A SEAMAN'S BILL OF FARE

An Account of Some of the Things Provided to Eat on Board an Ocean Going Merchant Ship.

On Monday the sailors got their "whack." To some this may appear somewhat unintelligible; but, while the slang word whack is undoubtedly of sailor origin, yet any boy born a thousand miles inland and never having seen the ocean will remember that he uses the word occasionally when asking for a division of something to eat and he says, "Whack up." Whack is good. It has got itself into the dictionaries. So it is explained that when a sailor on Monday gets his whack he in other words gets his part of the ship's provisions for a week. In this whack there is a pound of sugar and a pound of butter and some marmalade. This is to last through the week and serve as trimmings for the scanty bill of fare. If any boy with a healthy appetite has a desire to go to sea let him carefully peruse the following sailor's bill of fare; and after reading it the boy with the healthy appetite will undoubtedly conclude to put his feet, three times a day, under mother's table.

On Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays there is coffee and hardtack for breakfast, dinner consists of pea soup and pork and for supper a can of strong tea that has been brewed all the afternoon and whatever may have been left over from dinner. If there was any meat at noon it is placed in a strong canvas bag with some crumbs from hardtack and the bag is pounded until the mass inside becomes a sort of hash. On Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays the breakfasts are much the same as on other days; but at dinner time there is a pound of flour made into a loaf, three fourths of a pound of salt beef and if not too far out from land some vegetables or vegetable soup. At times, in place of the flour, half a pound of rice is provided. On Sunday there is a slight improvement over other days. For breakfast oatmeal is provided and at dinner there is a pound of bread extra, and potatoes, if any are to be had, otherwise dried potatoes. At supper time there is a little hash. The hardtack mentioned is kept stored in large tanks, as large as a fair sized room, perhaps, and into this place the cook or the cook's assistant drops three times a day with his shoes on and passes up a supply for the sailors. As the supply in the tank melts away the one going after the hardtack has further each time to drop and this constant tread of heavy shoes has its effect on even hardtack and toward the end of the voyage only a flour like mass remains.

As it happened on Tom Hughes first long voyage all the ship's provisions were exhausted three weeks before the run from Iquique to Hamburg was completed and so the crumbs of the hardtack had to be utilized. The cook made it into what seamen call "dandyhunk." The flour-like remains of the hardtack, together with the weevils which had begun to infest it, were stirred up with molasses and some grease and baked into a loaf. "Dandyhunk" may not be angel food, but it sustains life. The whole layout from start to finish is certainly not an appetizing one. No wonder scurvy and such diseases are prevalent among sailors subsisting on such a diet. To prevent scurvy a portion of lime juice, or sometimes vinegar is provided, which has the effect of a preventative. Thus is explained the little rhyme commonly said when anyone finds fault with the ship's provisions. Here it is:

"There is no use your growling,
You know you will get your whack
Lime juice and vinegar according to the act.

This act referred to has reference to act of Parliament which requires all ships to carry lime juice or vinegar.

Another interesting feature of a seafaring life is the division of the ship's day into watches. Many landsmen know about this in a general way but nothing in particular. The ship's day of 24 hours is divided into seven parts called the watches. The day begins at noon and the first watch is from noon until four o'clock, then comes the first "dog" watch of two hours, from four until six, and after that the second "dog" watch from six until eight. Especially in the second "dog" watch is the time for amusement, the spinning of sailor yarns, play with the ship's pets, of which there is usually plenty, and all the other things to do of which the sailors know. The effect of these short watches is that a part of the crew which have the night watches will be changed to day watches without standing two watches in succession.

The watches and time on ship board are denoted by the bells. At twelve o'clock eight bells is rung. Then at half past, one bell and an added bell is rung for every half hour until seven bells are rung, and then a quarter of an hour before the end of the watch one bell is struck which is the signal to call to the other watch.

Those who are to next take charge of the ship go aft in a body. Someone reports, "All aft, sir," and the officer replies, "Relieve the wheel and lookout, keep a sharp lookout forward," to which comes the response, "Aye, aye, sir!" And so are some of the features of life on ship board. Such matters as have been set down here are a mere fragment of the whole that Tom Hughes can tell of a seafaring life. He began at the foot of the ladder as a mere lad and worked up until he became mate. This is a fine record but it required many hardships to win the record. At another time it is likely that The Standard will be able to present to its readers some of Mr. Hughes' experiences in the Mediterranean.

AN INSTITUTION OF STATE PRIDE.

The Detroit Free Press in its Sunday edition calls attention to some of the improvements it has been making of late in its equipment, the which is an index of its popularity and widening circulation. There certainly ought to be none to begrudge the Free Press this prosperity. It is a paper that may be considered almost in the light of a state institution. Any Michigander traveling without the borders of his state rejoice, to find this paper not only of state importance, but likewise to find it one of the few papers respected and considered of national importance.

Another interesting characteristic of the Free Press has been its attitude within the last decade in which time has come the full fruition of the transformation of the staid old newspapers, which were read by only a few leading lights in each town, to the paper of today which has its thousands of readers where there were once hundreds. In this transformation many papers lost character, as it were, and others sprang up that never had any moral basis. But the Free Press, be it said to its credit, met the new demand and created a sheet that met the approbation of thousands; but in doing so it did not find it necessary to sacrifice its reputation for authoritativeness, well considered editorial utterances and decent expression of such news as, otherwise handled, has made many a daily paper anything but a desirable adjunct to a home or library reading table. The Free Press deserves to prosper.

LECTURE COURSE NEWS.

Next Monday night will open the Peoples Popular Course at the opera house for the coming winter. This course was selected by a sharp contest between three of the largest entertainment bureau in the county and will be one of the best ever given in Chelsea. The committee takes special pride in being able to secure United States Senator Dolliver. He has been known for years as one of the brightest men in congress, enjoying confidential relations with the President of the U. S. His lecture alone will be worth the price of the entire course. It is the claim of the Central Bureau that the Mendelssohn Male Quartette, who will sing this year, are superior to the Wesleyans, who gave such a fine concert last season. It will cost you 50 cents to hear them and 10c if you have a season ticket.

The Hawthorne Musical Club of Boston, Mass. will be very much like the Imperial Bell Ringers who gave such a fine concert last winter only that the Hawthornes will play many more instruments. Everybody will want to see Ritchie the Magician perform his wonderful feats, of course.

Read the press notices in regard to the lecture of DeWitt Miller. He is one of the best speakers in the country. The Course will open next Monday night with the Cecilia Concert Company. The admission will be 50c, or you can get the entire winters course for $1.00.

There has been a large sale of reserved seats, but there are still some good ones left. Secure one at once.

FINDS ALL WOMEN DEFORMED.

Pointer Given to Members of Western Dressmakers' Association by Its President.

"Not once in five years have I found a woman among my customers who was not one-sided in some way. Perhaps it is one hip that is higher, one arm that is longer, one shoulder that is more developed, one side that is longer--there is always something that is not perfect."

So spoke Mrs. Linda R. Wade, president of the Western Dressmakers' association, at the opening session of the annual convention of that organization in St. Louis.

Mrs. Estella McRae, of Caruthersville, followed Mrs. Wade in an address, during which she advised the women to do missionary work in order to lift the art of dressmaking to the high plane it should occupy.

THANKSGIVING NOV. 26th.

PRESIDENT'S PROCLAMATION

Fixes the Fourth Thursday in November as The Day--Thanksgiving Reasons Told in A Characteristic Document.

The president Saturday issued his annual Thanksgiving proclamation as follows:

"By the President of the United States of America. The season is at hand when according to the custom of our people it falls upon the president to appoint a day of praise and thanksgiving to God. During the last year the Lord has dealt bountifully with us, giving us peace at home and abroad, and a chance for our citizens to work for their welfare unhindered by war, famine or plague. It behooves us not only to rejoice greatly because of what has been given us, but to accept it with a solemn sense of responsibility, realizing that under heaven it rests with us to show that we are worthy to use aright what has been entrusted to our care. In no other place and at no other time has the experiment of government of the people, by the people and for the people been tried on so vast a scale as here in our own country in the opening years of the twentieth century. Failure would be not only a dreadful thing for us, but a dreadful thing for all mankind, because it would mean loss of hope for all who believe in the power and righteousness of liberty. Therefore, in thanking God for mercies extended to us in the past, we beseech Him that He may not withhold them in the future, and that our hearts may be roused to war steadfastly for good and against all forces of evil, public and private. We pray for strength and light, so that in the coming years we may with cleanliness, fearlessness and wisdom do our allotted work on this earth in such a manner as to show that we are not altogether unworthy of the blessing we have received.

"Now, therefore, I, Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States, do hereby designate as a day of general thanksgiving, Thursday, the twenty-sixth of November, and do recommend that throughout the land the people cease from their occupations, and in their homes and places of worship render thanks unto the Almighty God for His manifold mercies."

OLLERTON C. SWEETLAND.

Ollerton C. Sweetland, one of the pioneers of Lodi township, died Saturday afternoon at the home of his daughter Mrs. Charles Wagner in Ann Arbor. He was born in Vermont, 61 years ago, and came to Washtenaw county in 1833. He made his home for a number of years with his son Frank near Chelsea and is well remembered here.

Mr. Sweetland was one of the oldest pioneers of Lodi township, having moved there in 1837 and located on section 4 on a farm which is still owned by the family. He was born in St. Lawrence county, N. Y., December 8, 1812, his parents being Eleazer and Deborah Sweetland, who came from old Vermont stock. In 1816 the family removed to Livingston county, N. Y., where Mr. Sweetland was raised and educated. In 1837 he left home and came west, locating in Lodi. December 11, 1842, he was married to Sarah A. Wasson, who was a native of Livingston county, N. Y. and to them three children were born--Mrs. Helen Allen, of Tuscola county, Edgar Sweetland, of Shiawassee county, and Miles, of Bridgewater. This union was severed by the death of Mrs. Sweetland, November 17, 1850, and in 1851 he was married to Mrs. Delilah M. (Holden) Short, who died March 30, 1878. By the second marriage four children were born to him--Frank H. of Chelsea, Lester of Ann Arbor, Lewis of Lodi, and Mrs. Carrie Wagner of Ann Arbor.

Mr. Sweetland was for many years a prominent citizen in Lodi township and held a number of important offices, both elective and appointive. He was a justice in his township for over twenty-five years, but it is said that his location was such that the other justices near him did all the business and he never had a case.

The funeral was held at 1:30 Monday afternoon and the remains taken to Lodi for burial.

Early November will see completed and ready for occupation the finest, best equipped, and best located set of offices in Ann Arbor, on the second floor of the Ann Arbor Savings Bank block. The work of completely remodeling and renovating this old building erected in the early sixties, has been pushed during the summer, and now, after an expenditure of $25,000, the finishing touches are being placed upon it. Practically all of the 27 offices have been rented, but there are still a few left, that have not been taken. --Washtenaw Union Record.

SOCIALLY IMPORTANT

Mrs. Ernest Dancer Gives a Halloween Reception to a Large Number of Ladies—Spirit of Halloween in Decorations.

Mrs. Ernest Dancer Saturday afternoon and evening entertained a large company of ladies in a manner that made the occasion the notable social event of the fall.

The spirit of Halloween was every where made noticeable in the decorations and in the little pleasures provided for the entertainment of the guests.

Grimacing and ghostly jacklanterns afforded pale illumination and red apples were suspended at various points on which to bite if possible without the help of hands, and on the dinner table lighted candles provided a measure, for the girls and splinters, of the number of intervening years before they would be claimed. It is reported that a number of candles went out at the first blow and some are figuratively blowing yet because theirs would not go out.

The table decorations were noticeably good and of a well considered fitness for the occasion.

THE GLENNS SEE THE GUSHERS

Chelsea People Participated With a Large Party Which Went in a Special Car to the Kentucky Oil Region.

Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Glenn returned to Chelsea Wednesday from a trip they have just been taking with a party down to Kentucky Colonels Oil Co.'s wells.

These oil wells are wells in which Mr. Glenn and his son are interested as are other Chelsea parties as well. There are two spouting wells at present throwing out from 1000 to 1200 barrels a week and this product is being turned into the Standard Oil Co.'s pipe lines at $1.27 a barrel.

Other than seeing the wells, which are situated at Steubenville, Wayne county, the party of 22 put in a good time seeing the sights around Lexington in the Blue Grass region. The Lexington Leader in its Tuesday's issue says the party visited Ashland, the old Clay homestead, and went to the stables of many Kentucky's celebrated thoroughbred horses, and visited the points of interest in Lexington and dined in the evening at the Phoenix.

One of the delightful features of the trip was that the party had a Pullman car placed at their disposal which was sidetracked and waited their pleasure at Lexington.

GERAHTY'S EXPLANATION.

James Gerahty is well remembered in Chelsea and the other day several of his friends fell to discussing just how he spelled his name. They didn't settle it at that time but a few days later some one of them saw him in Ypsilanti and asked him about it. "And, continued Mr. Gerahty, 'I want you to go back to Chelsea not only with the correct spelling of any name but also with this explanation as to my honesty. I understand some of your folks up there have been questioning it because of a little incident I am going to explain.

"At one time there were four of us out having a good time and before we were through with it our generosity was pretty well stimulated. So when one of the four proposed that when the first of their number present should die that the other three should put $100 in the deceased's coffin. A short time ago the occasion came to fulfil. One of the old boys put in a $100 in gold and another put in a crisp $100 bill and so I to make good wrote my check for $300 dropped it in and took the money. Now my check is good; so you just tell the fellows up at your town not to take any stock in the story as to my dishonesty.

Today, in Detroit, Bishop Foley is being tendered a public reception at the Hotel Cadillac, the occasion being his 70th birthday anniversary. The anniversary of his elevation to the episcopate was yesterday.

NOW THEY ARE EVEN

Will Corwin's Dan Thornwood Three Times Led McNamara's J. G. Dewa the Home Stretch at Ann Arbor Last Week.

One day last summer, when there wasn't much doing in the base ball line, The Standard had a little story of a horse race over on Middle street. At that time Tommy McNamara, driving his horse J. G., cleaned up on Will Corwin driving Happy Man.

It was a bitter pill for Corwin at the time to have his defeat told of in print and so all through the summer he has been watching for a chance to get even. It came at Ann Arbor a week ago today at which time there was a matinee match race between George H. and Dick S. There were two other races—the three minute pace or trot and also a twenty-five pace or trot. Corwin entered his fast horse Dan Thornwood in the three minute class.

And about this time his rival of last summer heard what was doing and decided that the McNamara racing colors should also be seen coming down the stretch. Well they came; but for three straight heats they came behind and so the Major has to take his bitter racing medicine along with the sweet of last summer.

As Corwin's racing colors, consisting of a hickory shirt, was mentioned in the other account it must also be mentioned at this time that last Thursday he had on a full driver's outfit, and if he looked as gay as one can imagine he did it is no wonder he got a piece of the race.

A RUNAWAY ACCIDENT.

A serious accident occurred last Sunday in which three ladies were thrown from a carriage by their runaway horse and one of the number suffered the fracture of her arm and the others were badly shaken up and frightened as well. The members of the party were Mrs. Martin Vogel, of Ann Arbor, and it was she whose arm was broken, Mrs. Fred Vogel, of Seio, and Mrs. Martin Wackenhut of this place. The horse became frightened at an automobile and began to run and in going round a corner the carriage was overturned with the serious result mentioned above.

Michigan's share of the Minneapolis gate receipts was about $15,000. That is an application that ought to help considerably in taking out the soreness.

Miss Ellen M. Stone, the missionary whose capture by brigands in Macedonia brought her into so much prominence, spoke at the Congregational church in Jackson, Sunday evening.

A tribute to the skill of Dr. W. S. Hamilton has just been reported to The Standard office from the farm of Charles Whitaker. Sometime ago one of their horses ran a nail in its foot from which the disease known as tetanus or lockjaw developed. This is usually fatal but in this instance the horse has been saved and is today as well as ever.

Such a preponderance of our population is now to be found living in cities that the rural dweller watches the municipal experiments in government with interest. The recent election in New York city which Tuesday decided in favor of the return of the Tammany organization to power was a contest that has been of national prominence and the outcome when mentioned is usually disappointing.

Dr. G. E. Hathaway, in far off California, finds that life even in that sunny clime is not quite complete without The Standard. In writing for it he says he has seen only three rainy days since he arrived in June. The climate has completely alleviated Mrs. Hathaway's asthma and so many former Michigan people have been found in Redlands from localities nearby Chelsea that life with them is of the pleasantest.

The Colonial Fair, given at the town hall, Friday, by the ladies of the Methodist church, was an affair nicely planned and well executed. The original thirteen colonial states were represented by appropriately decorated booths and those having charge of them carried out the idea by appropriate dress. Other characteristic features were used as well. Considerable pains were taken in making the booths attractive and the hall presented a gala appearance that well repaid those who attended.

The "Races in our Race" will be the some what unique subject of a series of talks to be given on Sunday evenings at the Congregational church by the Rev. Carl S. Jones. The first of them on last Sunday evening was on "The American Highlanders," and we will vouch-safe that to many present it was some what of an unknown subject, but under the skillful exposition of the speaker whose well known oratorical ability needs no further praise it was made an exceedingly entertaining and instructive subject. The excellent singing of Messrs. Wards, Mapes and Hughes added much to the pleasure of the evening. Next Sunday evening will be devoted to the problem of the negro race. Everybody, "irrespective of race, color, or previous condition of servitude" is cordially invited to be present.

The first district Women's Relief Corps will hold its next annual convention in Chelsea. At the convention held last week in Ypsilanti there were 200 delegates in attendance. ## DUTY.

She wore her duty as a crown.
And in her passing up and down,
One came who laughed to see her wear
Such little with so grand an air.

She took it off. "One cannot be A laughing-stock for such as he."
Behold! her feet once swift to go,
Move now reluctantly and slow.

She walks a prisoner, looking down
At that which binds her limbs in pain.
Who wears not duty as a crown,
Must drag it as a chain.

MUSCULAR CHRISTIANITY

By JOHN SMITH TASSIN.

Copyrighted, 1901, by The Authors Publishing Company

"Brethren," began the preacher, when all had been assembled, "I feel like Jacob did after he had wrestled all night with an angel for a sight of the Almighty."

"Amen!" bawled the blacksmith at the head of the congregation, and his eyes roved ceaselessly as if in quest of someone.

"Only my fight has been with the powers of darkness; and I bear about me the stains of the soot, and the scars of the fire and the bristling of that terrible place."

"Amen!" bellowed the lusty fellow in a louder voice, and his eyes continued their fruitless search.

"Brethren, let us pray and thank the Lord for the victory He hath granted over Satan in this benighted spot."

And the blacksmith prayed with all the fervor of a convert on the mourners' bench. His voice was like the echo of thunder in the mountains, peal redoubling upon peal, and crash after crash deflected from the many hills, until the little building fairly shook with its reverberations. Meanwhile he craned his neck and almost stood up in vain endeavor to single out somebody.

"Guess you're lookin' fo' de docto', ain't yo'?" gibed an irreverent youth behind him.

The man glared at him but did not answer.

Doctor Ben was there. He chuckled despite the sanctity of the place, and there was a mischievous twinkle in his eyes and a sly smile about the corners of his mouth. His face was as a mask, behind which all manner of droll thought held high carnival. Bill Jenkins caught sight of him, whereupon the doctor made the sage reflection that it would be best for him to have his horse shod by another blacksmith for some time to come. At this his face fell, for the prospect was not inviting. Bill Jenkins being acknowledged the best horseshoer within miles of the neighborhood.

The doctor's irresistible longing for little fun was responsible for the blacksmith's discomfort. This is the way it came about:

"No preacher-man ain't agoin' t' preach in dis 'ere town," no, s'ee, not ef I knows meself."

The group about the anvil stood stock still, and burly Bill Jenkins straightened himself to his full height. "The 'help' paused with the horse's hoof still in the lap of his leathern apron.

Standing with folded arms and with his back to the table, on which were his artisan's tools, was a figure so quizzically queer that it was sure to set you laughing. It was Doctor Ben, short and thin, with red hair, red beard, and red spots on his face which some would call freckles. He was stoop-shouldered and hollow-chested.

"No preacher-man ain't agoin' t' preach in dis 'ere town," and had a cast of countenance so comical that you could think of him only as a king's jester.

The blacksmith was so angry that he fairly bit his words.

"See 'ere, doc," he cried, and his forearm sawed the air, "we ha' spliced our 'young men' an' buried 'em dead in dese 'ere cross-roads fo' nigh on to thirty years withouten interfe'ence o' no pa'son-man; an' we ain't agoin' t' pay no fees now fo' w'at de good Gawd awards free."

"Oh, I dunno as to that," said the little doctor. "I hearn our pa'son 'low that he intended holdin' a p'rey'meetin' here to-night."

"Dang yo' pa'son!" replied the other.

And he bared his arm, on which the muscles stood out like cords of steel. The bellows heaved; the fire leaped up; the iron became a cherry red; then white scales formed upon it; the anvil rang, and a shower of sparks fell about the place.

The little doctor chuckled knowingly. It was a way he had whenever highly amused, which must have been most of the time, for his thoughts were a perennial fountain of fun, bubbling up within him.

It is not to be concealed that Doctor Ben—a recent convert, by the way, and one whose motives were not always easy to fathom—had been at the paragonage that very morning.

He found his friend expatiating on the glory of such as were called upon to contend with the heathen in foreign parts, thereby securing for themselves the crown of martyrdom; while he bitterly lamented the fact that his own ministry lay in a civilized land, where nothing ever happened, and the only distinction possible was that of patience and long suffering.

"Oh, I dunno as to that," remarked the little doctor smiling blandly. "Now there is Rowden cross-roads, for instance, which, while not exactly pagan, is about as tough a place as one would wish to run against. They ain't had a pa'son there inside of thirty years; not since the last one was stoned out of the settlement. It ought to be a purty good field fo' the sowing of the Gospel, s'eein' 'a how the land has lain fallow so long."

"Enough!" cried the parson, smiling. "I shall preach there this very night."

The doctor stepped again at the paragonage on his way home, after his visit to the blacksmith shop. He found the preacher, like another Paul, working in his garden, that he might not be a burden to his charge. He leaned on his hoe and mopped his perspiring face with a colored cotton handkerchief as the doctor came up.

"Hello, pa'son! still bent on preachin' at Rowden to-night?"

"If the Lord spare me, brother, I shall most assuredly try to do His work in that part of His vineyard."

"Waal, it looks as if you might find opposition."

"We have to expect to wrestle with Satan sometimes, brother."

"Yes, but it looks as if Satan d' be powerful strong in this instance."

"How so? Was it himself you saw in the flesh?"

"It was himself that I saw in the flesh of Bill Jenkins, the blacksmith at Rowden. He's a heap sight heavier man 'n you be, pa'son, an' he says that you'll have him to lick before you preach in Rowden to-night. So long, pa'son."

The little doctor chuckled. He knew his men and that they were game. "Goin' to be a little affair down to Rowden to-night; better be there about sundown," he shouted to more than one acquaintance as he drove past.

True to his word, Parson Jones rode into Rowden about dusk and hitched his horse at the rack near the smithy, which at that hour resembled a fiery pit. The interior was lit up by the sullen glow of the forge as with an evil eye, and without was the gathering gloom.

The preacher was long and lank, and his clerical clothes was a sight to see. They hung about him as loosely as the limp rag flap about a scarecrow in the fields.

The blacksmith came out muttering loudly.

"Are you, he who would dare interfere with the preaching of 'e' word o' God in this place?" asked the parson, as he calmly removed his coat.

"No preacher-man ain't agoin' t' preach in dis 'ere town," sputtered the blacksmith, drawing off his leathern apron and wiping his hands upon it. "No, s'ee, not ef I—"

The preacher's hand descended upon his mouth, cutting short the sentence.

Then ensued a lively scuffle, during which the spectators hastily gathered around the two combatants. The blacksmith directed a well-aimed blow with all his force; but the wiry parson simply turned sideways, and it went past him like a blade, which unexpected ruse sent his heavy antagonist sprawling face foremost, in the dust. He soon had him covered and was pounding viciously.

"I am going to preach in this town to-night."

"Not if I—"

Again the blows hailed thick and fast.

"Let up, there! Enough! Stop, stop!"

"I am going to preach and want you to attend in the front pew and to lead in all the responses."

"I will, I will! Oh! Oh! Stop!" pleaded the blacksmith.

Somebody handed the minister his coat, and he brushed the dust from his trousers as well as possible. And straight from the field of battle all marched to the little town meeting-house, where we find them at the opening of this story.

THE FIELD OF JOURNALISM.

Puck Treats Grave Subject With an Attempt at Humor.

A tiny typographical error often causes more comment than a column editorial.

Never judge a person by the clothes he wears. The frail, wan man with dilapidated trousers and debilitated shoes may be a great financier or the editor of your local paper.

After reading of a certain man who was buried alive for a week on a wager, and of another who ate poison in a time museum for a modest stipend, we fain would confess that we might be doing worse than running a newspaper in this town.

In a certain aquarium is a large turtle which has not eaten for more than a year, and does not seem to have suffered the slightest inconvenience from its prolonged fast. What a phenomenal success a turtle would be in the newspaper business in this region!

Once upon a time an editor found a fifty-dollar bill, gave it to its owner and seemed greatly surprised when a reward was offered him. His eccentric action was generally thought to have been prompted by the sterling honesty which we so frequently see mentioned in stories; but it may have been that he did not know what it was he found.

When Benjamin Franklin was about to establish the Pennsylvania Gazette, in 1728, his friends warned him that he might be overcrowding the field, as there were already three newspapers in the country. But, despite the fact that there are to-day nearly 3,000 dailies and about 25,000 publications of all sorts in the United States, there are still innumerable promising openings for talented young optimists with money to lose.—Puck.

Serious Quarrel Over Water.

Recently a member of the legislative assembly of South Australia said in a speech: "I am ready to take up my rifle, and it may be necessary to send a South Australian army into Victoria and New South Wales to destroy their irrigation works."

This dreadful threat is due to the tapping of the waters of the Murray—the Australian Mississippi—by Victoria and New South Wales, the two states between which it forms the boundary line for the greater part of its course. The result is that when the one big river of the commonwealth enters South Australia for the final stage of its career it is not the noble and generous stream that it was before being robbed for irrigation purposes by the other two states. And the South Australians, being prevented by insurmountable natural conditions from getting the first pull at the river themselves, are angry and indignant.

He—Carolyn Wells in Life.

From Tivenshall, Norfolk, England, Mr. C. Linn, a farmer, drove the other day to Pulham Oak, a distance of several miles. On arrival there he put the cart in a shed and transacted his business. Nearing home he was astonished to find one of his own hens perched on the axle of the cart. This fowl had ridden the whole journey in this curious position. She was not disturbed and occupied her chosen perch till next morning.

HORTICULTURE

Those of our readers that have visited the Minnesota Agricultural College will remember the very effective arrangements of shrubs between and around the principal buildings. The shrubs used on this campus are hardly in almost all portions of the middle West. On a recent visit to the college, the writer made a note of some of the most beautiful shrubs, which he felt he could recommend to readers of the Farmers' Review. Below are some of them:

Juneberry (Amelanchier). This is a plant that has a variety of forms, some of them mere shrubs and some of them trees from twenty-five to forty feet high. In its different varieties it grows in temperate climates around the world. The writer saw it growing on the banks of the Saskatchewan in British America, where it was known as the Saskatoon. It is there highly prized for its foliage and fruit. Saskatoon berries are very popular. To the writer it seemed to be identical with the wild "sugar plum" of New England. The trees or shrubs bloom very early in the spring, and do well on a great variety of soils and situations. They also succeed well in dry climates.

Caragana (Caragana arborea). This is a shrub, or rather tree, from Siberia. The form mentioned above is the only one that grows to the size of a tree. It seems to be very hardy. It was seen growing in all parts of the Canadian Northwest and seemed to be a general favorite. In some places where it was thriving the rainfall is only ten inches a year. This would indicate that it can stand both cold and drought. It belongs to the order Leguminosae, and some members of its immediate family are found from the Himalayan mountains to southern Asia to Siberia.

Tartarian Maple (Acer tartaricum). This is a very beautiful maple, its leaves being long and deeply serrated, with a tint that draws attention to it in any group of trees. It is probably hardy in nearly all situations.

Dogwood (Cornus sanguinea). This is one of a family of twenty growing in North America. This one (sanguinea) has purple or dark red branches, which lend a charm to the shrub at any time of year. The flowers come in May and June and are greenish-white, growing in dense cymes. The fruit when ripe is black.

Buffaloberry (Shepherdia argentea). This is one of the three American plants belonging to Shepherdia. The leaves, as of the others, are silvery. The staminate and pistillate blossoms are borne on different trees. Both kinds are grown at the Minnesota college. The tree is prized mostly for its foliage, but its berries are edible. We have seen these trees at Cornell University loaded with fruit in the fall. The fruit is acid and edible. It may some day become popular.

Cut-leaved Elder (Sambucus nigra aurea). This is quite commonly known as "Golden Elder" and is distinguished by its golden foliage, as is indicated by its varietal name "aurea." It is very effective when planted in small masses.

Red Berry Elder (Sambucus racemosa). This is a variety that is being quite extensively planted. It is nearly identical with Sambucus pubens. The red fruit begins ripening in June.

Golden spleen (Physocarpus Opulifolius aurea). These are well adapted to shrubbery formations and are suited to almost any soil. The leaves of this variety are bright yellow at first, but gradually change to a golden bronze-yellow.

Shepherdia (Viburnum Lentago). This is a shrub of small tree that frequently attains a height of thirty feet. It has its fruit over the winter till spring. This fruit is bluish-black, with quite a bloom upon it, and helps add to the beauty of the landscape in which it is found.

Gay's Syringa (Philadelphus coronatus). Known also as the Mock Orange. The flowers are creamy white and very fragrant.

Individuality in Plants.

The whole tendency of modern plant breeding, as we have seen, is to begin with a plant because it has individual merit rather than because it represents a particular variety. That is, we are constantly giving greater attention to individuality in plants. This animal breeder has always done. If no two Cuthbert raspberry bushes and no two early Crawford peach trees are alike, why not propagate from those that are best?

I have an orchard of Crawford peaches, all purchased from one of the best and most reliable nurserymen, but I have at least twenty different kinds of Crawford, some of them practically worthless. If I were to plant another Crawford orchard, I should want to know what trees the buds were taken from. If I were to propagate indiscriminately from my own orchard, persons to whom I should sell the trees would probably say either that the stock was "mixed" or that the Crawford had run out. Now, I admit that the stock would have been "mixed" and yet every tree be a Crawford. Suppose, now, that I should propagate only from the very best trees? What then would likely be the result? I believe the time has come when the nurseryman must cease to propagate indiscriminately from stock merely because it belongs to a given variety. He should propagate only from stock or trees that he knows to have direct merit.—Prof. L. H. Bailey.

HE BOUGHT THE DOG.

Possibly, "He Was Pleased With the Animal's Sagacity."

A certain office holder decided to buy a dog. In reply to his "ad" a man called at his office with an intelligent-looking animal, that he immediately took a fancy to, though he deemed it advisable to first inquire into something of its characteristics.

"What can he do?" he asked.

"Oh, sir, he can do anything. If you've lost anything, sir, he'll go direct to the place where you lost it. He'll—"

"By the way, I just missed my glove. Do you s'pose he could find it?"

"Certainly, sir. Just let him sniff at your hand."

The office holder held his hand to the dog's nose, and the animal trotted serenely off. Presently he returned, and with a joyous wagging of the tail deposited his offering at the office holder's feet.

At the same moment the click of the typewriter in the next room ceased. A girlish form appeared in the doorway.

"My sash ribbon," cried a high sweet voice, "my sash ribbon! The dog has my sash ribbon!"

The office holder's face turned a dull red. He cast a furtive glance at the man, who was in his pocket, and hauled out a bill.

"I guess the dog'll do," he said quietly.

W. E. THE JOKE CAME IN

Ice-cream. Mistake Excited the Negro's Risibilities.

While Frank Daniels, the comedian, was taking a stroll along Rochester he came across an old negro who, as he watched an ice-cream slide ice through an opening in the asphalt, laughed uproariously.

"Observe how easily amused he is, and yet there is nothing to laugh at," commented Mr. Daniels to his friends.

"Still, they tell us the colored folks have a keen sense of the ridiculous. You'll notice that most of the successes in the minstrel business are white men, however." Then, "Hey, uncle!" he shouted. "Do you think it's funny to watch a man slide ice down into the cellar of a saloon?"

The old man straightened up, scratched his nose thoughtfully for a moment, and then replied:

"Why, boss, I 'low dat performance do tickle dis ol' man's risibilities. It s'pecially does, boss. You see, Sah, he's a new ice-cream, an' 'stead o' slidin' ice down in de basement, he's 'sleidin' it into de sewer. Yah, hi, hi!"

New York Times.

IGNORANCE WAS NOT BLISS.

In This Case It Cost Its Possessor Some Money.

There are men who are never satisfied unless they are gambling. One of them met another man of the same disposition a few days ago. There didn't happen to be any cards or dice about, or any of the other apparatus made for the accommodation of sporting blood, and so the gentlemen concluded to match pennies. This grew tiresome after a while, and one of the men produced a roll of bills and offered to bet his companion that he couldn't guess whether the last figure on the number of each bill was odd or even for a dollar a clip.

"I'll do it if you'll tell me the series of each bill," was the reply.

This was agreed to, and in a very short time the man who made the proposition had lost all his money. A private investigation made by him shortly after revealed the fact that his acquaintance had outwitted him, for he discovered that the last figure of the number of series A and C was odd and that of B and D was even.

Tailoring by Weight.

Many men of modest dimensions have thought it hard that they should be charged by their tailor on the same scale as the men whose twice as much cloth is needed to clothe. The garment makers' convention at Chicago has decided that in future the clothing of corpulent men will be paid for according to bulk. The weight of men or normal size is arbitrarily fixed at 150 pounds, and for each 100 pounds that weight the fat man will be taxed $5 additional for his clothes. "Anti-Fat" and similar remedies will be more in demand in the states than ever.

Saul's Address.

Warriors and chiefs should the shaft or Pierce me when leading the hosts of the Lord.

Heed not the curse, though a king's, in Burge your steel in the bosom of Gath!

Then who art bearing my buckler and bow? Should the soldiers of Saul look away from the foe? Stretch me that moment in blood at thy feet! Mine be the doom which they dared not to meet!

Farewell to others; but never we part, Fare to my royalty, son of my heart! Or bright the diadem, boundless the sway, Or bright the death, that awaits us to-day!

—Lord Byron.

All That Was Needed.

"It wouldn't take much to make me tell him what I think of him," said the angry man.

"How much?"

Thereupon the angry man got his second wind and with it came a second thought.

"A little more muscle and a few boxing lessons," he said.

All He Wanted.

"Did your college confer any degree on you?"

"No; but they gave me the third degree in my secret society, and you bet that's all I want. I'm aching from it yet."

AGRICULTURE

Value of Good-Sized Seed.

A plant has inherited its internal and vital power from all the crops through which it came—all the ancestors through which it ascended or descended, says Professor Robertson of Canada. An appreciation of the inherited as well as the acquired power of plants will be of assistance in selecting the kind of seed that will do best on each farmer's land. What I want to make clear is the difference in the vigor of growth between the seeds of the same variety when sown in different localities, and the difference—the amazing difference—in the productive-ness of selected large, plump seeds over small seeds of the same variety.

The seed of a cereal is a plant in embryo, and a store of food for the nourishment of the young plant after it wakens into activity (germinates), and until it takes in food through its rootlets and leaves. The germination of the seed is not the so-called creation of life. That happened when the plant was fertilized; and the seed is an embryo, with a store of food lying close by it and within the same skin.

The store of food which composes the greater part of the seed is for the maintenance of the young plant until it is able to take nourishment through its leaves and rootlets. A young plant is awakened up as soon as the moisture and warmth are sufficient, and its food close by is prepared under the same conditions.

Sometimes an embryo plant is imperfectly formed and weak; and tests show that imperfectly ripened seeds, under ordinary conditions, do not give nearly as good a crop as fully ripened seeds in each of which both the embryo and its food have been fully prepared. Those seeds which germinate most quickly are the best, and it has been proven over and over again that heavy seeds give larger and better crops than small seeds of the same sort. This has been proven over and over again. The reason seems to be that in one case (large seeds) the supply of food for the young plant is plentiful when it most needs it, while in the other case (small seeds) the food supply may be insufficient to nourish the young plant adequately at the most critical time when it is tender and struggling for survival. Under the most favorable conditions of temperature, moisture and food supply in the soil, small seeds might give as much in crop as large seeds. On comparatively poor land, in unfavorable seasons, is where the small seeds give their worst returns. The farmer who has rich soil in a fine condition of tilth is the only one who can afford to sow small seeds, and the risk of comparatively small crops is great even then.

its Wonderful Charm in the Hands of a Master Described.

Arthur Symonds thus describes the great violinist Ysaie as he appeared, while playing his instrument: "The 'Kreutzer Sonata' began and I looked at Ysaie as he stood, an almost shapeless mass of flesh, holding the violin between his fat fingers, and looking vaguely into the air. He put the violin to his shoulder. The face had been like a mass of clay waiting the sculptor's thumb. As the music came an invisible touch seemed to pass over it; the heavy mouth and chin remained firm, pressed down on the violin, but the eyelids and the eyebrows began to move, as if the eyes saw the sound and were drawing it in luxuriously with a kind of sleeping ecstasy, as one draws in perfume out of a flower. Then, in that instant, a beauty which had never been in the world came into the world; a new thing was created, lived, died, having revealed itself to all those who were capable of receiving it."

The Minister's Threat.

There was a minister deprived of his pulpit who said to some of his friends that the action should cost a hundred men's lives. They understood it as if, being a turbulent fellow, he would have moved addition; so they complained of him. Then he explained his meaning was that if he lost his office he would practice physic and then he thought he should kill a hundred men in time.

LIKED HIS "NIP."

Not a Whisky, but a Coffee Taster.

Give coffee half a chance and you some people it sets its grip hard on fast. "Up to a couple of years ago," says a business man of Brooklyn, N. Y., "I was as constant a coffee drinker as it was possible to be. Indeed, craving for coffee was equal to the of a drunkard for his regular drink, and the effect of the coffee drug upon my system was indeed deplorable."

"My skin lacked its natural color, my features were pinched and my nerves were shattered to such an extent as to render me very irritable, also suffered from palpitation of the heart."

"It was while in this condition I read an article about Postum Food Coffee, and concluded to try it. It was long before Postum had entirely destroyed my raging passion for coffee, and in a short time I had entirely given up coffee for delicious Postum."

"The change that followed was extraordinary. I am unable to describe it. Suffice it to say, however, that all my troubles have disappeared, and my original happy self again came on the whole the soothing and pleasant effects produced by my Postum make me feel as if I had been 'landed at another shore.'"

"Not long ago I converted one of my friends to Postum, and he is now in its praise as I am." Name withheld by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Peas and Beans as Horse Feed.

Beans and other leguminous seed resemble the cereal grains in having a low water content. In Europe horses beans are a common feeding stuff for horses. Though such feeds are known to be useful and valuable, they are seldom given to horses in the United States and few, if any, tests have been made with them at the American experiment stations. Mants found that beans were quite thoroughly digested even when fed in large quantities as fourteen pounds per day. According to an English authority, this amount would prove harmful, and five pounds of beans per day or a slightly larger quantity of peas is considered all that is desirable to feed.

Clearness does not demand that the
"Dear Dozen" be mentioned by name after the inference permissible from the foregoing paragraph. No one, for a moment, would be led to think of any others. Pennsylvania has its Molly Maguires, Louisiana its Mafia, Indiana its white caps, the South the KuKlux Klan and Chelsea its reproach—the Dear Dozen.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wilson, early last week, extended a cordial invitation to a company of young men of this village to come to their home in Lima, which would be thrown hospitably open for an evening of jollity and entertainment.
The invitation was of course accepted and on Friday evening a party of nine left the village unostentatiously, by an early car, for the Wilson home. They were of course cordially received and made to feel at once the genial hospitality which warmed the boys at once into a fervor for games, laugh, chaff, fun and good natured enjoyment. But even while the merriment of "nosey-tunk" was at its height, an effort to spoil the fun was hiked down the pike, raising a cloud of dust that obscured the moon.
And had the fellows been watching, they would have seen the cloud moving in their direction, only pausing now and then, as the invaders got down in the dust of the road to learn which way the tracks pointed. For hours the man hunters had been monopolizing the entire telephone system of the community in their frantic desire to locate the boys. They had been given just enough bait to lead them to believe that a little persistent effort on their part would locate a company of nine already for their devouring. So it was with a man eating appetite they came down like wolves on the fold. They overran the whole Wilson place in a moment like a cloud of Kansas locusts. They were everywhere at once. An invitation to them to share the room, tables and even chairs was as superfluous as suspenders to a Hotten-tot chieftain. They came with warmth enough in their smiles to break a coal strike in February, and expecting a reception like a high kick of a footlight favorite. But nay! They got a stare that would freeze ordinary meat too stiff to chop with a meat-ax. As badly as it grieved them they caught on, and commoned to leave the reserved seats
and go way back where they could read,
"Standing room only." This gave the boys a chance to visit the dining room at Mrs. Wilson's invitation. The lay-out ranged on that white table-cover and with a place for each of the fellows, was a sight to create an appetite in a wooden Indian and for the moment their troubles, the hungry Dozen, were forgotten—even they couldn't spoil the fellows appetite with a feast like that before them—and they sat right down, unfurling a nice, crisp, white napkin and then kicked off with a bang-up good oyster stew and then worked steadily down the field with a play of cream for the coffee, an end run at the biscuit, a tackle smash at the chicken and salmon loaf, and right through the center on two kinds of delicious salad and the ball went over the line for an easy touch down when the cake was passed for there was a number of kinds and lots of it. And then, when the fellows had all had more than enough, the Misses Buttinski were permitted to feed on what remained. Of course it was a frost;
but what could they expect.

What they did expect was certainly plain when it came time to depart and the fact was revealed that they had not brought their lanterns; and this was where there were none woe and eleven foolish.

But it was certainly fine of the Wilsons to provide such gracious hospitality for such a bunch.

the question will be held Monday, and it looks as if the factory would go, as Ionia will make it possible to pay Ypsi-

A FILIPINO MONKEY

The Troubles of an Army Officer
with the Little Beast.

He Was a Nuisance, But Native Custom Prevented the Officer from Refusing a Present—An Untimely Fate.

The American soldier serving in our East Indian possessions has had abundant reason, doubtless, to regard the Filipinos as treacherous and vindictive. But the somewhat general impression entertained in the United States that those vicious qualities are characteristic of the Filipinos as a people is not fully sustained by the experiences of Europeans who have resided for many years among them.

Strong ties of friendship exist, and exhibitions of gratitude are as zealously, and probably as frequently shown, as among the Christian peoples of other lands.

Possibly a good illustration of the last named trait of character may be found in the case of a poor Filipino who came one day to Lieut. Sutton, a staff officer on duty at the time at the headquarters of the army in Manila, and urged upon the astonished officer the acceptance of a pet monkey as a slight recompense, he said, for some act of kindness which the lieutenant had done for him.

The officer kindly, but firmly, refused
the gift, and after thanking his visitor, sent him away.

But the Filipino was not to be gotten rid of so easily. He conceived that he and a debt of gratitude to discharge, and accustomed to duplicity of speech, disbelieved the assurances of the officer that he did not want the monkey, and hastening to the quarters of the lieutenant, fastened the creature by a rope to the bars of an open window.

When the officer reached his quarters,
late in the day, he was surprised and extremely annoyed to find the monkey tied to his window. But his annoyance was feebly compared with the righteous exasperation he felt when he discovered that the animal had forced its way between the bars of the window into the

TENTS OF HIS PRIVATE DESK.

room, and had made sad havoc with the contents of his private desk that stood within its reach.

A hasty survey of the wreck disclosed
the fact that the creature had torn up many of his letters, destroyed some valuable papers, had drunk a bottle of mucilage, upset his ink, and broken a paper knife.

The officer stood, weapon in hand, gazing fixedly at the animal for a moment, actuated by conflicting emotions, and then at last discarding the weapon, hastily severed the rope with which the creature was tied, and hurried it in no gentle manner out of the house and into an adjoining yard, where he presented it to a Filipino neighbor.

The Filipino tethered the animal to a mango tree that grew in the yard adjoining the officer's quarters. The creature had evidently been accustomed to unrestrained liberty in the family of its former Filipino master, and protested now vigorously and often, against its confinement.

But at last the protests suddenly ceased, and the morning cries of the animal were heard no more.

"And what has become of the monkey?" inquired the lieutenant of his neighbor one day.

"Oh, senor," replied the Filipino,
smiling broadly, as he spoke, "the fellow was fat, and we ate him."

"Heavens!" exclaimed the officer.
"That was next to cannibalism. You can't tell," he repeated, "just what relationship the thing may have been to you."

"He was very fat," persisted the Filipino, unconscious of the cause of the officer's anxiety. "Since the war began,"
he continued, "the fat ones have been scarce."

"And you eat-monkeys?" exclaimed
the officer slowly and impressively.

"Fat ones," answered the man.
"Lean ones are tough." "The Lord save us!" murmured the horrified officer. "I think I know now why a dog howled at an eating house station upon the Dagupan railroad the other day when a man came out and pounded on a gong."

"The dog howled!" said the Filipino, inquiringly, unable to comprehend the connection between a howling dog and the subject in hand.

"Yes," said the officer, continuing his apocryphal story, "the dog howled piteously until the man told him he did not have to eat it, and sent him away with a kick. I'm afraid now we had lean monkey for dinner, and the dog knew it."

CLIMATIC CURES.

The influence of climatic conditions in the cure of consumption is very much overlooked. The poor patient, and the rich patient, too, can do much better at home by proper attention to food digestion, and a regular use of German Syrup.
Free expectoration in the morning is made certain by German Syrup, so is a good night's rest and the absence of that weakening cough and debilitating night sweat. Restless nights and the exhaustion due to coughing, the greatest danger and dread of the consumptive, can be prevented or stopped by taking German Syrup liberally and regularly.
Should you be able to go to a warmer climate, you will find that one of the thousands of consumptives there, the few who are benefited and regain strength are those who use German Syrup. Trial bottles, 25c; regular size, 75c. Glazier
