Commencement Exercises Held on Thursday Evening Last.

REV. C. S. JONES' ADDRESS

WAS FULL OF FINE THOUGHTS AND GOOD ADVICE TO THE YOUNG PEOPLE WHO ARE ABOUT TO ENTER ANOTHER STAGE OF LIFE'S JOURNEY.

The commencement exercises of the class of '99 Chelsea High School were held at the opera house Thursday evening, June 22. The gloom cast over the community by the sad drowning accident to John Drislane, communicated itself to those who took part in the exercises and to those who tended, consequently the exercises were not characterized by the brightness that usually comes with such an occasion The hall was well filled but not so crowded as it was the night before at the class day exercises. The decorations re mained the same.

The program opened with a brilliant piano solo by Miss Blanche Seper Cushman. This was followed with prayer by Rev. J. I. Nickerson. Messrs. Louis Burg, John Eisenman, George A. and Floyd Ward then sang a pleasing quartet after which Rev. C S. Jones delivered the address on "True Culture." It was a fine address and showed a great deal of hard and conscientious study in its preparation It was of 45 minutes' duration and though the Herald would like to give in full, our readers will have to be content with the following brief synopsis of its most salient points. Mr. Jones said:

Never before have the instruments of happiness been so numerous or so easily accessible. Never before have educators done so much for child life and culture. For the youth, private schools and academies; polytechnic institutes and manual training schools for the sciences and trades; night schools for the unfortunate; great colleges and universities for the professions, are the results of demands and exigencies of the times.

The day of the stage coach and oxen is forever past for America. We have become a nation of cities with mighty combinations of capital and crushing competition. The organization of our new possessions, the opening of new fields of activity, the civilizing and democratizing of countries open to the world's commercial activities will bring questions affecting our individual and national life.

One of the signs of the times is the rapidly growing recognition of the necessity of a thorough education in all and drudgery in the muscle-demanding past, realizes that his children in the machine-age of the future must be edu-Iron Age Pivot Axle Riding Cultivators, cated. The aim of our education should be to provide for the wants of life. We must educate and train muscle and mind to work harmoniously and efficiently. Education should equip a man to earn his own living manfully, nobly and independently. Training imposes responsibility. Education should inspire us to the attainment of the best we are capable.

The child, the youth, the man are entitled to physical, scientific, literary, esthetic, institutional and religious knowledge. By physical education we mean not a training of brawn alone but a working knowledge of hygiene and the laws of perfect health. We should have a scientific knowledge that we may hold a communion with nature, understand the secret workings of its laws and come to know and love it. "Language is the plete without a knowledge of our rich esthetic inheritance. If we sought these alone life would be self-centered, hence we must add a knowledge of our institutional life. The right of private property, the common law, the state, church, freedom of the press, education, the relation of capital and labor, are all involved in this mighty question.

The antagonism to the Bible in the public schools has crippled our moral education. Greater responsibility is thus religious training of the child. We should Continued on Fourth Page.

REPORT BY GEN. OTIS.

He Tells of Present Situation in the Philippines.

Territory Occupied by the Americans -Filipinos Broken and Scattered -Natives Desire Peace-Troops in Good Condition.

Washington, June 27 .- Gen. Otis in reply to a cable from the war department asking for information regarding the situation and conditions in the Philppines, Monday cabled a long reply as follows:

Otis' Statement. "Manila, June 26.-Adjutant General Washington: Rainy season. Little inland campaigning possible in Luzon. We occupy large portion Tagalog country, lines stretching from Imus south to San Fernando north, nearly 60 miles, and to eastward into Laguna province. Insurgent armies have suffered great losses and are scattered; only large force held together about 4,000 in Tarlac province and northern Pampanga. Their scattered forces in bands of 50 to 500 in other portions of Luzon; in Cavite and Batangas provinces could assemble possibly 2,000, though demoralized from recent defeat; mass of people, terrorized by insurgent soldiers, desire peace and American protection; no longer flee on approach of our troops unless forced by insurgents, but gladly welcome them; no recent burning of towns; population within our lines becoming dense, taking up land cultivation extensively; kept out Manila much as possible, as city population becoming too great to be cared for. Natives southeast Luzon combining to drive out insurgents; only hope insurgent leaders is United States' aid.

Hope of Insurgents. "They proclaim near overthrow present administration, to be followed by their independence and recognition by United States. This is the influence which enables them hold out; much contention prevails among them and no civil government remains; trade with ports, not in our possession, former source insurgent revenue, now interdicted; not certain of wisdom of this policy, as people in those parts are without supply of food and merchants suffering losses; meditate restoring trade privileges, although insurgents reap benefits. Courts here in successful operation under direction of able Filipinos.

lately, due mostly to arduous service and climatic influences. Nothing alarming. Of the 12 per cent, of the command reported sick, nearly six in general hospital, of whom three per cent. have typhoid and 17 malarial fevers; 25 per cent. have intestinal trouble; remaining 55 per cent. have various ailments, 14 of which due to wound injuries. Many officers and men who served in Cuba break under recurrence of Cuban fever, and regular regiments lately received are inadequately officered.

Inadequacy of Officers.

The inadequacy of the number of officers mentioned in the last part of the above cablegram has been remedied by the sailing of the transports Zealandia and Sheridan, carrying a number of officers for regiments in the Philippines.

Report Is Satisfactory.

Washington, June 27 .- Gen. Otis' detailed report of the conditions existing in the Philippines is considered very satisfactory at the war department. It is taken to mean that Gen. Otis will not now prosecute a campaign on account of the rainy season, except where the insurgents make it necessary to defend the territory now in possession of the United States. That portion of the dispatch telling of the belief among Filipinos that the present policy of the United States will not be upheld is regarded as of great significance. It is believed that when the Filipinos see there is no hope of their recognition by the United States they will give up the plunger, estimates that he has paid out fight. The absence of any suggestion as to more troops being needed is taken to mean that Gen. Otis does not believe they could be used to advantage at pres-

Adams, Mass., June 27.—The vacation which President and Mrs. McKinley have been enjoying here as guests of W. B. The president returned to his executive labors in remarkably fine health, but Mrs. McKinley is not well, and it is on her account that the present stay was curtailed by two days. The closing day of the visit was made notable by a number of pleasant incidents. Twice the president spoke to the people of Berkshire of the pleasure attending his visit and earlier in the day he assisted in the ceremony of laying the corner stone of what is to be the largest cotton mill in western Massachusetts.

All that a woman may!
What did the gifts to the giver bring? Only an idol of clay. all the sweet dreams of her girlhood Told she the world of the bitter cheat? Ah, no! With a smfling face She clothed her idol from head to feet With the garments of her grace, and no one knew of the tears she went: Her griefs they were never guessed, For hid in her heart of hearts she kept Her therns of woe. CHAPTER III. MME. D'ENTRANGUES.

Walking down the Via San Dominico, 1 turned to the right by the Borgo di San Vito, and here I was recognized and hooted. Pressing hurriedly forwards, and aided opcortunely by the passage of a body of men at arms, coming through the street in a direction opposite to that of my followers, I succeeded in shaking off my tormentors, and turning again to the right up a narrow street, entered a barber's shop to have my beard removed in order to disguise myself as far as possible. The barber, a fussy little feliow, placed before me a mirror of polished steel, and as he set to work stropping a razor on the palm of his hand, I removed my cap, and for the first time observed that the hair of my head was thickly streaked with gray.

"Your excellency has doubtless come to join the army," said the barber, in a tone of inquiry, as he drew his razor across my

"Ah, yes, yes; I have just come," I replied, and the little man went on: "There have been great doings to-day. Tis said the duke has ordered the Count di Savelli to be executed for having in his possession a favor of madame. They say the count stole it, but we know better, don't we, your excellency?" and the little fool chuckled to himself. He went on without waiting for an answer. "Ah, yes; the ladies can never resist us soldiers. I may tell you that I served with Don Carlo Baglioni, and can bear my pike-there now, I think that side is clean shaven—as I was saying before, it was hard on the Marquis di Savelli, a gallant noble whom I frequently saw-pardon, your excellency, it is but a scratch after all had you not moved so suddenly, still only a scratch, nothing for a soldier. The Marquis di Savelli, as I said, was a regular customer of mine, and he had a lovely head of hair, your excellency. It was not so much before I took him in hand. Ecco! but in a menth you should have seen! He came in here in his free, easy way, and flung me ten crowns. 'Buy a ribbon for Madonna Giulia with that, Messer Pazzi,' says he; 'and harkee, send me over six more bottles of your elixir of St. Symmachus. Maldetto!' he exclaimed, twisting his curls between his fingers, 'but she adores me now.' Now who, I say, could she have been but-tchick? Diavolo? it is done; never a cleaner shave in Rome itself. If your excellency's fortune grows as well as your hair, I could wish you no better luck."

I rose in silence, and, flinging him a crown, tade him pay himself, and, receiving my change, hurried out, declining all Messer Pazzi's entreaties to bear with me a bottle of his precious elixir of St. Symmachus or any other accursed balsam. I saw at a glance that the removal of my beard caused a consderable alteration in my appearance, and imagined if I could but change my attire my most intimate friends would not know me unless they observed closely; and even then might perhaps fail to recognize me. This view, as it turned out, was not quite correct, and I had yet to learn how difficult a thing it is to arrange a complete disguise.

A few doors further on I laid out some of my money in the purchase of a stout leather buff coat, a long, dark mantle, and a cap to match. The cap was ornamented with a single black feather; and when I had donned these garments I felt that, wrapped in the cloak, with the cap pulled well over my eyes, and the feather standing defiantly out to the side, I wanted but a fathom of sword to make myself as ruffianly-looking a bravo as ever trod the purlieus of Naples or Rome. But the sword was some difficulty, for my crowns had dwindled to 16. Fortunately had on my finger a sapphire ring, and this I pledged for 20 crowns, and made my way to the armorer's. I there selected a strong, straight weapon, with a plain cross handle to go with her in her train." and a cutting blade, such as would be useful for rough work, and, after some haggling, got it for ten pieces. The armorer assured me that it was a sound blade, and I may say it did me good service. It now hangs in my bedchamber, a little chipped, it is true, but as bright and as fit for use as the day I paid for it, with a heavy heart, in Don Piero's shop, near the gate of St. Lawrence in

I began now to feel the want of food, for eyond the cup of Chianti brought to me the under officer I had tasted nothing ice yesterday evening, and therefore stepping into an ordinary called for a flagon of wine and a pasty. Whilst engaged in assaulting these, half bozen men, whom I recognized as belonging to the garrison, entend the tered the hostel, but to my joy I saw I was not known to them, and after a casual giance at me they fell to eating their meal.

I was, however, perforce compelled to listen to their conversation, which was carried on in the loud tone men of their class affect, and found to my annoyance that they were discussing me, and the events of the day. In order to escape this I was about to rise when I heard one of them mention D'Entrangues' name, and stopped to listen.

"He has left for Florence, and, it is said, intends to offer his sword to the Signory,' said one.

"And the other?" "Heaven knows! Perhaps Braccio's arm has reached him, poor devil!" "Well, he was a good soldier and a stout

"Basta!" said the first speaker. "What does a little lightness of finger matter? Play it in a small way, you're a thief, and food for Messer Braccio, curse him! Play it on a big scale and you're a prince. I for one don't think the less of Di Savelli because perhaps his hand at cards was always too good, and he made that little error in the matter of the rubics. A gentleman is sometimes driven to hard straits. I was a gentleman once and ought to know. I give you a toast-Here's to a long sword and a light

They drank with acclamation, and then set to a-dicing. I had, however, heard enough, and settling my account with the host, stepped forth into the street, intending to depart from the town by the Porta San Spirito or Roman gate, leaving the camp over my shoulder, and to make my way to Florence as soon as possible. There I would meet D'Entrangues, and kill him like a mad dog. I ground my teeth with rage when I thought I had no horse, nor even the means to purchase one, and must trudge it like any contadino. But, if I had to crawl on my hands and knees, I was determined to reach Florence and D'Entrangues.

It was, however, not yet sundown, and my idea was to leave the city when it was we!! dusk to avoid all possible chance of recognition. I meant to have passed the interval in the inn; but, as I felt this was impossible, it was necessary to find another spot where I could lay in quiet. With this end in view I crossed the Piazza di Popolo in an casterly direction, and went on until I came to the Franciscan church, into which I entered, not, I am sorry to say, with any desire for devotion, but merely because I was less likely to be disturbed there than anywhere else I could imagine. I was right, in so far that on entering the church I found it, as I thought, empty, but on looking round I saw beneath the newly-completed wheel window, the work of Guillaume de Marseille, a kneeling figure, apparently absorbed in prayer. I had approached quite close before I became aware that I was not alone, and was about to turn away, when, perhaps startled by the sound of my footfalls on the marble pavement, the person rose hurriedly and looked towards me. It was Mme. D'Entrangues. Her glance met mine for a second as that of a stranger, but as I was moving away some trick of gesture, or perhaps the hot anger in my eyes, told her who I was, for, calling my name, she came towards me with outstretched hands.

"Di Savelli," she said, for I made no advance, "do you not know me?" "Madame," I bowed, "I am unfit to touch

"No, no-a thousand times no! It is I who am unworthy."

st ll remained silent, and she asked, with a passionate emphasis: "Man, you have never sinned?" The words struck me like a shot. I felt in a moment I had no right to stand in judgment. "God knows," I replied, "I have, and I have been punished. With that she took hold of my hand, and then suddenly burst into tears, weeping over me with words I cannot repeat. It was not for me to fling reproaches, and I softened and did what I could to appease her. "I could not help it," she said; "I was not strong enough to speak or to let you speak. Oh, you do not know what such a thing is to a woman!"

"Let it pass, madame. What is dead is dead.

"I cannot. And yet, what can I do?" Her tears began afresh.

In a little time she grew better, and seized the opportunity to point out the danger she ran of being seen speaking to me, and suggested that she should make her way home. It was impossible to escort her myself, but would I walk a little way behind, keep her in sight, and see she came to no harm. I urged this all the more as I saw it was growing late, and that she was without any attendants and far from the camp.

"You mistake," she said; "I have not far to go. In fact, I am at present the guest of the convent here.' "And-" I did not finish the sentence, but she understood. I had forced myself to ask, to hear, if possible, confirmation of D'Entrangues' movements. "He," she answered-"he has left the army and gone towards Florence."

"And you?" "I stay here for the present."

Her tone more than her words convinced me that she had been abandoned by D'Entrangues, and it added another mark to my score against him.

"Why should I not tell you?" she continued. "After, when it was all over, the duke struck his name off the army, and he left in an hour. Before he went, he came and told me all, laughing at your ruin. I did not know man could be so vile. God help me -it is my husband I speak of! He offered to take me with him, but I refused; and he left, mocking like a devil, with words I cannot repeat. He was not done with you or with me, he said, as he went. I came here at once, and perhaps when Mme. de la Tremouille returns to France I shall be enabled

"Excuse my asking it," I said, "but have

"Oh, yes," she smiled, sadly, "it is not that in any way. At this moment I looked up and saw that it was sunset. Through the wheel window the orange beams streamed in a long banner, and lit up the figure of the saint above us. The rays fell on madame's pale face, and touched with fire the gold of her hair. We stood before each other in a dead silence. "Good-by," I said, extending my hand.

She placed her own in it and our eyes met.

It was a moment of danger to both. Leper as I was, I had but to lift my hand, but to say a word, and here was one who would have followed me like a dog. I felt her weakness in her look, in the touch of her hand, which shivered as it lay in mine like a "Go!" she said, faintly.

I dropped her hand, and, turning without a word, strode down the aisie. As I reached the church door the bells of the Angelus rang out, and yielding to a sudden unpulse I looked back.

Madame was on her knees before the saint.

CHAPTER IV.

A FOOL'S CAP AND A SORE HEART.

I was not so dense as to fail to grasp the extent of the peril I had escaped, or to fully realize the evil strength of the temptation, which came upon me as suddenly as a sneeze. It is rare in matters of this kind for wicked thoughts to be of slow growth; they spring at once to life, full-armed. I thanked God in my heart that I was able to sweep aside the base desire, which covered my soul like a black cloud, and refrained from taking advantage of madame's momentary weakness. I could not but see I was to blame myself.

1, the elder and the stronger, should have foreseen the probable consequences of a friendship such as ours, and my sorrow for her was mixed with the deepest regret for my part in the transaction. I banished all idea of attacking D'Entrangues through his wife, wondering at the littleness of spirit which had ever conceived such a thought. If it were possible, I would have kicked myself. Perhaps such victory as I gained over my heart was due to the secret springs of my vanity being touched, to the fear of the loss of my self-respect, and this, mingling with my pity and regret, gave me the strength to win at the moment of temptation. It is difficult to tell; I have lived long enough in the world to know that the mysteries of the heart will remain veiled to the end. Occasionally we may lift the curtain a little, but more no man has done.

What happened, however, explained clearly to me the motive for D'Entrangues' conduct. He, at any rate, must have seen, long before either of us, how affairs stood with the wife whose life he embittered; but he made no effort to save her, contenting himself with striking an assassin's blow, which had taken from him the last shred of respect madame may have felt for him, and which had in part recoiled on his own head. Be this as it may, his stroke was successful, in that to all intents and purposes it had utterly biasted me. I was worse than dead. It was no ordinary revenge. In those troublous times, a blow from a dagger could have easily rid him from a wife of whom he was sick, or a man whom he hated, and no one would have thrown the matter in his teeth. But with devilish cruelty, he inflicted wounds which could never heal, and left his victims to live. It was impossible to hit such a man back, in a way to make him feel to the utmost extent the agony he had administered; the only thing was to take from him his worthless life; this he doubtless valued most of all things, and I meant to deprive him of it, if he stood at the altar of Christ. Moved by such thoughts, and with my cloak drawn well over the lower part of my face, I hastened towards the Roman gate, reaching it just as it was to be closed for the night. In fact, as I passed out, the huge doors came together behind me with a groaning, and at the same time I heard the dull boom of the evening gun from the camp, followed immediately by the distant peals of the trumpets of the cavalry

As the crow flies, Florence was but a few leagues distant; but I obviously would have to journey by side paths, over hill and across valley to avoid observation, and this would occupy at least two days, unless my travels were permanently stopped by my being cut off by a privateering party from the camp, or by any other untoward accident. Neither contingency was unlikely for the writ of the king ran barely a league from the army, and the country was full of

In this mind I pressed on, intending to lie at Bucine for the night, or, if no better accommodation offered, to sleep as a soldier should, wrapped in my cloak, with the sky for a roof. As I went on, I found I was relying a little too much on my knowledge of the road, and a blue mist, which rose from the ground, made it impossible to pick my way by landmarks. The moon, come out by this time, shone fitfully through the bank of clouds, which was shifting uneasily overhead, and the wind, rising steadily, marked rain. I stirred myself all the faster, for I was in no mind to add a wetting to my misfortunes, and a drop or two of rain that caught me showed I had but little leisure to lose. I made out a narrow cattle track, and hurried along this; but before I covered a mile the moon was obscured, and the wind dropped. It now began to rain, and the darkness was so thick, that I could only just follow the road. Soon the track died away into nothing, and I found myself floundering, over my ankles in mud, and up to the waist in wet rushes. At any moment l might strike a quicksand, with which these marshes abound, so I used my sword as a search-pole, stepping only where I found ness, against which the falling rain glittered like fine wires of silver. I shouted aloud and to my joy got an answer.

"Who is there? What is the matter?" "A traveler," I replied, "who has lost his way in this cursed swamp. Whoever you are, you will make a friend and find a reward if you lead me out of this.'

"Come straight on, there is no danger beyoud getting your feet wet."

"They are that already," I answered, and pressed on, having absolutely to force my way through the wet rushes, which wound themselves around me impeding my progress terribly. Moreover, so sticky was the slime below that I thought every moment it would pull the boots off my feet. Struggling in this manner for a hundred yards or more, guided by the fire, and an occasional shout from my unknown friend, I at last touched hard ground, and with a "Thank heaven!" got out of the swamp, and found myself at the foot of the hillock, behind which the fire was blazing.

"Which way to Bucine?" I called out. "Are you out of the swamp?"

"Then come round the shoulder of the hill to your right, and follow your nose.

You will find shelter here. Bucine you could never reach to-night, and a dog should not be out in this weather."

"True, friend," I muttered, and with a loud "thanks" to the apparently hospitable unknown, I followed his directions, and, rounding the hillock, saw before me, spluttering in the rain, a huge fire of pine logs, at the entrance to a hut of the rudest description. Inside, I perceived a sitting figure, over which the light from the fire alternately cast a glare and then left it in darkness. I made my way to the open door, which hung back on hinges of rope, and entered without further ceremony.

"Humph!" snorted my host, without moving from his position. "I said it was no night for a dog to be out, I did not say anything of a wolf.

This change of tone was not so surprising, for, dripping wet, covered with mud, and white with fatigue, my general appearance was but little calculated to reassure anyone. Yet, as I hung my cloak on a rough wooden peg which caught my eye, I could not help laughing in mockery as I an-

"Wolves, friend, come to wolves' lairs." He took no notice of my remark; but, pointing to a heap of rushes opposite to him, said: "Sit down there." He then rose, and went toward the fire with an unlit torch in his hand. This gave me some opportunity of observing him. I saw he was of spare, but elastic figure. His head was bare, and his white hair hung in matted locks over a lean neck to his shoulders. His dress was fantastic and entirely out of place to his surroundings. It consisted of a tight-fitting jerkin of parti-colored velvet, with puffed breeches to match, pulled over thick black hose. On his feet were the ordinary sandals of the peasantry, and, as he stopped to light the torch wood, I saw his face was seamed with wrinkles, and that his lips moved rapidly, as if he was speaking, although no sound issued from them. He did not delay about his business; but hastened and, sticking a torch in a hole in the floor between us, resumed his seat, and said,

"Let me look at you?" Apparently his scrutiny was satisfactory, and I did nothing to interrupt him. ..

"Hungry?" "No. All that I ask is to be allowed to rest here till to-morrow.'

"That is well, for I have no food to offer you; but here is some wine in this skin." He reached to a corner and pulled out a small wine skin. This he placed before me with the single word "drink." "No, thanks." The whole manner and aspect of the man were so peculiar, that, although I was much fatigued, I judged it prudent to decline. His quick eye seemed to read my thoughts, for he laughed a little bitterly as he said:

"Tush, man! There is no fear. You bear too long a sword to have a purse worth the picking, and you are not supping," a look of hate passed over his features as he dropped out slowly, "with the Borgia. See, I will give you a toast-Revenge." He took a pull at the skin and flung it to me.

"I drink to that," I said, tasting the wine in my turn. Here then was another who, like me, sought for consolation in vengeance.

Why the Light Went Out.

In front of the high altar in the cathedral at Salzburg there is a great lamp that is supposed to burn "forever and a day." One morning, years ago, worshipers were surprised to see it go out, and this was repeated morning after morning, always about the same time. It was thought the attendant had neglected to give it sufficient oil, and though he declared his innocence he was told that he would be discharged if the oversight were repeated. Unwilling to deal unjustly with the man, the dean of the cathedral hid himself one night to see if he could solve the mystery. He had not long to wait. About ten o'clock a big rat was seen descending the rope by which the lamp was suspended. Having reached the oil, it fed freely and then went away by the way it came. Needless is it to say that the attendant held his place.-Detroit Free Press.

A Sharp Retort. It was after the publication of the "Lives of the Poets" that Dr. Farr, being engaged to dine with Sir Joshua Reynolds, mentioned that on his way there he had seen a clever caricature of Dr. Johnson being flogged around Parnassus by the nine muses. The admirers of Gray and others, who thought their favorites harshly treated in the "Lives," were laughing at Farr's account, when Dr. Johnson was announced. Sir Joshua introduced Dr. Farr, and to his infinite embarrassment repeated the story. Johnson turned to Farr and said: "Sir, I am very glad to hear this. I hope the day will never arcaptive bird. At once a life leapt up within me. I had lost—everything. Why not throw revenge after my losses, and with her by my side seek a new fortune with a new by my side seek a new fortune with a new name? A sad drowning accident occurred a Cavanaugh Lake last Thursday afternoon whereby John Drislane, aged 19 years, son of Mr. and Mrs. T. The boys went out as far as they dared and it was then that Drislane came up the third time, mouth upward being visible. He then gradually sank below the water, and the boys could see his body floating in a bowed over position until it sank to

ARLY on a bright morning in June a girl was driving a wagon load of vegetables into the town market. This girl, sitting upright on the wagon seat gazing placidly before her, was a capable-looking young person of about 16 years of age. Her gingham frock was stiffly starched, and her white collar and cuffs were spotless. She wore leather gloves to protect her hands, and a broad-brim hat shaded her face. Liny Poss was in a pleasant frame of mind that morning as she drove her vegetables into town. The garden was yielding finely, and the peas, potatoes and cabbages would command a very good price.

"One-fifth of the proceeds comes to me, John," said Liny, addressing the old horse. "That's fair and square in ma, ain't it?"

When John reached the stream at the foot of the hill he paused, and Liny climbed out upon the wagon shaft and unhooked the headstrap, then urged her friend farther up the stream, so that out of the way of passing vehicles he might drink at his leisure.

Scarcely had John's head touched the water when there dashed through the stream a pony carriage containing two girls. A great mastiff was trotting contentedly beside the carriage, and the girls were talking and laughing gayly.

The pleasant light died out of Liny's black eyes, and a frown formed itself between them before she replaced the headstrap and climbed back into the wagon to continue her journey. Yes, she was jealous; she acknowledged it to her friend, the old horse, with fierce vehemence, for Liny was honest; she was jealous of Julia Gregg, the girl driving the pony, and she was jealous of the other girl in the pony carriage who was visiting at the great house among the

"Nothing on earth to do but have a good time," muttered Liny. "Get up late in the mornings, and not beds to make; delicious things to eat at all the meals, and no hand in the cooking; going to have fireworks in the grounds on the Fourth of July, and can go to Europe, too. It isn't fair, is it, John?

"She's seen me at the post office off and on every summer since we've both been little tackers," continued Liny, her ill-humor increasing, "and we've passed in the road time and again, and we've stood side by side at the ribbon counter, and I bought a yard of ribbon off the same piece, though I knew she'd turn her nose up if she ever found out; but, laws, no, John, we're not acquainted! She goes to Europe, and I carry vegetables to the town market; she pays nine dollars for her shoes, and I give two dollars for the ones I wear on Sunday. She'd laugh fit to kill, I dare say, if anyone was to tell her that I'd like to go visiting to her house and see how it is to be stuck up. But I've got to keep straight along gathering vegetables, and hauling them to the city for other folks to eat; and I've got to-" Liny's voice sank to a whisper, and she finished with a gulp, "I've got to cut wood out in the shed at nights when we can't get a man in the daytime, and it isn't girl's work. It isn't fair."

She slipped a plump brown hand out of one of the leather gloves and rubbed it hastily over her glistening eyes, and then she laughed in a self-ridiculing

She dashed her hand across her eyes again and said, bravely:

"Well, I'm not going to mind. I get one-fifth of the proceeds, and I can go shopping as well as other folks. Fireworks in the grounds, indeed, and talking about them a month ahead, and not American enough to shake your hand like the president of the United States!"

Liny's varying expressions settled into one of firm determination as she drove on in a business-like manner, paying undivided attention to John as the wagon rumbled through the crowded thoroughfare. She was glad when her vegetables were disposed of to her dealer, and she had tied John in a quiet place a square back of the market, and she threw her head up a trifle and gave a swift smile, as she repeated to herself that she reckoned now she could go shopping as well as other folks.

Liny's shopping, however, was not extensive that morning, and she found herself idly walking the streets, examining the goods in the windows and admiring the latest spring fashions. Then, suddenly, her ugly frown came

Two girls had crossed the street and were directly in front of her, a great mastiff keeping close to the side of the girl with the yellow hair.

"I wish she wouldn't 'most run over me in the road, and push in front of me on the streets," thought Liny, viciously. "Let's go to see somebody or something," Julia Gregg was saying to her friend. "We've nothing whatever on hand. Suppose we visit the Old Men's real interesting; there's an old Irishman who dances jigs."

The friend laughed.

"Oh, I didn't know it was like that," she said. "By all means let's go."

"We've nothing else to do," said Julia again. "I have nothing else to do, either," thought Liny Poss, a glow rising in her brown cheeks. "I guess I can go visiting the Old Men's home as well as other folks."

"I'm such a rash person," said Julia Gregg, pausing at the foot of the stone steps leading to the Old Men's home. "If you hear me say anything that I oughtn't to say, Mary, making foolish promises or anything, just pull my arm, please; I'm always doing hasty things.'

"If the old Irishman dances very well," said Mary Alden, calmly, "I think we might each present him with a dime. If you're in for making the dimes dollars, I'll pull your arm.'

"Oh, I haven't a cent!" cried Julia, 'I'll have to borrow for the Irishman. But I suppose we'll see other things besides dancing."

A minute later the three visitors were admitted and conducted to the recreation room of the Old Men's home. Then Julia Gregg asked if she could see the Irishman who danced jigs for people, and was told that old Mr. Hillen was dead.

Some of the old men in the recreation room were reading the papers, some were talking together, several had ceased talking and were watching the visitors. The girl with the yellow hair I knowed how he enjoyed himself."

intended to go time and again. The angry with the old man who, without porch, and we can see the rockets in the place isn't far from here, and visitors any effort, was to have the happiness town, too." are admitted any time in the day. It's of visiting at the great house, but above all was she angry with herself for being angry.

"John," she said, ironically, to the old horse as she drove homeward, "we're not good enough to be noticed by stuck-up people; we don't belong to an Old Men's home." Then she added, bitterly: "I'm mean and hateful, John, and I don't deserve to have people speak to me and invite me to their houses." And then she whispered: "I really think she's lovely, and I hope he'll have a good time."

Mrs. Poss and Liny wondered not a little regarding the entertainment of the strange guest at the great house. Would Julia Gregg take him around the country driving? Would he go to church with the family? Would they keep him for the Fourth of July? They looked out for him patiently and then impatiently, but in vain.

"Like as not they turned him over to the kitchen folks," said Mrs. Poss at

"Well," said Liny, reluctantly, reckon he'd like that well enough."

"I don't know," said Mrs. Poss, "rich people's kitchen folks ain't often overpleased with visitors from the home."

"She was telling him about the fountain and the rose garden," said Liny, enviously. "I don't suppose he ever of Mr. Daggett." saw a rose garden before.'

"I reckon them kitchen folks shuffled him back to town by the end o' the week," said practical Mrs. Poss. "They might have kept him over for the Fourth, being as they're going to have fireworks in the grounds. I wish and her friend walked around among Liny, too, wished very much to know

"LAWS, MR. DAGGETT, BUT YOU DO WORK A GARDEN BEAUTIFUL."

The third visitor walked after them, envying their easy manners, wishing with all her heart and soul that she was the visitor accompanying Julia

"I suppose they have a very nice time here," said Julia, "ever so much better than they would have at home. Look at that old man over there. Let's go talk to him; let's ask him if he likes it."

The old man rose and bowed politely to the two young ladies; perhaps he also meant his bow for the young lady little in the rear, but she did not think so. She, too, stood still, pretending to be looking at something out of the window, seeing only in a dim way the board fence around the city back yard with the warm sunlight upon it.

"We thought we'd come in and see you all to-day," said Julia Gregg, af-"You have a fine recreation fably. room."

'Very fine," said the old man.

"Would you rather live here than at your own home?" asked Mary Alden.

A red streak came into the old man's cheeks; he gave a dry little cough. "I lived in the country," he said.

Then, Liny did not know exactly how it came about, perhaps she had really been looking out of the window for a minute, anyhow the old man was sitting in his chair, and Julia Gregg was standing with her hand upon his shoulder, gazing down upon him with pitying eyes, and he was telling about how he missed the country, the song of the birds, the low of the cattle, the croaking of the frogs, and people calling across to each other from their little whitewashed houses, and he was laughing and crying at once with the memory of it all.

Then Julia Gregg said, half timidly: "I live in the country. Would you like to pay me a visit?" and Mary Alden pulled her arm.

"Mamma would do it herself," said Julia, in answer to the pull, and she went on to tell the old man about her beautiful home in the country, about the fountain and the rose garden and the horses and carriages and the woods time to look at the rose garden. and the cool springs.

"Yes," said the girl with the yellow hair, "you are to pay me a visit.

I'm going to send the carriage for you to-morrow." Liny Poss cast one glance back at the old man whom they left sitting at the window. There was a bewilderingly happy look upon his face. Yet she was them, pausing now and then to speak | how the old man had enjoyed his visit to an inmate who caught their fancy. to the country, and what he had thought of Julia Gregg's fine home. A vision of his bewilderingly happy face would rise before her every time she drove towards the city; whenever she tied the horse a square back of the market, she would find herself thinking of the old man.

> "If I had half ma's spunk, I'd go to see him and ask him about his visit," she said one day as she tied the horse. Then she threw back her head with a laugh and a blush. "Visitors are admitted any time of day," she said. "I'll just cultivate my spunk and call."

Liny's cultivated spunk was not sufficient to prevent her from feeling a fluttering sensation as she stood for a second time in the recreation room of the Old Men's home. Then her eyes turned instinctively to the back window, and she beheld the old man. He was looking older and thinner; has visit to the country had not brightened him

"Ma's right," thought Liny, "they might have kept him over for the fireworks." Then she accosted an inmate and asked the name of the old man. "That," was the answer, "ah, that is

Mr. Daggett."

Liny walked across the room to where Mr. Daggett sat, and he rose poitely and bowed to her.

"Did you enjoy your visit to the country?" she blurted out. He smiled a deprecating smile, as if he did not quite understand.

"To that girl's beautiful home," said Liny. "Did you like the fountain and the rose garden? Sit down, Mr. Daggett, and tell me all about it."

Mr. Daggett sat down obediently. "She was very nice," he said, "very pleasant, very kind. I shouldn't have bothered her with how I felt; she had other things to think about. I hope she is having a good time. Oh, I know she is having a good time; she lives in the country.

"Did you have a good time?" asked Liny, her soul in her eyes. She was beginning to believe that those kitchen folks had got rid of him before he had

"She forgot," said Mr. Daggett, in a trembling voice.

"Forgot to send the carriage for you?" cried Liny, aghast; "forgot to give you your visit to the country, Mr. Daggett?

"Mr. Daggett," said Liny, softly would you like to spend the Fourth of July in the country with me? Not at a grand place, I can't promise you that; home. I've never been there, but I've with the friend for pulling Julia's arm, far from us, we can see them on the lat it.—N. Y. Journal.

"I want to see the green grass," said the old man; "I want to see some chickens and a stream."

"Well, I can show you them easy enough," said Liny, "and a good-sized vegetable garden.'

"I want to see 'taters growing," said old Mr. Daggett. "I can work a garden and cut wood, but that ain't enough Only four states show a larger number to pay my board."

"I'll go home and see ma," said the girl, briskly, "and I'll come for you to-morrow. You needn't worry," she of increased business. Following are added, with a blush. "I haven't got the increases: even on the Fourth of July, to bring vegetables."

Mr. Daggett sat beside Liny the next morning when she drove away from the town, drinking in the country air leaning out and smiling at every stream, peering up wistfully at the birds along the road. "The glorious Fourth," he kept saying. "The glorious Fourth. Freedom, emancipation, independence, that's what it means."

The old man was made very welcome at the little house with the big garden, and Mrs. Poss had a sumptuous early dinner "in honor," as she said to Liny on the sly, "of both the freedom of the United States and the freedom

He was told by his cheerful hostess that he must enjoy himself in his own way; so Mr. Daggett did not spend an idle day. He found a hoe and went to work in the garden. Mrs. Poss discovered him at the end of a long row of hoed cabbages, and exclaimed:

"Laws, Mr. Daggett, but you do work garden beautiful!"

"Yes," said the old man, "I can work a garden, but that ain't enough to pay my board."

Later in the day Mr. Daggett made his way to the woodshed and cut up a pile of wood that astonished Mrs. Poss. "Laws, Mr. Daggett," she cried, admiringly, "but you certainly know how to handle an ax!" "I can work a garden and cut wood," said Mr. Daggett, "but that ain't enough to pay my board."

"And him eating no more'n a sparrow," said Mrs. Poss, in the middle of a long consultation which she and Liny held in the front room. They sat on the porch that evening watching alternately the fireworks in the grounds of the great house three miles away and the rockets shooting skyward from the city, and when they had had enough of fireworks they went into the house together. "Well, I've had a glorious Fourth," aid the old man; "there ain't no doubt about it. I've seen them things I was hungerin' for and more. Liberty and freedom," he muttered, "and all over in a day." "It wasn't that way with the United States," remarked Mrs. Poss, proudly.

"No," said Mr. Daggett, looking down, "it wasn't that way with the United States." But this Fourth of July had had to do with his liberty and freedom.

"We want the Fourth to be as good to you as it was to the United States, Mr. Daggett," said Mrs. Poss. "Laws, Liny, you tell him straight out what we do want."

"Ma and me would like you to stay here all the time, Mr. Daggett," said Liny. "Laws! don't thank me! If you must thank anybody, thank ma." Thereupon Liny escaped to the front

But was it an escape, after all? Outside the gate was a pony carriage with the lamps throwing a brightness on the road, and there was a man opening the gate, and at the gate was a girl with yellow hair and a great mastiff close at her heels. "Oh, I'm so glad you've come out!" cried Julia Gregg. "I didn't dare to go in. Mary and I saw you this morning with that old man. I forgot all about him, you know, until nearly a week, and then we agreed that he had given us up and forgotten, too, and we were expecting so many visitors, and-andwhen I saw you this morning I knew you had heard me promise that day, and that you knew I had broken my promise, and that you had gone and done it yourself. I told mother all about it, and she says you must come to see us. She wants to know you. I've been seeing you in the post office and different places all my life, and when I was little I used to cry because I didn't have black eyes like yours, but I didn't know you were so good." The pony had shifted his position and the lights from the lamps showed two glowing cheeks as Julia Gregg asked, wistfully: "He has forgotten, hasn't he? The old man, I mean."

"Yes," said Liny, "I think he has forgotten."

Then the girl who was not American enough to shake hands with people in the manner of the president of the United States, put a hand on each side of Liny's face and kissed her quickly, saying again: "I didn't know you were so good." Then she laughed and ran and jumped into the carriage, and the pony was turned around sharply.

And ever so many hearts were happy on old Mr. Daggett's glorious Fourth.-Louise R. Baker, in Housewife.

SEVERAL CHANGES.

Made by the State Board of Agriculture at an Important Meeting Held in Lansing.

The state board of agriculture held a very important meeting at the college in Lansing. The experiment station, farm department and horticultural department were reorganized to take effect July 1, 1889. Prof. C. D. Smith was elected director of the station, dean of short courses, superintendent of institutes and college extension lecturer. Prof. W. H. Mumford was elected professor of agriculture and superintendent of the farm at a salary of $1,800. In the horticultural department H. P. Gladden resigned as assistant professor and U. P. Hedrick was elected in his stead at a salary of $1,200. The change of the farm department relieves Prof. Smith of all teaching work and places it in the hands of Prof. Mumford. It also relieves K. L. Butterfield of his position as superintendent of institutes and college field agent. The board also discussed the location of the new women's building, but the matter will not be definitely settled until the next meeting of the board. The recent action of the legislature in organizing an experiment station in the upper peninsula was considered and the secretary was authorized to notify all interested parties that the station would be organized within six months, the time specified by the bill.

LABOR STATISTICS.

Commissioner Cox Furnishes Some Interesting Facts and Figures Concerning Factories.

Labor Commissioner Cox, who is chief factory inspector for the state, says:

In the inspection of the first 2,200 Michigan factories, from January 1, 1899, to June 1899, there were found 77 new factories which had been built since last inspection. Of these 58 gave the amount of capital invested as $614,291, or an average of $10,-91.23 for each factory. At the same ratio the other 19 would have invested $201,233, making an aggregate for the 77 factories of 815,524. The 77 factories were employing 752 males and 319 females, a total of 1,071 employes, or an average of 14 employes for each factory.

The aggregate wages paid the employes was $1,424.43 each day, or a monthly wage of $37,035.18. The average daily wages of these employes was $1.33, which, taking into consideration that nearly 30 per cent. were females, brings the average wages about eight per cent. above that paid in 1898.

Dogs Kill Sheep.

Farmers throughout Eaton county are complaining of the loss of sheep being killed by dogs. The heaviest loss thus reported falls on ex-Supervisor Warren Davis, of Carmel township. Two dogs attacked a flock containing 100 sheep in the daytime, killing 28 outright and wounding 15 more that had to be killed, besides five which are missing, causing a loss of $200. Preparations are now being made to proteet flocks from another such attack.

Curiosity Satisfied.

Emery Smith, of Duck Lake, was curious to know if the family gasoline jug was empty, but instead of shaking it to find out he lighted a match and stuck it in the mouth of the jug. There was some gasoline there all righ' enough, and when the match got in side it asserted itself with such emphasis that nothing was left of the jug but the handle. Smith's eyesight will probably come back to him in time, but was a narrow escape.

Students at the University of Michigan Have Nearly One Hundred Clubs and Societies.

EACH CLASS HAS ITS OWN OFFICERS

The Most Far Reaching Is the Athletic Association, While the Alumni Association Has the Most Members-Aims and Purposes of the Various Organizations.

[Special Correspondence.] Ann Arbor, Mich., June 21 .- There are nearly 100 different organizations among the students at the University of Michigan. There are clubs, societies and organizations for almost every conceivable purpose. Every different interest has its organization; each class and there are 25 of them in the university-has its own set of officers; and every important idea is represented by an association of some kind.

The Athletic Association.

The most far reaching and compliested of these organizations is the Athletic association. This has to do with the athletic matters of the entire university. Within the organization, however, are several suborganizations. The varsity football team has its own officers, the baseball team its own, also the track team and the several reserve teams. The tennis players choose their own managers and captains, and so do the different class nines, elevens and track teams. But the main association exercises a certain general supervision over all and gives special attention to the 'varsity teams.

One of the Largest.

The Students' Lecture association has a very large membership because everybody purchasing a lecture course ticket is a member and entitled to vote at the annual elections. The association furnishes each year a course of eight or nine entertainments at a nominal cost. It is among the oldest of the student organizations, having been in existence

Oratorical Association.

The oratorical interest of the students finds expression through the Oratorical association. This organization supervises the annual contests and debates among the students of the literfor the intercollegiate meets, both in oratory and debating.

Women's League.

The mission of the Women's league is to look after the women students. To see that they are not lost in the bustle and hurry of student life, It interests itself more particualry in spectively. their social sides.

Musical Organizations.

There are several musical organizations at the university. Chief among these are the Choral union, the University Musical society and the University of Michigan band. The first arranges a yearly course of musical entertainments and manages the annual May festival. The second concerns itself with the musical interests of the university in a general way, and the third furnishes the thunder for all celebrations, athletic contests and student demonstrations. The 'Varsity Glee, Banjo and Mandolin clubs also lend their aid to many public occasions. Then there are the class glee and banjo clubs and the musical organizations of #### the engineering department. Christian Association.

The religious life of the students finds expression through the Students' Christian association and the University Y. M. C. A. Membership in the first is open to all students and in the second only to the young men. The one has an enrollment of 650 and the other of about 200. The Student Volunteer band furnishes recruits for the home and foreign mission field.

Good Government.

The purpose of the Good Government club can be inferred from its name. Each year it gives a series of lectures by prominent public men upon questions of vital importance.

All for Charity.

The Fruit and Flower mission is a charitable organization. Its members visit the sick in the university hospitals and do what they can to make the paflent's stay less dreary and lonesome. The hospital circle of the King's Daughters has a very similar mission, except that it goes further in the work and in extreme cases renders financial aid. The Homeopathic Hospital guild also assists needy patients.

Military.

Quite different in purpose from any its birth in the intense feeling existing at the time of the Spanish-American war. Of late it has not been very demonstrative.

Theatrical.

The students whose hobbies are theatricals find expression for their bend of mind in the Comedy club and the University of Michigan Minstrel troupe. Sturgis prairie. Her maiden name was During the last six months both of Lucy Thurston. She is now 85 years these organizations have appeared be- old-fore the footlights and received the aplause of the students.

Masonie Club.

A U. of M. masonic club exists for those instructors and professors who are masons. Very similar to the masonic order are the Greek-letter fraternities. Of these there are 20 or more. Most of the fraternities have their own chapter houses, in which the members live while in college. Then there are eight sorosities, which are simply fraternities for the women students.

Political.

Even politics furnishes a basis for several organizations. The U. of M. Republican club has a large membership, as has also the Democratic club. A few years since there was a silver club and a prohibition club. The Anti-Saloon league, although not a political organization, aims to accomplish moral reforms through political means.

Graduate Club.

The Graduate club draws its members from the students at the university who are pursuing post graduate work. It generally meets with some members of the faculty. The Michigan State Normal club is composed of students in the university who have attended the normal school at Ypsilanti.

Tonstmasters' Club.

The art of having a merry good feast is the aim of the Toastmasters' club. Its members, with their ladies, meet as occasion demands and "drive dull care away."

A Dutch Club.

The students of Dutch descent have organized the Knickerbocker' society that they may have something in common. The same end is reached by the students from south of the Ohio river by the Southern club.

Various Organizations.

Several other organizations, the purposes of which are made clear by their names, are the Chess club, the Whist club, the Golf club, the University Gun club and the Canoe club.

Social Societies.

Some of the organizations which exist for purely social purposes are the Juniors' Hop, the Senior Reception, the Sophomore Hop, the Freshman Spread, the Freshman Banquet, the Webster Society Banquet, the Jefferson Society Banquet, the Forty club, the Freshman Law Banquet, the Friars and the Sen-

Literary and Debating.

The literary and debating societies of the university are: The Alpha Nu, the Adelphi, the Webster, the Jeffersonian, the Sumner, the House of Representaary and law departments, also arranges tives, the Choate Debating club, the Hamilton Debating club, the Benton Debating club and the Lincoln society.

Why They Exist.

The Philological, Pedagogical and Philosophical societies exist to stimulate interest in the languages, in the art of teaching and in philosophy, re-

Most Important.

Of the department organizations the more important are the Engineering society in the department of engineering, the Dental society in the dental department and the Hahnemann society in the homeopathic department.

Editorial Boards.

A special form of student organizations is the editorial boards of the college publications. Of these publications there are, including the annuals, nine, and as each is equipped with a full board of editors nearly 100 persons are required to fill the places.

The Largest of All.

Another university organization, and the largest one of all, is the Alumni association. Every person who has been connected with the institution a year or more is entitled to membership in this organization.

R. H. ELSWORTH.

DEAD TOWNS.

Ottawa County Has Had Within Its Boundaries Several Places That Are Now Only Memories.

Ottawa county probably has more dead and buried town sites and prospective cities than any other county in Michigan. Port Sheldon was the dream of wealthy Philadelphia capitalists in the early '40s, and the bubble burst after $200,000 had been spent. Only rotting timbers in the sand remain of the fine buildings that were built. Charleston, another boom town loeated on Grand river, has also disappeared. Warren City, once the county seat, no longer exists, and where its buildings once stood are now farms. Ottawa Center, once a village of 200 or 300 inhabitants, exists only in the memory of the oldest settlers.

Oldest Resident. Coldwater claims to have the oldest GRAIN-Wheat, Northern .. $ continuous resident of Michigan in the person of Mrs. Lucy Miller. She has of the preceding organizations is the lived in the state 81 years, coming here University of Michigan rifles. This had in 1814, when four years of age, and settling with her parents in Wayne county on one of the farms belonging to Lewis Cass. Mrs. Miller was the first lady passenger on the stage coach from Detroit to Sturgis when that line was established from Detroit to Chieago over the old Indian trail, and she was the first white woman married on

GREAT LEGAL VICTORY.

Value of an Honored Trade Name Upheld by the United States Circuit Court.

The California Fig Syrup Co., of San Francisco, has just won a legal victory which is of utmost public interest, as it establishes judicially a fact long recognized ethically that the name or the title of an article is valuable property, entitled to the same protection as chattels or commercial paper. The company mentioned manufactures an excellent laxative which has been extensively advertised and acquired a valuable reputation under the name "Syrup of Figs," or "Fig Syrup." Trading on the reputation of this remedy other manufacturing concerns applied the same name to laxative medicines made by them. The California Fig Syrup Co. took the matter in the United States courts and obtained a permanent injunction, of which the following is the

"It is thereupon ordered, adjudged and decreed, that the injunction and restraining order heretofore made herein be continued until final decree herein, and to that end that an injunction be issued as prayed for in the bill of complaint herein, strictly commanding and enjoining the defendants, Clinton E. Schmelz and Lucius Little, and each and all of them, their and each and all of their agents, employees, workmen, servants, attorneys and counselors, from making, using or selling any liquid laxative medicine, marked with the name 'Syrup of Figs,' or 'Fig Syrup,' or any colorable imitation of the same; from making, using or selling any laxative medicine put up in boxes, wrappers or cartons, having on the same the name 'Syrup of Figs,' or 'Fig Syrup,' or any colorable imitation of the same; from making, using or selling any liquid laxative medicine put up in boxes, wrappers or cartons, so as to be like the cartons, wrappers or boxes used by complainant in connection with the liquid laxative medicine made by it, or so as to be a colorable imitation of the cartons marked Exhibit A, and filed in this case, being a carton, box or wrapper used by complainant for its liquid laxative medicine, marked and named 'Syrup of Figs,' or 'Fig Syrup; from making, using or selling any box wrapper or carton as a wrapper or case for a liquid laxative medicine, bearing upon it the figure of a branch of a fig tree with leaves and fruit, and surrounded by the words in a circle 'San Francisco Syrup of Figs Company, San Francisco, Cal.,' or any similar words or figures, or any colorable imitation of such a symbol or mark, or from making use of, in any way, in connection with a liquid laxative medicine the name Syrup of Figs Co.,' or from using any name whereof the words 'Fig Syrup Co.,' or 'Syrup of Figs Co.' form a part as a business name of a company, or concern, or corporation engaged in the business of making and selling a laxative med-

This decision is of far-reaching importance to all manufacturers whose products bear a recognized title, as well as a protection to the public whose confidence naturally rests in a large measure upon the name of the goods it buys.
