IN A MUSIC SHOP.

In a dim corner of the shop, With none but mice to mark The weary old toy-zither hung, Forgotten by the dark.

The cobwebs hid its outworn case, Dimmed with the anxious years; The strings that little hands had pricked To laughter more than tears.

(And didst thou hope, a music toy, For slumber? Nay, awake! The heart of music has no rest Until its cords must break.)

Without, among the violins The master-hands had wrought, It heard the master-music voice Its own unuttered thought,

Like some poor bird of halting song Way-worn, with broken wing, Watching the lark fly up through heaven. Ever to fly-and sing.

Nor rest nor sleep belong; Only to feel with helpless strings Eternal stress of song. And even there, adaze with dust,

To little old toy-instruments

Too old and worn to sing, The message of the viols set Its voice a quivering.

Thou weary little zither, Long days and years shall come Before thy heart of song may break-Thy weary strings be dumb. Josephine Peabody, in Youth's Com-

CHAPTER XXII. THE RIDE TO ST. JEROME.

We galloped at a break-neck pace to the gate, but the guard was already alarmed, and half a dozen men came hastening towards us. They were on foot, however, and had no mind to stand the shock of meeting horses coming at full speed down an incline, so skipped nimbly aside. The olicer alone held his ground, paying for his courage with his life, for Bande Nere sliced his head in two like a ripe watermelon-poor wretch. Had | This lady is the Countess Angiola Castelthey only closed the gates we were lost, but we reached them just in time, and, passing | whom I have brought off from Perugia, and through like a flash, were free of the town. A bullet or two whizzed past us, but did no damage. It was done, and another half hour of the pace we were going would place us beyond pursuit. It was no easy matter, however, to sit the horse and hold Angiola as I was doing, and I very soon began to feel that the strain on my arm was getting beyend me, and that she was slipping from my grasp. She lay still and passive, her eyes closed, her head resting on my shoulder, and seemed in a faint. Perhaps I spoke roughly, but it was no time to mince words.

"Come, madam," I said, "you must rouse yourself-take another day to swoon-hold me as closely as you can-quick.'

My words-and the tone they were spoken in-had the effect I wanted. She looked a little indignant, but held on, leaving my left arm, which was getting numbed, more free to guide the horse, and my sword-arm greater liberty should occasion arise.

The country, rugged although it was, descended in a slope towards the basin of Trasimene, but I turned sharp aside from the road, fearing there might be a picquet thereon, and galloped across the open, far outpacing my followers, who I saw were coming after me in a bunch, and at their utmost speed--the honest knaves. The glance over my shoulder that I took to observe this also showed me a strong body of horse spurring from the gate, and I chuckled to myself as I thought we had gained a mile's start and that they had to deal with Castor. Five leagues to go--it was nothing to the brave horse; and in answer to my call he stretched himself out as he had never done before. As for me, such thoughts as I had when I felt the arms of the woman I loved clasped about me are to be recalled for one's self alone, and concern none else beside. Once or twice I glanced down, meeting her eyes, and as she dropped her lids over them they seemed to me to be alive with a soft light. After a little I felt the arms beginning to relax.

"Hold tight," I said. "I cannot; my strength is going." "Courage, take heart; see, to our left is stretching himself like a greyhound. I looked again over my shoulder. Far behind my men were riding for their lives, and farther still was the dark line of our pursuers, coming on with dogged persistence, the sun lighting up their armor and flashing from their spears. Once beyond Magione we were comparatively safe, but a false step, a stumble, and all was lost. Magione itself was held by the Baglioni, and from the old watch tower, built by the Sforza, which stood high above the country, we might have already been spied and a party sent out to intercept us. The thought seemed to grow into a reality, and a despair began to come over me. "On, on, Castor!" I spoke to the good horse, and he laid his ears back at the afraid that the sight of my face would alarm sound of which the sight of my face would alarm sound of my voice, and even as he did so I saw a cloud of dust coming towards our left, and knew that the danger I feared was at hand. Going as we were I was riding right into the party from Magione, and therefore with a touch on the rain I swyng Castor. with a touch on the rein I swung Castor round to the north, and we raced on, leaving the tower over my shoulder. The double burden and the tremendous pace, however, began to tell on the horse, and within the next five minutes he slackened perceptibly went to the left and hid my wounded side, wound, words our eyes met, and I caught so bright a smile our eyes met, and I caught so in his stride. To my horror I saw that the ground began to be furrowed and cut up by ravines and that we were approaching the bed of a river. I had, therefore, to slacken the pace, and at the same time our new pursuers sighting us came on with all the speed of their fresh horses. Castor scrambled in and out of the ravines like a cat, but we were going slowly now, and the enemy had all the advantage of the level ground to come up, which they did at a dreadful rate. With the failing strength of my companion I dared not risk jumps, weighted as I was, but the brave horse did his utmost, as if knowing our danger.

"For God's sake hold on!" I cried out as we topped a deep ravine with a plunge that almost caused Angiola to slip from my grasp, and as I said this I heard a shot and a ball from an arquebus whistle over my head. The enemy were in the rough ground now themselves, but they were within gun range, and, I dreaded that some of them might dismount and pick me off. This, however, did not occur to them, and on we went, with every now and again a bullet, fired from horseback with an unsteady aim, singing past us. My charge had twisted her arms into my shoulder belt and held on bravely, but I saw by her white face and the blue coming into her lips that this could not last, and if she fainted there was an end of all.

At the outside it was a matter of a few minutes now, one way or the other; but as I came to the crest of another ravine I saw before me a steep bank leading down to a small stream that was swishing along in a white flood, and on the opposite shore a sight that made my heart leap, for drawn up in array, evidently roused by the sound of the shots, was a strong body of men at arms, and over them fluttered the pennon of Hawkwood, a red hand on a white field. I knew in a moment we were within the king's outposts.

"Saved!" I shouted in my joy. "Saved!" -and risking all I made the horse fly the last ravine, and the next instant we had slid down the bank, and the white water was churning round Castor as he dashed into the

A puff of smoke above us, a flash as of lightning, a deafening roar, and one of Novarro's nine-pounders belched out a storm of grape that hissed over our heads in the direction of our pursuers, and stopped them, beaten and baffled. One effort more, we were out of the stream, up the bank, and panting, breathless and still bleeding, with my companion in a dead faint in my arms, I reined in Castor. In a moment we were surrounded, but the faces were kindly, and, dismounting slowly, I placed my lifeless burden on a heap of cloaks that were flung to the earth for her, and then, turning round, saw Hawkwood before me. It was the first time we had met since the affair at Arezzo, when I was cast forth a dishonored man. I did not know how to greet him, and there was a constraint in his face, for I saw he knew me, and was, like myself, at a loss for speech. I had, however, to take the matter in my hand.

"Signore," I said, "accept my thanks. lani, a ward of the Florentine secretary, have to take to the convent of St. Jerome.' He tugged at his tawny mustache.

"I have merely carried out orders-you have nothing to thank me for, signore. My instructions were to prevent any of Baglioni's men crossing the Sanguinetta and to protect all fugitives from the territories of the Borgia."

I bowed and added, with a pain in my tone I could not conceal, for this man was once my friend:

"All the same, I thank you, signore; I have, however, four followers.' "I can do nothing for them if they are on the other bank," he interrupted, and went "St. Jerome is not a half league from here. My men will make up a litter, and help to bear the lady there. It will be easier for her. I wish you a good day." He turned on his heel and gave some orders to his men in English, a language I do not know, leaving me standing by the body of Angiola. All the misery of the past came back to me in a flash. Would the stain never be wiped out? All the kindness I had received from Bayard and the cardinal, all the efforts made by those who believed in me, seemed to be swept away as dust in the wind. Almost did I feel that I would accept the ban cast on me and turn wolf in earnest. It cost me much to restrain myself from drawing on Hawkwood, but a glance at the still pale face before me recalled me to my duty. A man very kindly brought me a little wine; I knelt down and forced some of it between her blue lips. In a short time she revived, some color came into her cheeks and she attempted to rise, with a look of fear on her face at the number of armed men she saw around her.

"There is nothing to fear, madam," I said, to reassure her, "you are safe, and in an hour will be at St. Jerome-a litter is being made ready for you." Without a word she held out her hand, and thanked me with this and the look in

The litter was now ready, half a dozen men vounteered their services, and, placing her therein, we started for the convent. Ere we had gone half a mile we heard shouts behind us, and I was more than glad to see Jacopo and my men riding up.

"How did you get off?" I asked, as they

"In the rear of the troop from Magione, excellency," was Jacopo's reply; "they did not observe us, having eyes only for you; and seeing you were safe we forded the stream lower down and crossed-but, exceliency, your face-are you hurt?" "Somewhat, but at St. Jerome I will have it attended to." In truth, the left side of my face appeared to be laid open, and, although I felt that the wound was not so dangerous as it seemed, yet I had bled freely, and now that the excitement was over began to suffer much pain. Indeed, at times I felt as if I could hardly hold myself straight in the saddle, succeeding in doing so only by an effort of will. I did not approach the litter. I was the gates was met by St. Armande and the rest of my followers, whom I was glad indeed to see.

He came up with a merry greeting. 'Welcome," he cried: "so, gallant knight, you have saved the damsel in distress;" then, catching sight of my wounded face, his tone changed. "Good G-! you are hurt."

"A little." "You should have seen to it at oncecome we are not allowed to enter the convent; but the abbess has done all she can for us, and we camp or lodge, whichever way you put it, in that house there;" he pointed to a small villa, set in what seemed a wilderness of holm-oak that hid all but its roof from view.

"Not so fast, chevalier. I must leave my charge at the convent first.'

He had to rest satisfied with this, but I was surprised that he made no inquiry as to the condition of Angiola, an ordinary civlity that might have been expected.

At the gates of the convent, within which we were not allowed to enter, we were met by the lady abbess and her train. I dismounted, intending to assist Angiola out of the litter, but as it was set down she sprang out of it of her own accord, and the next minute she was in the arms of the abbess, and there was much kissing and many congratulations, mingled with tears of joy. I did not stay to receive the thanks I saw would shortly be showered on me, and, thrusting a handful of crowns into the hands of the leader of the good fellows who bore the litter, as some reward for himself and his men, I looped Castor's reins into my arm and set forward to walk to the villa. The chevalier came with me, and by the time I reached it I was quite giddy, being weak with the pain and the loss of blood. The saturnine old abbe was there, with more concern in his face than I had seen for a long time, and seeing me stagger he put an arm round me, and, aided by St. Armande, assisted me to a couch. The chevalier himself dressed my wound with a gentle and skillful hand, making as much of me as if I had been run through the vitals. As he finished dressing the wound the abbe remarked that I would have to rest for a few days to enable it to heal, and I had replied with some difficulty, my jaw being bandaged up, that this was impossible, when Gian came in with a note. It was from Angiola, chiding me gently for not waiting to receive her thanks and those of the abbess, and beg ging me to come the following day, with a postscript to the effect that the lady abbess would so far relax the rules of the order as to admit me within the courtyard. I dismissed Gian with thanks and a message that I would be at the convent, charging him to say nothing of my wound, and then my thoughts went a wool-gathering, and I lay back with the missive in my hands: St. Armande was leaning against the window, his back to the light. He had taken up this position after whispering a word or two to the abbe, who left the room. I did not, however, observe him or anything else; my mind was full of mad thoughts, and for the moment I let them have full play, making no effort to resist. Folding the letter up carefully, I placed it under my pillow, and was about to close my eyes when the abbe returned, bearing a bowl in his hands. This St. Armande took from him, and, approach-

I rose to a sitting posture to take the cup, but he would not have it so, and, passing his arm round my neck, made me drink like a child. The draught was cool and refreshing, and as I sank back on my pillows, my heart for a moment being gay at the thought of the letter, I said, jestingly:

"Chevalier, you would make a most excellent nurse. Shave off that little mustache of yours, put on a black hood and gown, and diavolo! But you would break as many hearts as you cured wounds," The words were barely out of my mouth when he brought his foot down with an angry stamp on the carpet, and with a face as scarlet now as it had been pale before turned on his heel and walked out of the

The cleric rose, and, not answering my question, spoke:

"You had better try and aleep now, cavaliere, or else the potion may lose its effect.' He then followed St. Armande.

I would have risen to apologize, but I felt a pleasant numbness stealing over me, and in a minute or so my thoughts began to grow confused, and I seemed to sink into a sleep. Not so prefound a slumber, however, as to be unconscious of what was going on around me. I was sure I once heard Bande Nere and Jacopo in my room, and that I was being carried apparently to a more bed. Then I felt soft hands bathing my wound, and heard a gentie voice whispering words of deep love in my ear. It was a dream, of course, but all through the night that soon came, Doris D'Entrangues hung over me and tended me with words I cannot THE PAVILION OF TREMOUILLE.

When I awoke the next morning my head was still dazed, but I was otherwise strong. At least I felt so, as I lay still in my bed, all sense of fatigue gone, and trying to collect my thoughts. After awhile I glanced round the chamber, which was not the room where I had taken the potion, but another and a larger apartment. It was no fancy, then, the voices of Jacopo and Bande Nere I heard and the sensation of being lifted and moved, which I experienced in the night. My removal was doubtless effected whilst I was under the influence of the drug; but the voice of madame? The almost certainty that she was by me through the hours of the night? I could not account for this, and, seeing any such effort was useless, ceased to rack my brain on the subject, putting it down to a mad dream. For some while I lay mustering up courage to rise, fanned by the mild breeze which played in from the open window on my right. Outside I could see the branches of the trees, as they swayed to and fro in the wind, and the joyous song of a mavis trilled out sweetly through the morning from the thorn bushes whence he piped. In about a half hour my head began to grow clearer; I remembered Angiola's letter, and thrust-my hand under the pillow to find it. Of course it was not there, as I had been moved, and a short exclamation of annoyance broke from me.

"Excellency!" It was Jacopo's voice, and the good fellow, who had evidently been watching me, came forward from behind the head of the bed. "Ah, Jacopo! Is it you? Here, help me

"It was lucky he only touched your wor-

"Luckier still your being there with your arquebus, else St. Peter and I had surely shaken hands-there-thanks-I will sit here for a few minutes," and I sank into an easy chair, being really weaker than I thought I was, the effects more of the nar cotic than anything else. "Will your worship breakfast here?"

"No-but before doing anything go to the room where I was last evening and bring me the letter you will find under the cush ions of the couch there."

'Excellency!" and Jacopo left the room. I now for the first time observed a bouquet of red and white roses, whose fragrance filled the chamber. I had been conscious of their perfume before, but thought the scent was borne in by the breeze from the garden outside. Whilst I was admiring the flowers Jacopo returned.

"The letter." Is not there, signore; I have searched

It was a disappointment, but I said nothing, having determined to see for myself. As Jacopo assisted me to dress I inquired to whom I was indebted for the flowers.

"I cannot say, excellency; they were here when I came this morning. Possibly the Signor de St. Armande, who was with your worship all night."

"All night!"
"Signore."

I could not help being touched by this proof of devotion, and when I had dressed went down, with the intention of finding my letter and thanking the chevalier for his kindness. I was, I saw, still a little weak, but a few hours' rest would make me fit for action, and . could not help thinking I had been made much over on too small an occasion. St. Armande was in the room where I had left the letter, and at the first glance I saw he was haggard and worn, with dark circles under his eyes, eyes which many a beauty would have been proud to own. He seemed so slim, so small and delicate, as he came to meet me, that my heart began to misgive me again as to his powers to endure the labor involved in the difficult adventure we had before us. He was much concerned at my having risen, made many inquires about my condition, and put aside my

"It is but a touch of the megrims I have;

but you must not think of doing anything for a week."

"Or a month, or a year," I gibed, as I turned over the cushions of the couch, and, in answer to St. Armande's inquiring look, went on: "The letter I received yesterday —I am certain I left it here."

He came forward to help me, but with

"It must have been blown away," he said. "But I put it under the cushions!"

"True-but you forget you were moved, and the things were shifted. Come to breakfast now, and I will have a thorough search made afterwards."

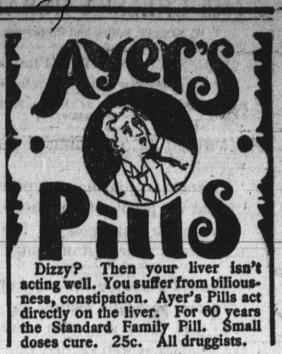

"Not yet; I will but step over to the con vent, and inquire after the Lady Angiola-"What! With a bandaged face?"

"It is a wound," I answered, coldly, and turning, went out of the villa. My lackey ran forward to inquire if a horse should be made ready; but, thinking the walk would do me good, I declined. I was right in this, the fresh air acting as a tonic, and when I reached the gates of the convent all the giddiness had passed. There, to my dismay, I heard that Angiola was unable to leave her room, a thing I might have expected, and, sending a civil message, I retraced my steps, entering the villa by a side gate, and walking towards it through a deserted portion of the garden. I went leisurely, stopping every now and again to admire the flowers and the trees. In one of these rests, whilst I idly gazed about me, my eye was arrested by a number of fragments of paper that lay on the green turf at my feet Yielding to an impulse I could not control, I stopped and picked up one of the pieces, and saw in a moment it was a piece of Angiola's letter to me. I lost no time in collecting the remaining bits of the paper, and carefully placed them in my vest pocket. Then I retraced my steps to the villa.

QUALITY AND NEWS.

Fame and Excellence Are Determining Factors in Successful Development-One of the Important Functions of High-Class Newspapers.

In presenting interesting phases of scientific and economic problems, highclass newspapers frequently give information of as great value in their advertising columns as in those devoted to the publication of the principal events of the day; and when the fame of a product is extended beyond its natural limits into foreign lands, and a large demand created throughout Great Britain and her Colonies and the principal seaports and cities of Europe, Asia and Africa, it becomes a pleasant duty to note the fact and to tell of the points of excellence on which so great a success is based. We refer to the now worldfained laxative remedy, Syrup of Figs, the product of the California Fig Syrup Company. The merits of this wellknown excellent laxative were first made known to the world through the medical journals and newspapers of the United States; and is one of the distinct achievements of the press. It is now well known that Syrup of Figs is an ethical proprietary remedy, approved by the most eminent physicians everywhere, because it is simple and effective, yet pleasant to the taste and acceptable to the system, and not only prompt in its beneficial effects, but also wholly free from any unpleasant aftereffects. It is frequently referred to as the remedy of the healthy, because it is used by people who erjoy good health and who live well and feel well and are well informed on all subjects generally, including laxatives. In order to get its beneficial effects, it is necessary to get the genuine Syrup of Figs, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only.

Gen. Yule's Command at Glencoe in a Critical Position.

Absence of News from the Front I Causing Much Anxiety-Little Belief in the Report That Kruger Contemplates Surrender.

London, Oct. 24.-The Daily Telegraph has received the following from Ladysmith, dated Sunday at 2:10 p. m.: The Boers, reported to be 9,000 strong and under the command of Commandant Gen. Joubert and President Kruger in person, are again attacking Glencoe. Gen. Yule, commanding our troops, has moved his camp back into a better defensive position.

Situation Looks Gloomy.

London, Oct. 24 .- No news yet re ceived tends to dispel the apprehension caused by Lord Wolseley's brief sum mary of the situation. A Pitermaritzburg dispatch says that the censor now permits no messages to be sent from the front. Other dispatches represent the Boers as boasting that Dundee is absolutely cut off, and assert that despite the British victories the situation is still uncertain. It appears certain that the brilliant victory at Elandslaagte was productive of no effect for the relief of Glencoe, and the very reticence and brevity of Lord Wolseley's communication are only too ominous. It seems to be worded to prepare the public for bad news, and it is only too likely that Gen. Yule has been compelled to aban--don the wounded and the prisoners at Dundee because his force is too weak to hold the 41/2 miles separating Dundee from Glencoe.

Probably Gen. Yule believes he can better protect Dundee from an enemy advancing from the northwest by concentrating all his available strength at Glencoe, where there are now 3,500 men and three batter es. In the meantime efforts will be made to reopen the railway and to get reenforcements from Ladysmith. It is expected that Commandant Erasmus has by this time joined Commandant Gen. Joubert and that their combined columns amount to some 10,000 or 11,000 men, while the Free State Boers, now threatening Ladysmith from the east, and a column reported to be coming through Zululand must also be reckoned with. In short, Gen. Sir George Stewart White has been unable to follow up his successes and is obliged to remain at Ladysmith with out being able to restore railway communication, which is probably broken at other points beside Elandslaagte.

Thus the enemy, although their original plan, which is supposed to have been Col. Schiel's, failed, may fairly be credited with having isolated Gen. Yule's brigade and divided the British forces in Natal. Gen. Yule may find himself in a tight place, needing all his experience in Indian and Burmese fighting to extricate himself.

The Situation Summed Up.

The parliamentary secretary of the war office, Mr. George Wyndham, made a statement in the house of commons Monday, saying:

"Lord Wolseley sums up the position in Natal, early this morning as follows: "'In the battle of Elandslaagte, October 21, two guns were captured from the Boers, who lost heavily.

'A large column of the enemy appeared advancing from the north and west on Gen. Yule, who consequently had fallen back from Dundee and was concentrating at Hencoe Junction. In this operation we gather in the wounded and medical attendants left at Dundee.

" 'Gen. White was in position at Lady smith, and is being reenforced from Pieter maritzburg.

"'The enemy appears to be in large nu-merical superiority.'"

Food Supply Runs Short.

Koopmansfontein, Oct. 20 (By dispatch rider via Hooptown) .- Parties of Kaffirs returning home from Jagersfontein to Kimberely are unable to obtain food. Already there is a scarcity of supplies throughout Bechuanaland and Griqualand West, owing to the total stoppage of the transport service. Famine is almost certain.

Reenforcements Needed.

London, Oct. 24.-The Daily Mail says it understands a message was received in London Sunday from Cecil Rhodes, dated at Kimberley, October 19, declaring in substance that the inhabitants of Kimberley desired to draw the attention of the government to the need of speedily sending reenforcements there, as the town was being surrounded by increasing numbers of Transvaal and Free State Boers.

Talking of Surrender.

London, Oct. 24.—A special dispatch from Cape Town, dated Sunday, says that advices received there from Pretoria report President Kruger as now being in favor of an unconditional surrender.

The best opinions do not credit the reports that the Boers are suing for peace or that they are likely to yield at present, though they think the Boers will probably retreat to their line of defense in the mountain passes of. Laing's Nek and Drakenburg, where they have blocked the passes with great bowlders and masses of rock blown up on either side, and where, if they so desire, they would be able to hold out until the advance of Maj. Gen. Sir Redvers Buller through the Orange Free State should compel them to leave the Natal side to meet the invasion from the south.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS

Ousts Woman Officeholder. The supreme court has entered a judgment of ouster against Mrs. Merrie H. Abbott, elected prosecuting attorney of Ogemaw county, thus holding that a woman is ineligible to hold elective office in Michigan unless the statutes or constitution expressly stipulate that she may do so. Justice Moore, in his dissenting opinion, cited cases where women are holding various offices and are county superintendents of schools, and said:

"The state confers upon them the right to practice law, and if the people who make the constitution see fit to elect women to office, the duties of which pertain almost wholly to the practice of law, why should not the courts recognize her?"

Health in Michigan.

Reports to the state board of health from 65 observers in various portions of the state for the week ended October 14 indicate that tonsilitis and dysentery increased and cholera morbus decreased in area of prevalence. Consumption was reported at 205 places, measles at 11, typhoid fever at 130, scarlet fever at 55, diphtheria at 29, whooping cough at 17, cerebro-spinal meningitis at 3 places, and smallpox at Maple Grove, Battle Creek, Chesaning and Marine Health Conference.

The fourth annual conference of the health officials in Michigan will be held in Grand Rapids on Thursday and Friday, October 26 and 27. The subjects to be especially considered are: Bacteriology in its relation to the public health, sewerage and water supply, water purification, typhoid fever, tuberculosis among animals and in man, local and general health administration, and duties and powers of local boards of health.

Fewer Mortgages.

A canvas of the registers of deeds of each county in the state, completed by Labor Commissioner Cox, reveals that up to October 1 this year there were three per cent. less real estate mortgages recorded and 12 per cent. more discharged than for the same months last year. New mortgages had a lower rate of interest and most of them were given to secure purchases, particularly farm mortgages.

SHE WOULD GO TO WAR.

But Her Mother Thought Otherwis and Separated Enid from Her Soldier Husband.

Here is another war romance. This one has a soldier corporal for a hero and a 15-year-old bride for the heroine. An angry mother, a swearing stepfather, an unlucky discovery and a perfect Niagara of tears supply the other elements for a strictly up-to-date story.

It took place at Fort Sheridan, Ill., a few weeks ago, when troop L of the Third cavalry started west to take transport for the Philippines. Just as the special was about to leave the siding a round faced, determined-looking woman appeared on the scene and confronted the commanding officer. She said her name was Mrs. T. H. Wetzell, that her home was in Chicago, and that she wanted her daughter.

"But, madam, we haven't got your daughter," said the officer.

"Indeed, you have," replied the woman, "and, what's more, she's aboard that train.

"Nothing would do," she said, "but my daughter must become an actress. She has been playing at Fort Sheridan park under the name of Enid Delle, and while here she met Corporal McAndrews, of the cavalry, and they have fallen in love and been married. She told me last night that she was going to the Philippines with him, and I am sure she is on the train.

"I cannot bear to think of her going alone with all those men-and to such a distant country. Can't you keep her from going, sir? I'll bless you all my life. She is not yet 15 years old, just a child yet, and doesn't realize what she is doing. She is mad with love for the corporal. Not but what he is a brave young fellow, but they are young and foolish. She must not be allowed to go.'

The officer declared there was no possibility of the girl being aboard, but caused the train to be searched. No girl was found. Mrs. Wetzell was not satisfied, so the station agent searched the train, looking under every seat. There was no Ethel. Then Mrs. Wetzell demanded an investigation of the baggage cars, which were packed with saddles, blankets and camp equipment. Mr. Simmons, the conductor, laughed, but climbed about through the cars to satisfy her. Just as he was about to give up the search he saw under a pile of saddles a bit of muslin fluttering:

More out of curiosity than from any belief that the print had an owner he removed the saddles and boxes and found the girl. She had hidden herself away in this little corner with the hope of evading the officers until she was out of the city, when she hoped to win their permission to accompany her corporal lover across the seas.

She wept at being discovered, but was told she could not accompany the soldiers and would surely have been put off at some strange place had she not been discovered here. So, after an affectionate parting with Corporal Mc-Andrews, she regretfully returned with ber mother to Chicago.

But Ethel, though tearful, is not discouraged. She has been married to her lover in all due form and has settled down to wait till he gets home again .-N. Y. Herald.

A Rainy Day Novelty.

For years women have been taking lessons in holding up their skirts from the ground, but they have not yet succeeded in doing this gracefully. Until recently they grabbed the goods in the back into a bunch, pulled the folds tight and made a scant line at the top of the boots while the fullness dropped in the front. Nothing, all will admit, was more unbecoming. Now the skirt ter teaspoonful of sugar, one-eighth is drawn across the figure so smoothly teaspoonful of soda, and a little salt. that every outline is easily discerned. DAINTY BRICK MANTEL.

Designed for a Raleigh (N. C.) Home and Pleasingly Artistic in Every Respect.

This is a mantel design intended to e built of buff brick, with brown stone trimmings. It is six feet broad and eight feet high, and was lately designed to be used in a home in Raleigh, N. C.

Such designs are justly becoming more popular, especially for use in halls, libraries and similar positions where they are extremely fitting.

The combinations of colors and designs in which the brick and stone may be arranged are innumerable, but the designing should not be intrusted to a novice, but always be done by one who knows now to best combine the materials into a harmonious whole. Inquirers who ask about the styles and cost of built up brick mantels apparently lose sight of the fact that while the design may be one that is regular, that is duplicate as often as desired, they are not like wooden, iron, slate or marble mantels. They cannot be carried in stock, but each one has to be separately constructed on the grounds-in the house, rather-and from working drawings and color schemes furnished by the architect or mantel builder.—American Homes.

BRIDES BUY THE RING.

A Growing New York Practice Which, One Jeweler Thinks, Has Weighty Advantages.

"Isn't that a new wrinkle?" asked the chance observer.

"What?" said the clerk.

"For the bride to buy the wedding ring," replied the observer, turning to look at the young woman who had just gone out with her purchase of a 14karat, gold-filled ring.

The clerk, who turned out to be the proprietor also, laughed. "Not at all in this part of town," he said. "The practice has been in vogue for several years and has continued to grow in popularity until it has become quite the proper caper. Indeed, when a man comes in here now and asks to look at plain gold rings we consider him a little off color, and feel rather mean toward him, as though he were usurping a feminine prerogative. Anyway, why shouldn't the woman buy the ring, looking at the matter from a common sense standpoint? It saves no end of trouble. A ring from a woman's point of view is a matter not only of sentiment, but also of adornment. She wants her jewelry, however cheap it may be, to be of the proper cut and the proper size. Now, what man, I'd like to know, can go in and select the right kind of ring even if he has got the measure? Not one out of twenty. It is a lot more satisfactory for all concerned for the bride to come in and pick out what she wants without troubling the bridegroom, except, of course, for the money. He always settles the bill; at least I suppose he does.

"You see, this is a neighborhood where the people don't stand much on the fine points of etiquette. They in sist upon the ring to tie up the contract with, but two-thirds of these rings are unengraved and sell for from two to four dollars. It's fun to see some of the women when they first state their errand. They beat about the bush and make their wants known in such a coquettish way that I don't wonder, sometimes, that the young man, whoever he may be, has lost his head. Maidenly modesty, I suppose, makes them shy, and they begin by saying they are looking for a plain gold ring for a friend with a finger 'about the size of mine.' When they say that I always smile. I know what it means." -N. Y. Sun.

SHE STOOD HIGH.

Her Name Had Appeared in the Society Column and She Was Arrogant.

A family living in a North side flat lately welcomed a new housemaid. The girl had just come from Michigan and her appearance was prepossessing. Soon after her advent it was discovered that she was inclined to treat the family with a patronizing air.
"Mary, you must do better, or I shall have some one to take your place," the mistress remarked the other morning. "I don't allow anyone to speak to me that way," replied Mary, with a toss of her head.

was the following:

"Miss Mary Hansen has gone to Chicago

Mary waited until her employer had had time to read the "personal," and then she said, with withering scorn: "As I have always been accustomed to going with the very best in my town, and as I don't believe you ever have your name on the society page of the Sunday papers, I guess I can't afford to stay with you."

A CRUSHING DEFEAT.

Boer Forces Again Badly Whipped by Britons.

A Fierce Battle at Elandslaagte-Victory of the Successful Troops Is Dearly Bought-Gen Kock, Boer Commander, Killed.

London, Oct. 23.—The war office publishes the following dispatch to the secretary of state for war, the marquis of Lansdowne, from the general commanding in Natal, Sir George Stewart White, regarding the engagement Saturday at Elandslaagte, between Glencoe and Ladysmith, when the British, under Gen. French, routed the Transvaal forces under Gen. Jan H. M. Kock, second in command in the Transvaal army, who was himself wounded and captured and has since died:

"The whole force was under Gen. French, with Col. Ian Hamilton commanding the infantry. I was present in person from 3:30 p. m. to 6:30 p. m., but did not assume direction of the fight, which was left in the hands of Gen. French. Although desultory fighting took place earlier in the day, while reenforcements, sent out later on ascertaining the enemy's strength, were arriving from Ladysmith, the real action did not begin until 3:30 p. m. At that hour the Boers held a position of very exceptional strength, consisting of a rock hill about a mile and a half southeast of Elandslaagte

"At 3:30 p. m. our guns took a position on a ridge 4,100 yards from the Boers, whose guns at once opened fire. This fire was generally well directed, but somewhat high. Thus, contrary to previous experiences, their shells burst well. The imperial light horse moved towards the left of the enemy's position, and two squadrons of the Fifth lancers toward his right. During the artillery duel mounted Boers pushed out from their left and engaged the imperial light horse. In a few minutes the caemy's guns ceased firing, and our artillery was turned on the mounted Boers, who opposed the imperial light horse. The latter at once fell back. After the artillery preparations our infantry advanced to the attack, supported by our guns in the second position. The Devonshires held the enemy in front while the Manchester regiment and the Gordon highlanders turned his left flank.

"The Boer guns, although often temporarily silenced, invariably opened fire again on the slightest opportunity, and were served with great courage. After severe fighting our infantry carried the position. At 6:30 p. m. this was accomplished, the enemy standing his ground to the last with courage and tenacity. The Fifth lancers and a squadron of the Fifth dragoon guards charged three times through the erable execution.

"We captured the Boer camp, with tents, wagons, horses and also two guns. The Boer losses were very considerable, including a number of wounded and unwounded prisoners. Among the former are Gen. Jan Kock and Piet Joubert, nephew of Commandant General Joubert. One goods train, with supplies for Glencoe camp, and nine English prisoners were recovered.

"Our loss, I regret to say, was heavy. It is roughly computed at 150 killed and wounded. The collection of the wounded over a large area in the dark and the arrangements for sending them in have thus far occupied our time and attention. A full list will go to you later. Our wounded and those of the enemy are now arriving by trains. Besides Boers, we have many Hollanders, Germans, and prisoners of mixed nationalities. The behavior of our troops and of the colonial forces was admirable.

A Brilliant Feat of Arms.

Cape Town, Oct. 23 .- Dispatches received from the front regarding the capture of Elandslaagte show it to have been a brilliant feat of arms. The Boers were strongly entrenched and fought with their wonted bravery. They seized every opportunity of coming into action and ran to serve their guns whenever they could get a chance. The news of Gen. French's victory at Elandslaagte caused great enthusiasm. The newspapers were quickly on the streets with special editions and the people left the churches in order to ge the details of the fighting. The Boer loss must have been very heavy. The best estimates place it a over 400 killed.

Sorrow of the Queen.

London, Oct. 23 .- The secretary of state for war, the marquis of Lans downe, has received the following mes sage from the queen, dated Sunday a Balmoral castle:

"My heart bleeds for these dreadfu losses again to-day. It is a great success but, I fear, very dearly bought. Would you convey my warmest and heartfelt sympathy with the near relatives of the fallen and wounded, and my admiration o the conduct of those they have lost.
"V. R. I."

Dundee Under Fire.

Cape Town, Oct. 23.-A dispatch has just arrived announcing that the Boers are shelling Dundee, east of Glencoe, at long range, but that their fire is ineffective.

More Trouble at Glencoe.

Cape Town, Oct. 23.-It is now definitely known that Glencoe was attacked Saturday by the Boer main northern column. Our forces are intrenched in a good position. The situation there is not yet fully cleared up. from Glencoe camp, the British cavalry, while pursuing the defeated Boers, were engaged by a strong force of the enemy on the north road. Firing is coe and Dundee, in Natal, 31 non-commissioned officers and men were killed and 151 wounded.

The list of officers killed and wounded strikingly shows that, although the British victory was complete, it was bought at a heavy price.

RS. PINKHAM says that irritability indicates disease. Women who are nervous and snappish are to be pitied. Their homes are uncomfortable; their dispositions grow constantly worse. Such women need the counsel and treatment of a woman who understands the peculiar troubles of her sex.

EVERY-DAY TALKS WITH WOMEN

MRS. ANNA E. HALL, of Milldale, Conn., was all run down in health and had completely lost control of her nerves. She wrote to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., for advice. Now she writes: "I wish to thank you for what your Vegetable Compound has done for me. It has helped me more than anything else. I suffered for a long time with nervousness, pains in back and limbs and falling of the womb; also had neuralgia in my head and could not sleep. I told my husband that something must be done, for 2000 I was nearly frantic with 8 pain. Having read of the wonderful cures Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had g performed, Idetermined to try it. I have taken of it and am happy to say I am cured. I recommend it to all my friends and never tire of telling the benefit I have derived from its use. I have you alone to thank for my recovery."

MRS. ELLEN FLANA-GAN, 1810 Mountain St., 20000 Philadelphia, Pa., writes:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM -Three years ago I was a sufferer from chronic dyspepsia, was irritable of and cross, and can say that after taking seven of bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was entirely cured. I take great pleasure in writing this to you and would be pleased to be interviewed by any one who is affiicted with that distressing complaint. I am very grateful to you."

Threatened Her Life.

Mrs. Louie Fuller, who is visiting her brother Frank Pierce, Lot out a criminal warrant in Justice Parker's office yester day morning, charging her husband W. J Fuller with threatening to kill ber yester day morning he having followed her here from Lansing. She also claims that last week he choked her and that he is insane. The parties live in Lansing and have had domestic trouble before, she having applied for a divorce. When the case came into court it was adjourned until next Wednesday, Nov. 1. In the meantime it was agreed between the husband and wife that they should separate. She to be allowed to remove her belongings from the house. To avoid any further demonstrations on Fuller's part an officer is to accompany her to get her things and Fuller is to pay him for his trouble. If these co-ditions are fulfilled the case will probably drop.
