We keep an advertisement before the public to let the people know just what we are offering.

This week we tell you about an extra good Corn Cutter at 25 cents, and that we have Jute Fodder Yarn at bottom price. Apple Parers, Apple Parers, Corers and Slicers, at reasonable prices. Potato Forks and Spades very cheap.

In Crochery and Glass, we are daily receiving new and desirable goods at a low figure.

Monday next school opens. Our assortment of Tablets has never equaled what we are showing this season. A large Tablet suitable for ink at only 5 cents.

Concerning Stoves and Lamps, we shall talk later. We have them in great variety, and at the right price. You will notice the word "Price" has been freely used in this announcement; it means something, in fact more than ever with us. We fully realize that to do the business we are determined to do, that goods must be sold at small margins.

We want your trade; make our store your stopping place; bring your children; we have many things to interest all.

E. G. HOAG.

Allen, of Michigan, will address the citizens of Chelsea and vicinity on the Protection of American Industries at the Town hall, Chelsea, Saturday, Sept. 15th, 1888, at 8 o'clock in the afternoon. Don't fail to hear the author of the popular book, "Why Ireland is Poor."

A good plug tobacco 30c per pound at F. P. Glazier's.

Chelsea girls will learn, with a deep sigh of regret, that a Pittsburg optician declares that gum chewing has a harmful effect on the eyes, and when carried to excess is apt to cause blindness. The constant moving of the jaws affects the nerves that head from the spine to the optic nerves, and strains the latter until they give out.

Died, at Ann Arbor, on the 31st of August, 1888, Mrs. Elizabeth C. Gilbert, relict of the late Norman M. Gilbert, aged 78 years, 10 months and 26 days. Mrs. Gilbert was born in Bath, Steuben Co., N. Y., October 5, 1809, was married in 1827; came to this state with her husband in 1835, and into Washtenaw county in 1840. She has resided in Dexter, Pinckney, Chelsea and Ann Arbor. She was the mother of ten children, seven of whom are still living, our townsman, Jas. L. Gilbert, being one of them. Mrs. Gilbert was one of the excellent of the earth. Until disabled by infirmities, she was zealously and constantly active in church work. In all her trials of labor, of suffering, of bereavement, of disappointment of blindness and consequent dependence upon the ministrations of others, her patience, her forbearance, her cheerful resignation to the will of Providence, never failed her for a moment. Many articles of utility and ornament, designed by her fertile mind and executed in total blindness by her skillful fingers, are witnesses of her industry and industry as well as her great perseverance and patience. Regarded and admired by all who knew her, she will be greatly missed; but the star of a Christian hope beams brightly over her grave, while the fragrance of her pure, sweet life perfumes the memory.

The back bone of summer is broken. With enfeebled force she will continue, intermittently, for a few weeks to come, but her energy and vigor are gone, and the few spiteful efforts she will be able to make can be but of short duration.

A remark often applied to those who like to slumber late a' morning's, is the trite and terse saying that "the early bird catches the worm." Eminent medical authorities agree that the early riser catches the malaria—which is at its best (or worst) at the peep o' day.

Last Monday morning H. S. Holmes put on sale two boxes, twelve each, of campaign caps for boys, and by evening all the Harrison and Morton caps were sold, and not one of the Cleveland and Thurman ones had been called for. It looks as though all the boys are going to be Republicans.

Died, at Traverse City, on Sunday, Sept. 2, 1888, Jennie McNamara, aged 5 months and 23 days. This sad event is the more afflictive to the father and other relatives because it follows so soon after the loss of the mother, and also because older and only other child, Carrie, has been taken from them.

Fruit cans 63, 73 and 98c per dozen at F. P. Glazier's.

Geo. Stapins had a very narrow escape last Friday evening while firing on fast train No. 5, west. When near Comstock the connecting rod broke on the fireman's side of the engine, and the end flew directly into the cab, striking the fireman and throwing him out into the side-track, while the train was moving at the rate of 60 miles an hour. He was badly cut about the head, but at present writing is getting along nicely.

Very many buyers predict that wheat in this market will reach $1 before it will go lower, and it may be so. The frost in the Northwest which set in about the middle of last month were claimed to have done little or no damage to the growing crop of that region. A different story is now being told. It is estimated that not far from a quarter of the spring wheat crop is ruined, being nipped by frost before maturity. Above the line of the Northern Pacific railroad the mischief is general, though not total. Some of the best farms are yielding scarcely any grain, while others give a moderate return in the threshing machine; but, even in the these cases, the quality is poor.—Saturday Evening Star.

The first solemn and public reception of members into the young Ladies' Sodality of St. Mary's church, will take place next Sunday evening, at 7.30 P. M. The ceremony will be conducted by the Rev. Thos. A. Hughes, S. J., Prof. of Rhetoric and English Literature in Detroit College, and distinguished as one of the most eloquent pulpits orators in the Jesuit order. Father Hughes will celebrate low mass at 8 o'clock next Sunday, and administer Holy Communion to the candidates for admission into the Sodality. At the High Mass, celebrated by the Rev. pastor, Father Hughes, will preach an appropriate sermon. Solemn vespers will be sung in the evening, and the day will be a memorable one for St. Mary's church.

CURIOSITY.

I wonder who those people are That live across the way, I wonder what their business is, And how they pass each day? I wonder who she is that lives Upon the upper floor, And if those children both are hers— If she be rich or poor? And who is she that always wears That deep-dyed crimson sash; Whose face as pure as marble gleams, 'Neath hair of raven black? And who is he with whitened locks, And who the maiden fair, With roses in her rounded cheeks, And sunlight in her hair? I wonder if I always will Go wandering on this way, Or shall I not be acquainted, And know them all some day? Know who they are, and what they have, And how they came to be The tenants of the house that stands Right opposite to me? Know who the man is that goes out So early in the morn; And why he parlor window shades Are always closely drawn? And why—but there, I must arrange Inside that house to see, Or I shall die! I know I shall! Of curiosity.

HIS YOUNG LADY.

Her Story as Told by a Faithful Old Servant.

Yes, sir, there ain't much I don't know about this place. Man and boy, I've been here; I ain't quite the oldest inhabitant they talk about, but I was born here, and he wasn't. Governor's house upon that there hill; he come here without a friend and less than two hundred dollars in his pocket—brains enough for a dozen in his skull, though—and in less than ten years he was Governor of the State; this country's going to hear of him some day, too.

Oh, I'll drive you inside here, sir? Shall it be open to all; but I'd be in it if all the rest of them was kept out. Kind o' dreary now, with the house all kind up; but if you could have seen it last year, when my young lady was for ever a-running round the lawn with her children, as she calls 'em, her black dress making her yellow hair shine like gold, you'd have said it was—Well, folks say that when I get started on my young lady, there's no stopping me.

You see, sir, I come to that there place when I was a barefoot boy, and I only left it last year when they went to Europe. I'd have gone with them, but my young lady, she gave me the livery stable, and she says, says she, "You'd best stay here, John, till we come home, and look after things for me." Bless her dear heart, she'd trust her old John with all her world, she would.

Mr. Ross and Miss Edith was born in that house, sir. My old gentleman, Mr. Compton—was their pa—built it when he come here. He was a rich man then, and a gentleman, too—one of your old-fashioned sort—take off his hat to a washerwoman and say thank you to a bagger. Things are changing out West here; but twenty years ago, that wasn't the sort to get on—they hadn't enough go in 'em. He owned half the town once, but he couldn't hold on to it; after awhile things kept going from bad to worse, till we had to sell. Sell our place, sir—think of that now! and them trees that'd had to be nursed and cosseted like a baby—and that there lawn, where, if ever there'd been a weed let grow, I'd have had a speaking acquaintance with it!

Well, the night it was all done and settled, Mr. Compton says to me: "John," says he, "the papers were signed to-day, and we move out next week, and Mr. Lindeman he wants you to stay here and—" Well, now, it was just all I could do to help bursting right out: "You bet I won't!" but my old gentleman wasn't the kind you'd take liberties with—not twice, and I said, pretty mild, too, when you think how mad I was: "No, sir, I'm going with the family; it's the family, not the house I've been with since I was a lad."

"No, John," says my old gentleman, "you'll stay here with Mr. Lindeman as he's faithful to him and his'n as you've been all these years to me and mine."

It sounded better the way he put it; but then he said his words. Well, I was that choked I couldn't speak. Sell me with the house, would they?—and expect me to leave them, my young lady most of all, as if I'd no heart! I was trying to swallow it all down and speak, for my dander was up then, and thinks I—"If they don't care any more for me than that after all these years, why, I'll be hanged if I make a fuss over it," when up comes Miss Edith, and she says, in her pretty way:

"Why, John, you'll stay here, won't you? You know you always said you'd come with me when—when I—" Then she stopped kind o' sudden, and when I looked at the red in her face, and saw her eyes sort o' teary, though there was a smile playing o'p-eep with her dimples, I just made a bee-line for that there stable, and if I didn't get like a great baby and call myself a blessed innocent that I'd never once suspected why Mr. Lindeman was so anxious to get the house, and what had brought him so often to talk business with my old gentleman. But to think that my young lady, who I was let see her little lace cradle only yesterday, as it seemed, was that grown up! Stay with her? 'T'd like to see the wild horses would be able to pull me away from her and she wanting me!

I said—as I'd have done with the devil, to be near her! and I had a good chance to see how much he, Mr. Lindeman, thought of her. Why, the very wind had to blow soft on her and vibrate around; he had a sort o' peaceful look in his face all the time, as if 'twas as near a smile as he dared to get all of a sudden. Poor man—you see he'd been married once already, and that wife of his, well, not to put it too strong, why, she were the very devil! "Drink, sir, and fight with the servants, and yell 'till you'd hear her a block off—and she a lady, too! I don't see myself as being born so makes them so, always. And there wasn't a shadder of an excuse, neither—rich she was, and healthy—before she ruined herself with liquor, and a good husband and three of the prettiest little children you'd see in a day's walk. When the last baby was about six months old she got on awful times, fever come on, and she died in a week. You'd have thought, now, that her husband would 'a' said, like every one else, "What a mercy!" But not a soul on earth, not even the nurse-girl, ever heard him say a harsh word to that miserable woman alive, or about her when she was dead.

I don't believe he'd have looked rosted if he could have helped it, he was so anxious to take care of her memory, for all he had suffered. Well, we got the house all fixed up—you see we'd run down—and done over, with Miss Edith, and the children, Miss Nelly, Russell and little Harvey, all asking all the time when their dear new mamma was coming. And then they got married.

Miss Edith wouldn't have a big wedding. She put on her little white frock, and went to the old church—may be you noticed it, back of your hotel?—and then went back to the little house my people took when we moved; and after the children had almost torn her to pieces with kisses and she'd put on her traveling clothes, I drove 'em down to the train. I'd just like you to have seen 'em. Happy? Why, he was so happy, he was almost crazy. I looked back at 'em once, and he had her little hand, with his new ring, in both of his. "My darling, my love, my wife!" says he.

I saw the cars start off, and just as they were moving, Mr. Lindeman says: "Now, John, be sure you have the horses in good condition to drive Mrs. Lindeman home, when you get our telegram."

"How proud he says it!" thinks I. "The nicest, handsomest, pleasantest-spoken young man as ever I see—as sweet as my old gentleman, and with backbone for the two of them."

Well, sir, there was a good deal to see to that night, and it seemed to me as if I hadn't more'n shut my eyes in bed when Mr. Compton come to my door.

"John!" says he, "John! Wake up—here's the awful news!" He had a telegram in his hand, and he was shaking all over.

"There'd been an accident on the train," says he, "and Miss Edith says Mr. Lindeman is badly hurt. You must go to them on the 'special' the road's sending."

We didn't say nothing to the family; every one was asleep. Mr. Compton'd come in with his night-key. I just hustled into my clothes, and we walked down to the station. The stars was shining out bright, and I remember I felt kind o' mad at them—looking so peaceful when my young lady was in trouble. I never thought then how bad the trouble was going to be. It was gray dawn when the 'special' had broke through the bridge, and the folks there waiting took me right to the house where my people was. Miss Edith met me at the door, both her little hands held out. "Go to him, John," says she, so pitiful—"go to him, perhaps he'll let you touch him."

Her pretty frock was all dust and blood, her face white, and her eyes had a kind o' puzzled, frightened look in them.

Mr. Lindeman was on a lounge inside, his shoulder twisted, his head knocked a bit—nothing to make a fuss over, thinks I; that was at first. Now, what do you suppose that hit on the head had done for him? He wouldn't so much as let Miss Edith—my young lady, his bride, that he was just worshipping of one day before—come to the side of him or speak to him.

Crazy? No more than you or me to talk to. He asked the doctors how soon he could get home, and when he found it was safe for them to take the next train, he give me all the directions just as clear and as right-minded as you would. Then I come outside and left him, and just outside I met the porter of the drawing-room car.

"Is it a bad case in there?" says he. "Well, no," says I, "it ain't. Where was they?" says I, "when it happened?" "Well," says he, "she was in my car. They'd both been pretty quiet, and she had such a bashful sort o' look I thought she hadn't been married long."

"Last night?" says I. "Whew!" says he, like that. "As I come along he says, says he, 'Porter, just make up these two sections, will you?' Then he says to her, 'You're tired, my darling; I'm going to smoke and you'd better go to bed. I shall be right opposite, so you needn't be nervous.' Then he says, very low, 'Will it disturb you if I open the curtains and say good-night?' She didn't answer; she just gave him a shy look and got red all in the back of the neck, and he went off. The first section wasn't made up when the crash came. I can't see how she got out so quick. When I got to her husband there she was, holding up his head and wiping the blood off his face. I hope he ain't hurt much, for she looks a sweet young thing, and it's easy to see how much she thinks of him."

We got home before it was dark that night, and there was the three children on the steps, forgetting to be worried about their papa, they were so crazy to see Miss Edith back. Miss Nelly she just screamed out, "Oh, mamma! mamma!" and was going to pitch herself right at her—you know the way children have—but Mr. Lindeman caught her shoulder and says, in a voice I'd never heard from him before: "What do you mean? How dare you give the name of your dear dead mother to a stranger?"

Miss Edith she just turned like a corpse, and Miss Nelly—she was a self-willed child, and worse luck, remembered her mother—says: "Why, papa, that is our mother; we never had one before—not a real one."

Well, he was that mad, I don't know what he'd have done if my young lady hadn't sent the children away with a force their father's angriest word. That, sir, was the beginning of my poor young lady's new married life. He always called her "Mrs. Lindeman," but he made Miss Nelly sit at the head of his table, and it was to her that he sent the servants for orders. He had a picture of that devil, his wife, painted and hung up in the room he'd had done over with such care and pride for his "darling," as he used to call her.

"I'd never heard him say his first wife's name while I'd known him. Now it was nothing but 'My lost one,' 'My dearest wife,' 'Your blessed mother.'"

Miss Edith wouldn't let one word be said, and she bore it—well, now, if you could once see her, you'd know how she bore it—like a saint and a queen put into one.

She slept in Miss Nelly's room, and when I'd come up sometimes and see them two little bristled side by side, and the dear child, my young lady, teaching the children every day, going so quiet about the house, making everybody love her more and more, saving him all the trouble, thinking of his comfort day and night, and he never speaking one word from week's end to week's end to her—well, I'd feel sometimes as if God was send and there was nothing in this world on its right end.

The doctors, they couldn't make nothing out of him. He was just as wise and straight as a line, on every other point in the dictionary. I was thankful after a bit that Mr. Ross was in South America, because he was a holler-skoller, hot-tempered sort, and folks began to talk. First they said: "It was very strange, without any cause," and then: "Could there be any cause for his turning against her?" and then next thing: "There was a cause," and they began to bow in a cold way to her when she went out driving with the children, and, after a little, to look the other way.

She dropped down under it like a flower in a hailstorm, and, except for his children, all her pretty little coaxing ways and her flashes of smiles were gone.

One day I got word to bring the carriage round, and there she was at the door with little Harvey—he was the baby—and flowers enough to fill the carriage. It was the other wife's birthday, and she was taking the child out to put flowers on the grave.

The older ones—don't tell the sort she was?—that remembered their ma, couldn't be got to love her even dead, try all Miss Edith could; but the baby, I heard him all the way gabbling about his "mamma in Heaven," and she was answering him so sweet and tender.

When we drove up to the lot there was something by the side of the big monument he'd just set up—something on the ground.

I pulled up my horses and jumped out, and says I to Miss Edith: "Wait, there a minute;" but she was out first, and had him—her husband—with his head on her breast, before I could so much as touch him.

There was a hole in his head, and a pistol on the ground. I thought he was dead, but he gave a sigh and opened his eyes.

"Darling," says he, "Edith, are you hurt?" "No," she says, making her voice steady as if nothing was wrong.

"Were you terribly frightened?" asked he. "Oh, my darling, my sweet, if you had been hurt!" He tried to raise his head to look at her, and the blood came running over his face.

"I'm hurt," he says, and says she: "I'm afraid so."

His face was turning gray, and I knew it was no use disturbing them for any thing; then he said, so faint and low, I could just hear it: "Love, my young lady, my darling, I am dying. Oh, Edith, my bride, never to be my wife. Must I lose you now, when you are my own at last?"

There was such a joy and gladness in her face, I had to shut my eyes from it, but I heard him go on: "Edith," he says, "my children's mother—the only mother they ever had—the wife of my very soul—how I would have loved you. Always remember that, dearest. If I had not been for this, how I would have loved you."

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

HE WAS DECEIVED.

A Michigan Farmer Gets Into Trouble by Collecting "Campaign Funds." Within a short time-circulars have been sent out to the postmasters throughout the State asking for money to assist the Democrats in the coming campaign and to make remittance to "Manly M. Walker, Jackson, Mich." Walker called for his mail the other morning and was arrested. He said that he was a farmer and lived ten miles west of Jackson. Several days ago a stranger arrived at his place, claiming to be an agent of the Democratic organization for the collection of campaign funds. An agreement was made by which Walker was to issue the circulars and forward the remittances to his address at Washington. He did not receive a day for his services. He did not remember the stranger's name but claimed to have his card at home.

A Soldiers' Cemetery. Edward Pomeroy Post, G. A. R., of Jackson, has decided to establish a soldiers' cemetery, and a committee to select a site was appointed at a meeting held the other evening. The idea is to secure a plot of ground in one of the present cemeteries if possible, and if not to secure one elsewhere. It has been suggested that the old cemetery on East Main street be devoted to the purpose, a stranger arriving at his place, claiming to be an agent of the Democratic organization for the collection of campaign funds. An agreement was made by which Walker was to issue the circulars and forward the remittances to his address at Washington. He did not receive a day for his services. He did not remember the stranger's name but claimed to have his card at home.

Rich Gold Rock. Quartz worth from $10,000 to $30,000 a ton in gold and silver is being brought in daily to Ishpeming in lots of from fifty to two hundred pounds from the Michigan mine. The rock is being taken from a vein near the surface and not far from the eastern line of the area of prevalence. Diphtheria was reported at ten places: scarlet fever at sixteen, typhoid fever at seventeen, and measles at four places.

Health in Michigan. Reports to the State Board of Health by fifty-five observers in different parts of the State for the week ended on the 1st indicated that pneumonia, erysipelas, pneumonia and typho-malarial fever increased, and cholera-morbus, consumption of the lungs and cholera-infantum decreased in the week. Diphtheria was reported at ten places: scarlet fever at sixteen, typhoid fever at seventeen, and measles at four places.

Another New Company. A new marine company was incorporated at Detroit and is named the Percheron Steam Navigation Company. Senator Palmer is the leading stockholder. The company has contracted with the Detroit Dry Dock Company for a composite steam barge of two thousand tons capacity, costing $175,000, and to be ready for service on the opening of navigation next season.

Work of Burglars. Burglars robbed the stores of J. J. Dean, druggist, H. A. Calley, boots and shoes, and Walker & Sons, druggist, at Jackson, early the other morning, and stole a horse and buggy of Mrs. John Hayward, in Leoni. The horse and buggy had been discovered.

Short but Newsworthy. Jules Moreau, aged twenty-seven years, a married man, was run over by a Chicago & Northwestern train at Ishpeming recently and killed.

John Bauer was stabbed seven times in a saloon fight at Negaunee a few days ago. He might recover. His assailant was jailed.

The house of Samuel Kladay, at Nottawa, was burned the other night. Loss, $1,000. The house of L. Burch, near Jackson, was burned recently. Loss, $1,300; no insurance.

A charitable party annoyed John Lewandowski and Mary Schwartz, at Jackson, who were married the other night, and Albert Ferris, William Dredrich and John Hews were shot, and Ferris may die.

The school statistics of Nashville show that among those enumerated as of school age, and actually enrolled in such institutions, are several married women.

George Fisk's house in Bay City was burglarized the other night. Loss, seventy dollars.

C. E. Joys, dealer in general merchandise at Muskegon, failed recently for $40,000.

Rev. Dr. William C. Trowbridge died recently at Marath, Turkey. He was the son of Hon. S. V. Trowbridge, of Oakland County.

While walking on the railroad bridge at Battle Creek the other day Mrs. Olie McCully was run over by a train and killed.

A butcher and drover named John Wiedman was found dead at his residence at Six Lakes the other day. It was supposed he had heart disease.

THE VETERANS.

The Annual Grand Army Encampment Begins at Columbus, O.—The City Crowded with Strangers. COLUMBUS, O., Sept. 11.—All of Sunday night and yesterday the railroads unloaded their freight of veterans and their families until the city is jammed, and only half of the crowd is here. A close estimate of the number of veterans already in the city places it at over 150,000. It was expected that Commander-in-Chief Rea would be in at 10 a. m., and the committee gathered to meet him. It was 12:30 before the train arrived. It was impossible to run the trains closer to High street and the Commander-in-Chief was welcomed at the depot. There were present of the General Council! Chairman Colonel Patton, Vice-Chairman C. D. Piro, Commander General Mitchell, Major Rodgers, Emerson McMillan, W. D. Brickett, W. Chover and a crowd of fifty veterans. Commander Rea was accompanied by his wife, Adjutant-General Daniel Fish and wife, and aids-de-camp, Colonel Henderson, Patterson and Adair. The distinguished party was taken to the carriage which were awaiting them at High street, and taken to the residence of ex-Governor Dennison.

The candidates for the various positions of honor in the National Encampment will, from present indications, be quite numerous. Some are openly in the field, others are only being mentioned by their friends, and a number, it is said, are yet to be announced. Those whose names are mentioned for Commander-in-Chief are Judge Veasey, of Vermont; General John Palmer, of New York; General William Warner, of Missouri; Hon. John C. Linch, of New Hampshire; General M. M. Curtis, of New York; Governor Alger, of Michigan; Colonel Sexton, of Illinois, and General Gobbin, of Pennsylvania. New York, having two names for the chief office, will, it is believed, not lose their strength, so that they will not lose their strength by going into the session divided. It is probable that the vote of the State will be cast solid for either General Curtis or General Palmer. From what can be learned from the delegates it looks as if General Warner, of Missouri, has the largest following, but it is said by some that he will not accept.

The indications are that Indianapolis and Milwaukee will have an interesting fight for the next annual encampment. At the big tent, which is said to have a seating capacity of 10,000, there are persons attending the grand reception and campfire of the Sons of Veterans. It was a reception by that live organization to the Grand Army and the Woman's Relief Corps, and all of the exercises had reference to the strength and the relationship of the several organizations and were of a welcoming character. On behalf of the Sons of Veterans Mr. Brown, of Jackson, O., welcomed the other organizations in a neat speech. Commander-in-Chief Rea responded in a speech which was at once congratulatory and complimentary. Ex-President Hayes was one of the orators of the evening. General Gibson and others also spoke. Excellent vocal music was furnished by a male chorus of 300 voices.

CLEVELAND, O., Sept. 11.—The fourth section of train No. 5, west-bound on the New York, Pennsylvania & Ohio road, carrying Grand Army veterans from Youngstown and vicinity to the National Encampment at Columbus, suffered a mishap at 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon at Rittman, a small station three miles west of Wadsworth. The train consisted of nine cars. The connecting rod of the locomotive drawing the special broke near Rittman, and after much difficulty the train was stopped on a curve. The waiting for repairs he made freight train No. 38, which had been following the special, thundered down the heavy grade at the rate of twenty-five miles an hour, and although warning was given, it was impossible to avert the collision. The locomotive of the freight train struck the rear coach of the special, smashing four cars, two of them being completely demolished. The excursionists had notice of the impending danger and all succeeded in getting out of the cars before the crash came, but as they hurried down the embankment the wrecked coaches rolled on them, killing four persons outright and injuring twenty-three others more or less seriously. The names of the killed are: Barney Bolinger, Galion, O., engineer of the freight, who jumped against the tank and fell under the wheels of the low engine; John Cochran, Caledonia, O., brakeman of the freight train, killed outright; John Shoer, Youngstown; Samuel Bruce, Youngstown.

The injured are: Miss Ina Tucker, Austintown, seriously hurt internally; she reported dead; Miss Genevieve, O., seriously hurt and since reported to have died; Charles Hogle, Youngstown, leg broken; Daniel McFadden, Youngstown, back injured; Thomas Marland, Youngstown, both legs injured; Mrs. Sarah Marvin, Youngstown, injured internally; Mrs. Debie, Youngstown, injured about the head; Mrs. D. Even the dignified Justices of the Supreme Court of the district must have their little joke once in a while. The other day a young lawyer, who had just been admitted to the bar, was trying a case before the court, and, by way of illustration, said: "Suppose, for example, I borrowed from one of you a thousand dollars and gave this paper as security, could there be any doubt of your right to recover?" "But where could we get the money?" innocently asked one of the judges.

"That is a conundrum; I give it up," said the young lawyer. "There should be no trouble about the money," said Judge Montgomery, "as we are sitting in banc."—N. Y. Tribune.

"I don't know whether I ought to help you any or not," said the lady, dubiously; "you look like a drinking man." "I give you my word, ma'am," said the melancholy but intelligent tramp, "I was drew into bankruptcy by keepin' a temperance hotel. It didn't pay, but I went cheerfully to ruin rather than sacrifice my principles. Thank ye, ma'am. Them's the finest lookin' tarts and cookies I've had this summer."

How to Help Your Digestion.

Almost every day we feel the unpleasant sensations of indigestion. Try ALCOCK'S POUROUS PLASTER, and be relieved. J. F. Davenport, of Canarsie, New York, writes: "I have been very much troubled with a violent pain below my chest bone. I was told by several physicians that it was rheumatism of the diaphragm. It resulted from cold and exposure. I had very little food and digested my food with great difficulty. I placed one ALCOCK'S POUROUS PLASTER below the breast bone and two on each side. In the course of twenty-four hours all pain ceased, and I was able to eat and digest a good square meal, some things I had not done before in two weeks. I got better constantly, and at the end of seven days found myself entirely well. Since then I have used ALCOCK'S POUROUS PLASTER for colds, coughs and pains in my side, and I have always found them quick and effective."

Mrs. ERNESTINE SCHAFFNER, of New York, spends the greater part of her time and money in behalf of prisoners whom she believes to be wrongfully accused. She visits the police courts, and where she sees a man or a woman who seems to her the victim of circumstantial evidence, she furnishes bail, and at her own expense secures the services of a lawyer. So far Mrs. Schaffner's judgment has proved correct. She has always won the cases of her proteges, and has never lost a dollar by going bail for them.

Vocal Music.

Now that school has opened, many of its patrons are hoping to see vocal music reinstated again in the course of study.

"Many a little makes a mickle," and fifteen minutes a day could not be better employed than in cultivating the voices of our children in song.

A petition to the proper authorities for the purpose has been contemplated, but for some reason has not been brought about.

However the fact still remains that a great many of the parents of children in school earnestly desire their children should have instruction in vocal music.

I love to look on young faces, and see the firstlings of the young man's beard, and the maidenly bloom blushing over the girl's fair cheek, I love to see the pure eyes beaming with joy and goodness, to see the unconscious joy of such young souls, impatient of restraint, and longing for the heaven that we fashion here. So have I seen in early May among the New England hills the morning springing into the sky, and gradually thinning off the stars that hedge about the cradle of the day; and all cool and fresh and lustrous came the morning light, and a few birds commenced their songs, prophets of many more, and ere the sun was fairly up you saw the pinky buds upon the apple-trees, and scented the violets in the morning air, and thought of what a fresh and lordly day was coming up the eastern sky.
