

Notice.—All communications, local notices, and advertisements must be handed in on Monday of each week, to insure that week's publication. The above rules will be strictly adhered to.

Legal Printing.—Persons having legal advertising to do, should remember that it is not necessary that it should be published in the county seat—any paper published in the county will answer. In all matters transpiring in this vicinity, the interest of the advertisers will be better served, by having the notices published in their home paper, than to take them to a paper that is not as generally read in their vicinity, besides it is the duty of every one to support home institutions as much as possible.

To Correspondents.—Correspondents will please write on one side of the paper only. No communication will be published unless accompanied with the real name and address of the author, which we require, not for publication, but as an evidence of good faith.

All communications should be addressed to "THE HERALD,"

The Happy Spring-time.

BY WILL THE POOR SCHOLAR.

The flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of birds is come.—Sol 107:12.

The rough winds of winter have swept o'er the plain,
The "beautiful snow" has been looked for in vain;
And now as the spring comes with sunshine and rain
May our lives all be cheerful and gay.

Again from the cold lap of winter comes spring,
And birds of the forest their melody bring;
And as blithe as the birds we'll join them and sing
A glad and harmonious lay.

Mother Shipton's prophecy failed to bring
The end of the world, and the fearful have found
That as fast as old Terra firma is bound
In its place by omnipotent hand.

The spring and the summer, the winter and fall
Will still play hide and seek on this earthly ball
Till fire from Heaven upon it shall fall
And clothe it in brilliancy grand.

Soon vegetate on in green dress will appear
From its cold winter grave—its temporal life
First the blade, then the ear, then full corn in the ear;
Till germ to fruition shall come.

Then as the fall winds seem to wail our grief,
And brown woods remind us "we fade as the leaf"
We'll sing though we know that our lives will be brief,
And welcome the bright harvest home.

We'll be thankful for sunshine and shadow and rain,
The cold winter blast and the ripening grain;
Contentment with goldlines is greatest gain,
A sweet and continual feast.

The life that now is, with its pleasure or gloom,
May soon be exchanged for perpetual bloom
And the fair wedding garment in Heaven's dressing room;
So needless for each welcome guest.

Proverbs of Solomon Snibbs.

The sun may rise and set, but the foolish man still drinketh tolu rock and ryecoth not early in the morning.

It is well if thou canst say, "I have a fat bank account;" it is better if thou knowest when the cashier is going to skip out and canst withdraw thy deposit in good season.

The mule knoweth when to kick, and when he kicketh he hitteth hard. So is it with the man to whom thou sayest, "Go, for thou art truthfully a prevaricator."

Look not upon the lager when it is aloe and glucose, when it foameth not aright in the schupper, for at the last it giveth thee Bright's disease of the kidneys.

Better is a dinner of roast beef and all the fixings therewith, than roast turkey without cranberry sauce.

Contentment is the better part of discontentment.

If thou wouldst preserve thy umbrella from the hands of the borrower, carry one of green gingham with a yellow handle.

He who lendeth to the poor getteth cent per cent, whosever accommodateth the man of wealth, getteth but seven.

The shrewd rich man is he who prospered to fail; the honest poor man is he who failed to prosper.

A wise man beggetteth his tobacco from his friends and cheweth; but the foolish man investeth ten cents for a package thereof.

An ounce of porterhouse steak is better than a pound of greasy pork.

Blessed are those who live in comfort. For they seldom have occasion to mourn.

Poverty is the fire, wealth the ashes of life: The former destroys all joy, the latter so suffices with pleasure that joy becomes a stranger to the heart. Better is the inter medium where both joy and pleasure have their way.—Commercial Advertiser.

Mistakes.

There are thousands of single men who have no home-life, and who think it beyond their reach. Their evenings are long tedious and dull, and they go to much expense to get relief. They buy tobacco; they pay for stimulants; they patronize places of amusement; they keep up forms of society that cost them something; in their own way, they entertain, and they would confess, in moments of frankness, that they are not very happy, after all. After a little, the commoner forms of enjoyment become insipid, and they have to go farther; and in a certain proportion of cases, before they think they can afford home-life they are unfitted for its enjoyment. They are prematurely old, delapidated in feeling, bankrupt in affection, incapable of adaption to new and gentler ways, "fakes"; more or less penitent, but condemned to miss the sweetness and aroma of life, however favorable their circumstances may become.

They did not know that with right deas of life it would have been easier and cheaper for them to have married fitting wives; that they wasted on needless, and often noxious, indulgences as much as would have—in the hands of a helpmeet—secured the pure, serene and satisfying happiness which they sought in vain, and will seek in vain forever.

Nor is the stronger sex the only blunderer on this side of life. There are thousands of women who have no idea that life may be worth living even if divested of the luxuries and pleasures which they have either enjoyed or dreamed of. Honest affection, unless backed by wealth, is spurned; and too often wealth, where the affection is little rated, and indeed sometimes little worth, is reason enough for a woman to promise love honor and obedience for life. Poor thing! She makes a great mistake; and soon the disenchantment is complete.

She did not know that her life could be most helped, beautified and made complete by a real man who loved her, whose hopes and successes she could freely share; who, without the satiety of wealth, had the priceless "pleasures of hope," and the constant stimulus of an honest ambition, and who as he grew stronger by daily victories over self and the hardships of life, would grow worthier of her love, and more fit to be leaned upon.

There are men whose life is a constant slavery. They are less free than the man who "shines their boots," or runs their office errands. They are living to make money, and successful and of consequence in their own eyes, just as they succeed. It is their pleasure, their life-work, their end of existence. That is another mistake.

There are pleasures of books and of thoughts, of freedom and of benevolence, of contentment and of quiet, which they never will. You may talk to them—in vain. They have now no organ of perception for such things any more than a color-blind man for delicate hues, or a person who is stone deaf for the music of the spheres.

There is certainly a great deal of wrong-doing by men and women, the wrong of which is so plain to all on-lookers, that one wonders what motive there can be for sacrificing their own obvious interests. Pride, malice and revenge account for many things. But there is a class of evils for which ignorance is to be blamed, and in recognizing this factor we are helped at once to pity, while we blame, the wrong-doer, and we are shown one thing, at least, that may be attempted in the way of reform.

People require recreation. Every sane man knows that. It is at times as clearly ones duty to laugh, to "loaf," to lounge, as it is for others to weep, to strain every nerve, and to deny one's self. And because this is true, the men feel it to be, they go into—not recreation, renewing, making over again (for that is the meaning of it); but take a very different road.

There are many who ought not in justice to be held accountable for the mistakes they make, having never been taught how properly to proceed. And with the best of us there are too many, alas! of whom it might truly be said that our whole life has been a mistake.

A new motive power is heard of from Baltimore. The fluid, or gas, constituting the motive power is used over and over again, being returned after use to a condenser, thence to a heater. The fluid costs ten cents per gallon. One-sixth the amount of fluid is said to perform twice the work of ordinary fuel.

The Companionship of Music.

There are moods in our strangely complex nature which we can neither understand nor control; they come upon us like the hidden influence of the air, of place, or of season or whatever chance of inward or outward circumstances varies our life. We are subject to, while unable to explain them. They are part of that wonderful unseen mould which God is always putting, piece by piece, around the lawless elements of our souls, until a positive character is formed. Among these strange and unaccountable moods is that desire, which every human heart at times feels, for companionship other than that of its kind. We have all of us probably, felt this peculiar longing; have known times when, though lonesome, unsatisfied, yearning to get out of self in some way, still human companionship fails to satisfy the craving of the soul. We seem to need, not so much diversion from individual, as from the kind—humanity itself. Music has a strange and grateful power to supply this unselfish want of the soul. There seems to be a lurking harmony between all the moods of the human spirit and the like inarticulate sounds in nature. All music is a crying out; it is not language, but the soul of language, uttering itself, with all its complexities in a single pregnant cry. Music is the voice of nature and of the natural and unpurged in man. Therefore, music expresses best man's natural longings; it is the echo of his spontaneous emotions; it is the only medium into which the deepest and most native feelings of the soul can be translated. Often a few simple chords of music will bring a sense of satisfied companionship to the heart tired of itself and its kind. One feels as though a friend more tenderly and profoundly sympathetic than any human friend, were at his side. He almost communes with this sense of a personal presence. Account for it as one will, it is a fact not to be denied; that the heart is conscious of an actual sense of companionship in the voice of music. Some say it may be the waking of old impressions, or perhaps the mere physical effect of sounds sensuously agreeable; it may be the hallucination of habit or of temperament, or the result of the mind's determination by some instrumentality—music not essential—to cast off its mood of dissatisfaction. In various such ways, and all of them, as it seems to me, fertile, the analysts strive to account for the charm of companionship in music. It remains a fact, not a demonstration. Poets will marvel at it, and philosophers seek its explanation; but to him whose heart is rather attuned to the marvelous and beautiful in nature and his own soul than excited by it to investigation, the true mission of music to soothe and cheer and sympathize, will always remain a delightful experience, and a fact that does not depend for its credibility upon explanation.—Church's Musical Visitor.

AN EFFECTUAL TEMPERANCE LECTURE.—A young man called, in company with several other gentlemen, upon a young lady. Her father was also present to assist in entertaining the callers. He did not share his daughter's scruples against the use of spirituous drinks, for he had wine to offer. The wine was poured out, and would have been drunk, but the young lady asked:

"Did you call upon me, or upon papa?"

Gallantry, if nothing else, compelled them to answer:

"We called upon you."

"Then you will please not drink wine. I have lemonade for my callers."

The father urged the guests to drink, and they were undecided. The young lady added:

"Remember, if you call upon me then you drink lemonade; but if upon papa, why, then in that case I have nothing to say."

The wine glasses were set down with their contents untasted. After leaving the house, one of the party exclaimed:

"That is the most effectual temperance lecture I have ever heard."

The young man from whom these facts were obtained broke off at once from the use of strong drink, and is now a clergyman preaching temperance and religion. He still holds in grateful remembrance the lady who gracefully and resolutely gave him to understand that her callers should not drink wine.

There is said to be one thing of which science gives absolutely no account, either as to its cause or its exceptional action, and that is what is called a "sudden gust of wind."

Nobody knows what makes it, but nobody can explain its great but momentary velocity. In other words, "Thou canst not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth."

How to LIVE LONG.—We have to a great extent the power of prolonging our lives. Living by rule and obeying nature's simple laws may seem very irksome to people at first, but doing so soon becomes a habit, and a blessed habit, and one that ends in happiness, to comfort, and to length of days. A great deal might be said about the benefits of regularity in our modes and ways of living. As a proof of the beneficence of regular living is the fact that old people who have once settled down in a kind of groove of life cannot be unsettled therefrom, even for a few days, without danger to health and life itself. They may have, perhaps, their regular time for getting up in the morning, certain methods of ablution, certain kinds and quantities of food and drink, certain times for taking these, certain times for rest, exercise, and recreation, and a hundred other things which, taken separately, may seem but trifles, but taken in the aggregate make up their lives; and they know and feel that they must not be unsettled. The wheels of life will run long in grooves, but soon run out over rough, irregular roads. Habits, whether good or bad, are easily formed when one is young, but when one gets up in years it is terribly difficult and oftentimes dangerous to set them aside. Therefore, study, if you would live long to be regular in your habits of life in every way, and let your regularity have a good tendency.

On February 2nd, 1883, the charters of 300 national banks will expire unless Congress passes a bill providing for their extension. Distinguished financiers prophesy that unless some such bill is passed this country will see one of the greatest panics from which it has ever suffered.

WOOD YARD.—Burnett Steinbach has opened a first class wood yard, at his residence on Middlestreet west, and is prepared to supply the inhabitants of Chelsea with cord and stove wood in any quantity and on reasonable terms. Inquire of Chas. Steinbach, at his harness shop.

FARM FOR SALE.—The place known as the Slegfried farm—situated in the village of Watertown, Jackson Co., Mich.—73 acres, 10 acres of timber—good land—good buildings and plenty of fruit. Apply to H. F. Slegfried, Watertown, Mich.

The cheapest place in the county to get your job-work, auction bills, etc. done, is at the HERALD OFFICE.

SURPRISE PARTY.—Last Wednesday, Mr. Burnett Steinbach was greatly surprised at his residence, by a large gathering of about eighty-three friends, with a large supply of the "good things" by way of refreshments from all parts of the county. They also brought with them musical instruments of all kinds both string and instrumental. There was also present a jubilee singer from Ann Arbor, who sang several fine songs to the delight of the company. It is said, it was one of the finest gatherings, and one of the most pleasant entertainments of the season.

A suit was recently commenced in the circuit court against a saloon keeper under section 3 of the liquor law of 1875, which gives a wife or child a right of action for damages against a saloon keeper who sells her husband or father liquor, whereby she or her family are deprived of their support; but it was found on examination of the amendment of last winter that this section had been repealed and not been re-enacted and there is now no remedy.—Ez.

According to law this year, there has to be two men appointed to review taxable property, in every district in the county, besides a supervisor. We are informed that Geo. W. Turnbull and Hiram Pierce are the chosen ones for Sylvan. We think it is a very good idea—because any one who thinks that their property is over-taxed can have the supervisor and his two assistants to complain to, and between the three, we think there will be no trouble. The time for review of the tax-roll will be some time in May.

BURGARS.—Last Thursday evening our village was entered by burglars. They entered French's store, by cutting a pane of glass out of the window in the rear, and took as supposed to the amount of $50 in clothing, boots and shoes, gent's furnishing goods etc. They next went to the hardware store of Bacon & Co., and made an entrance the same way as above stated, and took therefrom a few revolvers, knives, spoons etc., to the amount of $100 or more, and put out. Next morning two valises were found hid across the rail track under some lumber, containing a variety of goods—but nearly all dry goods of a light nature to be easily carried—none of the goods have been identified by parties here, and are supposed to have been stolen from some other locality. They made good their escape.

An Ex-Consul's Story.

To the Editor of the Brooklyn Eagle:

A late United States Consul at one of the English inland ports, who is now a private resident of New York, relates the following interesting story. He objects, for private reasons, to having his name published, but authorizes the writer to publish his statement, and, if necessary, to refer to him in his private capacity, any person seeking such reference. Defering to his wishes, I hereby present his statement in almost the exact language in which he gave it to me.
C. M. FARMER.

1690 Third avenue, New York.

"On my last voyage home from England, some three years ago, in one of the Cunard steamers, I noticed one morning, after a few days out of port, a young man hobbling about on the upper deck, supported by crutches and seeming to move with extreme difficulty and no little pain. He was well dressed and of exceedingly handsome countenance, but his limbs were somewhat emaciated and his face very pale and bore the traces of long suffering. As he seemed to have no attendant or companion, he at once attracted my sympathies, and I went up to him as he leaned against the taffrail looking out on the foaming track which the steamer was making.

"Excuse me, my young friend," I said, touching him gently on the shoulder, 'you appear to be an invalid and hardly able or strong enough to trust yourself unattended on an ocean voyage; but if you require any assistance I am a robust and healthy man and shall be glad to help you.'

"You are very kind," he replied, in a weak voice, 'but I require no present aid beyond my crutches, which enable me to pass from my stateroom up here to get the benefit of the sunshine and the sea breeze.'

"You have been a great sufferer, no doubt," I said, 'and I judge that you have been afflicted with that most troublesome disease—rheumatism, whose prevalence and intensity seem to be on an alarming increase both in England and America.'

"You are right," he answered; 'I have been its victim for more than a year, and after failing to find relief from medical skill have lately tried the Springs of Carlsbad and Vichy. But they have done me no good, and I am now on my return home to Missouri to die, I suppose. I shall be content if life is spared to me to reach my mother's presence. She is a widow and I am her only child.'

"There was a pathos in this speech which affected me profoundly and awakened in me a deeper sympathy than I had felt before. I had no words to answer him, and stood silently beside him watching the snowy wake of the ship. While thus standing my thoughts reverted to a child—a ten year old boy—of a neighbor of mine residing near my consulate residence, who had been cured of a stubborn case of rheumatism by the use of St. Jacobs Oil, and I remembered that the steward of the ship had told me the day before that he had cured himself of a very severe attack of the gout in New York just before his last voyage by the use of the same remedy. I at once left my young friend and went below to find the steward. I not only found him off duty, but discovered that he had a bottle of the Oil in his locker, which he had carried across the ocean in case of another attack. He readily parted with it on my representation, and hurrying up again, I soon persuaded the young man to allow me to take him to his berth and apply the remedy. After doing so I covered him up snugly in bed and requested him not to get up until I should see him again. That evening I returned to his stateroom and found him sleeping peacefully and breathing gently. I roused him and inquired how he felt. 'Like a new man,' he answered with a grateful smile. 'I feel no pain and am able to stretch my limbs without difficulty. I think I'll get up.' 'No don't get up to-night, I said, 'but let me rub you again with the Oil, and in the morning you will be able to go above.' 'All right,' he said, laughing. 'I then applied the Oil again, rubbing his knees, ankles and arms thoroughly, until he said he felt as if he had a mustard poultice all over his body. I then left him. The next morning when I went upon deck for a breezy promenade, according to my custom, I found my patient waiting for me with a smiling face, and without his crutches, although he limped in his movements, but without pain. I don't think I ever felt so happy in my life. To make a long story short, I attended him closely during the rest of the voyage—some four days—applying the Oil every night, and guarding him against too much exposure to the fresh and damp breezes, and on landing at New York, he was able, without assistance, to mount the hotel omnibus, and go to the Astor House. I called on him two days later, and found him actually engaged in packing his trunk, preparatory to starting West for his home, that evening. With a bright and grateful smile he welcomed me, and pointing to a little box carefully done up in thick brown paper, which stood upon the table, he said: 'My good friend, can you guess what this is? A present for your sweetheart?' I answered, 'No,' he laughed—that is a dozen bottles of St. Jacobs Oil, which I have just purchased from Hudnut, the druggist, across the way, and I am taking them home to show my good mother what has saved her son's life and restored him to her in health. And with it I would like to carry you along also, to show her the face of him, without whom, I should probably never have tried it. If you should ever visit the little village of Sedalia, in Missouri, Charles Townsend and his mother will welcome you to their little home, with hearts full of gratitude, and they will show you a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil enshrined in a silver and gold casket, which we shall keep as a parlor ornament as well as memento of our meeting on the Cunard steamer.

"We parted, after an hour's pleasant chat with mutual good-will and esteem, and a few weeks afterwards I received a letter from him telling me he was in perfect health and containing many grateful expressions of his affectionate regards."

COUGHS, COLDS, CONSUMPTION, BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA, AND ALL Diseases OF THE THROAT, CHEST AND LUNGS.

The BALSAAM OF TOLU has always been one of the most important remedies in the medical armamentarium of the above Diseases, but has never been so advantageously compounded as in LAWRENCE & MARTIN'S TOLU, ROCK & RYE. Its soothing BALSAAM properties afford a diffusive stimulant, appetizer and tonic, to build up the system after the cough has been relieved.

GREEN B. BAUM, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Washington, D. C., Jan. 25th, 1880, says: "TOLU, ROCK & RYE is an agreeable Remedy in Pectoral complaints and is classed as a Medicinal preparation under the U. S. Revised Statutes, and when so stamped, may be sold by DRUGGISTS, GROCERS, and other persons, without special tax," or license.

Don't be deceived by dealers who try to palm off Rock and Rye for LAWRENCE & MARTIN'S TOLU, ROCK & RYE—which is the only MEDICATED article on the genuine has their name on the Proprietary stamp on each bottle.
