Table with 3 columns: Name of publication, Price, and Both.

SPECIAL OFFER!

As a premium for new subscribers and for prompt renewals, we offer The New Family Atlas of the World, containing colored maps of each state and territory, each province of Canada and nationality of Europe, together with full descriptive matter relative to topography, history, climate, population, etc.; graphically illustrated by colored diagrams, representing area, assessed value, railroad mileage, cereal products, gold, silver and currency in the hands of the people, bonds held by banks, etc.

The price of this Atlas is $2.00; and $2.00, cash in hand, will pay for both HERALD and Atlas.

The Register Printing House, Ann Arbor, is a regular bee hive. Besides doing a large amount of Job and book work, and running an extensive bindery, they print the Register, The Medical Advance, Physician and Surgeon, American Meteorological Journal, The Monthly Bulletin and are doing press work on the Argus, Democrat and Journal.

We are receiving, almost daily, applications to club the best magazine and newspaper in the country with the HERALD. Each application is accompanied by an extended editorial notice, setting forth the superior excellence of the periodical concerned, its aims and cheapness, and the large addition that will be made to our subscription list by such combination. Should we comply with half these requests, we would have little room left for local news or even advertisements. We wish, however, to say to our readers that, whatever other papers they wish to take with the HERALD, either renewals or new subscriptions, if they will come and see us on the subject, we think we can save them money as well as all the trouble of correspondence and risk of loss in the transmission of money by mail.

We place at the head of this column a few of the papers referred to simply as a sample of the reduction of prices that we can afford to make. Come and see us. Each order will help a little.

We add to our combination list, this week, The New York World, (weekly). The price of the World is one dollar a year. The World and the HERALD may be had by old and new subscribers for $2.25; and to every one who accepts the offer, we will present a 320 page History of the United States, compiled on a new and original plan, giving, in chronological order, all the important events that have transpired in this country, from 1492 to 1885, conveniently arranged for ready reference. It describes under its proper date all important patents; all discoveries in science and the useful arts; fires, floods, hailstorms, tornadoes, cyclones, epidemics, accidents and disasters on sea and land; labor troubles, strikes and lockouts, and hundreds of other matters never mentioned by historians. Besides being a history in the ordinary sense, it is a condensed newspaper file for four hundred years. Copiously illustrated."

If you want the World without the HERALD, we will get it for you, with premium included, for $1.10; the dime being added for postage, the premium is free. You can have the World alone for $1.

OBSERVATIONS AND EXPERIENCES ABROAD.

NO. 19.

Perhaps our readers think we are making slow progress in our journey up the Rhine, but let them remember that progress in travel is not measured by miles and leagues but by information gained. Our hotel bills are light on the present trip and we can afford to stop oftener than travelers who travel in fact and not in fancy. In journeying to our next stopping place, Boppard, about twelve or fifteen miles distant, we pass through a great bend in the river where lofty precipitous rocks hang over the stream. Little towns nestle among the foothills, each characterized by its own notoriety. Boppard is a very ancient walled town, whose streets are mere lanes. Its origin was a castle built by the great Roman leader Drusus, around which, according to the old feudal custom, his followers built their rude habitations, both to defend the castle and to be defended by it. Some of its present battlements stand upon foundations, built with Roman cement, upon which the tooth of time makes no impression.

In the middle ages Boppard was an Imperial city, and many diets of the German Empire were held there. Behind the town is a large structure that was once the convent of Marienburg, but is now an institution for the education of girls. As we advance the lofty hills recede once more, presenting a smile of grainfields and meadows amid the frowns of craggy, castellated summits. It is, however, of short duration. The twin castles of Sternberg and Liebenstein (Star-mountain and Love-rock) crowning the double summit of a lofty, rocky prominence, present, from their nearness to each other a friendly rather than a hostile appearance. They are often called the Brothers. Attractive scenery, ever varying, will now attract the attention of the voyager, but for a short time only. The evidences of feudal strife are not all passed yet. One of the most perfectly preserved ancient castles of the Rhine, surmounting a craggy summit that rises abruptly behind an insignificant village will greet the vision. It is very ancient, unmarred by modern changes or repairs and only the wood work is wanting. Time feasted his destructive tooth on that long ages ago. This Castle was called the Mouse in contrast with another some distance higher up the stream called the Cat. These were hostile fortresses, and in the contests the Mouse seems to have proved the stronger. We are now passing through that portion of the Rhine that is richest in historic reminiscences of every kind. Roman governors and generals, French kings, German emperors, provincial electors, bishops and archbishops, have, in their turn, trodden these rude footpaths, dwelt, sometimes as lords, sometimes as prisoners, in these castles, and banqueted on the excellent wines that were manufactured from grapes grown upon the rugged, sometimes terraced slopes of these Rhine banks.

Though we may seem to linger long amid the surpassing beauties of nature and the astonishing barbarities of man, let me assure those of my readers, whose happy fortune it may be, at some future time, to visit these scenes, that they will find far more has been omitted than mentioned. Of the six times I passed through this region, on one occasion I stopped off and visited on foot the places I am only faintly describing; in fact only alluding to.

THOMAS HOLMES.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

FROM OUR REGULAR CORRESPONDENT.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 5, 1886. The result of the elections, illustrated the old Italian apothegm that it is the unexpected that happens. There is a telegraph office in the White House and on election nights it is a busy place. Usually on such occasions a large corps of messenger boys are also kept busy carrying messages from other lines besides the Western Union to the White House. Everything had been put in order for last Tuesday night, and the President sat for several hours in Col. Lamont's room, next door to the office, and got the news direct from all parts of the country.

His greatest interest was in New York, and Mr. Hewitt's plurality was a matter of considerable congratulation. The democratic losses among Congressmen in New York were, of course, unwelcome but they were not unexpected from several districts. Finally the President retired and left Col. Lamont to struggle with the returns for the balance of the night. The latter remained at the side of the telegraph operator from eight o'clock in the evening until an early hour next morning, and patiently sifted out of the mass of matter received those points which were of most interest to the President.

Secretary Lamar is engaged upon his annual report of the Interior Department. It is understood that he cordially endorses commissioner Atkins' views concerning the Indians of the Indian Territory. These are that they give up tribal relations, become citizens, establish courts, enterprises, etc. Mr. Atkins is now in Colorado, making a tour of the agencies. Secretary Lamar has just received information from him to the effect that the Indians there are in excellent condition. They are peaceful, contented, and making progress toward civilization.

Buffalo Bill (Mr. Wm. Cody), who is in the city, came to make his report to the commissioner of Indian affairs. He made arrangements for securing new Indians from various tribes for his next season's show of the "Wild West." He is kind to the redskins, pays them good wages, and is considered by the department as doing a good work towards their civilization. He is one of the few men whom the Government has allowed to employ Indians for the purpose of a show. The Indians he had with him last summer have all gone back to their tribes. Before sending them home Buffalo Bill gave to each one of the men and women a full suit of clothes in the European fashion. It is presumed that he will not undertake to exhibit the savages in Europe next year as nothing was said about taking them abroad. He would not be allowed to do so without giving heavy bonds to the Interior Department.

A few days ago an Irish member of the British House of Commons who went to the White House, to be introduced to the President, was much surprised to find no guards on duty there. He approached the Executive Mansion very timidly, and at the outer gate he hesitated as if something were lacking as to ceremony. At the front door he hesitated still more, and had to be urged by his escort to proceed any further. Finally when he was being led up the carpeted stairway to the President's own apartments on the second floor he stared around in astonishment and asked, in an undertone, "Are there no guards on duty?"

That the President's residence should be open to all comers without let or hindrance was something he had never dreamed of. He was still more astonished when Mr. Cleveland stood up against his desk, with crossed legs and folded arms and talked to him without any useless ceremony or nonsense. He remained to watch the afternoon reception in the East Room where the President meets, three times a week at half past one, all who desire to shake hands with him. The home rule member saw the President shake hands with black and white, without distinction, and coming away from the White House he declared that he had an entirely new sense of American freedom.

Although the President feels compelled by a press of business, the preparation of his annual message etc., to deny himself to visitors between the 16th. of Nov. and the meeting of Congress, the mere hand shakers are not included. He will continue to meet them as usual on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays. As he was starting down to the East Room to shake hands with his callers a few days ago, he was asked if he did not find it fatiguing. "No" answered Mr. Cleveland, "it is the easiest work I have to do during the whole day."
