

Legal Printing.—Persons having legal advertising to do, should remember that it is not necessary that it should be published in the county seat—any paper published in the county will answer. In all matters transpiring in this vicinity, the interest of the advertisers will be better served, by having the notices published in their home paper, than to take them to a paper that is not generally read in their vicinity, besides it is the duty of every one to support home institutions as much as possible.

CHELSEA, AUGUST 26, 1880.

Locomotion in Venice.

I know but two kinds of locomotion in cities that are delightful for their own sakes. The first of the two is experienced by most Americans within a few days of their landing in the old world. It is a drive in a London hansom. You thread the narrow streets at a break-neck speed, wondering as much at the skill of the driver as at the rush and bustle that surrounds you. The skill of a Venetian gondolier is as extraordinary as that of the London cabman, and every other advantage is surely on the side of the former. For here is no jolting, no dust, no mud, no smoke. Here are no sordid houses, but dingy palaces, majestic even in their decay. The sharp corners are turned with a few short strokes of the long paddle. The gondolas never bump and seldom graze. I have admired Indian guides, as they managed a birch canoe, but that was clumsy work beside the delicate steering of the gondolier in these narrow water-lanes. Indeed, I cannot understand why the Venetians were not all drowned years ago. I have repeatedly seen four or five boys all standing, paddling, or sky-larking in what looked like nothing more than a small flat-bottomed punt. It is pleasant in the canals in the morning. It is still more beautiful on the broad lagoon in the afternoon. The Venetian fishermen stain their sails yellow, red or green, with broad bands, masses of color, stars or figures. These bright sails glide about the lagoon or the larger canals, and are equally beautiful whether seen against the blue sky, the green islands, or the variegated buildings. For color has run wild in Venice. Brick, stucco, or marble, every edifice has acquired a hue either soft or brilliant. The Muran warehouse that has its whole facade covered with pictures in mosaic on a gold ground does not look incongruously gaudy among the many tints of the grand canal. Whoever has been able to get a piece of old bas-relief, or of red, blue, or green marble, has simply built it into the front of his house, making it an architectural feature if convenient, otherwise simply building it in. Whoever had no precious marble has built of brick, covered the brick with stucco and the stucco with bright paint. Then time has lent a hand. He has softened and subdued all these glowing tones and brought them into harmony. In 1505 the German merchants wanted to build themselves a warehouse on the grand canal. The signora refused to allow them to use marble, so they employed Giorgione and Titian to paint their house-fronts for them. The frescoes have almost disappeared, but the spirit that led to their painting has left more than a trace in Venice.—Cor. N. Y. Times.

Pearls of Thought.

Indiscretion, rashness, falsehood, levity and malice produce each other.

Every base occupation makes one sharp in its practice and dull in every other.

The giving riches and honor to a wicked man is like giving strong wine to him that hath a fever.

Whatever makes the past or the future predominate over the present exalts us in the scale of thinking beings.

Let wickedness escape as it may at the bar, it never fails of doing justice upon itself; for every guilty person is his own hangman.

Honor is but the reflection of a man's own actions, shining bright in the face of all about him, and from thence rebounding upon himself.

Thou art in the end what thou art. Put on wigs with millions of curls, set thy foot upon ell-high rock. Thou abidest ever—what thou art.

Kisses are like grains of gold and silver found upon the ground, of no value of themselves, but precious as showing that a mine is near.

If the internal griefs of every man could be read, written on his forehead, how many who now excite envy would appear to be the objects of pity.

We never shed so many tears as at the age of hope; but when we have lost hope we look upon every with dry eyes, and tranquility springs from incapacity.

He who confers a favor should at once forget it, if he is not to show a sordid, ungenerous spirit. To remind a man of a kindness conferred on him, and to talk of it, is little different from reproach.

OUR BODIES AFTER DEATH.—As a very near approach to truth, the human family inhabiting the earth has been estimated at 1,000,000,000; the annual loss by death is 18,000,000. Now, the weight of the animal matter of this immense body cast into the grave is no less than 634,000 tons, and its decomposition produces 9,000,000,000 cubic feet of matter.

The vegetable productions of the earth clear away from the earth the gases thus generated, and decomposing and assimilating them for their own increase. This circle of changes has been going on ever since man became an occupier of the earth. He feeds on the lower animals and on the seeds of plants, which in due time become a part of himself. The lower animals feed upon the herbs and grasses, which, in their turn, become the animal; then, by its death again pass into the atmosphere, and are ready once more to be assimilated by plants, the earth, or bone substance alone remaining where it is deposited, and not even there unless prosecuted as a common swindler.

A HORRIBLE DUEL.—A horrible story of a duel between two inhabitants of Morocco is reported from Oran. The two principals, both occupying a good position, were enamored of the same beauty, and agreed to fight for her possession. The combatants met at a short distance from Mequinez, each being armed with a carbine, a revolver and a hunting-knife, and mounted on horseback. The duelists rushed at one another at full speed, which resulted in one of the horses being killed, and the fight was continued on foot. After the two men had received several bullets in different parts of their bodies they closed and commenced a violent and horrible struggle with their knives. One of the men thrust his knife into the other's throat and received a cut from his enemy which opened the whole of his chest. Too weak to use their arms, the dying men took to biting one another, and expired, the one with his teeth closing on the other's cheek, who gave up his last breath in endeavoring to rip open his adversary's body. The object of the encounter was thus gained as each prevented the other obtaining the hand of the girl, who must in future endeavor to captivate one admirer at a time if she wishes to secure a husband.

WHAT MEN NEED WIVES FOR.—It is not to sweep the house, and make the bed, and darn the socks, and cook the meals, chiefly that a man wants a wife. If this is all he when a young man calls to see a young lady, send him into the pantry to taste the bread and cakes she has made; send him to inspect the needle-work and bed-making; or put a broom into her hands and send him to witness its use. Such things are important, and the wise young man will quietly look after them. But what the true man most wants of a wife is her companionship, sympathy and love. The way of life has many dreary places in it, and man needs a companion to go with him. A man is sometimes overtaken by misfortunes; trials and temptations beset him; and he needs one to stand by and sympathize. He has some stern battles to fight with poverty, with enemies, and with sin, and he needs a woman, while he puts his arm round her and feels that he has something to fight for, will help him fight; that will put her lips to his ear and whisper words of counsel, and her hand to his heart, and impart new inspirations. All through his life—through storm and through sunshine, conflict and victory, through adverse and favoring winds—man needs a woman's love. The heart yearns for it. A sister's or a mother's love will hardly supply the need. Yet many seek for nothing further than success in housework. Justly enough, half of these get nothing more. The other half, surprised above measure, have obtained more than they sought. Their wives surprise them by bringing a nobler idea of marriage, and disclosing a treasury of courage, sympathy, and love.

WALKING-STICKS.—The walking-stick for ladies, so we are told by an oracle of fashion, is coming into favor again. Thus does the whirligig of time bring round his revenge for a discarded custom. The Empress Eugenia made the carrying of canes fashionable for her sex during the gay days of the second empire. But back in another century we find the women as appreciative of the walking-stick as ever was:

"Sir Plume of amber snuff-box justly vain, And the nice conduct of a clouded cane."

Ladies advanced in life walked with a staff between five and six feet in height, taper and slender in substance, turned over at the upper end in the manner of a shepherd's crook, and "twisted throughout the whole extent." Sometimes these wands were formed of a pale-green glass, but oftener of wood, ivory and whalebone. A writer of 1762, speaking of the most fashionable sticks of this period, says: "Do not some of us strut about with walking-sticks as long as hickory poles, or else with a yard of varnished cane scraped taper, and bound at one end with a waxen thread, and the other tipped with a neat ivory head as big as a silver penny?" It is, indeed, as an appendage of fashion more than as an appendage of personal utility that we regard the walking-sticks of modern times, though in all ages man has made the sons of the forest contribute to his support under weariness and old age.—London Globe.

MARRIAGES IN ENGLAND AT NIGHT.—No marriage of this kind can take place in England except under the signed fiat and special license of the Archbishop of Canterbury, first petitioned and obtained. The grant or refusal rests entirely in the discretion of the Primate, who is said to enter into every detail himself. By No. 102 of the "Constitution and Canons of the Church of England" of 1603 (now in force), it is ordained that all ordinary marriages shall be celebrated between the hours of 10 and 12 in the forenoon, and the same canon law has since been confirmed by various acts of Parliament, and is to be found reaffirmed by the Marriage Act of George IV's reign. The collective wisdom of Parliament from time to time deemed it wise to provide against the accident of foolish young or old men, of all classes, being persuaded to celebrate marriage late in the day, after, perhaps, partaking of the bottle freely at banquets and suppers. Also the debates in Parliament show that it was held that the marriage service was not a thing to be thoughtlessly entered upon. It is likewise generally understood that the canons cannot be altered without royal license from the Queen issued to the Canterbury and York Conventions, who must be unanimously agreed as to any change.

Put Him on File.

"Deadwood," said the stranger, putting down his half-eaten lemon pie and taking a long pull at the milk, "I went there when the first rush was made for the hills. Rather a rough crowd the first lot, you bet; more wholesome now. When I got there I was dead broke—didn't have a dollar, nor a revolver, which a man'll often need out there worse'n a meal's vittles. I was prob'ly the only man in the hills who didn't carry a firearm, and I was some lonesome, I tell you. The only weapon I had—I'm a blacksmith—was a rasp, a heavy file, you know, 'bout eighteen inches long, which I carried down my back, the handle in easy reach, just below my coat collar. Understand? Like the Arkansas man carries his bowie-knife. I'm not exactly a temperance man. I just don't drink an' don't meddle with other men's drinkin'—that's all. One day—I hadn't been in Deadwood more'n a week—I was sittin' in a s'loon—only place a man kin set to see any society—when a feller come in; a reg'lar bustler, with his can full and a quart over. He'd a revolver on each side of his belt an' looked vicious. Nothin' mean about him, though, askt me to drink. Not any, thank you, sez I. Not drink with me! Bill Feathergill! When I ask a tender foot to drink I expect him to prance right up an' no monkeyin'! You he-a-r me!"

"Well, when his hand went down for his revolver, I whipped out my file quicker'n fire 'ud scorch a feather an' swiped him one right across the face. When he fell I thought I'd killed him, an' the s'loon fillin' up with bummers I sorter skinned out, not knowin' what might happen. Purty soon a chap in a red shirt came up to me. Sez he, 'You're are the man as ke-aved Bill Feathergill! Cos of so be you are, ef you don't want ev'ry man-in-the hills to climb you, don't you try to hide yourself—the boys is askin' fur you now.'"

It struck me that my friend had the idee, so I waltzed back and went up and down before the s'loon for nigh three hours; I'd found out that Bill wasn't dead an' was bad medicine, but it wouldn't do to let down. Purty soon I see my man a headin' fur me. His face had been patched up till it looked like the closing out of a dry goods store. There was so little countenance exposed that I couldn't guess what he was a aimin' at, so I brought my hand back of my collar an' grabbed my file.

"Hold on, there; hold on," sez he, "gimme y'r hand, I'm friendly; I've got nothin' agin you, not a thing, but—you'll pardon my curiosity—what sort of a d—d weepin was that, stranger?"—Hartford Courant.

OLD MEN'S ENERGY.—Their energy says the London Spectator, is at least as great as that of the young. Not to go further back than the memory of this generation, we have seen Radetsky at 83 conquer Piedmont, and Palmerston at 81 dictator of England, and Earl Russell at 59 expel Palmerston, and Lyndhurst at 88 discomfit opponents by his oratory (on the paper duty), and King William of Prussia at 73 invade and conquer France, and Pio Nono at 78 call a council of Christendom to change the Catholic church from a co-operative aristocracy into a monarchy, and Thiers at 74 stand forward the one man with energy sufficient to control the parties and revive the energy of a defeated France. Lord Beaconsfield began to disturb the world at 70, and at 70 his opponent, by feats of popular oratory without parallel in English history, seeks to call public opinion to arms against the disturber. At 70 Mr. Gladstone pronounces the speeches which might have been made by a whole cabinet, and the first objection raised against each of them is, that it is too vehement, too energetic, marks a disposition to depart too widely from the accustomed groove.

Two Bottles.—Wise forethought: At a French cafe a monsieur called for a bottle of brandy. "But Monsieur has already drunk a whole bottle," said the garcon. "It is very possible, but here is my address; you will know where to carry me when the table gets over me."

"Have you given electricity a trial for your complaint, madam?" asked the minister, as he took tea with the old lady. "Electricity!" said she. "Well, yes, I reckon I has. I was struck by lightning last summer and have out of the window, but it didn't seem to do me no sort of good."

A New England writer is noted for neglect in his personal appearance. The night before Christmas a gentleman spoke to a friend of making the author a present. I want to get him something that will keep," observed the gentleman. "In that case I would suggest a cake of soap," remarked the friend.

They also nominated the following for the district convention to be held in Chelsea, Sept. 25, 1880: W. Nutton, F. Sweetland, H. Light-hall, J. P. Foster, T. Clark and G. W. Turnbull.

TRICKS OF MANNER.—If it were as easy to drop little personal peculiarities as it is to acquire them, one need not object so bitterly to forming the habit of indulging tricks of manner. This same habit is universal. Looking around our friends and acquaintances, we shall find scarcely one who has not his favorite word, his perpetual formula, his automatic action, his unmeaning gesture—all tricks caught probably when young, and not being corrected then is next to impossible to abolish now. Who does not know the familiar "I say," as the preface to every remark? and the still more familiar "You know," or in a voice of deprecation, "X" and "Sandy" in the middle term of every sentence? Then there are the people who act as perpetual exclamation points; who say "Goodness," as a mark of surprise, and "Good gracious!" when surprise is a little mixed with repro bation. Lower in the social scale it is, "Did you ever!" and indifferently to all stations, "You don't say so!" Or in a voice of deprecation, "X" and "Sandy" in the middle term of every sentence? Then there are the people who act as perpetual exclamation points; who say "Goodness," as a mark of surprise, and "Good gracious!" when surprise is a little mixed with repro bation. Lower in the social scale it is, "Did you ever!" and indifferently to all stations, "You don't say so!" Or in a voice of deprecation, "X" and "Sandy" in the middle term of every sentence? Then there are the people who act as perpetual exclamation points; who say "Goodness," as a mark of surprise, and "Good gracious!" when surprise is a little mixed with repro bation. Lower in the social scale it is, "Did you ever!" and indifferently to all stations, "You don't say so!" Or in a voice of deprecation, "X" and "Sandy" in the middle term of every sentence?

IN DEBT.—Perhaps nothing is more trying to an honest, conscientious young man than to be in debt without the means of paying. He started in business, it may be, with fair prospects, but by some untoward circumstance failed in his projects and became involved. There are many such men who would gladly become square with the world if it were in their power—but with little business and families on their hands, it is next to impossible for the present.

With a little assistance from others, and by practicing the strictest economy, they will eventually cancel every debt. We would therefore say to those involved, be not discouraged. It is hard to be thus situated, we know, but if you continue your efforts and are determined to be just and honest, you will ere long be able to do business in your own names. We can point to many individuals who have failed in business in years past and given up all their property, who are now in a fair way to become independent. Never mind your misfortune.
