TWILIGHT.

When fades the drowsy, dreamy day, When steals the sun through clouds away, And o'er the rocks and streams and wood The faint, gray shadows sink and brood...

A CONSOLIDATION.

The Favorable Terms on Which It Was Effectuated.

The sanctum of the Bloomville Journal was occupied by two persons. One of them sat on a rickety chair, his feet on the table. He was smoking and absent scanning the walls. The sanctum was his fastidious taste, was not an attractive place, but his friendship for the young editor, who was working hard at a desk, drew him here every evening.

He laid the letter down and proceeded to think. Just then Fulton came up, and to him was poured out the dilemma. Fulton laughed heartily, too much so to suit the perplexed editor, who was running his fingers through his pompadour until it stood as straight as a West Point cat.

"Tell you what, John, come go down there with me to-morrow night. I've told them about you; we will spend the evening with the family, and you can fix up the name without any trouble, I know. I think myself the Critic is the better name."

"But, damn take it! I've built up this paper, put my heart's blood into it. I'm identified with it, and I'll be switched if I give it up. But I'll go with you."

"The evening that followed was to Edward's red-letter evening of his life. Never had he met such a charming entertainment, never such unassuming and pleasant hospitality, as in the Irving mansion."

"Remember, no business to-night," Fulton had said, as they pulled the bell. Mr. Irving, however, was not at home, a fact that Edward had no occasion to regret after he had met the ladies of the household. Edward was a man much admired by women. His society was greatly sought by the cultivated Bloomville ladies, and the fact that he was somewhat critical and exclusive heightened his social value.

"I don't know that follow, but I have a great curiosity to, but reading his paper every week, I've formed an opinion of him which your description justifies. He's no force in politics at all, but in every thing pertaining to literature and good taste he is unusual."

my own article unwritten. You see," and Edward walked around and resumed his chair, "this fellow is perpetually scooping me on such articles. He comes out two days before I do, and he invariably writes on subjects that I have in view. Now, if I print my articles, my views are so near his own that he will think I am simply 'adapting' his articles, so I copy them entire, and my printer has the impudence to tell me there is more Critic than editorial about the paper. What's his name anyhow?"

"Irving, Washington Irving. He claims to be a third cousin of the original I believe, Miss Irving, the sister, is a daisy of the girl. I see her often, I'll tell you, Edward, how you can get out of the difficulty, and I thought you might like to go. 'Propose a consolidation to Irving.'"

"But that gentleman was already halfway down stairs, and Edward's enthusiasm took the form of a long and minute letter to Washington Irving, editor of the Newton Critic, setting forth the estimable benefits that would accrue to that paper from a permanent union with the Bloomville Journal. 'From a long acquaintance with you editorially,' so ran the letter, 'I am certain that our united work would result in unusual success. The wonderful tact and observation manifested in your general articles combined with my practical knowledge would make the Bloomville Journal a paper of the highest class.' Then followed financial propositions, very liberal ones, for John Edward was the embodiment of liberality both in theory and practice.

The sixteen hours that elapsed before an answer came were long ones to the impatient young editor. Finally he broke the seal. A letter courteous and liberal in tone was his own conclusion thus: 'I am as highly pleased with the idea of a consolidation as yourself. My papa has always lacked the element which can supply, viz: greater practical knowledge than I possess, having been educated for an entirely different profession and drifting into this merely by accident. I agree as to terms in every respect, but I can not consent to be entirely merged into the Bloomville Journal. The name of Critic is far better for such a paper as ours will be, and while I agree that your city will be the better point of publication, I must refuse to give up the name of my own paper.'

"Here's a how-do-do," muttered Edward. He laid the letter down and proceeded to think. Just then Fulton came up, and to him was poured out the dilemma. Fulton laughed heartily, too much so to suit the perplexed editor, who was running his fingers through his pompadour until it stood as straight as a West Point cat.

"Tell you what, John, come go down there with me to-morrow night. I've told them about you; we will spend the evening with the family, and you can fix up the name without any trouble, I know. I think myself the Critic is the better name."

"I don't know that follow, but I have a great curiosity to, but reading his paper every week, I've formed an opinion of him which your description justifies. He's no force in politics at all, but in every thing pertaining to literature and good taste he is unusual."

"Just then a boy entered with an armful of mail. Edward walked to the table, glanced over it and singled out a paper. "I don't believe in any of those beastly fads, theosophy and the like, don't know a thing about them and care less."

away. The very air of the place said 'no smoking allowed.' He was intent on his admiring examination when there was a step on the stair and a lady entered with a bouquet in her hand. "Ah, Miss Irving!" and Edward stepped forward to greet her as she sank into a large chair. "You fill the editorial chair very well."

"As to draperies, yes," she laughed. "But when am I to see this very exclusive M. W. Irving, your brother? I have not many more hours in this pleasant loitering-place."

"Miss Irving looked archly at him. 'Have you not guessed that M. W. Irving is myself? Mary Washington Fulton. They had to get our distinguished relative's name in somehow.' She paused and looked at Edward. An expression of almost painful perplexity was on his face.

"But," he gasped, "your brother, the editor."

"I am the editor," she said, quietly, disliking to laugh at him in his embarrassment. "It was your own mistake, Mr. Edwards, and it was so funny that Mr. Fulton and all of us let it go on. You will pardon us?"

"But Mr. Edwards had withdrawn with a hasty bow. He wanted time and air. He finally concluded to remain until the evening train, and a boy from the hotel bore to the sanctum of the Newton Critic a missive saying that at three of the clock on that bright September afternoon Mr. John Edward would present himself at the Irving mansion. It was sudden, but long often is. After several hours of tete-a-tete, Mr. Edwards and Miss Irving joined the family group, of whom Fulton made one.

"Gentlemen and ladies," and Edward led Miss Irving to her mother. "A consolidation has been effected on most favorable terms."

Smiles and congratulations went around. It seemed to be under-standed from the beginning. "Which is it to be, Critic or Journal?" questioned Fulton.

"I bow to her in that," answered Edward. "It is to be Critic, but she has promised not to be as tenacious of her own name."

"Irving is too historic a name to give up, Mary," said her sister. "Mr. Edwards should take your name."

"Yes, indeed," chimed in Fulton. "Irving should not be changed except for one fully as historic. Fulton for instance. Didn't a fellow named Fulton invent the steam engine, or something of the kind?"

"The man who essayed to 'collect his thoughts' did not make a very large deposit at the bank."

FACTS ABOUT THE MOON. During a long storm, persons who are well versed in weather lore are often heard to console themselves with the prediction that there will be a change of weather when the moon changes. Nasmyth and Carpenter characterize as a popular error, in its most absurd form, this belief that the gradual turning of the moon's face toward and away from the sun could, at certain points, upset the existing condition of our atmosphere, generate clouds and pour down rains. In England (and the same may be said of America) the weather changes about every three days, and there is a change of the moon every seven days, so that many coincidences must occur. Those who believe that 'the moon rules the weather' always credit such coincidences to lunar influence. But the theory is untenable unless it applies to every case, and unless the same effect is always produced by the same cause. To suppose that a change of the moon will turn dry weather to wet or wet to dry is the merest childishness and contrary to all meteorological records.—Popular Science Monthly.

I consulted an army of different physicians, and spent large sums of money, but received no lasting benefit."

THE OUTGROWTH OF A VAST EXPERIENCE. Many times women call on their family physicians, suffering as they imagine, one from heart disease, another from nervous exhaustion or prostration, another with pain here, and there, and in this way they all present alike to themselves and their easy-going and indifferent, or over-busy doctor, separate and distinct diseases, for which he prescribes his pills and potions, assuming them to be such, when, in reality, they are all only symptoms caused by some one grand disorder. The physician's practice, in such cases, is to treat the symptoms, and the patient gets no better, but probably worse by reason of the delay, wrong treatment and consequent complications. A proper medicine, like Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, directed to the cause would have entirely removed the disease, thereby dispelling all those distressing symptoms, and instituting comfort instead of prolonging misery.

THE OUTGROWTH OF A VAST EXPERIENCE. A heavy plaid cloth came Tuesday. A dozen different plaids. Suitable for dresses or wrappers, 54 inch, worth 1.25 for 1.00. To tell the whole tale in a few words: You won't find them in any other store. If you should find them in one or two of the quieter stores the price will be 1.25.

The PRICES quoted give a fair idea of the money value in our blankets, but they are no more than hints at the assortment and prices.

The statistical report of the department of agriculture makes an increase of over one-half of one per cent. in the condition of corn. The indication is now for a yield of over 20 bushels per acre. Slight uncertainty regarding the exact area may cause a variation in the final record of one or two per cent. from 1,500,000,000 bushels. The average rate of the wheat yield appears to be about 11.8 bushels. The increase of acreage, which is large in Dakota, will bring the product nearly equal to 450,000,000 bushels. The rate of yield in Michigan is 13.3. The yield of oats is about 25 bushels per acre. The products are fully 600,000,000 bushels.

A Trip to Pittsburg.

It is without doubt a good thing to travel, even though it may be but on a business or pleasure trip to a prominent city of a neighboring state. It is still more enjoyable if connected with a visit to old friends. Realizing this an invitation of most pressing cordiality was accepted to visit an old army comrade, who is now a resident physician at Pittsburg. The trip was made via Toledo, Cleveland and Youngstown, and was delightful throughout, until the Ohio river was reached, on the evening of the 10th inst., and then it was as we came out of Beaver Valley and crossed the Ohio on a suspension bridge ninety feet above high water mark, that the wonders of nature gas loomed up on either side. From the river to Pittsburg, a distance of twenty miles, it seemed but a string of manufacturing towns, whose industry was iron and glass manufacture, and the whole scene lighted up with numerous high natural gas torches. It was a wonderful sight. Soon the electric as well as the natural gas lights of Pittsburg are sparkling and glaring at us, as our train rolls into the city on the Birmingham side of the Monongahela river.

We were met at the station and welcomed by our friend Dr. W. A. Hart, and after a little time spent in visiting and resting, we start out to "do" in some sort the city of Pittsburg and its faithful twin sister, Allegheny. This is not only a great city, but a place of frequent and great events. The Presidential party that so recently passed through, had scarcely got out of sight, before the American Bankers Association convened here. The natives of course would take much pains to impress these great visitors of Pittsburg's wonders. The press issued extras containing descriptions of the place, and accounts of its "works." This is a city of "works," and the press shows them up well; better probably than any cyclopedias, but we care not so much to notice Pittsburg's history or description, as to note a few of our impressions. This much however in a general way, that is condensed from the morning papers.

Pittsburg is a large, peculiar and interesting city of 320,000 inhabitants. It is a city of iron, steel and glass works. It has twenty blast furnaces, 15 glass works, and many and varied iron works. It has many fine public buildings and 247 churches. The city is crowded between the Allegheny and Monongahela rivers that here unite and form the Ohio. The whole is surrounded with high river bluffs. The city is spreading out on the hills, and from the hill surroundings, which seem to enclose this city as a frame does a picture, most magnificent views may be had. To make it more easy for people to get up in the world, and be with the upper class, six inclined railways are in operation. These appear to be dangerous as a means of elevating, but are safe, and it is really exhilarating to go up in one of their cars. The view from Duquesne Heights is charming, for since the advent of natural gas Pittsburg is not the smoky city it once was. The two cities, and surrounding hills, and the rivers with steamboats and coal barges and the magnificent bridges which span the Allegheny and Monongahela rivers can be seen very clearly from these heights

Lines.

Written on the death of Matel McKone who died March 21, 1887.

Thy little life is over,
Thy little race is run,
Thy bitter pangs are ended,
And God has called thee home.

"Oh," she murmured, "I'll be patient,
But this pain is hard to bear."
"Oh," "to sleep for one short minute,"
Was her anxious, earnest prayer,

"Mamma, darling, do not leave me,
For I am growing chilly now;
Soon your little girl will leave you,
For death's dew is on my brow."

"Now you have two girls,
But there will soon be only one,
Aggie, Aggie! how she'll miss me,
When they tell her I am gone."

"And, papa, in the evening,
When the long days work is done,
Try to think that I am watching you
From up beyond the sun."

"Lay me up upon my pillow;
Will the morning soon be here?
Kiss me, kiss me, dearest mamma,
For it seems my heart to cheer."

When the early morn awakened,
Mabel calmly lay at rest,
And we know she now is sleeping
On her Saviour's kindly breast.

A School Secretary in Name.

In an issue not long since we mentioned the fact that a secretary of the County Board of School Examiners was to be elected. In accordance with a circular issued by the Supt. of Public Instruction, the appointive board met in the Judge of Probate's office on the 26th of September, but immediately a legal question sprang into existence. It was claimed that there were too many members on the board, and hence no appointment could take place.

After considerable discussion it was agreed by all parties concerned to submit the subject to the Attorney General for his opinion, as to whom constituted the appointive power. The other day, contrary to the stipulations previously made, and not receiving an opinion from the Attorney General, Judge Harrison, George S. Wheeler and August Lodemann, the men appointed by Judge Harrison a few days ago, in place of E. C. Warner of Ypsilanti, resigned, in order that he (Warner) might be eligible to the position of Secretary, thus giving Judge Harrison in reality two votes and power of naming the Secretary, thought it prudent to meet and designate (?) the Secretary in the person of E. C. Warner of Ypsilanti.

There is much dissatisfaction, we understand throughout the county in consequence of this procedure, especially because when Mr. Warner resigned, Judge Harrison saw fit to take it upon himself to appoint a man just 16 days before the new law came into existence, a man whom he deemed, through his appointment, better entitled to the office than one who was duly elected by the township inspectors of the several townships of the county on the 1st Tuesday in August. In Ionia, Ingham and other counties which might mention, a member of the board was elected as in Washtenaw, and holds his office for a term of three years as is provided by law. In none of the above named counties did the Judge of Probate grasp at the opportunity of making an appointment, although similar vacancies existed, just a fortnight before the selecting of Secretary. Washtenaw may be an exception and subject to different law, when taken in connection with other counties in state, although it was the intent of the Legislature to have this operate alike throughout the state. We wonder at the inconsistency of the Judge's position. It must be that our patrician Judge wants to pluck a few laurels from the judicial brow of Minerva, by his interpretation of the law.
