A FINE COMPLIMENT.

Boland Electric Line by the General Electric Co.

Jackson Citizen: The Interurban cars of the Boland electric railroad are generally conceded to be the very best which the shops of this country are able to produce, and their equipment the most approved which is turned out by the General Electric Co. at their immense shops at Schenectady, N.Y. There is to be held at Detroit a convention of the street railway men of the United Jtates, and the General Electric Co. is to make an exhibit of their motors and other equipment for electrical rallways. The General Electric having furnished the equipment for the Boland cars, the company wrote Mr. Boland asking permission to exhibit one of his company's cars at the convention. The request was readily acceded to, and an electrician was sent from the company's shops to fit the car for display. This work has been accomplished, and the car, which is stated to be one of the finest in the country, left for Detroit Friday, permission having been secured to run it to Detroit over the tracks of the D, Y., A. A. & J. Co.

On the return from the exposition the car, which is named "Detroit," will be placed on the Jackson-Battle Creek run. will be the first car to traverse the new line when it is opened to traffic, which will be within a very short time.

The selection of one of the Boland cars s looked upon as a fine compliment by aminer. the officers of the road.

The equipment of the Boland cars is he same which the General Electric Co. is furnishing for all of the elevated railroads of New York city though the interurban cars are geared to 60 miles an hour, while the elevated cars are not built to attain such a high rate of speed.

> THE IMPERIAL HAND BELL RINGERS. The Imperial Hand Bell Ringers presents one of the most effective musical combinations now before the public comprising two complete organizations -a bell quintette, and a mandolin, banjo and harp club. The artists are of international reputation, and their names are a guaranty of a musicianly performance. The carillon of bells (110 in number) is the finest that can be procured, having been made in the oldest bell foundry at London, England, and imported at great expense, especially for this company. It is, so far as known, the only complete set of hand-bells in this country. Opera house, Chelsea, February 16th.

HON. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Hon. Chas. B. Landis is engaged on the People's Popular Course, and will deliver his address at the opera house, March 16th.

The debate on the Roberts resolution n the house of representatives brought another Indiana man prominently to the fore. Littlefield made the most logical speech, DeArmond made the most incisive speech; Taylor's was perhaps the most convincing; but Landis of Indiana, made the best speech of them all. It was full of humor; it was full of pathos; it overflowed with sentiment, with word pictures; with scathing attack on Roberts; with glowing tribute to Helen Gould., It was a speech full of human nature, a speech that appelaed to the hearts more perhaps than to the minds of men. It certainly appealed to the heart of Representative Cox of Tennessee. With tears streaming down his face he crossed over from the democratic side to shake hands with and thank the eloxuent young Hoosier republican.—The Washington Morning Star.

A burglar entered the home of Perry Kimball, corner of Depot street and Fourth avenue Ann Arbor, one night last week. About 1:30 Mr. and Mis. Kimball heard somebody opening a door, Mr. Kimball arose and struck a match and discovered a large man with a full growth of whiskers in the sitting room, "What are you doing hereget out," said Mr. Kimbalt. "I beg your pardon," said the burglar very politely. "Get out of here," again commanded Mr. Kimball and the fellow moved slowly to the door and then ran. Mr. Kimball was unarmed and the cool burglar got away easily.

Mr. Bryan's Wealth.

William Jennings Bryan's beautiful home is located about three miles from in the great conflict that raged from Lincoln, Neb. His prosperous financial condition will interest his friends throughout the country and doubtless excite the envy of his political opponents everywhere.

When Mr. Bryan entered the campaign in 1896, one of his boasts was that he was a poor man; that he was without a home, without shelter, and tifully decorated city, and hospitable had to work upon a weekly salary as people. a newspaper writer to sustain himself and wife.

Petition for Extra Session.

Six thousand Illinois citizens during the last twenty-four hours have signed a petition asking President Roosevelt to call an extra session of congress to enact some measure for the prevention of a coal famine. The petition is being circulated all over the city of Chicago and throughout the state of Illinois, under the direction of United States Senator William B. Mason.

BY FRANK H. SWEET. (Copyright, 1902, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)
A group of Spanish officers were standing in front of the mess quarters at Bahia Honda. They had just come in from Havana and on the morrow were to start across the mountains toward Cristobal on special service. It had been a long, hard march, and they were hugry and tired. In spite of all that was behind and of what might be ahead, their one thought was of the meal whose savory odors were issuing from the hastily improvised mess quarters. The sun was not yet down, but the shadows of the date palms lay thick about their feet. They watched them listlessly, waiting for the mess call, and then ready to seek the low thatched building where they were to sleep. From the shadows of the same date palms a group of ragged, emaciated boys watched them keenly. They, too, were mindful of the odors that came from the mess quarters, for they sniffed eagerly, and from time to time they whispered to one another and pointed toward the building or the officers. Presently a boy of nine or ten, with keen, snapping black eyes, stole to a palm tree that was but a few yards from where though for a signal. And it was not long coming. With a sudden wild whoop the boy with the snapping eyes sprang forward into the very midst of the officers, swinging his arms and dancing about as though he were mad. In an instant almost, and before they had recovered from the surprise of the unexpected onslaught he had snatched a sword from one of the scabbards and bounded away. At the same moment a cry of consternation came from the mess

But the officers did not notice that. They were too amazed, too angry a: the audacity of this ragamuffin, who had stopped a few yards away and was now brandishing the sword defiantly in their very faces. With exclamations of anger they sprang forward to a man, and the ragamuffin, instead of trying to escape, dodged this way and that, under the outstretched arms of one, behind another and almost between the legs of a third, all the time taunting them and daring them on. He was like an eel that squirmed out of their hands even after they caught him; or a flea that was anywhere except where they thought it. Five minutes passed in exasperating dodging and doubling before they succeeded in dragging him back, struggling and grinning to the mess quarters. And it was not until afterward that

"Garcia's right," they said, "the place is stripped as clean as though visited by locusts."

Then they stopped abruptly, as though making a discovery, and glanced at the captive. "You are responsible for this," one of them de-

The boy grinned. "Si, senor," he said composedly, "why not?"

They stared at him and at each other. Was the boy mad? If so, it was a madness that must be punished. "Shooting is too easy for a thing like that," scowled the one who had lost his sword. "It's a case for hang-

"No; hanging's too easy," declared another, gloomily. "You don't know how hungry I am. But there goes the pursuit," as they saw soldiers scattering among the palms. "Perhaps the supper will be recaptured."

The boy sniffed. "Five minutes' start," he grinned significantly. "A thousand men couldn't find the boys now. They know hiding places your soldiers never dreamed of." The officer in command looked at him curiously. "There is something behind this." he said thoughtfully. "You are old enough to understand the consequences of such an act, and too wise to throw away your life for a little meat and a few loaves of bread." The boy's eyes began to flash and for the first time his face lost its grinning derision.

"I have risked my life for a little meat and a few loaves of bread," he declared quickly, "and I do understand just what the consequences are. But what is life when my mother is sick and starving, and when my sisters and grandfather and grandmother are all starving. I would risk it, and lose it, too, a hundred times. The boys have food enough now to last them a month," his voice ringing with exultation. "You may kill me if you want to. But you haven't soldiers enough to get the food back. And it wasn't stolen, either. You have destroyed our crops and taken our cattle and fruits, and they would pay for this a thousand times over." He threw his head back and looked squarely into their eyes. "There is another thing I don't mind telling you," he went on sturdily; "my father's away fighting, and I would be away fighting too, if I were old enough. As it is, we boys look after the family." Here the grinning derision returned to his face. "The horde of 'wild creatures' your cook tells about were just my three brothers and two of my cousins, the oldest only thirteen. They'll look after the famlly now, and when this food is gone, they'll find some way to get more. Now kill me if you want to. I'm not afraid."

A curious expression had been coming into their eyes. Above all things a soldier respects bravery.

"Come, gentlemen," said the officer in command gruffly, "we must settle this at once. Camp will be broken early, and there will be no time then. The case is a flagrant one, and calls for severe punishment. But I will leave the sentence to you, De Guise," the first vote belongs to you. What punishment is adequate to the of-

The officer scowled. "I would condemn him to perpetual banishment from us," he answered harshly.

"And you, Courmont," to the officer who had confessed he was hangry. "De Guise is too mild, too mild," this officer said, scowling also, "I would add that in addition to his sen tence the condemned be made to carry away a sack of flour as large as himself—as large as a man can lift."

"And you," "and you," to the other "I consider the sentence just, and recommend it," said one.
"And I," "and I," said others. "With perhaps a little more added to the burden," finished the last judiciously. "A prisoner of this kind should be crushed." "Very well, gentlemen," said the officer in command, "you will see that the sentence is carried out to the letter, And you," turning severely to the wondering boy, "let this be a lesson. Never do a thing unless you are ready to do it with your whole heart. If you had shown a white spot, I would have had you shot."

GRADY'S FEAST OF POSSUM.

Rival Ruined His Chance for the Colored Vote by a Mean Trick.

During a heated campaign in Georgia some years ago the late Henry F. Grady was opposed by, an editorial associate, Captain Evan Howell. They were warm personal friends, but on the issue at stake were diametrically opposed to each other. Recalling that campaign, Representative Livingston tells a funny story.

The result of the election depended largely upon a certain ward in which there was a very large negro population. Grady bethought himself of a scheme to capture these colored voters, and, securing a vast number of possums, provided a great supper, at which they could eat. It was a master stroke and Howell knew nothing of it until the night the supper occurred. Then he was at his wits' end until an inspiration came to him. He sent for some of his negro supporters, gave them instructions and waited for the result.

An hour later while the colored barbers were having a great feasting time one of Howell's supporters cried "Meow." Another man repeated the cry. A third man was apparently taken sick and the fourth man exclaimed: "Deed boys,"I think we are eating cats!" That broke up the supper and Grady never did quite convince the possum eaters that they had been imposed upon.

Brought the Bishop's Boots.

A humorous story is related in conbody was directed to address the reverand bishop as "my lord," and a man servant about the place was especially told off to attend him. The bishop like every other Englishman, set his boots outside his door when he went to bed at night. His temporary body servant was instructed to take them. blacken them and return them before their owner should be ready to put them on in the morning. The boy did as he was told. The bishop was dressing when he knocked on the door in the morning, with his carefully taught response, "It's the boy. my lord, with your boots," on the tip of his tongue. The sound of the bishop's voice confused him.

"Who's there?" the bishop called

The boy forgot his speech utterly. "Who's there?" the bishop called again.

"It's the Lord, with your boots, my boy," said he.

King Edward's Pull.

Oats for Fowls.

We notice that a contemporary says that wheat is undoubtedly the best grain for poultry. We must differ from that opinion. We believe the grain most adapted to the development of chicks is oats. It is indeed true that birds have to be accustomed to eat oats before they will eat them constantly and in large quantities, but once accustomed to them they eat them with great avidity. Naturally fowls prefer corn to oats. But habit reverses this preference. The writer remembers one case where he had kept oats from his hens for some days. They had been accustomed to that grain for months. When cats were again given it was in the form of a mixture of corn and oats. To his surprise the hens picked out the oats in preference to the corn, eating the latter only after the oats had disappeared. One objection raised against oats is that they sometimes puncture with their sharp points the tender membrane in the crops of young birds and even pass through the skin. The writer fed oats for years and never experienced any such mishap with his poultry. It might be possible in case half-starved birds were fed oats and then watered. But oats should be kept before the fowls all the time, and they should be permitted to pick at them at their leisure. They never then eat too many. In addition to the nutriment in the oats there seems to be a stimulant which the scientists call avoine. This is thought to be a valuable part of the oat as a feed.

New Stock and Disease.

Every farmer should realize the risk he takes when he imports into his flock stock from other flocks. Contagious diseases are almost always brought in this way. There are some flocks that are free from lice and mites as well as of disease. When a farmer has secured this condition of things he should go very slow about increasing the number of his fowls through purchase. It is therefore best to increase the flock through raising the birds. This may take longer than to increase it by purchase, but it will give a bigger profit. It is not uncommon to have a whole flock swept away by nection with the visit of an English some malady introduced through carebishop to a Virginia family. Every less purchase of new birds. The writer had a poultry house that had been free from lice and mites for years. He regarded it quite wonderful that he had completely exterminated the red mites. But in an unguarded moment he purchased the entire flock of a man about to move away. The result was that the red mites were introduced and caused more loss to the original flock than the whole purchased flock was worth Important Points in Poultry Care. Clealiness is essential to success with poultry. Young chicks should not be allowed to eat stale or sour foods. The drinking vessels or fountains should be watched closely, and should be always kept full of pure water. Keep them free from bad odors by scalding with hot water occasionally. As the fowls approach maturity food should be given them in such a manner that they will take exercise. Plenty of straw or leaves should be put in their houses, and a little grain of some kind scattered therein several times a day to keep them scratching. Be careful not to overfeed or they will become too fat and will not lay. Avoid feeding too much corn in the warm months of the year. During the winter months it can be fed in the than any other food. For morning feed alternate soft mash with wheat or oats. Give also an occasional feed of vegetables either actions feed specific feed good, $2 25@3 65. of vegetables either raw or cooked. They will be beneficial and much rel ished by the fowls .-- J. R. Brabazon.

Poultry Gives Quick Returns.

One of the principal advantages in poultry production is that returns come quickly. With the exception of strawberries there is practically ac line of small fruits on which you can begin to realize inside of three years: a milch cow does not approach her full power of production short of three and a half years; apple trees do not begin to hear freely short of seven or eight years; and if you go in for forest reproduction, a realization upon the investment does not come inside the life of half or even a whole generation. Killed the Insulter.

Wm. D. Barrington, of Grand Rapids, was killed as a result of an insult offered a woman. He was on his way home with a party of convivial friends and as they passed the home of Thos. A. Stewart, a colored man, Barring-ton aroused the household by kicking the door. Mrs. Stewart came to see what was the matter and she was addressed by Barrington with an Insulting remark. Her husband was standing near and overheard what was said. Quick as a flash he let fly his right hand and caught the insulter a blow on the jaw. Barrington fell to the walk and never moved. Stewart picked him up and carried him into his home, and after summoning medical ald gave himself up to the authorities. The postmortem showed that Barrington's death was caused by cerebral compression, the cavity of the skull being filled with blood.

Stewart has always borne a good reputation and it is thought there will be no trouble in securing his acquittal, as the case seems to have been one of justifiable homicide. The dead man was a widower, 38 years old, and leaves a daughter 13 years old.

Crazy Assassin Killed. Fireman Kiecha, of the St. Paul road, who was shot and killed in his engine cab while the train was running at full speed near Pembine, one day last week, it was proved was the victim of a crazy man's act. The assassin's name was Arnold. He was a wanderer in the woods, and last night he made his appearance at a lumber camp near the scene of Klecha's murder. At the point of his rifle he demanded supper. The cook ran for his own rifle, dodging bullets as he went and returned the crazy man's fire, killing Arnold instantly.

Brown Case Ends.

On motion of Prosecutor Tuttle an order of nolle prosse was entered by Judge Wiest, of Lansing, in the case of James H. Brown, the former president of the state live stock sanitary commission, who was indicted for making illegal charges against the state for per diem and expenses. One year ago a jury disagreed as to Brown's guilt and since then the respondent cally. The order was made after Judge Wiest had a conference with Brown and his wife.

ADDITIONAL LOCAL.

Every one who has a taste for adventure and there are few who bave not-will be interested in an illustrated article "Climbing the Scotch Alps" which appears in The Cosmopolitan for October. Mountaineers are wont to complain that most of the well-known peaks are so closely patrolled by guides that the risk and the necessity for self-reliance which forms so large a part of the pleasure of a elimb, are done away with. In the rugged Scotch Alpe described by the author, the fascination of Nature un adorned may still be found.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

Scott's Emulsion is the means of life and of the enjoyment of life of thousands of men, women and children.

To the men Scott's Emulsion gives the flesh and strength so necessary for the cure of consumption and the repairing of body losses from any wasting disease.

For women Scott's Emulsion does this and more. It is a most sustaining food and tonic for the special trials that women have to bear.

To children Scott's Emulsion gives food and strength for growth of flesh and bone and blood. For pale girls, for thin and sickly boys Scott's Emulsion is a great help.

Wilkins and Brown used to be good chums at college. Life did its work arating them and it was only the other day that they came together after some seven years. Wilkins was glad to see Brown and Brown as gravely glad to see Wilkins w are the old boys?" asked Wilkins.

Many of them I know nothing of," replied Brown. "Some are gone this

"Sure," said Wilkins. "Seen Bob Andrews lately?"

"Bob did not carry out his brilliant prospects," said Brown. "He fell to the same paths he had walked in-

"I see. Crack old sport, ch?"

"His father," continued Brown, "insisted on having a list of all his son's has handed him and settled them all without a murmur. Then he told Bob hat he would start him in his office at a clerkship with good prospects for vancement if-"

"I see. Did Bob make good?"

"Regular advancement, if he proved his fitness for positions of trust. His father tried him for three months, but he is a stern man and warned his son that no trifling with the firm's interests would be permitted even from his son. Therefore, at the end of three months-" "Bob in the air. Well?"

"At the end of three months the senior member of the firm called Bob In and told him that at the end of the week his connection with the house ould be severed. Of course Bob felt aggrieved."

"Dead sore, of course."

"And his father arranged with an old friend on terms-" "I see. Paid the boy's salary and the other didn't peach."

"It seems this old friend was a faithful one, and so Mr. Andrews arranged to pay all expenses and at the same time have the proposition for the position come from the other firm without his figuring in it at all. Bob went to work the week after he left his father's firm, feeling that-"

"I see. How long did he hold down that job?"

"Naturally he was much elated," said Brown stiffly, "but the same principies or lack of them which were his undoing before came into play now. Only yesterday I met him and learned that he-"

"Out walking again, eh? Well, well! Glad to have had this time with you. Must get on now. Till next time!" And as Brown and Wilkins separated each reflected with more or less regret on the changes time works.

"Used to be a decent old chap," thought Wilkins of Brown. "Moldy old pluz now."

"He was always quick of speech and action," thought Brown of Wilkins, "but time has made quickness flippancy and shallowness."

The office was hot and sticky. The office boy had tooth ache and was wishing it was 5 o'clock. The bookkeeper was skurrying up and down the ledger, muttering some rigamarole to himself, and it was safe to say you could do nearly anything under his eyes and he would not see it. The boss was out playing golf; he always was when things were dull in the office. The old man was in New York.

Miss Lacey got up and looked out on the lake. It seemed cool and pleasant out there, and half a dozen small sails were dipping lazily. The work was all caught up, there wasn't even any old indexing to do; she wasn't in a mood to write letters, so she leaned back, carefully noting the peril of two windowwashers in the building opposite. Now, if they fell, it was only eight stories

If it wasn't for that letter! That was it; if she hadn't received that letter things wouldn't look so ghastly. But then that was what he said and there was no getting around it. "I am much obliged for your sympatny and consideration, but I do not desire either." It was a mean thing to say when she hand tried to be sympathetic with him in his trouble. She wondered if trouble always made people feel that way. She was beginning to feel that way herself.

The mail was put up and it still lacked a quarter of an hour to 5 o'clock. The windows in the building opposite were reflecting the afternoon sun in their clean surfaces and the United Order of Scrubwomen would soon be making the halls and stairways exceedingly dangerous, following in the wake of the women whose work is never done. Anyway, it would do no harm to read that letter once more.

What is this? Let us go back and read it more carefully: "I am much abliged for your sympathy and consideration, but I do not deserve either."

If the room would only stand still a minute until things adjusted themselves into their proper places!

"Miss Lacey," drawled the bookkeeper, "why haven't you gone home? There was no need of your staying. I supposed you had gone."

"Oh, I didn't mind, really; the office is kind of pleasant and I was just sitting here resting," replied she.

In Chicago he was known as an eminent specialist on diseases of the brain and nerves. When his name appeared in print it was followed by an array both leaped to their feet. of dignified-looking abbreviations which gave it a very imposing appearance.

Ten months of steady work, the doctor considered, entitled him to a rest, and his method of resting was to throw off his work entirely. So that when he presented himself as a passenger on a lake steamer for an extended cruise he had dropped his title and was just plain "John Blank." Even his cards weachsafed no further information. It was the cards which misled two young declors from a small-neighboring city who took passage on the same steamer. On the trip the two younger physicians discussed the subject of nerves, when, moting the Chicago man's evident interest in the discussion, they drew him

The young men landed at Mackinac island and the specialist lost sight of them until a few days before his return. He had passed most of his time for up in Georgian bay and returning leisurely stopped off at Mackinac for a day or two. He walked right into trouble as soon as he stepped on to the hotel pineza. A Chicago acquaintance rushed from an elevator and seized the doctor.

"Doctor," he exclaimed, "you're just the man I want. Our baby is sickdring, we're afraid. Brain fever—unconscious; doesn't know me; telegraphed all ever, but couldn't find you. We've had every doctor we could find up here, but mone of them seems to think he's got any chance."

The specialist hesitated in evident embarrassment. "If the child has had beals fever, doctors," he said, "you have cured him of that, but-" he motinued to the nurse to draw up the shades, and as the light streamed into the on turned again to the bed-"I find something in the mouth which may conte to the trouble somewhat. A slight surgical operation will doubtless somewhat." He reached for a lance from one of the medicine cases at hand and lanced the child's gum, where several teeth were struggling through.

He will be all right in an hour or two," explained the doctor to the asmed parents. Then he turned toward his audien

CHAPTER XI.—(Continued.) What do you think it is, captain? Paul asked his companion. "It is not a stone, Crack-lash."

"No, I can see it move." "That is why I know that it is a animated object." "Perhaps it is a horse."

The old man shook his head, say-

"No horse could climb these steeps. "Then it may be a polar bear."

"More likely that than a horse, and yet I think it is neither, as a polar bear is white, and this object has some black spots on it."

They journeyed on until nightfall, and went into camp in a spot somewhat screened by rocks. Next day they resumed their weary march through the most desolate country. The skies became overcast, and the snow began to fall in great white flakes, which rapidly covered the ground.

When night came they halted under the shelter of some rocks and thick, bushy top spruce pine. A blanket was stretched over them, forming a partial shelter.

"We are almost out of food," the captain said as they ate a small portion of the dried moose meat.

"How are we to replenish our stock?"

"I don't know." It was a painful subject to discuss Their chances of ever reaching a civinzed camp were gloomy indeed Paul's fortitude was tried to its utmost when, weak and faint, he was continually spurred on by the remembrance that Laura was in the wilds of Alaska.

About the middle of the afternoon the snow ceased falling, and the two men trudged on, sinking into the white covering almost to their knees. Suddenly the hermit stopped and

"Do you see that?"

He was pointing to a trail made in the snow by some animal, and Paul answered.

"Yes: what made it-a bear?" "No; it is either a dog or wolf."

The thought of a supper on either s repulsive, and the two trudged on in silence. A mile farther they saw a white dog with black spots on the side of his head drinking at one of the lakes. Paul reached for his rifle, but the captain said:

"No, don't shoot him; he may prove our friend."

Paul began to call and whistle to the dog, using terms like the Esquimaux. The animal gave them a look of surprise, and then bounded toward them, yelping in his joy at meeting a human companion.

"He has a collar about his neck," said Paul.

"I say, captain, if we release him he will go back to his master, will he not?"

"Certainly." "Then we may make a courier of him. Let us write a message, tie it to his collar and send him away." "An excellent idea."

Paul had a small strip of seal skin, and under the embankment he dug out a bit of red chalk, or ochre, usully called keel, and, dressing one end to a pencil point, wrote: "We are in the forest, out of food and starving. Follow on the trail at once and find us. "PAUL MILLER AND COMPANION."

When this had been fastened about the dog's neck, he was released and sent bounding away through the for-when the dog courier had been dispatched with his message, the two men trudged on a mile or two farther and halted. Evening was approaching, and they were on the banks of a lake in a marshy ground covered with a thicket of bushes. Here they built a small fire and made a supper on a part of their slender stock of

Suddenly they were startled by a crashing in the bushes, accompanied by a snort half of terror and half of denance. Paul seized his rifle and

"A moose." The captain nodded. "It is our only chance for life."

Again the captain nodded. Paul gave him an inquiring glance, and the captain made a sweeping motion with his left hand at the same time disappearing on the right. Slowly and carefully through the melting snow and tangled thickets Paul groped his way, holding his rifle in one hand and parting the bushes with the other. Hour after hour he trudged on, pausing occasionally to listen. At last he was about to give up and return to the camp, when the crashing of the bushes not far off again aroused his hopes.

Suddenly a dark object loomed up through the night. He only caught a glimpse of it, and before he could raise his ride to his shoulder it was Wet to the waist, tired out and despairing, he sank down upon a stone to rest. A dense fog had settled over There was a sigh of returning consciousness and presently the child opened the low ground, and Paul felt damp at the lake. He roused himself in moment, raised his gun, brought it to his shoulder, and without hardly taking aim, fired.

There was a wild, spasmodic leap, a splashing and plunging. He fired again and again at the struggling beast. With a snort of agony it made a few plunges blindly into the thicket and fell. but Paul roused himself in a moment and rushed to its side. Despair quickly gave way to joy, for here was food. The moose was a giant in size, and would furnish them with food for days. He cut its throat with his knife o' gold, and both killed." and then for the first time thought of his companion. He called aloud, and fired a shot in the air, but only the echoes answered him.

"He will get on my trail and follow me," thought Paul, and began to skin the dead moose without feeling in the least uneasy. Having at last completed his task, he built a fire, and, cutting off some of the choicest steaks began to broll them over it. Paul had been on short rations a long time, and never steak tasted better.

Paul wrapped himself in his blanket and lay down by the fire to warm himself and dry his clothing. The night passed in troubled dreams. When he awoke it was broad daylight.

When it was noon and Paul's companion did not come he began to feel uneasy. Could it be they were lost? To become separated he thought would be fatal to both. He roasted and packed away all the moose meat he could carry, and after another, restless night, started out to return to the spot where he had last seen his companion.

The lowering skies portended another storm, and before he had gone five miles the snow was falling in blinding fury, completely obliterating the trail. For hours and hours Paul staggered on until he came upon a great, high wall of stone, which barred his farther progress and partially sheltered him from the driving storm.

He spread his blanket above him, and, finding some dry pine sticks, kindled a little fire, over which he stretched his half-frozen fingers. His suffering throughout that night was intense, and it is a wonder that he did not perish.

But morning came, and, cold and hungry and in despair, he crept away from the great cliff under shelter of which he had passed such a miserable night.

He reached a deep ravine in which was a great deal of dry pine wood, and he proceeded to make a fire. The fire blazed and roared and gave out a generous heat. He was soon v and, wrapping his blanket about him, slept throughout the day. Night came and he awoke, and, building another fire, slept throughout the night. Next day the sky was clear, and he started on his wandering, going in the direction of the Yukon. He slept that night in the shelter of a rock, and the next morning started again on his journey.

About the middle of the forencon he saw a party of men coming foward him, and shouted and danced for joy. He ran to meet them yelling like a madman.

At last he came up with them. The leader was a tall man about his own age. He gazed on the being whom hardship, exposure and toil had so completely metamorphosed that he was unrecognizable, and asked:

"Who are you, and what are you?" Paul started back with an exclamation of horror, and well he might. He was face to face with his most bitter enemy, Theodore Lackland. 11462

It is necessary at this point in our story that we take leave of Paul for the time being and return to the brave girl whom we left hastening to the dangers and wilds of the polar world for the man she leved.

Laura kept up bravely so long as she could discern the form of Mrs. Miller on the dock, but when it faded from view she fell upon a steamer chair and burst into tears. A hand hardened by toll and softened by love was laid upon her shoulder and a low, gentle voice whispered in her ear:

"Don't cry, pretty one. It's a hard lot ye've chosen, but there's a rich promise in in future for ye." Louding up she saw the kind face of the woman called Kate Willis bend. ing over her.

"I know, child, it's tough on ye t go away from friends and relations, perhaps, but ye'll find friends where yer goin' that'll be true to ye."

"I don't doubt you, my good woman. I den't doubt veu," Laura declared. "Pardon this weakness and let me assure you that it will not last long. The knowledge that I shall perhaps never see the face of that dear friend has quite overwhelmed me for the time being."

"Oh, it's nothin', my dear, after ye git used to it; but gittin' used t' it's the trouble. I tell ye, Laura, I'll look after ye when we git to Alaska. Ye shan't work. I'll do it for ye. Them pretty little hands sha'n't do anything to spoil 'em."

"I am not going to the Klondyke to work," answered Laura. "Not goin' there t' work?"

"That is, I am not going to dig gold from the mines." "Well, what are ye goin' for?" It was a long, sad story, but Laura was a confiding creature and told her. When she had finished tears were trickling agwn the furrowed cheeks of her companion.

"Ah, child, yer story is so like my own I can but believe yer livin' over | mean the head, but the and chilly. He was stunned and con-fused, and only half conscious when like you, and some said pretty, I had there came on his ears the sound of splashing feet.

Next he was conscious of a large, dark object coming through the woods. A large animal was drinking lack came back from the next cruise.

He was tired o' the sea, and I tired o' havin' him go away so so we decided that it was to be th last voyage. He sailed t' the north in the Arctic seas somewhere an' never came back." She sobbed a moment in silence and resumed:

"A long time I couldn't give him up I didn't believe that he was dead, but at last I had to give in that he was, Two years after a sallor came into port who had been in Jack's crew and he told how Jack and his captain had been led out into the forest by savages on promises o' findin' a great amount as I have. From that time on they became the best of friends. They were together most of the time and exchanged hopes and fears, and both kneeled at night to ask God for guldance in their course in the future.

Their long voyage was at last ended. The great engine was slowly puffing as the vessel was driven slowly into the bay.

The vessel ran to within threefourths of a mile of the shore and dropped anchor.

They had been discovered by the people on shore, who were waving handkerchiefs and hats, firing guns and pistols in the air. The boats were lowered and men climbed into them.

"Don't be in a hurry to go, child," whispered Kate, who exercised a sort of motherly control over the girl "There's another ship in."

"Where did it come from?" Laurs

"San Francisco, I'm thinkin'. Fact, know it's from San Francisco." Poor Laura little dreamed who had come on that vessel, starting after she did, but beating her to the land of gold. Even had she known whom the vessel brought she would not have been able to guess his object in coming to this country.

They went out on deck again to find it cleared of passengers. Another boat was lowered, and they were asked altogether, the evil in our nature, and if they wished to go ashore.

"Certainly," said Laura. They descended to the rocking boat, and were pulled ashore by eight sturdy oarsmen. A porter came from the boat with her pretty, white bag, which seemed in harmony with the spotless purity which surrounded them.

She thanked him and gave him a silver dollar for his trouble. Then ne turned to go with Kate to the hotel, when she suddenly stopped, started back, and, with a cry of alarm, fell into the arms of Kate Willis. Before her stood Theodore Lackland, a smile on his contemptible features.

Kate Willis was dumbfounded at the conduct of her charge. She knew the girl had unexpectedly met some one. and the meeting was highly disagreeable, but could not, of course, understand the true cause. Kate knew the man before her was the cause of the trouble, and at once began to berate him.

"You unprincipled scoundrel," she cried. "What do you mean by comin' here to frighten this poor child to death?"

"You ugly, hatchet-faced, spiderlegged kangaroo! You flannel-mouthed red-headed dude with brute's milk eyes! You three-card monte, faro bank shark, with a tongue as black as your heart! You-"

"That will do, Kate," interrupted Laura, regaining her speech. "This man's sudden appearance startled Look Out for Your Pate. So "pate" is slang for head, eh? Wherefore? Surely the word is used in a trivial or derogatory sense, as noodle, noggin, cranium, brain-pan, etc., but its origin is eminently respectable. Shakespeare says "the learned pate ducks' to the golden

VALUE OF LOOKING PLEASANT

If You are Ill-Tempered, Try Not b Show It.

"As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." And, conversely, as a man appears to be, so will he think in his heart. In other words, if one is ha py and cheerful and kind, he smile, he will speak, cheeringly, h will do acts of kindness. On the other hand, and this is just as important to smile and to speak quietly and in a kindly tone, even if one feels unhappy or angry or discouraged at the me ment, so reacts on the man's inner being that he begins to feel what he has simulated. This is a good thought and it points to a plain duty. We should never allow ourselves to espress outwardly by word or by lost any unkind or unhappy thought or feeling. To do so is only to tend and foster that feeling, to make it grow and get final hold on the character, But by affecting the helpful virtues we will dwarf, and finally pluck out we become in character the good things we have caused to appear in our countenances and in our voices. Toy Windmill. To make an amusing toy in the shape of a windmill take two large linen thread spools and cut one of them into halves. Take two sticks of the same length, smooth them with penknife and whittle the ends to fit upright into the holes of the halves of spool. Slit the other ends of the uprights to support a third stick horicontally. On this piece of wood slip the other spool, which must fit loosely, as it is to turn round and round through the action of the wind. Two holes should be pierced through the spool and fifted with two crossed sticks. Into the ends of the latter fit stout pieces of pasteboard, on each of which a picture of an animal or bird is pasted. Then set the windmill on a chair and lower the window to admit a draft that will strike only the two lower cards. The mill will whirl rapidly and the birds or animals look as if they were flying.—Topeka

A Home-Made Toy.

Here are simple directions for making a kaleidescope that will give all the beautiful effects shown by one bought at a store. Any boy or girl of even ordinary ingenuity can make it, and it will be likely to give all the more enjoyment from the fact that it is made at home.

Get a glazier to cut you three strips of glass ten inches long by two inches wide. Tie them together triangularly with stout thread. Then cut a piece of lungs to send it the length of the of partly transparent paper so that it string in one blow. will fit over one end of this prism, leaving narrow edges to lap over. Paste this on with mucilage or flour paste, and then cut a piece just like it for the other end, except that it must be of paper that is entirely opaque. In the center of this opaque end cut round hole a trifle larger than a filver dime. This hole is for the eye. Now cover the sides of the apparatus with paper like that used for the eye plece and the kaleidoscope is finished. Put a few pieces of colored glass or some beads in, through the hole made for the eye, and turn the thin paper end to the light. Then, with your eye to opening, keep the prism slowly turning, and you will see all the pretty figures that a bought kaleidoscope Hanging Pin-Balls.

These little balls for pins are very easily made, and are always useful. Cut from pasteboard twelve round pieces. You can easily make them by using a small tencup or round butter plate, about two inches in diameter. Cover each piece with silesia or cambric and then with silk sew two pieces Place pins around the balls closely and regularly.

For these you will need two yards of ribbon one-half inch in width, one paper small pins, one-eighth yard silk. Possibly you can find suitable silk at

B in such a way that the head of A touches the table, while the other end points up. On the end pointing up the end of a third match is laid, without lifting the head of A from the table. The head of A can only be lifted by pressing on match C. Place a fourth match in a slanting direction on C, on the fourth one a fifth, as shown in the illustration. By pressing the match laid down last with the finger, the pressure will go from match to match and lift the head of A from the table. If you place a small glass on the head of A on one end of the table and let the telegraph go clear across the table you can move the glass or sometimes knock it over by pressing the last match.

Music From a Glass Tube.

It is well known that the song of small bird can be imitated to perfection with a glass tube by rubbing the outside of the tube with a small piece of soft cork. By using a glass tube of %-inch diameter and 24 inches length and widening one end of it over an alcohol frame to form the mouthpiece, a musical instrument can be created the sound of which reminds one of the powerful tone of a trombone. For that purpose we roll a sheet of drawing paper around the tube and close one end of it. This double tube is amply sufficient to ye!" make a good trombone, the sound of which is very deep. By shoving the paper tube over the glass tube the tone gets higher, and vice-versa. It is not very hard to play on it. Every amateur can become an artist after a little practice.

An Ingrowing House.

There is a wren in Central America whose nest is a marvel of constructive ingenuity. It selects a small tree with horizontal branches growing close together. Across two of the branches it lays sticks and fastens them together with fibre until it has completed a platform about six feet in length by two feet in width.

On the end of the platform nearest the tree trunk it builds a great domeshaped nest at least twelve inches in height, the sides being formed of interwoven thorns. Then it constructs a crooked, tunnel-like passageway from the nest to the outer end of the platform, and in this tunnel, at intervals, it builds little thorn fences, leaving just enough room for its body to pass through.

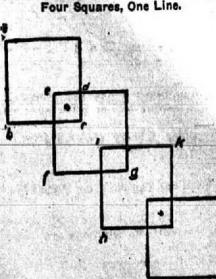

Blowing Cornucopias.

Make two cornucopias of fairly stiff paper, leaving the small ends large enough to pass pieces of twine through. Take two pieces of string, and slip each piece through one cornucopia, stretching them two feet apart as tight as you can across the room, fastening the ends to either wall.

The strings should be high enough from the ground to enable you to blow into the cornucopia. The object of the game is for two people to stand at the end of the strings and blcw into the large openings of the cornucopias and see which one can get it across the room first.

Stroke Shattered My Nerves.

Gave Up Preaching For Two Years.

Dr. Miles' Nervine Put Me On Active List.

Are you well? Do you sleep well? Do you get up rested, fresh and vigorous? Is your mind clear and active? If not read the following. See what another has suffered and how he recovered.

"Some years ago I was afflicted with sun stroke which left me with a shattered nervous system and exceedingly poor health. I suffered terribly with pain in my head, the top of my head would feel hot. I could not study, and after striving for two years to wear the trouble off, I was compelled to give up my pastoral labor and retire to my farm where I spent nearly two years trying to recuperate. It was all of no avail. Physicians' treatment and patent medicines failed to relieve me. I was exceedingly nervous and irritable and sometimes would shake terribly. I could not bear any noise. At the least excitement the blood would rush to my face and head. Two years ago I was induced to try Dr, Miles' Restorative Nervine. After using one bottle I could see improvement in my condition so I continued taking it for nearly a year. I am happy to say I no longer have those pains in my head or nervous spells. My appetite is good and I am able to preach three times on Sunday without fatigue. I consider Dr. Miles' Nervine the most wonderful medicine ever discovered."—Rev. D. Alex. Holman, Pastor U. B.
