A Grand Entertainment.
The entertainment given in the town hall last Thursday evening, in honor of St. Patrick, was a decided success. The attendance was large, the decorations were beautiful, the supper was superb, and the literary exercises were excellent. Mr. Henry V. Heatley opened the programme with a spirited rendition of "St. Patrick's Day" and other Irish airs on the piano.
The "Star Spangled Banner" was excellently rendered by a full chorus, after which came the first toast of the evening, "The Day We Celebrate," which was responded to briefly but vigorously by Mr. Geo. B. Greening. His speech produced an excellent impression, and made an auspicious beginning.
Mrs. John Clark sang Moore's famous song, "The meeting of the waters," with exquisite taste and feeling, and then Senator Gorman spoke appropriately to the toast, "The President of the United States."
A duet, "The Curfew Bells," was charmingly rendered by the Misses Klein. Gladstone had a worthy eulogist in the person of Thomas D. Kearney, Esq., of Ann Arbor, who paid a graceful, poetic and eloquent tribute to the great statesman. Mr. Kearney's per-oration was especially fervid and beautiful.
A song, "Home Rule for Old Ireland," was sung with admirable expression by Mr. Heatley and a full chorus.
Miss Agnes McKone, in her essay, "The Poetry of Ireland," accorded fitting homage to Erin's sweet singers. Her essay abounded with beautiful passages from their writings.
Mr. Heatley sang in a charming manner that tender old ballad "Kathleen Mavourneen."
Miss B. S. Greening's essay, the "Exiles of Erin," was replete with beautiful thoughts, admirably expressed. Miss Greening was suffering from a throat difficulty, and it is to be regretted that most of her essay was not audible to her hearers, but those who were so fortunate as to hear it, were charmed by its choice diction, and poetic imagery.
The boys' choir of St. Mary's church then followed with "The Dear Little Shamrock," which they sang beautifully. Their clear, sweet youthful voices made a pleasing contrast to the singing of the adult choir.
M. J. Cavanaugh, Esq., of Chelsea, spoke in glowing words of the Irish-American. His speech was animated and eloquent. It was a pleasure to hear Mrs. John Clark again in that sweet song, "I'll take you back, Kathleen." Her rendition of it was superb.
The speech of the evening was then delivered by Mr. Heatley, who spoke interestingly and eloquently on Home Rule for Ireland. The speaker being an Englishman lent additional significance to the address, which was a warm and beautiful tribute to Ireland, with a heartfelt hope for the attainment of legislative independence for that unhappy land. His merciless scolding of Lord Salisbury and his coadjutors was richly enjoyed by his audience, and it is safe to say that his earnest words for Ireland and the Irish, made him many friends that night.

Mr. Harkins, of Ann Arbor, sang several songs during the evening in his inimitable style, and was encored every time.
Never has so delightful and successful an entertainment been given in Chelsea, and the Catholics of St. Mary's parish are to be felicitated on the admirable manner in which they celebrated the feast day of the glorious Apostle of Ireland.

Ninetyth Anniversary.
On Saturday, March 10th, a company of friends and relatives gathered at the residence of Mr. Dennis Spaulding to celebrate his mother's ninetyth birthday. Four generations were represented, and in the afternoon the following lines, composed for the occasion, by G. W. Crafts, were read to Mrs. Abi Spaulding:

ON HER NINETYTH BIRTHDAY.
'Tis ninety years—yes, ninety years to-day
Since I was born. It does not hardly seem
So many golden years have passed away
Since then. It seems to me more like a dream.

What is a year? Ah! once it seemed so long,
So long, it seemed to me it ne'er would go;
But in those days the world was full of song
And blooming flowers. I'm glad they went so slow.

To-day, dear ones, I am a child again.
You think me old—I am but ninety years;
And what are they? But ninety drops of rain,
Or ninety pearls of dew, or ninety tears.

All gone, all quickly gone before the sun,
The sun drinks up the rain, the dew, the tears,
It seems as though my life had just begun;
I'm still a child, despite my ninety years.

To-day, to me, what blissful memories come!
It seems like heaven, all golden is the light;
I'm thinking—thinking of my dear old home—
There never was a place on earth so bright.

And, to my heart, I clasp a cherub fair,
I gaze once more within those sunlit eyes,
With gentle hand I stroke that golden hair,
I sing once more my soft low lullabies.

Sleep, darling, sleep! I'm coming to you soon;
The sun's low down—the bird is in her nest—
From out the dark blue sea, will rise the golden moon,
The evening star will glimmer in the golden west.

And as I near the river's brink,
I do not fear to cross the tide,
For I can never, never sink,
With my Saviour by my side.

I know not, what the future hath
In store for me; of marvel or surprise,
I trust alone that in life or death,
His love and mercy underlies.

So on the bosom of the silent sea
With perfect trust, I wait with muffled ears,
No harm can ever come to me
While on the ocean or on shore.

Now I'm gazing on the sea of light,
That overflows the western skies;
And my soul is ready plumed for flight
To the land where endless glories rise.

Followed by music and singing
"Near the Cross," and a poem by
E. P. Crafts:

ON HER NINETYTH BIRTHDAY.
One by one, the years have passed away
Till four score years and ten have gone;
And God hath blessed me day by day,
His loving hand hath led me on.

The golden sun has set behind the hills;
The evening star now glimmers in the west.
I'm in my twilight days, the Whip-poor-will
Whistles her evening song from off her downy nest.

Yes, I'm ninety years of age to-day,
Just ninety years—how strange it seems!
It does not seem so far away,
It seems to me more like a dream.

Oh! how swift the years have glided on,
And short the time has seemed to be;
And now, the days are not mine own,
But those that God hath lent to me.

And I feel grateful to my Lord,
For all the mercies to me shown.
I bless him for his loving words;
My child; thou shalt not walk alone.

I'm dreaming of my home—I have a home
Above. These ninety years have brought me near
The gates of pearl, the ever-shining dome,
The place where is no grief, no pain, no fear.

I am not old, dear ones; I ne'er shall be,
God makes us young, in sweeter life we bloom,
Through all these years and through eternity,
The Son of God hath burst the rocky tomb.

Sing then, sing all your joyous songs to me
I'm on the brighter side of life, near heaven;
My only care is just God's child to be
And taste the perfect peace that he has given.

A few remarks and singing, "He Leadeth Me" and "We're Going Home To-morrow," made the occasion very pleasant, and one long to be remembered by all present.

The Irish-American.
M. J. Cavanaugh's response on Thursday eve, last, at the Town Hall, on the occasion of the celebration of St. Patrick's Day. It reflects creditably on the speaker, and is well worthy of preservation in print:

"MR. CHAIRMAN, LADIES AND GENTLEMEN.—It is not my purpose this evening, to enter into any lengthy discussion of what America has done to remove the thralldom of English oppression from Ireland, but simply to indicate in a general way, something of what she has done, and the position she expects Ireland to occupy in relation to England, before the present agitation has come to an end. The Irish Americans have always been responsive to the call of liberty; they have answered with a loyal throb and a hand of defense their country's call, and have never been reluctant in espousing the cause of the oppressed—from the earliest colonial times, up and through the Revolution. They came here not to antagonize our institutions, but to fulfill the duties which were placed upon them, obedient to the laws, but with an ardent fervor for the land they left behind, as true and patriot men should have, and willing and always ready to sacrifice everything for the preservation of the country of their adoption, as was evinced by the heroic deeds of that noble general that fell on the plains of Abraham, in the Revolutionary period, in endeavoring to secure for this then young Republic the palm of liberty. And also in the war of 1812, we find the sons of Irish immigrants taking a prominent part in the suppression of rebellion, and in the civil war of our times, the fiercest and bitterest of which modern annals have a record, the names of Sheridan, McClellan, McPherson and others, shine like meteors, and are not only an honor to this country, but also an honor and a mark of valor to their ancestors, who came from Ireland years before; their counsils in the legislative halls were not less than their generalship, during the period of this country's trying ordeal. The names of many gallant leaders, appear on the pages of history, who voluntarily sacrificed their lives for the cause of freedom, to say nothing of the masses, that fell on the battlefield, at the sound of the siren.

Let us for a moment, now, leave the past and reflect briefly on the present attitude of the Irish Americans and the assistance they have rendered the Emerald Isle, in the struggle for self government. The Irish Americans and the money advanced through their patriotism, have caused an enormous change in the English position in the last decade. This change of opinion—has been wrought to a certain extent through American influence by a continual agitation kept in existence through the instrumentality of the National Land League, an organization second to none in power, whose purpose is benevolence and freedom. This organization within the last two years, and during the incumbency of Dr. Reilly, as treasurer of the league has contributed about $600,000 toward the support of the sufferers of Ireland, and with such leaders as Gladstone and Parnell, in parliament, and their noble band of followers in this country, success is sure to crown their efforts, and Ireland must attain its freedom. For the last six or eight centuries the British have regarded the Irish as ignorant, semi-barbarous, aliens who were unworthy of English liberty, hostile to British institutions and British people and who were fit to be ruled by the few, who represented the conquerors assisted by the British Army, their cardinal motive being the supremacy of England, no matter what barriers interpose, what rights were to be outraged; what injustice was to be done; what sacrifice of life was to be made. The Irish on the other hand, looked upon the British with hate and bitterness, not worthy of respect as a people without a conscience, pity or remorse, who would neither do nor give justice. Under such difficulties and differences, there could be no solution of the Irish problem, except in revolution, which would result in complete separation of the two Islands, and this was next to an impossibility, thus was the case of Ireland hopeless. The Americans, and particularly the Irish Americans, have aided in securing the election of Irish members to parliament by their generosity, and with a burning desire to see their kinsmen across the ocean triumph, they have by their contributions encouraged the dogged parliamentary fight, which under the leadership of the land leaguers brought the English to a sense of duty, and convinced them, that the cause of Ireland was their own. These leaders have compelled them, at least to listen to their complaints to what heretofore they have entirely disregarded. They have compelled them to soften their hard hearts, and this they have done not because of any particular affection or love for the Irish, but, from a sense of necessity, urged by the active interest this country and other nations have taken in behalf of Ireland. The English masses are beginning to realize that it is not long since they themselves were emancipated from the same wrongs, which Ireland is now suffering. The long record of crime of which England has been guilty is being revealed by the matchless eloquence of Gladstone, Parnell and others across the Atlantic, and on this side by the land leaguers. The English conscience is awakening to the cause of humanity; their prejudices are waning and are now fast becoming the vantage-ground of fair argument and just determination. The signs of the times betoken a radical change—everything points in that direction. The people must naturally warm toward each other, and the wide wall of prejudice must begin to break. The British Aristocrats must go, and let the people hold the reins of government in their own hands, then, and not till then will there be Irish Autonomy, then and not till then, will the Irish people have Home Rule.

The Irish question has occupied a prominent place in the minds of all Americans for time past, and has been the only question that has puzzled the dapper aristocrat, English parliament for a number of years, ministries have fallen, parliaments have been prorogued, dissolved, made and re-made in order to avoid its discussion, but it is like Banquo's ghost—"it will not down," right must prevail. The Irish are capable of governing themselves, as well as the Germans, Swedes, and English are—they are not very bad people; all they want is what their brethren have on either of the channels, their just deserts—a right to say that they can make their own laws, and live under their own roofs, and upon their own lands—just as you and I do. Is there anything unreasonable in this? Certainly not. No, ladies and gentlemen, there is no Island nor nation on the face of the earth of which history has a record that has suffered the iron heel of oppression, so long and so heroically as has Ireland, that country that christianized Scotland and gave learning to England, whose philosophers crossed to the continent and founded the literature of medieval times; whose universities were known throughout the civilized world. We look toward a happier Ireland, because all classes are receiving instructions in the principles on which the rights of nations depend; the humblest peasant amidst destitution the most abject has learned to respect himself; now the spirit of insulted manhood in a bosom covered with rage, and with its Celtic blood, will boil as yours do, with an air of repugnance and look with abhorrence at the insults thrust upon it; we expect a happier Ireland, because its citizens will be sacred from affronts and breathe the moral atmosphere of liberty, which inspires everyone of us. We were entreated to cultivate a propitious soil, where that generous plant which first sprang up and grew in England, but now, withered by the poisonous blast of her tyranny, may revive and flourish, sheltering under its salubrious shade all the unfortunate of the human race, this we have done. The Home Rulers are asking for a like place—to shelter the unfortunate of their race, in Ireland. This is the end presaged by the present Home Rule agitation, the names of those initiators will be placed by posterity by the side of those of Lycurgus, of Numa, of the Three Williams of Nassau, and by the side of those whose memories have been and will be, forever, dear to virtuous and patriotic men.

At this moment, England is in a deep and general agitation. One might think that the departed good and wise of all places and times are looking down from their happy seats to witness what shall be done in the present agitation; that they who lavished their treasures and blood of old, who spoke and wrote, who labored, fought, and perished in one great cause for freedom, are now hanging from their orbs on high over the last solemn experiment of humanity. Every fair-minded man can point at the present commotion in Ireland, as no more than that for which the British sighed, before the promulgation of Magna Charta by King John; no more than that for which the renowned English barons waded through in seas of crimson gore, to establish their liberty; no more than that which the immortal

Shakespeare put in the mouth of Cleopatra, when she says, "Give me liberty, my resolution is placed! No more than Patrick Henry defended with undaunted courage, when in the face of the British Lion, he exclaimed, "Give me liberty or give me death!" The personages of Ireland have been as noble as those of Sophocles, as sage and famous as Plutarch's as varied as those of Shakespeare. We, as Irish-Americans look towards a happier and free Ireland, whose soldiers, whose statesmen, and generals shall mould and maintain the policy and honor of the Island, whose cause we are espousing; an Island whose sons shall live again in the force of a Grant, an Emmet and O'Connell; an Island upon whom shall flash the bright light of Sterns, of Steeles, of Swifts, or Moores and Goldsmiths to come, whose sons shall speak out in such tones as fell from the lips of Edmund Burke, he who spoke out trumpeted tongues against the impolicy, the iniquity, the dark damnation, which in his day drive out from parent blood, this your new nation, the young eagle of the west. An Island the smoke of whose factories shall curl from chimneys long disused, and the hum of whose looms shall be heard across the seas, upon whose rivers the ships of many nations shall ride once more at anchor; whose wharves and warehouses, now bleak and windowless like the coffins of an industry long dead, shall at the magic touch of the new light, yield their dust and burst their walls with plenty; an Island whose streets shall laugh for joy, and sigh for prosperity. My friends, when this present movement has been consummated, and has attained its good, no more shall we read of strife between protestant and Catholic; no more shall bigoted Ulster strike discordant the strings of the harp of Erin, but upon one field of green, all shall be active, united and true, and Parnell, the patriot and statesman, shall be lauded—with a crown of victory, and then can exclaim:

"O! England, Shakespeare's home be just,
The nations love thee in his name.
We charge thee by his precious dust,
And Alfred's truth blot out thy shame,
Give Ireland now the broadest trust
Recorded on the roll of Fame."
