THE STRATAGEM.

Mark Stanton was one of those hardy ioneers who, in the early settlement of the country, moved from the more thickly settled seaboard and pitched his cabin in the valley of the Saco, far away from the seat of civilization. His nearest neighbor lived at a distance of Lovewell's Pond. A wife and one child accompanied him into the wil-found it necessary to visit his neighbor Drover's to obtain a few supplies that they stood in need of. So kissing his four-year-old daughter, and bidding his wife to guard carefully against any attack of the Indians, the settler took his rifle and departed for the settle-

His stay was protracted to a later hour than he had anticipated, and it ing from it. Under this one was the was nearly sundown when he set out anxiety that would be his wife's at his prolonged absence. Yet, in his plaste, he neglected not to use both eyes and ears; for the settler was a true hunter, and had more than once saved his life by his craft and forest

When about half the intervening distance had been passed, Stanton heard a noise that made him pause. It sounded like the cry of a child, and it was not far from his path. He listened in suspense and again heard the cry repeated. This time he recognized the voice as that of his own child, his darling Anne, whom he had last seen in her mother's arms at home. The cry was one ef entreaty, of terror, too, and Stanton's heart beat loudly at the thought of his girl's danger.

He guessed instinctively what had happened. The Indians had visited his home during his absence and ac-complished their fell purpose. As soon as the first shock of horror was passed he was nerved to action. Bending his ear to the ground he plainly heard the jar of footsteps, but he was surprised to discover that there was but a single savage.

Quickly, but cautiously, he crept through the bushes, and finally he got a glimpse of the red man, at a little distance, hurrying through the deep wood. The Indian was tall and powerful, and he bore the light form of the child under his arm as if it had been a mere feather's weight. The little thing had ceased to struggle, for one of the great red hands was pressed hard over her mouth, and she seemed nearly exhausted.

It took Mark Stanton but a moment to conclude w hat to do. He did not dare rush upon the savage and attempt to beat him down, for he knew that if the red man was alarmed be-fore he reached him the life of his child would be sacrificed. On the other hand, if he trusted to his rifle, there was a bare possibility that the girl might be injured, but it was far the better course. Hurrying cautiously forward until he reached a favorable point, he raised his trusty weapon to his shoulder. Levelling it full at the centre of the red man's head, he took a careful aim the pulled the trigger. The next moment a sharp report rang been found wild that anyone could say was the parent of our kind; and botanists believe that either wheat has so widely diverged from the wild original, that the relationship cannot now be detected, or that the wild original has entirely disappeared from the earth's surface. The last position is the generally accepted one; though a quater of a century or more ago a French gentleman tried a series of ex-periments by which he concluded he had raised wheat from a wild grass of that country, by successive selections through several generations. These observations, however, do not seem to have carried weight with them, as we see no reference made to them by those eminent men who have been recently discusing the question.

The settler did not recognize him, but from his dress and ornaments he judged that he was a

Our Indian corn seems to be more of a mystery than any of the others, for no one has ventured an opinion that we know, as to whether it is an improved race from some wild thing now lost, or the original wild plant itself, destroyigrants when they first landed here in cultivation by the natives, but nowhere wild. This was especially the case with the indians of Central-America; but even the northern Indians, or at least the squaws, grew corn. The Winnebagoes and other tribes about Lake Michigan made corn culture an especial feature, using shells in the place of spades and hoes, and to this day. the remains of their "corn-cellars" (holes in sandy ground) and corn-hills are among the most interesting of their remains. Corn is found in China now; but whether it was known there before the intercourse of Europeans with them does not appear conclusive, as the evidence conflicts; but it would be interesting to know this for certain. It would not only throw light on the native country of the Indian corn, but perhaps help those who are studying Indian antiquities also.

Curious Epitaphs.

Sometimes a pun or play on the name is introduced: such as in the epitaph on John White: "Here lies John, a shining light, Whose name, life, actions, all were White." The following was rather epigramatic than epitaphic in regard to the Rev. John Chest: "Beneath this spot lies buried One Chest within another; The outer chest was all that's good; Who says so of the other?" William Wilton, buried in Lambeth, certainly did not write the epitaph which bears relation to him: tween two clildren who were playing that the good together. The small how Who never more will trouble you, trouble you. Nor, we may safely assert, did Owen Moore himself pen the following:

"Owen Moore is gone away, Owin' more than he could pay." More likely to be genuine are those epitaphs which involve a bit of bad logic, syntax, or grammar in their composition. In a grave yard at Montrose is said to be the following: "Here lyes the bodies of George" Young and all their posterity For fifty years backwards."

And in Wrexham church-yard as fol-"Here lies five babies and children dear, Three at Oswestry, and two here.

Akin to this logical blundering is: Here lies the remains of Thomas Milsolm, who died in Philadelphia, March, 1753; Had he lived he would have

And I be buried here." - Chamber's Journal.

STOPPING A TRAIN.-High courage and a furious temper are generally adbut, notwithstanding his reputation for boldness and ferocity, we should scarcely have deemed him capable of so desperate an enterprise as that involved in challenging a railway train at full speed, had not a detailed account of his successful encounter with the evening express, leaving Pesth for Vienna on the 9th inst, appeared in short when approaching Rakos Station, to avoid running down an enormous buffalo, which had taken up a menacing attitude between the rails, and there stood, snorting out defiance to its advancing foe. This intrepid anithe frontier of his own especial domain, not to be violated with impunity by any iron monster that ever hurtled along upon wheels. A large party o he Staatsbahn's servants was assem pled, with considerable trouble and oss of time, the express and the bufalo remaining stationary the while. facing one another like two doughty but prudent adversaries. After many fruitless attempts to drive the huge beast off the line, the railway officials ontrived to lasso him, and, tying his gs tightly together, to haul him bodily to an adjoining field. The Stratsahn authorities have offered a reward look of question or surprise. Himself a man of wide reading, speaking many languages, and having traveled in many lands, he gathered about him, in his personal staff, as rough and uncultured a lot of men as I ever saw in officers' uniform, but they answered his orders, and, as he said, if he ordered one of them to ride his horse against the muzzle of a discharging cannon he would do it instantly, One morning that I was with him on a reconnoissance we came to a small brook; an officer of his staff, with whom he had had some cause of dissatisfaction just before, rode forward to try its depth; while he was cautiously feeling the bank another officer--a Cossack -rode toward it, and, as his horse drew back, plied both spurs and the whip with all force; the horse sprung forward into the middle of the little stream, and, as it was very deep though very narrow, both horse and rider disappeared under the water.

"There." cried Skobeleff to the other.

The Russian General Skobeleff.

In return for his care of his men, he

"that's the way I want my officers to do things."

The first officer, greatly nettled, then put spurs to his horse, and though Skobeleff, seeing his purpose, yelled at him to stop, in an instant he and his horse disappeared under the water. Both men were then dragged out, dripping from their cold bath. Everyone laughed, and Skobeleff was in the best of humor. "Now go home and dry your clothes. You're both fine fellows (vwee molodetzee). But," turning to the first one, "never hesitate in what you have to do."

On another occasion Skobeleff heard one of his Colonels, just as he was going into action, trying to make a speech to his men, but hesitating, and stammering, and breaking down in it, He relieved him instantly. "If at such ed by Nature, though preserved by man. It was found by our oldworld emhe expects them to do then, he don't know it himself. At that moment a man can't lie; his heart will speak if he have a heart for fight, and if he can't find words it is either because he is a coward or because he has no notion in his head of what he has to > Again, he punished his men without mercy for the slightest depredation on unharmed inhabitants or their property. "Not that I care anything for these miserable people—their sufferings are nothing to those of my men but because they had no orders to do it. If it would serve my purpose, I would give them a village to plunder and burn without a moment's thought. But they must do it only on my order. I want them to feel that they are merely my creatures—that they exist simply by my will."

These little episodes read queerly; they seem to be almost the doings and talk of a madman; but it was madness with a direct method-the insanity which is merely another name for intense concentration of thought and energy on a single purpose. Of his offi-cers he required that they should know their own business; not that they should be cultured, should present a fine appearance, should be gentlemanly in their speech. He demanded none of these things, but only that they should combine unflinching bravery and obedience with a thorough knowledge of the way to handle the number of men each commanded, so as to obtain the greatest results with them. If they answered these requirements there was nothing he would not do for them; he secured them rewards and promotioms; he shared with them whatever he had. If they failed in these qualities he pursued them relentlessly, abused them in unmeasured terms, and sought the first opportunity to get them out of his division. His personal bravery was not only of the most reckless character, but at times it seemed to partake of the merest bravado, in which only extraordinary luck prevented him from reaping in death the well earned reward of his foolishness. He always a wore a white hat and rode a white horse in battle, simply because other generals usually avoided these target marks. He was perpetually riding at breakneck speed over some fence or ditch, leaving half his staff or orderlies sprawling in it. He never lost an opportunity of displaying courage. He went into the battle in his cleanest uniform and fresh underclothing, covered with perfume and wearing a diamond hilted sword, in order, as he said, that he might die with his best clothes on. For a long time he wore, with evident affectation, a coat in which he had been wounded, and which had a conspicuous patch on the shoulder.

Yet all this was not mere bravado and nonsense, but was the result of thought and almost cold-blooded calculation. It was intended to impress his men and it did so. They firmly believed he could not be hit, and whenever they saw a white horse, coat and cap among them they knew that it was Skobeleff, and so long as he was there they felt sure that everything was going well. At the beginning of the war he made up his mind firmly that he would never come out of it alive. After reading the telegram announcing the armistice, one of the first things he that the train, traveling at the rate of 30 miles an hour, had to be pulled up short when approaching Pulses fixed in his mind, that his dea firmly only a question of a few weeks or months, his one thought was how to best use his life so as to make an impression on his men, and gain such a control over them that they would follow him everywhere. In everything appear as an ordinary every-day affair.

Last February Arnold had about $2,000 in drafts on the Metropolitan bank of New York. The conspiracy was to have Snedeker take these drafts to some small place and get them cashed and send half the money to Arnold, when Arnold was to immediately telegraph to the New York head, that they had graph to the New York bank that they had en stolen from him and to stop their payment. He would thus get his money from the New York bank and make a clear $1,000. Snedeker carried out the scheme of getting one of the drafts cashed on a bank at Sturgis, Mich., hut as two or three witnesses had overheard a conversation in regard to the conspiracy between Arnold and Snedeker at Battle Creek, they were watched by the officers, and as soon as the forgery was done by Snedeker both parties were arrested.

The oil remaining in the cap caught fire and the person holding it threw the blazing mass away and it fell into the bucket. An explosion immediately followed and the burning fluid scattered all around the room, deluging the clothing of the men with flame. The men rushed out, enveloped in a sheet of fire, and writhed on the ground in agony. Meanwhile the house burned rapidly and in the embers were found the charred bodies of the four who were up stairs. Their names are Elliott, Brown, Staley and Hyde. Of those down stairs Joe Dannock, Harry Monroe, Frank Welsh and another, name unknown, are dead. A fifth is no expected to recover.

When the last load of fruit has been athered, and the last must run into he vats, comes the final and imposing eremony of the vintage. A huge bouuet, hung about with game and borne on the shoulders of four men, is car-ried to the peristyle of the chateau. This is preceded by a violin and flageo-iet, and followed by a delegation of male and female vintagers, who bave dressed themselves in holiday attire neat, high-heeled shoes with the wo men, and boots with the men, having replaced the sabot. Beneath the porti co stands the proprietor, surrounded by his family and possibly a number of friends. The bouquet is presented with a few congratulatory words as to the successful termination of the vintage, and if the season has proved ex ceptionally favorable, and the yield abundant, an exceptionally liberal backsheesh is given by the owner of the estate. Then follows a rustic dance. generally one of the old French bour-rees, after which the bouquet and game are returned to the bearers amid shouts of . Then, at evening, a plentiful supper is spread in a large chamber. usually the cuvier or press-house, which has been decorated with flowers and evergreens, and illuminated by lamps and lanterns for the occasion. Good sound wine is unsparingly supplied, with a liberal proportion of the cru. At the right moment the proprietor, with his family and friends, makes his appearance, and having accepted a glass from the President, drinks, amid vociferous applause; to the health of all and to the next meeting In the twinkling of an eye the tables are cleared and removed, the orchestra of violin and flageolet takes a dominating position on a platform, surmounting either a press or a pile of casks, and dancing begins. In nearly every instance the ball is opened by the proprietor and his male guests choosing partners from among the girls, the adies accepting gracefully the invitations of the men. After the first quadrille the seigneur and his friends retire, and then the vintagers, left, to themselves, foot it merrily far into the night, restoring failing energy by frequent libations from the unfailing cans. As the evening wears on, and the wine takes effect—let it be understood that there is nothing like what we should term drunkenness-the men introduce the most astounding steps, in Mr. Gibbs' preaching, and made a passing their feet over their partner's heads, and leaping into the air, and performing a series of cuts that might be envied by a prominent member of the ballet. Endless chains writhe and eddy in the maddest manner, the voices of the dancers accompanying the stirfailing in lung and muscular power, the merry party breaks up, and so, with this final roystering carnival, closes the vintagers' brief season amid the vines. -All The Year Round.

There are men now living who can remember hearing of the death of Washington one, two Receipts for the Michigan Central yards for or three weeks after its occurrence. That was in this country the great event of the close of the last century, and it was unknown in Boston for eight days after it took place. The latest news there from Philadelphia on the morning of the 1st of January, 1800, was six days old, and from many of the towns of Massachusetts was hardly better. Two days after the exciting State election of 1801, but 62 of the 398 incorporated towns of Massachusetts (these including Maine) had reported, and it was a month later when the Columbian Centinel announced the full result. The news by sea came still more slowly. On the 15th of March, 1800, there had been no news from Europe for eighty-three days, and it was not until a week later that a sailing-vessel, arriving unexpectedly at New York, brought news to the middle of December-more than three months back-of the election of Bonaparte as Frst Consul, and the adoption of the new Constitution of the French Republic. These met ds of communication did not seem slow to the men of the time, and a newspaper once a week was all that was demanded. When in 1796, the Salem Gazette began to appear twice a week, a good many people thought it was a foolish undertaking. "It was nonsense," said old John Pickering," to disturb the people's minds by sending newspapers among them twice a week to take their attention from the duties they had to perform!" emergency in which he found himself it occurred to him that the women of his congregation might be of great assistance to him. After long reflection and consultation with his leading men. he resolved to try the experiment of employing ushers to show people to seats in his meeting-house, and to seect as ushers the six prettiest available girls. The girls cheerfully agreed to comply with their dear pastor's wishes. They took two weeks to provide themselves with new dresses and new back hair, and on the first Sunday in June last they reported for duty. The seats in the Jamesville Methodist meeting-house were all free, so that every visitor, whether he was a habitual Methodist or a wayfaring sinner, could sit where he pleased with-out infringing on the rights of others. Mr. Gibbs explained in a neat little speech that a certain amount of confusion had arisen from the fact that no person had any regular seat, and that e had, therefore, decided to have the ushers seat all who came to meeting. no matter whether they were chronic Methodists or casual visitors. The six young lady ushers were so extremely pretty and were dressed so beautifully that no one could think of finding fault with them, and even the oldest deacon felt that it was a very pleasant thing to be shown to a seat by a beautiful girl.

The Pastor's expectations were, for a time, fully met by the success of his new plan of building up his congregation. As soon as the existence of the Methodist ushers was known there was an immediate decrease of three-fourths of all the Baptist and Presbyterian young men, while other men, young and old, who had never gone to church in their lives, suddenly became interested point of attending the Methodist meeting every Sunday night. The congregation, which on the 1st of June con sisted of only fifty-seven persons, had increased by the 1st of July to one hundred and three, and on several occasions had been even larger. In accordance with the same system of preserving the young men from distracting influences, the ushers condemned all the pretty girls to the extreme back seats, and even treated them-so it was afterwards said-with a rudeness which was intolerable. Two weeks ago the Methodist meeting - house was invaded an hour before the time fixed for service by all the pretty girls of the congregation-excepting, of course, the ushers-and all those who had contidence in their bonnets and other ornaments. When the ushers arrived, half an hour late, and made ready to show every front seat was already oc upied, and that the only places where young men could be seated were the dark corners and the back of the dark of t the dark corners and the back seats. The ushers were spirited girls, and they instantly resented what they considered a gross outrage on their rights. Instead of showing the young men to rived, confided to him the insult which had been put upon them, and proposed ing-house. The proposal was adopted, and not only did the Methodists lose all the young men that they had gained since the 1st of June, but they lost eleven others who had always formed part of the congregation, besides the six pretty ushers. The last state of the Jamesville Methodiss church is now far worse than the first, and Mr. Gibbs is firmly convinced that the sphere of women does not need to be enlarged, and that girls, no matter how apparently innocent they may be, cannot be employed as ushers by any rely Christian denomination. - N. Dugan's Find.

A curious throng has visited the near ttage of John H. Dugan, in Cre a suburb of New Castle, Pa., in the past week, and the attraction has been 584 French gold coins bearing dates ranging from 1652 to 1736. Dugan the guardian and owner of this me tells a singular tale in regard to the manner in which it came into his possession. Many years ago an Indian doctor stopped in Croton, and professed to cure diseases by the use of herbs and the laying on of hands. He was a profound believer in the efficacy of charms. Dugan had a firm belief that Mr.Gibbs, as has been said, was ; firm believer in the wisdom of enlargthere were kettles and pots filled with ing the sphere of woman, and in the gold buried on the banks of Neshan nock Creek, and that all that was bee essary for him to get the gold was to find someone to furnish him with some kind of a divining rod to point out the exact location. He sought the Indian doctor, who gave him a small phial, in which was a liquid. The phial was encased in oiled silk. Around the neck of the phial was tied a string sev. eral inches in length. One end of this string was to be held firmly between the thumb and the index tinger of the right hand, allowing the bottle to be suspended in the air; then questions were to be propounded to this oracle of the mineral world. For instance, if the "charm" was held over a certain spot he was to ask if there was gold there. If the ground contained the coveted article the phial would fly off at a tangent, but if there was no g ld there the bottle would remain motion-less. After finding the spot the holder of the string could also ask the charm how many feet the gold was beneath the surface. To get an answer he must first ask if it was one foot under ground, then if it was two, and so on up to a hundred or more. When he named the right number of feet the phial would again fly off. Dugan took the phial, which he had christened with the somewhat undignified name of "Jack," and at times traversed the banks of the Neshannock for miles, trying the charm at various points, but invariably without success. But at midnight one evening Dugan, as he aleges, in response to a dream which he had the night before, went, lantern in hand, and with pick and shovel over his shoulder, to a ravine immediately above the Big Rocks, a land mark on the banks of the Neshannock. He made his way to the Neshanbock. He made his way to the wildest and most deso-late part of the rift between the hills. With trembling fingers he held "Jack" over the spot where his dream had directed him were huried fabulous amounts of bullion. To his intensedelight the phial flew off. Off went his coat, and soon by energetic use of the coat, and soon by energetic use of the pick and the shovel a large hole was excavated. After about two hours' labor his ears were greeted with the sound of steel striking on some hard substance. A few shovelfuls more, and an iron pot, covered by a flat rock, was unearthed. Hastily tearing off the lid

Many of Dugan's neighbors beli bors for his former fruitless searches for gold that he has purchased this French money to verify his belief and astonish those who laughed at him." the coin was found in the manner alleged, it was no doubt buried there in

COMPLICATED. - A correspondent informs us that at 11.30 last nighta a cabman in Upper St. Martin's late was hailed by a gentleman who hader-by snatched it and ran away. Cabby jumped down and while he was in hot pursuit of the thief another man got on the box and drove away. He cime into collision, however, with a brow nam standing outside Mr. Howrolds coach-builder, 36 St. Martin's lane, and was thrown to the ground. The gentleman who was inside the cab, and who was found to be drunk, was also thrown out. At this moment the cabman appeared on the scene and Ma Howroyd went across the street W ascertain his number. While doing so
