mortified at our capture that he could not refrain from tears.' In this condition he discovered the pet pig of the Essex in possession of a young reefer. He claimed him and was told he could have him if he could whip his captor. A ring was formed and at it he went, beating his enemy handsomely. 'So I took Master Murphy under my arm, feeling that I had, in some degree, wiped out the disgrace of our defeat.' I was sent for by Capt Hil.yar (of the Phæbe) to come into have dreamed of a few years ago. his cabin, where Capt. Porter was, and asked to take some breakfast, when, seeing my discomfiture, he remarked in a very kind manner, 'Never mind, my little fellow; it will be your turn next, perhaps.' I said I hoped so, and left the cabin to hide my emotion."

After this experiment of the most stirring scenes of life the young Farragut went north on parole, and used his leisure to go to school. He was prompt to improve similar chances for education during his youth, but they were few, short and disconnected.

A Fish Story.

The Forest and Stream gives the fol fowing as told by a Boston correspondent: "One pleasant summer after noon I was standing on the shore of a pond on Long Island—way down—where Mr. Hallock has, 1 trow, many times and oft, cast a line, watching the play of swallows as they skimmed just over the surface of the water shortly before sunset. About a hundred yards out was a bed of lily pads; and as the swallows skipped it, occasionly a good-sized ripple could be seen, and some-times a break from the edges indicating a fish there. This fastened my attention to the particular place. I had seen cats play with swallows, swooping at them, but the idea of fish doing the the same was something new to me Presently I saw a clean breach, and a fine large pickerel showed his whole size and got a swallow too, as he disappeared beneath the water. This I saw repeated several times, and I called the attention of my companion to this novel sight. While we were watching we saw two large fish break at the same swallow, the fish coming from opposite directions and each head on to each. Both missed the swallow, but singular to relate, only one fish was seen to fall into the water, The English Grain Market.

ness for the swallow, jumped clear down the larger one's throat, only the tail, to the extent of about one inch, showed. The large fish was completely rent assunder and killed by the catastrophe. Both together weighed twenty. wo pounds."

Feather Work.

Ladies who live in the country and raise poultry would find it a source of amusement if they would save the feathers of hens, roosters, peafowls, etc., and form them into feather dusters, or flowers for winter bouquets. For the latter, begin by making a card box with many divisions, then with sharp scissors trim away all the superfluous parts and shape the feather into an oval leaf, leaving only a short stem. Prepare a good many in this way, carefully cutting away a part of the midrib to render it flexible. Have some fine wire cut into short pieces and some strands of floss silk, and, taking a piece of wire, attach firmly to one end several stiff fibers or a few bits of down; next take one of the leaves, and bending it gently outward, fix it close to the tuft by winding the silk tightly round the wire; repeat until you have six or eight leaves around the stamens. and finish your flower by winding the whole stem with green or brown floss. Short goose feathers form lovely white roses by arranging several rows of petals and using yellow centres, while rich green leaves are made from the beautiful tail-feathers of the rooster and the wing of the common duck. The breasts of peafowls give us exquisite blue flowers, and the different shades of gray and wood-color found in the plumage of the common hen will surprise those who have not made a study of the art of feather flowermaking. For those who can see no beauty in quiet shades there are the family dyes, which will color feathers prettily by first wetting well in hot water, then dipping into a solution of red or blue, with the addition of a bit of alum to set the color. The plumage of birds of all kinds (and of the wild duck in particular) will vary the collection, and form objects of admiration and study for all .- Floral Cabinet.

FLOWER SEEDS,-Most flower seeds are good for more than one year. Asters, stocks and some other sorts are worthless the second season. Of a large number of varieties, a portion will germinate the second year, but not a very high percentage, such as phlox, verbena and many others. Seeds saved in a favorable season, and properly dried, will, of course, remain good longer than those saved in an unfavorable year, or carelessly cured. As a rule, round seeds are good longer than thin. flat ones, and many of the smallest are good as long as any. Old balsam seeds are generally acknowledged to be better than new. Last summer, in the garden of an old German lady, I saw some flowers from seeds brought from the old country sixteen years before. She had petunias, portulaca and gourds. J. B. Root.

THE Boss Cow .- A good story is fold about Judge Poland, who for many years was a Representative in Congress from Vermont. The Judge is not a strict temperance man, and water or milk as he does when offered something stronger. He was invited chief committeeman knew that the Judge required a little inspiration so he placed two mugs, supposed to be filled Slyly the committeeman intimated to the Judge which mug he should drink discourse before he became thirsty; he raised the goblet, quaffed it to the bottom, and set it down with the unctuous exclamation, "Ye gods, what a SPEAKING DICTIONARY .- M. Lambrigot has invented a modification of Edison's phonographic matrices, by substituting stearine for the tin foil, and electrotyping the impressed surface. It has been suggested that these electrotypes, which can be made very cheaply, may render great service in the study of foreign languages, for they preserve indefinitely and repeat as often as may be desired words that are the most difficult to pronounce correctly. A true speaking dictionary have dreamed of a few years ago .-Nature.
