'O. my sorrows!' ejaculated Miss Dolly, closing the door with an afflicted countenance, and sitting down so quietly for once that a photographer might have copied her then and there. Not that he could have done her justice, for her expression was too quick and varied to be caught by any trick of chemicals, and without it Miss Dolly's physiognomy would have been rather characterless but for her prominent derstood literally as saying that she talked through a nasal whine. I mean simply in a metaphorical sense, this And Miss Dolly had abundant need of energy—else why the nose? Every two years during her childhood she had been tiptoed into the east bedroom to see a new baby, till at her mother's death, five little brothers fell to her charge to be coaxed and scolded into

'You can't bring up those boys,' groaned a dolorous aunt. 'They'll run square over you, Dorothy Almeda.'

Let them run over me so long as it does not hurt 'em.'" laughed Miss Dolly skewing her flaxen hair with a goose quill and tying a calico apron over her calico longshort, preparatory to "bringing up" said youths.

From that day forward she went cheerily on, making the best of everything, though it must be confessed she often had odds and ends to work with, as people usually do have who are born with a faculty. Somehow she found time for all her duties except matrimony. If that were a duty, it was one she wouldn't and couldn't attend to while her father and the children needed her. Divers young men thought this a great pity, among them David Wiggin. "Don't be silly, David !" said Dolly, when he hinted as much to her; whereupon David went off and married him, my work was about double, and Olive Searle, the plainest girl in the David's benevolent hearts warmed with compassion as he rememed Dolly's lonely condition, and he felt that it would be exceedingly kind coverin him to offer her a home, especialy as he owned as good a place as you'd find on the river, while the Blount cottage was falling into decay. He wouldn't let her former refusal tell againt her, for as he looked back, he uldn't really see how she could have carried any one at that period. She ought to be rewarded for the devotion e had shown to the family, and, for his part, he felt magnanimous enough to give her a second chance to accept Such was the worthy widower's state of mind when he asked James Blount with mock humanity whether it would be of any use for him to try and make a bargain with Dolly.

Two Brave Little Girls.

A long time ago, in the Indian country, two little girls slipped away from the fort, and went down into the hollow to pick berries. It was Emmy, a girl of seven years, and Bessie, her sister, not yet six. All at once, the sun flashed on something bright, and Emmashed on something bright, and Emmy knew that the pretty painted things she had seen crawling among the bushes must be hostile Indians, with gleaming weapons in their hands. She did not cry out, nor in any way let them know that she had seen them. But she looked all about, saw that some of the creening Indiana weapons had seen them. creeping Indians were between her and the fort, and—went on picking berries, as before. Soon, she called aloud to Bessie, with a steady voice, "Don'tyou think it's going to rain?" So they both turned and walked toward the fort. They received the tall wares fort. They reached the tall grass, and, suddenly, Emmy dropped to the ground, pulling down Bessie. too. "What are you looking for?" asked the little sister, in surprise. Then Emmy whispered to Bessie, and both of them stole silently and quickly on hands and knees through the long grass, until they came to the road, when they started up and ran swiftly to the fort, dashed through the entrance, and had the gate safely closed behind them. Those girls are quite old now, but they remember very well the day they saved them-selves, the fort which their father commanded, and the soldiers and other people in it, besides .- St. Nicholas.

owned a suit of breadcloth. The usual dress was made from jeans and linsey, dyed with hickory bark. An incident occurred about that time shich illustrates the simple habits of the people:

A young man, by serving in the United States army, had laid up some money. He came to a town in the county dressed in a suit of blue breadcloth. On his head he wore a fur cap made by himself. For days he was the most noticed man in the town-because he wore "store

Even those young ladies who would wear shoes were in the habit of would wear snoes were in the habit of wearing, when going "out," a pair of coarse shoes, and carrying their "Sunday shoes" in the pocket. Just before arriving at the place they started for, the coarse shoes would be taken off and the "Sunday shoes" put on.

In time this simple mode of dress came to be associated with piety. If a person was a church-member and wore a more stylish dress than the other people, the act would beget public criticism.

A gentleman of education who, though not a member of any church, was an upright man, once attended church dressed in a suit of broadcloth. The preacher, being old-fashioned and narrow-minded, associated broadcloth with those pomps, and vanities which a Christian should renounce. During the sermon he referred to the gentleman as the smoothfaced young man whose fine apparel was contrary to the spirit of the gospel. The gentleman, however, listened with an appearance of respect to the criticism, knowing that the preacher was honest, if not wise. - Youth's Companion.

What Ailed the Drummer.

Capt. Bugbie was not only an officer, blé as a strict disciplinarian, and as notable for his fondness for creature comforts-a fondness he found great difficulty in including when marching through a wild bit of country. One day the column had just left a small hamlet, when the Captain noticed that one of the drums gave forth no sound He expressed his anger very emphati-cally, and ordered a Lieutenant to go and rate the delinquent well. By and by the subaltern returned and whispered to his superior that the drummer had got a couple of roasted chickens and two bottles of whisky in his drum, one bottle and one chick eing for the Captain. "Why didn't the poor fellow let us know his legs had given out?" cried Bugbie; "I don't want men to march if they're dead lame. Put him in the ambulance immeditely." The order was obeyed, and, having thus made amends for his injustice to the drummer, the Captain took the earliest opportunity of going to examine more particularly into his condition.—Chambers' Journal.

John Quincy Adams.

The personal habits of John Quincy Adams, when Minister, were remarkably simple, we infer from this entry in his diary: "I rise usually between 5 and 6; I begin the day with reading five charters in the Bible; I have this day finished, in course, the Old Testament. I then write until 9 o'clock, when I breakfast alone in my chamber. I write again after breakfast, and walk an hour. We dine at 4, and sit at a table until 6. In the evening I attend the theater, redoute or concert. Between 10 and 11 I return to my changer and betake my-self immediately to the night's repose. I have this month frequented too much the theater and other public amusements, indulged in too much conviviality, and taken too liftle exercise. The consequence is, I become too corpulent, and industry is irksome to me. May I be cautious not to fall into any habit of indolence or dissipation."

The Bee's Sting.

The sting of the bee is said to be a hollow tube. The male bee is inoffen-sive, not being provided with this weapon or pointed tube; therefore when one of these insects alights upon a bare footed boy the soliloquy of Hamlet immediately forces itself upon that boy's mind as he anxiously awaits the results. "Tube bee or not tube bee? That's the question,"—Yawcob Strauss

The world wants more sunshine in its disposition, in its business, in its charities, in its theology. For 10,000 of the aches and pains and irritations of men It soothes better than morphine. It stimulates better than champagne. It is the best plaster for a wound. The last the best plaster for a wound. The Good Samaritan poured out into the fallen traveler's gash more of this than of oil. Florence Nightingale used it on the Crimean battlefields. Take it out into all the alleys, on board all the ships, by all the sick-beds. Not a vial Stories of the Dumas.

who was so devoted to Louis Philippe's family that he followed them into exile.
On hearing of his death, "Poor fellow," said Dumas, "and how did that happen?" "At dinner; the water they had to drink was very bad; the Princes were all sick, but Vatout died." "The courtier!" said Dumas with a smile.

Being present one evening with Sand at the first performance of an exesand at the first performance of an exe-crable piece, he was conversing loudly with her, when a bourgeois, seated in front of them, turned around and sharp-ly requested them to be quiet. "What," exclaimed Dumas; "you have the good luck to hear George Sand and Alexander Dumas conversing together, and you are

Dumas was a very powerful man, and rather proud of his physical strength. His father, Gen. Dumas, Marquis de la Paillerie, notified his birth to Gen. Brune in the following terms: "My wife has just presented me with a boy, eighteen inches long and weighing ten pounds and a half. If he keeps like that at 25 he will be no pigmy." The father was also a man of great strength, whose feats were renowned in the records of the French army. An engraving o the time, now in the hands of Dumas, Jr., represents him alone on the Brixen bridge holding in check of body of Austrians, killing three, wounding eight, and causing the others to retreat. The Marquis was a mulatto; being one evening at the theater in a box with a lady, a young coxcomb entered, and of-fered to see her home after the play. "Thanks," said the lady, pointing to the General; "I am with this gentle-man." "Indeed," exclaimed the young man, sneering, "I took him for your servant." He had no sooner uttered this piece of impertinence than the General took hold of him by the collar,

His grandson, the present academician, is a chip of the old block, of extraordinary physical strength, and most adroit in all athletic exercises, which, as every one knows, does not prevent him from being as witty as his father. Some body speaking of Alexandre Dumas to his son was saying one day: "After all, your father has sometimes written inferior works, but he never wrote tire-some ones." "It was through selfishness," replied the son, "they would have bored him first."

A Fasting Lunatic. There was years ago in the Blockley almshouse a man named Thomas Wiggins, who persisted in declaring that he was Jesus Christ, and started out to imitate the Savior by fasting forty days and nights. He succeeded in doing without food for thirty-five days, when his reason gave out, and the process of restoration was begun; but nature had been overtaxed, and he lived but forty-eight hours. The first seven days of his fast he existed on a small bottle of porter. with a few swallows of water. The porter he finally gave up, taking only water. When he died he was very much emaciated. A post-mortem examination showed that all his vital organs were very much contracted—his heart weighed six ounces, his stomach was one-third the normal size and bloodless, in the right lung there was a tuber-culous cavity considerably larger than a goose egg; there were also tubercles scattered through the left lung. From the start he began losing flesh, and, despite the exertions of the attendants, declined to partake of food, saying he was Christ, Wiggins was a native of Boone county, Ky., and, aside from his peculiar halfucination, was intelligent and rational, and was a general favorite with eral, and perpetual meaning of the word gentleman, he says, is "a man of pure race," well-bred, in the sense that a horse or dog is well-bred.

The lower orders and all orders have that Dr. Holland had been previously to learn that every vicious habit and chronic disease communicates itself by descent, and by purity of birth the entire system of the human body and soul may be gradually elevated or—by recklessness of birth—degraded, until there shall be as much difference between the well-bred and ill-bred human creature (whatever shall be as much difference between the well-bred and ill-bred human creature) (whatever pains may be taken with their education) as between the wolf-hound and the vilest mongrel cur.

A gentleman's first characteristic is that fineness of structure in the body which renders it capable of the most delicate sensation, and of structure in the mind which renders it capable of the most delicate sympathies—one may say, simply, "fineness of nature."

And though rightness of moral con-

Hence it will follow that one of the probable signs of high breeding in men generally will be their kindness and mercifulness, these always indicating more or less fineness of make in the mind, and miserliness and cruelty the contrary, hence that of Isaiah:

"The vile person shall no more be called liberal, nor the churl bountiful."

Narrow Escapes. Sometimes, when I look back over my life, I am amazed to see how the pages of its record are dotted with hair-breadth escapes. I escaped the dangers and hardships of the Revolutionary war by waiting until the war had been over about sixty years before I got born. When the Brooklyn Theater burned I was in Burlington. When the yellow fever broke out in New Orleans I was in Minnesote, and immediately always in Minnesote, and immediately always of the second state. Minnesota, and immediately skipped out for Canada. When I was a boy, at school, one day all the boys in school were flogged all 'round for robbing an apple orchard, and the flogging didn't do a bit of good, for every beggar of them had the cholera morbus all that night just the same And I 2 I was night, just the same. And I? I was attending another school, twenty-three miles distant. When all of my brothers and sisters were down with the scarlet and sisters were down with the scarlet fever I was down South in the army, and when I read the letters from home I laughed aloud to think of my great good fortune, and that I would only have to be shot at once or twice a week instead of having to take medicine three times a day. When a man comes to the office with a little bill, nine times out of ten I am out. And if by some astonCol. Dahlgren's Death.

It was now beginning to get dark, and we wanted some rest and something to eat, and crossing a creek we halted in an old field, where Col. Dahlgren took a short nap. We were soon moving again, and had not marched above half a mile, when the advance was stopped by an obstruction in the road. Lieut. Merritt rode back and met the Colonel and asked for more men. The Colonel, Maj. Cook, myself and ten or twenty men rode rapidly to the front, and upon arriving at the trees that were across the road we were met by an order to surren- "Lick the Seal." der, both parties demanding a surrender at the same time. Col. Dahlgren then leveled his revolver at the person who seemed to be the officer in command of the Confederates, but his pistol missed fire. In an instant a volley was poured into our left flank the whole length of our right, and formed on the top of a ridge a few rods from the road. We now began to look who was mising, and found the Colonel was not on hand. This a number of us were aware of before, having seen him fall off his horse by the light of the flash of the guns. Maj. Cooke was not on horseback, for when we reached the ridge his horse fell at the same fire that killed the Colonel. a shot fired afterward nor a man to be injuries. seen. We were allowed to form in the field in peace, andhad we a guide we might still have reached Gloucester Point, on Gen. Butler's lines; but we were now entirely without any knowledge of the surroundings; the men almost dead for sleep and out of ammunition; the horses about played out and every one more or less demoralized.

And was it strange? We had been in the saddle for seventy-six hours without a halt long enough to get any sleep. A council was now held to determine what should be done, for we did not intend to give up. It was finally agreed upon to fasten the horses in a hollow square by fastening the sabers into the ground, and then every one try to make his escape, The commissioned officers —Maj. Cooke, Lieut. Merritt and myself-together with four scouts and guides, were to go in a party. We inguides, were to go in a party. We intended to cross the country, going north, And a calm for the heart that mourns, And a calm for the spirit thats fearful, and strike the Rappahannock river be-low Fredericksburg and get one of our picket boats.

We left the men and horses and crept like cats to the woods (the same we had ambushed from) and through the bushet about a mile, when it began to break day, March 3. We hid in a pine thicket all day, and at dark set out. I had with eled this night about two miles, when we were getting weak for lack of something to eat, and, coming to a log cabin near to be a white man and woman. A Home Thrust.

William Cullen Bryant, when challenged once to fight a duel, contrived to fasten the charge of cowardice on "the other fellow" very neatly, and with little A Gentleman.

John Ruskin presents his idea of a gentleman in his well-known work "Modern Painters." The primal, literal, and perpetual meaning of the word gentleman, he says, is "a man of pure Holleman, he says, is "a man of pure Holleman and the reply heatiy, and with little trouble. His reply having been incorrectly reported in the notices of his death, his son-in-law, Parke Godwin, publishes the facts as follows:

Mr. Bryant was challenged by a Dr.

in the Evening Post, but, remembering that Dr. Holland had been previously challenged by William Leggett, without taking any notice of the challenge, he replied to this effect:

"MY DEAR SIR: I am not familiar with the code of the duelist, but I believe that, according to its provisions, no in her lover's arms for three hours Phosphorus is dangerous stuff to handle. A young man, in traveling, lit a match by scratching it with his thumb nail, and a piece of the incandescent phosphorus penetrated under the nail and made a slight burn, to which he paid no attention. But after an hour the pain became intense; the thumb swelled, then the hand, and next the forearm. He was obliged to alight at a station on the journey and send for a medical man, who declared that immediate amputation of the arm was necessary. The patient insisted on postponing the operation for a few hours until the arrival of his father, for whom he had telegraphed. Before the latter, however, could reach his son it was too late; the poisonous matter had gained the arm, then the shoulder, and any operation became impossible. He died of bragging; when he had finished she kissed him and murmured, "This the danger of handling phosphorus in the manner described.

Of course he indignantly denied the soft impeachment; and he gave the particulars of a particular night in proof. We quote his own words: Soon after I got in bed, my wife said: "Why, husband, what's the matter with you? You act so strangely!" "There's nothing the matter with me," said I. "I'm sure there is," said she; "you don't act natural at all. Sha'n't I get up and get something for you?" And she got up, lighted the candle, and came to the bed-side to look; at me, shading the light with one hand. "I knew there was something strange about you," said she. something strange about you," said she.
