The remarkable part of the verdict is that the woman assaulted never died, but is living and doing business in that city.

The flood swept to the Conemaugh like a tidal wave over twenty feet in height, and onward to Johnstown six or eight miles below. Gathering force as it tore along the wider channel, it quickly swept every thing before it. Houses, factories and bridges were overwhelmed in the twinkling of an eye, and with their human occupants were carried in a vast chaos down the raging torrent.

In order to understand the nature of this calamity it is necessary to describe the respective locations of the reservoir and Johnstown. The reservoir lies about eighteen miles northeast of Johnstown, and is the site of the old reservoir which was one of the feeders of the Pennsylvania canal. It is the property of a number of wealthy gentlemen in Pittsburgh, who formed themselves into an associati the title of which is the South Fork Fishing Club. This sheet of water was former-ly known as Conemaugh lake. It is from 200 to 300 feet above the level of Johnstown, being in the mountains. Saturday afternoon men succeeded in reaching the ruins, but were powerless to aid. No appliances were at hand to do proper work, and the people who are wedged in among the ruins of their houses against the immense stone bridge, facing death by flood, by fire, by hunger and by exposure, are, in all human probability, beyond hope. How many of them are in this awful plight may never be fully known.

Searchers saw two men robbing the body of a woman Sunday. The thieves were caught. In one of their pockets was found a lady's ear, entire, sliced from the head with a sharp knife. In the ear lobe was a sparkling diamond ring. Further investigation of the contents of the pockets of the fiends brought forth large quantities of jewelry and the mutilated finger of a little girl on which was a gold band ring. When the con-tinued rise of the water made their danger apparent the frightened passengers fied from the two trains to the hills near by. Many, in their wild excitement, threw themselves into the raging current and were drowned. It is supposed that about fifteen persons lost their lives in this way. When Superintendent Trump reached Conemaugh he immediately gathered together the remaining passengers of the two trains and had them conveyed by wagon to Ebensburg, a distance of about ten miles. These survivors are now at that place. The conductors of the trains went with the passengers to Ebensburg, and the Pullman conductor, who is supposed to have a list of those under his charge, is there also.

Mr. Trump said that if the passengers rible loss of life would have been avoided. After the people had deserted the cars the railroad officials state the two Pullman cars attached to the day express were set on fire and entirely consumed. The work of getting the bodies together for easy identification began Sunday afternoon. The central point was Morrellville. On Fairfield avenue is a large vacant lot belonging to Frank Lecky. At 5 o'clock this was almost entirely covered with coffins, while between them and stooping over them were weeping men and women. Although the number was short of 100 at 5 o'clock, others will come in, and there is no telling what the total will be. On one rough box was a paper with the words: "Three children." Only a few hundred yards below the bridge a number of bodies had been taken to private houses. They were taken to to see her son disappear around a bend in the Morrellville morgue. Five were not the river. Fortunately he, too, was residentified. In one rude box lay the body of a beautiful young woman. "Any one know her?" called out a committeeman. A crowd passed the box, but no one called her name. On the face was a beautiful expression of peace. The features were fine and the clothing elegant. The only disfigurement was an ugly cut on the left temple sufficient to cause death. Like scenes are witnessed at various locations. Trenches are being dug in at the confluence of the Conemaugh river and Lower Yoder (Catholic) cemetery and Grand View (Protestant) cemetery. The bodies that were exposed when the waters began falling are in bad condition. Some have already been interred. In the haste and excitement no

New Florence, Pa., June 3.—Judging from the number of women and children found in the swanps of Nineveh the female portion of the population suffered the most. Mr. O'Connor was at Sang Hollow when the river, and no further attention was the flood began. He remained there through paid to his remains. The city is guarded the afternoon and night, and he says that there was a fatal tree on an island, against which a number of floaters were dashed and instantly killed. Their bodies were almost tied in a knot, doubled over the tree by the force of the current. Mr. O'Connor says that the first man who came down had his brains knocked out against this obstruction. In fact, those who hit the tree met the same fate and were instantly killed and their bodies left under the pile of driftwood collected there. He could give no estimate of the number lost at this point, but he makes the figures large.

More than one brave man risked his life n trying to save those in the flood. Every hour details of some heroic action are brought to light. In many instances the floaters displayed remarkable courage, and gave their chances for rescue to friends running by noon. Not less than 15,000 with them. Sons stood back for mothers, and were lost, while the parents were taken out. Many a boy went down to a watery grave that a sister or father might be saved. Such instances of self-sacrifice in the face of fearful danger were numerous.

A young boy just from school took a rope and swam out into the stream at Johnstown. He succeeded in saving a mother and her daughter. Twice he entered the flood with his rope and each time was re-

When every station in the path of the coming torrent had been warned she wired her companion at South Fork: "This is my last message," and as such it shall always be remembered as her last words on earth, for at that very moment the torrent engulfed her and bore her from her post on earth to her post of honor in the great beyond. A mother and her little son were floated past Sang Hollow. A rope was thrown out to them, but there was no chance for only one of them to be saved. The little boy grabbed the rope, but he turnd to his mother and gave it to her. The woman was pulled through the water to the banks cued at New Florence, and mother and son were reunited.

[Johnstown, until overtaken by the disaster, was one of the most flourishing and prosperous manufacturing towns in the State. A Grass Widow in New York Killed by a Man Whose Love She Rejected-The Murderer Slays Himself.

New York May 30.-John Berken, aged 2 years, Wednesday afternoon shot Bertha Schreyer, a married woman, aged 25, times, killing her, and then killed himself by a shot through the head. The tragedy occured at Mrs. Schreyers home, 408 West One Hundred and Forty-second street. Mrs. Schreyer lived with her parents, having separated from a drunken husband. Berken was a bar-tender and a drunkard. He fell in love with Mrs. Schreyer, but she repulsed him on account of his habits. He continued his attentions, and finally in a drunken passion shot the woman and himself.

WAR ON THE BEER MONOPOLY.

St. Louis Saloon-Keepers Resolve to Crush Out the Brewery Trust. St. Louis, June 1.—The brewers' trust of this city has put the screws on the saloonkeepers, and the result is a frightful wail. When the trust was formed a few weeks ago one of the clauses provided that all soliciting should stop. Then the price of beer was hoisted a point. Ten days later the saloon-keepers were notified that the price would go up another point on June 1. This made the saloon men unhappy. They held a meeting and decided to build a mammoth independent brewery, in which all could take stock. This browery is expected to

[An incident of the Red Cross Association during the yellow fever epidemic in the South.]

Like an eagle flew the train.
In the warm November rain,
Through the sunny Southern land,
Blasted now on every hand
By the lever's scorching breath,
Dooming multitudes to death.

Quarantined on every side Was Maccienny, where had died Many a doctor, many a nurse, Till it seemed as if a curse Dark as the Almighty's frown, Rested on the little town. Not an engine slacked its speed

To relieve the awful need, For the order stern was given, That the iron horse be driven At his very swiftest pace, Through the fever-stricken place But there came an evening, when

'Mong the passengers were men, Wearing on their breast the sign Of a ministry Divine—
Just a simple cross, blood red,
On a fair white surface spread;

Emblem that they knew no fear, Counted not their own lives dear, Ready were for sacrifice, Coming in whatever guise-Famine, pestilence or flood, Or other ill allowed of God.

Women, too, the symbol wear; In its name they boldly dare Ask to have the flying train Slackened, while into the rain Leap they, one by one, till ten-Women seven and three brave men-Stand upon the swampy ground, Pitchy darkness all around, Nerved by their commander's word, Faintly through the tumult heard: Nurses, you know what to do, Do your best, and God help you!"

Be the issue life or death. None of them once questioneth, Groping, stumbling, falling down, Up again, they seek the town, and at midnight enter in, Mercy's blessed work begin In the pestilential air, With a mother's tender care.

Mingling with the falling rain, Mingling with the moans of pain, sobs of gratitude are heard, As the nurses, undeterred, Move among the stricken brood, Giving medicine and food, In His name and for His sake, Who constrained them thus to take Risk to life and risk to limb, Leaping from the train for Him.

So the fever plague was stayed; So again the land was made Joyous with the bloom of health, Gladsome with the priceless wealth Of a love poured forth as free As the Lord's own ministry.

But the noble engineer, He who lent a pitying ear, He who dared to set aside, For that single evening's ride, Human law for higher good To a suffering brotherhood, Risked-and lost-his place of trust, Calmly saying: "God is just! 1. I was true to Him, and He Will not suffer mine nor me To be hurt by want or loss, While men wear that blood-red cross!" -Frances J. Dyer, in Youth's Companion.

A PRETTY PEASANT.

The Story of an Artist's Day Dream and Its Sequel.

Maurice strolled aimlessly through the umbrageous forest. The rain had ceased, but from the leaves drops of water still dripped with the light of her scarcely-developed form, sound of a trickling fountain. At a which the folds of her coarse gown distance the path he was following opened on a green glade. LATER.

LATE details on the 2d of the calamity in Pennsylvania on the 31st ult. multiply many times the early estimates of the number o lives lost and the probable value of the property destroyed. The first reports were confined mainly to the destruction wrought at Johnstown, but they have since been extended to a dozen towns and villages and to cover a vast extent of territory. The catastrophe was caused by the bursting of what was known as the South Fork dam. Johnstown was almost totally destroyed in a few minutes. Large factories, stores, public buildings, palatial residences and modest homes were swept away and their inmates crushed to death in the collapse of buildings or drowned after heroic but vain efforts to reach places of safety. It was estimated that twelve thousand citizens of Johnstown and its immediate vicinity perished. The towns of South Fork, Mineral Point, Conemaugh, Woodvale, Cambria City and other places, having from one to two thousand inhabitants, were com-pletely devastated, and hundreds of their citizens carried down by the torrent to be tossed lifeless upon the banks and partly as was occasioned within thirty miles from the dam to the town of New Florence had never before been recorded. Here's a health to the wives and the mothers Who sit in our households to-day:

Who are glad when they prighten for others The hours that go drifting away.
Bay their eyes keep the light of the gladness.
That banishes shadows and andness.
And what need we ask more than this?
But—how can this happiness be kept!
What shall protect those we love,—those who make a fleaven of the Home,—from the ravages of disease that is often worse than death,—that is, in fact, a lingering death?
The question is easily answered: Dr. Plerce's Favorite Prescription—the standard remedy for all of those peculiar diseases to which women are subject—is what must be felied on to preserve the health of wives and mothers. It prevents those diseases, and it cures them. It is a blessing to women and therefore a National blessing, because it gives health to those about whom the happiness of home centers, and the strength of a Nation is in its happy homes.

Dishonored Drafts.

When the stomach dishonors the drafts made upon it by the rest of the system, it is necessarily because its fund of strength is very low. Toned with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, it soon begins to pay out vigor in the shape of pure, rich blood, containing the elements of muscle, bone and brain. As a sequence of the new vigor afforded the stomach, the bowels perform their functions regularly, and the liver works like clock work. Malaria has no effect upon a system thus reinforced.
