Existence, as Philip Van Vivier | a face as white as death, "and I'm not planned it, was to be a very pleasant affair. He had youth and health, and wealth, and he pictured the future a gay kateldoscopic minglings of golf, and pele porties, and grand opera, and little suppers after the play, and London seasons and Parisian boulevards. and it really seemed to him-when he stopped to moralise-that this was a pretty good old world after all, and that given these things and a good digestion a man might be happy if he tried.

Then, too, to crown it all there was Madge. Madge, tall and slight, and svelt, with the tawny gold in her hair, and the eyes that changed with every changing thought-that were as blue as summer skies when she smiled, and grew black as midnight when she thrilled to any deep emotion. Philip could hardly remember a time when he had not loved her. They had grown up, boy and girl, together, with something singularly similar in their fate. Both were orphaned children, left to the untender care of unwilling relatives, and Philip never forgot the moment of their meeting. His uncle's place adjoined that of Madge's guardian, and he had been wandering about the grounds, a forlorn and lonely childish figure, when he first came upon the little maid. She gave one long look at his somber face and mourning clothes, and then, with that swift and intuitive sympathy that God gives to even the youngest child, she went up to him.

poltroon enough to settle down and live on her money," and there had ben a terrible scene.

"Oh, Philip, Philip," she had cried. clinging to him, "what good is all my money to me if I can't make things easy for you? Surely there is more than enough for us both."

Then he had tried to explain to her. blunderingly, and haltingly, that something that is dearer to man than even the love of woman-that something which he must have, or die of self-loathing-his own self-respect. And in the end Madge "saw." The sympathy that always understood others was part of her charm, and Philip went away to face that un-

she arose and put her hand within it and together they started towards the house, treading the narrow ledge se outer edge was death. A singl h of the crazed woman's feeble and mutilation waited for them below, but there was not a tremble in the man's voice as he asked: And what do you think of the new tenor this winter at the opera?" In the street below the crowd stood silent, tense with excitement, until they saw Philip hand the woman, still with courtly grace, through the door in the roof, and then it broke into tumultuous cheering.

As for Philip, his one thought was to get to the office. He realized the value of the story. The secret of the darkened mansion. The closed blinds. The beautiful woman, with her wild, mad eyes-it was full of color, it was picturesque. Besides it was a scoop. There is, perhaps, no other joy in life equal to that which the young writer reads his own productions in type, and Philip's first conscious act the next morning was to reach for the paper. He had expected his story to be given some prominent place; perhaps to be featured. To his dismay it was not even printed. How long he might have stared at the paper in bewilderment he never knew, but that, two letters caught his eyes, as they as masters of their art. Unfortunatelay upon his table. One was from ly they are few. There are many the city editor of the Asterisk, and he pounced upon it for an explanation. "Dear Van Vivier," he read, "sorry, but your scoop was scooped. Naturally he wanted your story killed. Virtue is rewarded, however. He suggests you for night editor in place of Carson, who has resigned. Report for duty to-night."

The other letter was from Madge. It said:

"Dear Philip-I have heard of your rescue of poor Fannie La Roux. How could you be such a hero, and such a goose as to take such a risk. You need a guardian, sir, and I am going to marry you to take care of you, on this day one month. You can't refuse a lady, you know. Yours, Madge." Philip read the letter' twice, and then he bowed his head on the table, and when he raised it his eyes were dim and tender.

SHOULD BE CLEAN-SHAVEN.

Writer Says Ideal Man Wears No Hair on His Face.

A recent writer says: "The ideal man is clean-shaven. Confidently he ficulties which will continually preexposes to the world his features undisguised by hirsute appendages. Can get a perfect sire and the intending we conceive the Apollo Belvedere with even a mustache? I doubt it. A merely honest man also, one would think, should wear no hair upon his face. And for these reasons: Each of us in great measure, partly from exaggerated ideas of his own perspicacity, partly from the stress of life, judges his neighbor from his face. His clothes are but a doubtful index of his character. But his features are, we firmly believe, indicative of his nature and his mode of life. "There may be villany written large on his upper lip. A certain mold of chin betrays its owner as a man of considerable homicide tendencies. Cover the lips with a waterfall mustache, drape the chin with an Assyrian beard, and it may well be that murderous monster is a pleasing enough fellow to view. Such an one does not venture to pass clean-shaven through the streets. Let each one of us present in all candor such features as are his. "To possess a receding chin is no crime. It is merely a sign of weakness." But to conceal it with a huge and bushy beard and thereby to present the appearance of a man endowed with great strength of will is surely a false pretense. I do not maintain that all beared men are rogues and murderers. But I reserve my judgment and suspect them of roguery and homicide.'

[Mr. Wragg invites contributions of ny new ideas that readers of this deany new partment may wish to present, and would be pleased to answer correspondto present, and ents desiring information on subjects discussed. Address M. J. Wragg, Waukee. Iowa.]

THE SCIENCE OF BREEDING.

The man who has proved himself a successful breeder is of inestimable value in the realm of stockdom and to him honor is truly due. There are many engaged in breeding stock and many have been more or less successful, but how many can we point out prominent breeders who own prize winning herds but in how many cases are the animals in their possession the result of their success as breeders. A great number of men in the It requires clear insight into the laws relating to breeding, and this in turn demands considerable experience before the height of success can be reached. There are so many influences having a bearing more or less direct on the laws of breeding and of some of the laws so little is known, that he who would be successful must be a close student. The most prevalent cause of failure is that many of those engaged in the work fail to comprehend its intricacy. It may be that a herd of cattle is deficient in some particular point and the owner in his endeavor to rectify this weakness secures a sire that is strong in that particular but at the same time he overlooks some weakness in the sire that may be even more objectionable than the one he endeavors to remedy, and as a result finds himself in a serious predicament. This will illustrate one of the pitfalls into which the unwary may fall and points out one of the difsent themselves. It is impossible to ery of farm life." True, farming if properly attended to often means hard work, and on some days long hours; but if rightly and successfully man aged it cannot be otherwise than a labor of love, requiring the use of brains, of thought and study. The right kind of farmer masters the soil with his head more than with his hands. The city merchant, the store clerk, the city laborer generally-and this includes physicians, teachers, professionals, and often millionaires-all have far greater reason to talk about the "slavery of city life" than the modern farmer, who has no boss, is not kept imprisoned for ten or twelve hours a day in a dingy room, and whose whole life is the most satisfactory combination of congenial work, both of brain and hand, with perfection independence, and the purest of life's pleasures and blessings, has no reason to talk about the "slavery of farm life." Let us appreciate our advantages and make the most of our opportunities, rather than indulge in such slurs on our occupation as that which is expressed in the absurd phrase "slavery of farm life."

It is well to remember that a model udder is usually an indication of a good cow; however, an ideal udder or an extremely large udder is occasionally found attached to a very ordinary cow. A well-balanced udder with wellplaced teats is as good an indication as abnormal size, as size does not always indicate quality. As a cow ages her udder usually becomes longer, even though she gives no more milk than formerly, hence the age of the cow should be considered when giving credit to the size of her udder. We also remember that the udder neither indicates quality of milk nor persistency in milking.

This is the time of year when a great many butter makers are compelled to decide whether they will attend a term of the dairy school or put it off until next year. There are many who desire to go, but cannot arrange to do so on account of the fmance question or inability to secure a man to operate their creamery during their absence, while there are others who are eligible to neither excuse and who are sorely in need of the instruction to be obtained at the school. A man who is operating a creamery in this day and age is working at a great dis. advantage if he does not possess a dairy school education.

The question has been discussed considerable as to whether Angera goats or sheep are the more profitable. It is idle to discuss this question, as the profit from one or the other of tnese will depend almost entirely on the conditions under which they are kept. When much brush is to be consumed, the goats will be found to answer the purpose much the better of the two. On the other hand, if grass pasture is to be grazed, sheep will be found more profitable than geats. The great matter in choosing the animals is to choose them with a view to the fitness for the place which they are intended to fill.

September 27 will be apple day at the World's Fair. Every man, woman or child who attends the expesition on that day will be made a present of three or four of Missouri's best, "the big red apple." It is to be hoped, however, that they will not be Ben Davis.

We have become so accustomed to planting young tres that we seldom think of planting tree-seeds. The Gardener's Magazine (England) says: "The best way to rebeautify barren and uncultivated lands is to sow tree seed broadcast, and leave nature to do the task of thining out the worthless ones. Seedlings will adapt themselves to rough places better than transplanted small trees. The poplar, the willow, the ash and the sycamore are especially recommended, and of these the last two are of the greatest economic value, because of their suitability for timber, which is here used as supports in coal mines." In this country other kinds of trees that can be grown from seeds may be more desirable, particularly the aut-bearing trees. Some of the advantages of having some of the mares drop their colts in the fall is that the team need not be so badly broken in the spring, or the mares subject to too severe exertion. The colts can be weaned on grass and so suffer the least from the change of food, and are out of the way when the mares go to the field. As the mare usually does not have to work so hard during the winter she can better suckle her colt.

"Little boy," she lisped, for she was scarcely more than a baby, "little boy, is 'oo lonesome, and doesn't nobody love 'oo?"

"No," he had answered with a sob from the depths of his hungry little heart.

"Don't cly, fittle boy," she comforted, slipping her hand in his. "I 'ill love 'oo, and 'oo won't never be lonesome any more," and, indeed, it seemed to Philip he had never been lonesome again. There was always .Madge.

But who may count securely on the "future? Move the kaleidoscope ever so gently and its figures change. There came a day when Philip had to do, not with visions of a golden future, but with a hard and merciless present. known world of work that is so hard, and gives such scant rewards to the untried laborer.

At college he had rather distinguished himself by some clever skits in the college journal, and so it seemed natural to him to turn to journalism as the most available way of settling the bread and butter problem. A friend obtained a place for him on the staff of the morning Asterisk, where he began as the bottom of the reportorial ladder.

Philip kept doggedly on. He acguired a reputation for being faithful and accurate. He was a gourmand for work, and the city editor began to speak hopefully of him, but advancement. comes slowly in a newspaper office, and to Philip, Madge seemed an immeasurable distance off, when suddenly he made his great scoop. It was the mcrest accident--successes mostly are-if we knew the truth of them. One evening he was walking along one of the fashionable residence streets, when suddenly he was startled by a scream, and looking up he saw a woman with the wild eyes and cunning of a maniac sitting on the very outer coping of the walls of a tall house, where she waved her arms gleefully, and leaned dizzily forward to peer into the street below. In an instant all the mystery of the drawn blinds and jealously guarded doors of the mansion, at which many had marveled, was revealed. Here was one of those family tragedies, at which the world guesses-some poor

The Life of the Cell.

It is no extravagance and no mere figure of speech to say that cells move about with apparent purpose, that they feel, that they suffer and enjoy, that they absorb and assimilate food, and die. And we can say with as much truth that they think. But of this last mentioned function it will be well to defer discussion until a subsequent time.

The cell, therefore, does all that the man does, has all that the man has, and possesses, within its tiny compass, heart, vein, muscle, nerve, artery, skin, bone, cartilage and what not of the future organism of the composition of which it forms one of the ultimate constituent parts .- Michael A. Lane, in National Magazine.

Wanted-A Pin.

It was Mabel's first appearance at church and she was rather fidgety. First she wanted one thing, then an-purchaser must reason out for himself whether or not his herd will be improved by the use of a certain animal.

The breeder must have in his mind some definite ideal which he is endeavoring to reach and without such an ideal in his mind little headway is likely to be made. A sire should be selected not only because he is a good individual, but because of the value he will be to that particular herd in which he is to be used. Supposing there are two animals to choose from. The first may, in the show ring, win over the second, but for use in a certain herd the second may be of much more value than the first. As an explanation of this, the first may be deficient in a certain point in which many of the herd are likewise deficient and the use of such a sire would tend to fix the existing evil more firmly and render improvement more difficult.

Let the breeder never be satisfied with his present attainments, but strive for something better. Let his watchword be improvement and though he may have reached a certain ideal in which he had in mind as a beginner, let him set up another standard. Only the progressive can hope for permanent success and we are in duty bound to strive for something better than present attainment and to give the world the best we can.

Not long since it was my good fortune to visit a farmer in an adjoining county. He kept a great many horses and had nothing but barbed wire fences. In order that his horses should that they live, love, marry, propagate, know where wire fences were he had a number of long laths wired to the top wire of the fence, which had been whitewashed. Horses could see these readily and would not run into the fences.

> The farm is the place to look for quiet, health and pease. It is the refuge place from care and turmoil incident to town and city life.

In the northern limits of melon culture it is desirable to so stimulate the plants that they will produce fruit as early as possible and this may be done by constantly feeding the plants during the whole season. Nitrate of soda, where it can be got, is a good stimulant, and while it is a pretty costly way to supply the plants with nitrogen it pays with as valuable ,a crop as melons. Stable manure spread over the surface of the soil and worked in is good, and is is hardly possible to overdo this kind of fertilization, especially if the plants can be watered freely.

In cultivating melons of any kind do not disturb the vines more than is absolutely necessary, as to do so retards growth and makes them produce smaller and later melons.

Attractive and convenient farm homes are rapidly becoming more common, and afford a pleasing contract with those when log houses, log schoolhouses and rail fences were common sights.

As between spring and fall planting of trees there is doubtless more in the circumstances than in the season. A good tree well taken up and well. planted will do equally well at either time of the year. But transplanting is an unantural process and is a check to the growth of the tree or plant, which, until growth is fully re-established, is under unfavorable conditions, and the less exposure while these conditions remain the better.

We used to let the hogs run until they were a year old and older, and then fatten them. We have learned a better way and so have most feeders. Nobody feeds hogs that way now.

When you wish to "break up" a sitting hen, don't pull her tail feathers all out and duck her in water, but confine her in good quarters without nests and properly feed and water her. The thing you should aim at is to put your hens in laying order again as soon as possible.

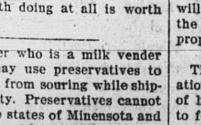

The whole mission of the steer is to convert feed into beef, and the quicker he converts a given amount of feed into beef the more pounds of beef he try is to be found on the farm. will get for the food consumed. Keep. the animal busy every day at its Farm animals are the machinery which the farmer must use for converting the farm products into animal products of greater value. To run the machinery economically it must be continually supplied with all the raw material that it can use.

Plank boards for horse stalls are not a good investment. They wear out too quickly. Cement floors properly made with the proper slope are preferable. These floors should be made a little rough so as to hold the bedding. If you are planning to put a new floor in your horse barn daring the coming season, be sure and talk with those who have used cement floors for their horses and listen to what they have to say in favor of such floors as compared with those constructed of planks, and you will soon be convinced of their value.

glowly the bleak light warmed into golden radiance, and the touch of dawn strung the scattered bird-notes into a chain of joyous song. Passing at last from the forest shades, the men of Ivarsdale came out into the grassy lane-like road that wound away over the Middlesex hills. Here and there the little shock-headed boys who were driving their charges afield paused knee-deep in rosy clover to watch the band ride by.

"Yon must be a mighty warrior," they whispered as they stared at the sober young leader. "Take notice how his eyes gaze straight ahead, as though he were seeking more people to overcome." And they spoke enviewsly of the red-cloaked page who sat on the croup of the leader's white charger. Through warm sunshine, tempered by fresh breezes, they came yet deeper into the drowsy farmland. Gradually the yeomen-soldiers, who had been wrangling over the mystery of Edric's actions, dropped one by one into lazy silence, or set their tongues to whistling cleverly turned answers to the bird-calls in the hedges. Another mile, and from somewhere in the fields came the swinging chant of a ploughman, as he turned the soil between the rows of rustling corn,---"Hall, Mother Earth, thou feeder of folk!

Be thou growing, by goodness of God, Filled with fodder, the folk to feed." Like the unbinding of a spell, the words fell upon the farmer-soldiers. Dropping every other topic, they besan to argue over the crops; and after that they could not pass a harmless calf tethered to a crab-tree that they did not quarrel over the breed, nor start a drove of grunting swine out of the mast but they must lay wagers on the weight.

could see the old forked elm from here. Hey, comrades!" he called over his shoulder. "Yonder-to the leftthe old landmark! Do you see?" His glance, as it came back, took in his captive. "The first bar of your cage, my hawk. Yonder is the first boundary of Ivarsdale."

Every man started up in his saddle, and the cheers they had held back upon leaving camp burst forth now with added zest. Peering over her captor's shoulder, Randalin looked forward anxiously.

Below the plain in whose center the old elm held up its blasted top to be silvered by the sun, the land dipped abruptly toward the river, to rise beyond in a long low hill. Rolling green meadows lay at its foot, and warm brown fields dotted with thatched farm-houses; and its sides were checkered with patches of woodland and stretches of golden barley. Just below the crest, the tower of the Lords of Ivrsdale reared its gray walls above the surrounding greenery. It was a kingdom to itself, with the light slanting warmly upon its fertile slopes and the forest standing like a strong army at its back.

Because it was so peacefully lovely, and because of her utter weariness, tears welled up under the girl's heavy lids as she looked.

She said unsteadily, "Saw I never a fairer cage, lord."

But the Etheling's eager glance had traveled on; for the first time the sun was shining out brightly in his face.

"The sight has more cheer than has wine," he said. "I cannot comprehend my folly in wanting to leave it. To live one's own master on one's own land, that is the only life!" He looked back at the yeomen with a sudden smile. "Noise!" he ordered. "Cheer again! it expresses the state of my feelings. And let your horn sound strange among us," he said lightly. "Do you know that it was one of your own countrymen who built the Tower? Ivar Wide-Fathomer he was named, whence it is still called lyarsdale. He was of the stock of Lodbrok, they say; and it is said, too, that one of his race is even now with Canute. You must make believe that you are coming home." So he spun on, carelessly good-humored, as they climbed the winding hill-path.

"If we make haste, it may be that we can take Hildelitha and Father Ingulph by surprise," he laughed, leaping down on the crumbling doorstep and pulling his captive with him.

In the tunnel-like arch of the great entrance they met another throng, but he shook them off with good-natured impatience and murried through the great guard-room to the winding stairs, that were cut out of the core of the massive stones. Up and across another mighty hall, and then up again, and into a great women's-room, full of looms and spinning-wheels, where a buxom English housewife and half-a-dozen red-cheeked maids were gaping over their distaffs at the tale a jolly monk was telling between swallows of wine.

He choked in his cup when he saw who stood laughing in the doorway, and there was a great screaming and scrambling among his audience. at night time. Of these a score or Knocking over her spinning-wheel to more throw a beam of 100,000 candleget to him, the woman Hildelitha power. threw her arms around her young lord's neck and gave him a hearty smack on either cheek; while the fat monk sputtered blessings between his paroxysms of coughing, and the six blooming girls made a screaming circle around him.

enough, the Etheling appeared in some haste to offer a diversion. He evaded a second embrace by turning and beckoning to his shrinking captive.

"Save a little of your greeting for my guest, good nurse. Behold the fireeating Dane that I have catured with my own right arm!" As the redcloaked figure still hung back, he pulled it gently forward until the light of the notched candles fell brightly on the face, pitifully white for all its blood-stains, in the frame of tumbled Randalin drew a little nearer the Etheling's sheltering side. He said that I had to get up two or three times half reprovingly, half freakishly, "It would not be well for you to anger him. He is the page of Canute himself, a real Wandering Wolf, and recks not whom he attacks. He came near to spitting. Oslac at the battle, and even threatened me." "Oslac!" screamed one of the serving-maids, turning very red. "The murderous little fiend!" And Father Ingulph cleared his throat loudly. "Well-fitting is your charity both toward my teachings and your heart, my son; and yet-Discretion is the mother of other virtues. To bring one of those roving children of Satan into a Christian household will lay upon me a responsibility whichwhich-" He paused to take a mouthful of wine and eye the stranger over the goblet rim with much disfavor. While the maids whispered excitedly in one another's earsy Hildelitha began to sniff behind her apron.

HOLY LAND NOT LARGE.

Great Events That Have Transpired in Small Space.

When one thinks of the great events that have taken place in the Holy Land, the multitude of cities, villages and towns, the countless millions who have been born there and whose bones now lie in its rock-ribbed hills, the small dimensions of Palestine are almost startling. West of the Jordan, where most of the historic events took place, there are only 3,-$60 square miles; including all the geographical divisions now called Palestine; including the land both east and west of the Jordan, the total area is 9,840 square miles. The length of Palestine from north to south is about 150 miles. It varies in breadth from twenty-three to eighty miles.

BEAUTY IN NATIONAL PARK

There is a Wealth of Coloring to Be Found in the Yellowstone.

Nature is a most exquisite colorist. Nowhere is her work more lovely than along the crested rims and overflow channels of warm spring pools. Tourists are seldom aware that these har nonious and brilliant tints owe their origin mainly to plant life. They are usually told by so-called guides that the colors are due to mineral matter, which tends to enhance their hor ror of underground waters. Algae flourish equally well, in the waters of all geyser basins and on the terraces of Mammoth Hot Springs. Wa ter boils on the plateau at 198 degree Fahrenheit and rudimentary organ isms appear at about 185 degrees/Fahrenheit, although no definite line can be drawn beyond which all life ceases.

Wherever these boiling waters cool to the latter temperature, algous growths appear, and by the lowering of the temperature on exposure to air still more Lighly organized forms gradually come in. It is said that at about 140 degrees the conditions are favorable for the rapid growth of several species. The development of plant life at such excessive temperatures and on a scale of such magnitude seems a marvelous thing. Nowhere else can this be seen as well as in the Yellowstone park .- Scribner's Monthly.

"That Englishmen are not stout fighters, no man can say, but the love of it is not in their breasts; while with Northmen-"

"With Northmen," Morcard added, "to fight is to eat."

Another faint smile touched Sebert's mouth as he glanced over his shoulder at the red-cloaked boy. "After seeing this sprout, that is easy to believe. Except that time alone when a two-year-old colt kicked me on the head, I have never had my life threatened by so young a thing."

He grew grave again as his glance rested on his captive: "I want you to tell me something," he said presently. "You were Canute's page; I saw that you accompanied him in battle. I want you to tell me what he is like in his temper."

"It would be more easy to tell you what he is unlike," Randalm answered slowly; "for in no way whatever is he like your King Edmund." She sat awhile in silence, her eyes absently following the course of the wind over a slope of bending grain. "I think this is the difference, to tell it shortly," she said at last; "while it sometimes happens that Canute is driven hands and try to control the sobs by necessity or evil counsels to act deceitfully toward others, he is always honest in his own mind; while your Edmund-I think he lies to himself also."

Morcard gave out a dry chuckle. "By Saint Cuthbert," he muttered, "teo much has not been told concerning the sharpness of children!" But the Etheling made no answer only by the old cnihts and the dozen whatever. After he had ridden a armed retainers. ime staring away across the fields,

PARROT AS A DETECTIVE.

Smart Bird Remembered Nickname Incautiously Used.

A parrot belonging to a Mme. Tarby of Paris has won distinction by leading the police to arrest a band of clever and notorious burglars. The band broke into Mme. Tarby's house at a time when only the bird was within. As soon as the mistress reunned the bird, much to her surprise. saluted her with "Hullo, big feet!" When she discovered the ransacked state of her house she sent at once for the police, and upon the commissary arriving he was also greeted by the parrot with the observation. "Hullo, big feet!"

The commissary resented the remark, and said, "Hush!" to the bird, which replied at once, "Oh, hurry up, big feet; you are slow, big feet!"

The commissary turned to Mme. Tarby, and the latter, anticipating a complaint, hastened to explain to the indignant officer that the bird had never used the expression before that day. At that a light broke in upon the commissary.

Russian life presents two clear-cut extremes. These are the peasants and the "nobility." Between these two classes exists a gulf as deep and wide as though the masses were still in the bondage of serfdom.

In their pleasures more than in any other phase of their life is this difference evident. As a matter of fact, the peasants have practically no drinking, a vice so common that it has ceased to be so regarded by the Russians.

On the other hand, the "nobility." which includes the middle and upper classes, seem to live in an almost continual whirl of pleasure,

It is a recognized fact that the aristocracy. like the "smart sets" of the occident, should spend their time from morning till night, and far into the night, in the pursuit of pleasure, but that the "nobility" should go to one extreme by imitating the examples of their superiors and the peasants to the other by having practically no pleasures at all is a state of affairs that finds no sympathy nor under-logical society of the University Michigan, George Hempl c upon the forerunners of our pu system of numeration. Some years ago, in seeking the origin of the Runic letters (the first letters used by the Germanic races), Profes sor Hempl discovered the primitive Germanic numeral notations. They threw new light upon the early Germanic numeral system, as well as up on the primitive Indo-European numter, acrobatic performances, fireworks, erical system and upon the development of the Greek alphabet and the music everywhere. There are associa. Greek numerical notation.

The primitive Indo-European numerical system was a mixture of the decimal and the sexagesimal. The first large number was the "shock"-that is, sixty-and the next large number was the "hand," or hundred," that is 120. Between 60 and 120 there were no numbers like our 70, etc., 70 being "a shock and ten," and 80 being "a shock and 20." The introduction of our present numbers between 60 and 120 arose out of the introduction of the decimal hund or hundred, that is, 100, in distinction from which the old hundred (120) was called the duodecimal hundred, or the "great hundred," which is still used in Iceland and parts of England.

Dr. Kerr, a Scotch minister, tells this story of his visit to a village school: "The lesson was one giving an account of a clever dog which had rescued a child from drowning. It was said that the dog was caressed by the parents of the child.' I asked what was the meaning of caressed and the answer came at cnce. Made of fond led.' On referring to the list of words at the top of the lesson I found the explanation riven was 'made of, fondled.' Wishing to find out if any child in the class had got a glimmering of the meaning I went from top to bottom and get from every child nothing but 'made of fond led,' pronounced as four words, to which they attached no meaning whatever. The teacher was surprised that I was not satisfied with the intelligence of the teaching."

Peasant Women Harvesting.

The end of May and the beginning | racetrack in Russia is the trotting of June is the period, like that of track at Moscow. The main grand Norway, of the shining of the midstand on this course cost close to $1,000,000, and is decorated with stone and bronze statues, some of which were set up at a cost of $50,000. The finest are the works of Russian masters. America has no racetrack building, nor has England or France, that compares at all with the Moscow grand stand for splendor.

The racing season begins in Russia about April 15 and ends October 25. During the season there is only about two hours and a half of darkness during the night and the races begin at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and it is not uncommon for them to last until 10 p. m. Sometimes as many as ten or twelve races are run off in a day.

Horses stand the rugged climate of winter in Russia exceedingly well. They do not come into form as early as they do in this country, but one thing remarkable about them is their clean legs and sound feet. This is attributed to the intense coid hardening the muscles. Carefully handled, there is very little reason for a Russian bred and raised horse ever to break completely down.

What Causes Fires.

The annual losses by fire in the United States which have averaged as high as $100,000,000 a year at certain periods, were attributed during a single year to the following causes, the number of fires from each cause being given: Incendiarism, 1,927; defective flues, 1,309; sparks (not from locomotives), .715; matches, 636; explosions (of lamps, etc.), 430; stoves, 429; lightning, 369; spontaneous combustion, 326; prairie and forest fires, 280; lamp and lantern accidents (other than explosions), 238; locomotive sparks, 211; cigar stubs and pipes, 203; friction, 179; gas jets, 176: engines and bollers, 150; furnaces, 135; and from firecrackers, 105.

Myrrh Simply a Gum Resin. Myrrh is a gum resin that exudes from the cracks of a tree found in Arabian and East African countries. It flows rather freely, but the natives. in order to get a larger, supply of the article, often bruise the trunk of the trees with rocks. The myrrh tree itself is a low tree, growing about ten or twelve feet high, with thorny branches. When the myrrh first exudes from the tree it is of a yellowish. whitish, buttery consistency that gradually hardens and assumes a reddish semitransparent color. It is used principally as one of the components of incense.

Well Worth the Money.

A man in Randolph county, Missouri, was tried recently for assault with intent to hill and the prosecuting attorney brought into court as weapons a rail, an ax, a gun, a saw and a rifle. The defendant's counsel exhibited a scythe, a pitchfork, a pistol, a razor and a hoe. After deliberating two night sun. For two or three hours only does the sun disappear below the horizon, and then its glow suffuses the sky, so that sunset and sunrise are merged into one. Then it is that those who have nothing to do but to enjoy themselves take advantage of the long-established custom of going on excursions to the islands, to watch the sun slowly sink into the waters of the Neva, to meet and chat with their friends on various questions of the day, "or to hear the latest bit of court news or gossip, and then to drive back in the hour of dawn to their houses, to invite
