And it came to pass that after he had advertised his goods there came unto him great multitudes from all the region round about, and did buy of him. And when his competitors saw it they marvelled among themselves, saying: "How be it that this man is busy, while we lost about our doors?" Our enterprising harness maker, C. Steinbach recently placed in his shop a Lantz wax thread sewing machine. He is able to do either flat or round work with it, and in a much neater and stronger manner than by hand, because the stitches are uniform. The thread passes through a cup of warm wax, thus it is always of the same texture, and the work when completed is always well and thoroughly done. When in his place of business recently Mr. Steinbach showed to us several pieces of work that had recently been done on this machine and judging from the appearance of the same the man who has a team that has been fitted out with one of Mr. Steinbach's harnesses need not be ashamed to show the work that has been put upon it.

Careful!
It is related of a certain clergyman in Edinburgh that he was so careful of his quotations and so fearful of the charge of plagiarism that once, in addressing the Deity, he surprised the congregation by saying, "And thou knowest, dear Lord, that to quote a writer in a late number of The Quarterly Review," etc.

THE JAC...
HOW A MEAN GAMBLER SPRUNG IT ON SISTER ABIGAIL.
We Wanted Another Proof of a Theory Concerning a Womanly Weakness and Got It at the Expense of Uncle Uriah's Opponents at Poker.

He was tall, with sparse whiskers seldom trimmed, nearly 70 years old, Uncle Uriah used to sit in the poker game in Omaha, his long thin fingers tremblingly placing his chips and his old eyes glittering as he timorously skinned his hand.

Uncle Uriah lived with his two sisters, Abigail aged 63 and Ann aged 65. In New Hampshire they had been called "the girls," but in Omaha the irreverent with false directness, referred to them as "Uncle Uriah's old maids."

There was never any solution to the mystery of how Sister Abigail discovered the obliquity in Uncle Uriah's life. Some officious neighbor may have told her, or in an excess of caution Uncle Uriah himself may have aroused her definite suspicions.

There was a good jack pot on the table. Uncle Uriah was in and was dealing. It was his last say, and the two men ahead of him had had $10 each. He had drawn one card, and the play was up to him.

"You better straighten this pot out before you go, uncle," said Coe. "You call, of course, I suppose, I flush is good?" Coe asked, turning to the other players.

The old man started instinctively toward the pot and then remembered Sister Abigail. He stopped and waited tremblingly for her decision. It seemed to the players, who turned from the weak and timid old man to the dominant woman, that at this critical test something of her moral rigidity relaxed.

"You better straighten this pot out before you go, uncle," said Coe. "You call, of course, I suppose, I flush is good?" Coe asked, turning to the other players.

J. G. Nolan, who is an old timer in the electrical construction business, tells a story on "Val" Blatz, the millionaire brewer of Milwaukee.

"I got to talking with Mr. Blatz and showed him the advantage of putting in our inter-communicative system through out his establishment. He listened attentively, and finally said: 'You that is all so very true, but...'

"I connected up the phones, made a show of changing the receivers, and in half an hour Mr. Blatz was talking to one of his Dutchmen down in the malt-house. He was delighted.
