VISITORS AT ST. LOUIS

MOSTLY FROM SOUTHERN STATES.

Savagery Has Its Customs--Something About the World's Fair as Seen By Editor Stimson.

The New York Sun is authority for the following concerning one of the Roosevelt youngsters. The story is that one of the youngest of the President's boys was downtown in Oyster Bay, and seated before a fizz fountain, was up to his ears in a glass of ice cream soda, when someone present, with more curiosity than tact, asked the lad, "What do you think of Parker?" and the ingenious answer came with-out the boy turning an eye from his soda, "Who is Parker?"

Since I have been in St. Louis inquiries have come to me frequently, saying: "What of the fair?" I must answer like the Roosevelt boys--where and what is the fair? This is, indeed, an extreme question from one in this city, but what is implied is that the problem of simple existence, the keeping of soul and body together, is such a strenuous matter here in St. Louis, that it effectually quenches any burning desire to do either the Pike or the art galleries.

I detailed somewhat at length in my last letter the disposition evinced by the natives toward the stranger's pocket-book, and in regard to the weather and water of St. Louis nothing can be said that will give the reader an adequate idea of what they are like. All these features, however, effectually combine to quell the enthusiasm of the visitor for the exposition.

But having been daily plodding through the exposition gates for about four weeks I must necessarily have gained some ideas. And so I have. I have about come to the conclusion that the authorities will not, in the end, after all the discussion is over, force the Igorrites to put on trousers. If you knew these people and the weather conditions you undoubtedly would acquiesce in the belief that it would be undoubtedly cruelty to animals to require these aboriginal people to put on civilized habiliments.

Savagery has its customs no less renowned for comfort than has civilization.

And while we are mentioning the Igorrites it may be well to note that they are setting the style in the way of dress. A madam Esquimaux and daughter were passing about the grounds the other day and it was universally noticed that they had left off their bear skin trousers and were wearing white cotton flannel knickerbockers with a blue binding around the bottom of each leg where they met the top of their seal boots.

After such a radical change we expect to see the Esquimaux progress rapidly from the bear skin of the polar countries to the bear skin of the tropics.

Another point that might be mentioned is that this is the Southerners' fair. There has not been enough people here from north of Mason and Dixon's line--well I don't know just how few, but to put it another way I may say that the northern people have not attracted any more attention than a dead fly in raspberry jam. A man from Texas the other day declared to me that it was his state that keeps the fair going. I am inclined to believe him. Whether the northern people will visit the fair this fall remains to be seen.

And other than the matter of dress and attendance there is one other big feature that will necessarily impress one whether or not he is looking for impressions. And this big feature is the electrical illumination at night. Every building is outlined with thousands upon thousands of electric bulbs. Row upon row of them stretch out in long lines upon every building. It would seem to be a safe guess to say that these lights in one row would extend, even if placed closely together, over fifty miles.

As night settles over the great picture, done in reality and in such splendid proportions, the electric bulbs outlining every building begin to glow faintly. Then the darkness of the night grows still deeper and there with the lights glow still more brightly until in a blaze of indescribable splendor every building, dome and tower is outlined in light. The view passes gradually from the land of the real and the actual to that of a shimmering glow, unmeasurable and unnameable by any sense but sight and imagination.

It is said a recently deceased party from St. Louis, while negotiating with St. Peter for a pass, glanced through the pearly gates and remarked to the Saint that he might get some new ideas in illumination at the fair. This angered the Saint and he was forthwith on the point of remanding the newcomer to the place below when that party reminded the Saint that that would be no new experience for him as he came through the Pike on his way up.

Maybe I'll tell you about this Pike in some other letter.

TAKE YOUR CHOICE.

Superintendent O'Mara, of the Consolidated Traction Co., was asked in regard to the rumor that the tracks of the Boland line east of Grass Lake would be taken up and used to build an extension to Lansing. He said so far as he knew nothing had been done or decided upon in that respect. He thought it would be 60 days before the Hawks-Angus cars would run up to the Boland waiting room, but it has been arranged that a car from the city will meet every car from the east at Grass Lake--Jackson Citizen.

It is not believed that the consolidated traction companies will long operate the two lines east of the city. It may be that the double tracks will be used as far as Michigan Center, but it is said to be practically determined that between Grass Lake and Chelsea but one system will be used. The determination as to which one is to be retained, it is said, will be left to an expert, who will go over the lines, study the conditions and future prospects, and report upon the best route. The board of managers will act upon this report, it is rumored, but as to what it will be no one can now say with certainty. There is, however, little doubt that the claims of Dexter to interurban transportation will not be overlooked, and as the Boland line passes along the main streets of Grass Lake and Chelsea, as well as reaches Dexter, the chances for the use of this road are good. It is quite likely that the rails which will be displaced will be used upon the improvement of the Hawks-Angus road east of Ann Arbor--Jackson Patriot.

WEBER WILL CASE.

August 17, 1900, the late Simon Weber of this place executed a will in which he gave his three sons, John, Simon and Joseph Weber, the farms on which they respectively resided and to the three daughters, Lizzie Hummel, $200 each to be paid by the sons, and the homestead in Chelsea. A monument and masses were provided for and the remainder of the estate, if any, was to be divided equally among the children. The comfortable maintenance of his widow was secured by the retention of mortgages on the farms of his three sons. Dec. 20, 1902, Mr. Weber executed a codicil to his will in which he gave the Chelsea home to the sons, and on January 19, 1903, he had the three mortgages discharged. The daughters contested the codicil and Judge Watkins admitted the will of 1900. The matter now goes to the circuit court.

MRS JOHANNA KELLEY.

Johanna Zulke, was born in Jackson, July 5, 1876, and departed this life, Saturday, July 23, 1904. She was joined in wedlock with William Kelley, April 20, 1902. She was a consistent member of the Church of Our Lady of the Sacred Heart, and her pastor, Rev. Fr. Considine, sang requiem high mass at 9:30 Monday morning at the church.

Those who survive to mourn her loss are her husband, William Kelley, father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. August Zulke, two sisters, Mrs. Thomas Daly of Jackson, Miss Rose Zulke and one brother, Frank Zulke, of this place, who have the sympathy of a host of friends. Interment at Mt. Olivet cemetery.

The D. Y. A. & J. Ry. is now prepared to run special cars through to Wolf Lake and will make special low rates on application to the general office, Ypsilanti. Arrangements will soon be perfected for close connection at Grass Lake with all cars, but parties can now get through to Wolf Lake by waiting a few minutes at Grass Lake. Arrangements will be made when time tables are arranged for the much desired close connections.

THE DEMOCRATIC CAUCUS.

LARGE ATTENDANCE OF VOTERS.

Two Sets of Delegates for the Same Conventions Named--Bollers Held Forth in The Basement.

There was rather a warm time at the democratic caucus held in the town hall last Tuesday evening, when the members of that party assembled to nominate delegates to the county convention held in Ann Arbor today, and at the same time to select delegates to two other conventions yet to be called, one being for the county officers and the other for the Second representative district.

There were between 150 and 160 voters present from all parts of the township, and without a doubt this was the largest democratic caucus that has been held here for a number of years.

The chairman of the town committee, Hon. J. S. Gorman, called the assembly to order, and stated very clearly the object of the gathering, asking whom they would have for permanent chairman. W. R. Lehman made a motion, which was seconded, that Geo. W. Beckwith be chosen, and B. B. Turnbull placed the name of H. Lighthall in nomination for the same place. As there had been two men selected for the same position, the temporary chairman appointed two tellers, Jas. Taylor and F. H. Sweetland, one for each contestant, and had all of those who favored the selection of Mr. Beckwith pass between the two tellers, and their count showed that 61 voted, and in a like manner 84 voted for Mr. Lighthall, who was declared the permanent chairman. Just after Mr. Lighthall had taken the chair Geo. Beckwith entered a protest against any man voting who had a short time ago voted at the republican caucus, Oren Thacher was chosen secretary, and the tellers were B. B. Turnbull and F. H. Sweetland.

After the permanent organization had been effected W. R. Lehman, without any apparent cause, arose and called on all those who called themselves followers of the old-fashioned democracy to gather in the basement of the town hall, and they would hold a caucus of their own. Some 54 according to the first vote cast for delegates at the regularly called caucus (87 votes being cast) did migrate to the room below.

The regularly called caucus then proceeded to elect 14 delegates to the county convention that will name delegates to the state convention to be held in Grand Rapids, August 3rd. They are as follows:

Frank H. Sweetland, O. A. Burgess, Chas. Kaereher, Bert Taylor, Hiram Lighthall, H. D. Witherell, Chas. Fish, Joseph Sibley, John Runciman, Adam G. Faust, Frank Leach, B. B. Turnbull, J. J. Rafferty and J. S. Gorman. Whole number votes cast 87.

The following were then chosen as delegates to the county convention yet to be called for the nomination of county officers:

James S. Gorman, Hiram Lighthall, Charles Fish, Frank Leach, Herman Gieske, James Runciman, Henry Gorton, Henry Heschelwerdt, Frank Sweetland, Lewis Emmer, Chas. Hummel, H. D. Witherell, Joe Sibley and Peter Merkel. Whole number votes cast 89.

Delegates to the representative district convention yet to be called, which resulted as follows:

H. Lighthall, H. D. Witherell, Frank A. Leach, J. J. Rafferty, Lewis Emmer, Chas. Fish, Walter Leach, Chas. Hummel, James Wade, Ed. Chandler, H. Gieske, F. H. Sweetland, Matt Hauser and K. Otto Steinbach. Whole number votes cast 83.

THE BASEMENT CAUCUS.

After breaking away from the regular caucus the bolter met in the basement of the town hall and were called to order by George P. Staffan who read the call and stated the object of the meeting, after which the following officers were elected: Geo. W. Beckwith, chairman; C. W. Maroney, secretary; and Jas. Taylor and J. P. Foster were chosen tellers. The body then proceeded to ballot for three sets of delegates to attend the coming conventions. Those who were chosen to attend the county convention today are as follows:

Wm. R. Lehman, George W. Beckwith, Ed. Weber, George P. Staffan, James Taylor, C. W. Maroney, A. G. Faust, John Liebeck, Henry Gorton, Rollo Beckwith and Howard Brooks. Whole number votes cast 65.

The following were named to attend the county convention to nominate county officers:

George W. Beckwith, J. E. McKune, Wm. R. Lehman, C. W. Maroney, John P. Foster, Joseph Helm, Daniel Conway, James Taylor, Manfred Hoppe, John Kilmer, Martin Eisele, Patrick Smith, A. G. Faust and George P. Staffan. Whole number votes cast 65.

The following were named to attend the district representative convention: James Taylor, James Bachman, Joseph Liebeck, Wm. Caspary, Joseph Weber, Frank Staffan, Albert Eisele, Jacob Eder, August Hoppe, A. O. Burgess, G. Albert Young, Peter Oesterle, Daniel Shell and Timothy McKune. Whole number votes cast 62.

CHAPTER XII—Continued.

The conspirators found in this place, the hurried report which reached him said, were evidently the head and front of the whole conspiracy, and he had given orders to have them brought before him, so as to make a terrible example of them all before proceeding to dispose of the rank and file. With such damning evidence of their guilt there would be no need for delay, and he would act at once. Those guilty of the capital crime he would surely end in their conviction and ignominious death; the others he would summarily sentence to Siberia.

He fairly gloated over the prospect, and cast eager glances at the clock awaiting the news that the daring and desperate leaders would soon stand before him. "By Heaven!" he exclaimed, "after this there can be no barrier to my successful advancement. The czar cannot afford to pass without signal recognition this evidence of my zeal and ability, and to reward it as it deserves."

He was in this delightful frame of mind when suddenly the door leading to his private apartments opened and the countess entered the room. He turned. "Congratulations, me, Katherine!" he exclaimed, and then suddenly stopped.

His wife's face fairly frightened him. Katherine Karsicheff as she entered the room was deathly pale. Her eyes, beneath the contracted brows, shone with a fire that was almost of a greenish tint. Her features twitched convulsively, and her whole manner betrayed such a frenzy of anger that her husband stood aghast at the terrible apparition she presented. In her hand, crushed and half torn, she held an open letter.

"For God's sake, Katherine, what has happened?" at length said Karsicheff, after the countess, in a very paroxysm of passion, brought down her hand on the table till it quivered, and then sank into a chair, overcome for an instant by the violence of her agitation.

"Disgraced before St. Petersburg—humiliated before Russia—oh! but I shall not stop here—I will go to the czar myself—the insult must be avenged—the I will have satisfaction—thus the countess raved in broken sentences, and this was her only reply to Karsicheff's inquiry as to the cause of her agitation.

"What does it mean?" thought Karsicheff. "Surely she can have heard nothing of the czar's growing impatience with my administration. Even so, the events of to-day will set all right again. I—"

The countess broke in upon his surmises. Rising to her feet, she came to where he stood expectant, and in a voice choking with rage said: "You are my husband—Olga's father—what can you do to avenge this insult?" and she thrust the letter into his hand.

Karsicheff glanced at the paper. It was the letter written by Alexis Nazimoff. He could hardly trust himself to speak. To give utterance to his own feelings, which were scarcely less intense than those of Katherine, would be to fan the flames of her raging anger to uncontrollable fury, and Karsicheff well knew that once worked up to a pitch of hysterical passion, his wife was about as easily controlled as a hungry lioness.

He waited and said nothing. Katherine watched him for a second. His silence had exactly the opposite effect upon her to that which he had anticipated. He had made a mistake.

"Why don't you say something, you shoot him like a dog—you must—"

The violence of her feeling was too much for her, and she sank into a chair, vainly trying to find words to express the rage that was choking her.

Karsicheff, now that his wife had ceased speaking, sat regarding her with mingled anger and apprehension. He felt, as has been said, the insult, but he doubted the wisdom of resenting it there and then. Before he could decide what to do, the door opened and Nicholas entered.

Katherine, with her face turned away, rose and without a word left the room. She would not betray her bitter disappointment even to her own son.

Nicholas watched his mother with painful anxiety. He could not fail to notice that she was deeply agitated. "What has happened?" he said to his father; "surely she has not heard it yet?"

"Heard what?" asked Karsicheff. Something in the tones of Nicholas' voice struck him with a feeling of apprehension. "Heard of what?" he repeated.

Nicholas turned. "The—the rumor—that—"

"Go on! Good God, don't mutter and stammer like a child. What is it?" asked Karsicheff, in a fever of impatience.

"The rumor that you have already been deposed, and that Nazimoff has been appointed your successor."

"My God!" Constantine Karsicheff pressed his hand to his heart as if he had been shot. Nicholas sprang forward and supported him to a chair. Karsicheff gasped painfully for a moment, and then with an effort said: "Is it—is it true?"

"I fear it," was the reply. "Another emissary of the Nihilists has been at work, even in the imperial palace, and the czar has summoned a council of ministers. Nazimoff was sent for by his majesty early this morning. Some account of the occurrences of last night at the Nazimoff palace has reached the czar this morning, and he sent for him to thank him in person for resenting the refusal of the girl to play the national hymn. He was furious when he learned that the affair occurred in your presence, and that the girl was permitted to escape by you. He feels convinced that had she been arrested, she would have been found to be an active Nihilist."

"But my arrests—the wholesale raid I am making to-day?" eagerly inquired the minister.

"All St. Petersburg is talking of it, but the opinion seems to be that you waited too long for your own welfare. You should have done something before."

"Done something!" These words, uttered by his own son, brought back to the mind of Karsicheff the fact that as nothing had reached the palace yet of his great work, there was still hope. The reflection gave him a grain of comfort. He rose to his feet.

"All is not lost," he said, with an assumption of confidence, "all is not lost. I have dealt Nihilism its death blow. The czar must recognize that. Meanwhile, I will order more arrests and begin the summary disposal of the Nihilist leaders. Your mother's influence at court is still powerful—we must summon that to our aid. No, all is not lost! We can yet be saved!"

Even as he spoke the bell connected with the ante-chamber of his office sounded, indicating that some of his subordinates desired an audience. He gave a word of caution to Nicholas to keep silent about the disquieting rumors to his mother, and then gave the call-bell on his table a single stroke. It was the signal to enter.

Radloff appeared. "Your orders have been carried out, your excellency," he said, "and the prisoners are on their way here."

"Very well, bring them before me the moment they arrive," said the minister, and his subordinate withdrew.

"Now," exclaimed Karsicheff, "I shall be in a position to ask an audience of the czar, but it will be after I have begun my work of punishment as soon as these wretches arrive. And, by Heaven!" he went on excitedly, "I shall not spare them. Go to the palace, find out what you can, and spread reports everywhere of my work. Give it to be understood that I shall show no mercy, and take care that you spread the report so that it will reach the czar."

Nicholas, glad in his own mind to get away from his father's presence, instantly departed. He had scarcely quitted the room when the countess again entered. This time she was in a different mood. A calm determination was expressed in her voice and by her actions, and she came at once to the desk where the general sat. He feared another outbreak, and was silent.

"Constantine," she said, "have you told Nicholas anything of Nazimoff's letter?"

"Nothing."

"That is well," continued the countess. "Let the secret be known only to us. Let it remain a secret. Now listen: This letter from Alexis Nazimoff bears traces of having been written hurriedly. There was no indication in his manner toward Olga—toward us—last night, that such an idea had entered his mind. What caused the change? The appearance of the girl Iida Barosky. Now is Iida Barosky and the student of the Conservatory, with whom he was infatuated two years ago, one and the same? I have no doubt of it. So it was the appearance of this girl that has caused Alexis Nazimoff to thus wantonly outrage my feelings—yours—to insult us all. There is but one thing to be done. This girl must be removed—from my path—from his life—removed at once and forever. This done, he will have no motive to refuse marriage with Olga, and all will be well. But we must act at once!"

"But," ventured to suggest Karsicheff, "he does not love Olga, or he would never have written that letter, and Olga may not love him. Suppose—"

"I care not whether he loves Olga or not, or what her feelings are. I have announced this marriage to the court, to society throughout Russia. My mind has been fixed on this match for years. I have sworn that Olga will become the wife of Alexis Nazimoff, and I will move heaven and earth to that end. Iida Barosky is at present the only obstacle in my way. I demand of you that she be removed from my path."

"I DEMAND THAT SHE BE REMOVED FROM MY PATH."

"But how?" asked Karsicheff. Katherine regarded him with a look of supreme contempt which she made no effort to conceal. "You ask me this question!" she exclaimed. "You, the minister of police, with an army of spies and gendarmes at your command, and you invested with unlimited powers by the czar! You ask me, having a city infested with Nihilists at your mercy, and a cause to suspect the girl in her disloyal refusal to play, 'God Save the Czar!' Give me an order for her arrest at once. I will see that it is executed."

Constantine, swayed by the imperious will of the countess, mechanically drew a sheet of paper toward him, and began to write. Suddenly he looked up.

"Will not the arrest of this girl fan the flames of Alexis' passion?" Katherine saw the point. "You are right," she exclaimed. Then she sat in thought a few seconds. "I have it," she went on with marked exultation in her voice. "Let me write. She seized the pen and dashed off a few lines. It was the work of less than two minutes. Then rising with the letter she said, 'Ring the bell.'"

"What would you do, Katherine?" began Karsicheff. "I—"

"Ring the bell. I will carry out my plan."

Karsicheff saw that further resistance to the iron will of his wife was useless.

He rang the bell at once. Radloff entered.

"See that that letter reaches its destination and bring the person here," said the countess.

Radloff bowed and looked toward Karsicheff. But he got no look in return.

Katherine spoke again. "You have heard my command—obey it. Go!" Radloff made a low bow and retired.

SEES A VAST RAND OUTPUT.

London Promoter Predicts That Gold Product Will Be Trebled.

A circular sent out by a large and respectable London house predicts an annual output from the Rand before long of £50,000,000. The best record for all South Africa is £16,500,000.

"It is reckoned that five years after the resumption of normal conditions some 18,000 stamps—four times the present quantity—will be at work, and that the gold mines of the Rand alone could by that time employ 40,000 additional skilled white and 300,000 additional unskilled colored laborers. The mining companies in which this company is mainly interested have at present only 38 per cent of the unskilled laborers required, to say nothing of the number which will be necessary when the expected expansion of the Rand industry takes place.

"Within the next ten years—given favorable conditions—the output may increase to as much as £50,000,000 per annum. Just as the flow of gold resulting from the Rand's large production in 1898 and 1899 had a markedly beneficial effect on the world's money markets, it is probable that the considerable advance we confidently expect as soon as we have secured a plentiful supply of unskilled labor will, in a much more accentuated form, benefit the world at large and foster trade, commerce and industry."

Naturally this prophetic announcement is accompanied by offer of "Kaf-fir shares" for sale.

The One Thing Needful. There is little doubt that the ideal form of government is a despotism—if one could only find the ideal kind of a despot.

In Quaint Old Dorchester

(Special Correspondence.)

It is now nearly 275 years since that goodly company of strong hearted men and women came together at old Plymouth in England to fare across the seas in the good ship Mary and John. They knew not what the future had in store for them in the strange land to which they were going, but their hearts were full of hope and they had the unfailing courage of the Pilgrims who had preceded them across the water ten years before. They were among "many most Godly and Religious People that Dissented from ye way of worship, then Established by Law in ye Realm of England, in ye Reign of King Charles yet first, being denied free exercise of Religion after ye manner according to ye light of God's Word and their own Consciences."

It was in this spirit that the founders of the old town of Dorchester left their homes in England, in the year 1630, to found the first settlement in what is now the great county of Suffolk, in Massachusetts. It was on the 20th day of March when the Mary and John, a ship of 400 tons burden, set sail from Plymouth, in command of Capt. Squibb. It was on the 30th of May, when the ship, with her 140 passengers, reached what is now the site of the town of Hull, and set foot for the first time on the soil of America.

It was through some misunderstanding that the passengers on the Mary and John were not landed at some point on the Charles river, for that was their destination. However, soon after landing, ten of the men took a small boat and rowed to the Charles river in search of some favorable place of settlement. The result of this little expedition was the founding of Dorchester some time about the 1st of June and in the vicinity of what is now known as Savin Hill. But it was not until four months later that the town was given the name of Dorchester. Up to that time it had retained the Indian name of Mattapan, for the land had belonged to the tribe of Indians known as the Massachusetts, whose chief, Chickataubet, was favorably disposed toward the settlers.

One of the most notable of the passengers on the Mary and John was Roger Clap, whose grave may be seen in the burying ground adjoining King's Chapel. He died on the second day of February, in the year 1690-91, when he was 82 years of age, and the governor and the entire general court followed his remains to the grave. We are also told of him that "he was of a cheerful & pleasant disposition, courteous and kind in his behavior, free and familiar in his conversation, yet attended with proper reservedness."

Roger Clap was 21 when he came to Dorchester, and three years later he took to wife pretty Johanna Ford, a damsel of sweet 16, who bore him fourteen children, to whom were given such names as Preserved, Wait, Hope-still, Unite, Supply, Thanks and Desire.

Roger Clap took his young bride to the home he had built for her, and here they lived until the year 1665, when he removed to the castle of which he was commander for the next twenty-one years. At the time of the war of the revolution the house was owned and occupied by Capt. Lemuel Clapp, a relative of Roger, and for a time soldiers were quartered in the house, and marks made by the bayonets of the soldiers were to be seen in some of the rooms of the house. Roger Clap kept a diary, and to it we are indebted for much valuable information regarding the hardships of the early settlers of Dorchester. He it was who wrote: "And it was not accounted a strange thing in those days to drink water, and to eat sump or hominie without butter or milk. Indeed, it would have been a strange thing to see a piece of Roast Beef, Mutton or Veal; tho' it was not long before there was Roast Goat."

Another passenger on the Mary and John was Robert Pierce, and the house he built is almost as ancient as the Clap house, for it was built about 1638 or 1640, and its owner was known as Robert Pierce.

House of Roger Clap. as Robert Pierce "of ye greater lotts," William Dana Orcutt has given us this description of the Pierce house in his "Good Old Dorchester": "Great beams, 12 by 14 inches thick, are pinned together like the ribs of a ship, giving a heavy appearance to the low, wainscoted rooms. The deep windows, with window-seats, are closed with the same wooden shutters which were put up to defend the early occupants from the attacks of the Indians. Between the outer wall is the identical seaweed, gathered when the house was first built, to serve the double purpose of protecting the inmates from the severe cold of the winter, and also to serve as a safeguard against the sharp arrows of the savages. As a further protection from Indian attacks, there was a trap door in the garret, which led to a secret chamber, so ingeniously constructed that now the flooring has been laid solidly above it, one examines the lower story in vain for a trace of the room, which is at least six feet square."

The Blake house is supposed to have been built about the year 1650, by Elder James Blake, who left it by will to his son John Blake in the year 1700. The house is in the rear of 150 East Cottage street. Elder Blake was a man of prominence in the Dorchester of his day. He held public offices for twenty-seven years, and was a ruling elder of the church at the time of his death.

The Dolbear house was built by Isaac Royal in the year 1720. His daughter, Zeblah, married John Dolbear, and lived in the house which has since that time been known as the Dolbear house. Mr. Dolbear was one of the "odd sticks" for which New England has been famous ever since the landing of the Pilgrims. One of his fads was chickens, of which he had more than any man in Dorchester. Settling hens made themselves comfortable under the chairs and sofas in his parlor, and they had the free run of the house. His pigeons would perch upon his shoulders when he walked about the yard and his hens would gather around him by scores when he walked among them.

On the corner of School and Washington streets is the old house in which lived the famous sculptor Ball Hughes, from the year 1851 to the time of his death in 1868. In this house the sculptor entertained Charles Dickens and Jane Stuart, the artist, and many other distinguished men and women. Across the street is an old house, in which Edwin Booth lived for a time, and here his daughter was born.

One of the fine old mansions of other days in Dorchester is the Walter Baker house, standing far back from Washington street, at the corner of the park. It was built about the year 1750, by some of whom there does not seem to be any record. The first occupant of whom we have information was Lieut. Gov. Oliver, who lived in the house at the time of the revolution. Then Col. Hitchborn purchased the house, and used it chiefly as a summer residence until the year 1817. Col. Hitchborn was a man of distinction, who entertained a great deal. Among his guests in the fine old mansion were such notables as Presidents Jefferson and Monroe, and in 1783 Lafayette was a guest in the house. When Col. Hitchborn came to see him and kissed him farewell.

It is a pity that the old Everett house was razed, for it was one of Dorchester's most interesting old mansions. It was built in the year 1770 by Col. Oliver, a West Indian planter, and the Rev. Oliver Everett came here to live in 1782. Here Edward Everett was born in the year 1794, and here the mother of Edward Everett Hale was born, and here she lived until her fifteenth year.

Many other old houses are still standing in Dorchester, but they are fast passing out of existence.

Canada's Attractions. The Dominion Exhibition is one that attracts hundreds of thousands each year. This year it will be held in Winnipeg, Manitoba (Canada), and with the material assistance given it by the Dominion Government, it will be one of the most successful ever held. Besides the number of special attractions that will be offered, there will be brought together an exhibit of the Agricultural and Industrial resources of Canada such as is rarely attempted by any country. Visitors will be there in large numbers from the United States, owing to the low rates offered by railways, connecting with the Canadian roads. It is expected that Hon. Clifford Sifton, Minister of the Interior, will be there on the opening day to declare the exhibition open. A splendid opportunity will be afforded by this exhibition to meet friends. Hotel accommodations will be quite ample.

Tells Profession by Profile. Little Tommy was paying a visit to Mr. and Mrs. Franklin, old friends of his parents. The young man required a good deal of amusing, and his host and hostess were somewhat at a loss till the latter bethought her of the portrait album, which they went through together with much industry and attention to detail as to the past, present and probable future lives of the persons represented. Toward the end of the book were two of those astounding profiles, cut out of black paper, in which our forefathers—strange people—delighted.

"Those," said Mrs. Franklin, "are my father and mother."

"Oh!" said Tommy. Then he hesitated, and scrutinized them more thoroughly. "I s'pose," he said, "they was chimney-sweeps, wasn't they?"

Wears Large Shoes.

There is a New York barber who wears a number 12 shoe. He was a sergeant in the German army, noted for his stability. He has a brother in the old country whose foot is so big that no ready made shoe can be found to fit him. When he needs a new pair of shoes he buys a side of leather and sends for a shoemaker, who fashions his footgear at home. His foot is the largest in all Germany, about number 27 in size.

Lucky Horseshoes.

Horseshoes which have been regarded for centuries as dispensers of good luck, are being used for table decorations. When silvered or gilded, and made to stand up with the addition of a little wire, they make a very good frame for a menu. Every one knows, of course, that the finding of a horseshoe is, under certain circumstances, supposed to be an augury of good fortune, but probably few are familiar with the origin of this belief. It was all due to the action of St. Dunstan, the patron saint of farriers. According to the legend, St. Dunstan seized the evil one with his red-hot pincers and refused to release his prisoner until Satan promised he would never work mischief where a horseshoe is displayed.

A Matchmaker. Joaquin Miller, the poet, has a collection of original documents that shed a light on many odd phases of early Western life.

Among these documents is a letter that a New England youth wrote in 1860 from Oregon to his father. The letter treats at great length of the scarcity of women in the West, and of the general desire to marry that prevailed among the westerners of that day. It has for postscript: "Say, pap, it might be a good idea to get the girls some new teeth and send them out here."

The Rock Island System has done and is doing notably good work in encouraging immigration to the Southwest. The agricultural and industrial opportunities of that section of country have been persistently and systematically set forth, as a result of which the number of people who have settled in Oklahoma, Indian Territory and Arkansas this spring has been greater than in years. On three days in February and March, over six thousand homeseekers took advantage of the low rates to the Southwest and removed themselves and their belongings to the "Land of Opportunity."

The Unforgotten Song

The years have taught me many things,
But none so sure as this:
That shelter, solace, joy and strength
Are always where God is.

So now, when hope and courage fail
And only fear is strong,
My heart will sing, as in the past,
An unforgotten song.
God is my refuge and my strength,
I will not be afraid;
And though the night be wild and dark,
I meet it undismayed.

MOSE JOHNSON'S FUNERAL
BY ALEXANDER RICKETS

Copyright, 1900, by The Shortstory Pub. Co. (All rights reserved.)

As I sat on the porch talking desultorily with the landlord—the wide, roomy porch, with the creaky, comfortable, splint-bottomed rocking chairs, of the old tavern, not the "plaza" of the garish new hotel, which the younger generation point to pridefully as stamping with an outward and visible sign the village's evolution into a city—I happened to mention—I've forgotten exactly how it came into my mind—having seen Gen. Grant's funeral.

"Humph!" observed the landlord, contemptuously. "You ought've seen Mose Johnson's funeral if you want to see you've seen a funeral. Eh, fellows?"

An appreciative chuckle circulated among the rest of the loungers, and I turned to the landlord, and asked, "Why?"

"Cause it was worth seein'," explained the landlord, scraping vigorously with his jack-knife at the turnip with which he was refreshing himself.

"Whenever any of you out-of-town fellows comes 'round here braggin' about your gorgeous mortuary pageants, like them Gen. Grant's obsequies you just mentioned," he added, after thoughtfully selecting a new point of attack upon the turnip, "it don't faze us. We jest nudge each other in an unassuming way, an' say 'He ought've seen Mose Johnson's funeral.' It was plenty of panoply for simply country folks like us."

"What was it? How was it remarkable?" I asked, curiously.

"Oh, I dunno as it was anyways remarkable, except out here in the country. Mebbe you fellows that live in big cities are used to them," replied the landlord, cautiously.

"Well, let me hear about it, and I can tell better," I urged.

"Then, to begin at the beginnin'," began the landlord, clearing, reluctantly, apparently, for action by depositing the turnip, with his knife stuck upright in it, on the porch railing, "it was all on account of an ordinance we've got here providin' that there shall be no parades unless the mayor gives a permit for it. Last year when the circus struck town we had a crowd-grained, crabbed old feller for mayor, an' when the circus man went to get a permit for his parade he got turned down."

"I want a permit to parade," says the circus man.

"You can't have it," says the mayor.

"I'd like to know why I can't," says the circus man.

"Cause circuses are demoralizin' an' indecent inventions of the devil for lead the young an' unwary onto destruction, an' consequently I don't approve of them," says the mayor.

"Nothin' of the kind," says the circus man. "I'll have you know that this is a great moral and instructin' show that'll benefit an' uplift any community, an' especial any old moth-eaten fossil like you."

"So the two of them had it back an' forth, hot an' heavy. The circus man began, an' the mayor refused; the circus man threatenin', an' the mayor didn't budge; the circus man pleadin', an' the mayor sittin' obstinate; the circus man gettin' madder an' madder, an' the mayor not bugin' an' inch; the circus man cussin', an' the mayor makin' him seventy-five cents per cuss until the upshot of it all was that the circus man had to leave without the permit, but swearin' he'd parade in spite of all the mayors an' permits in creation, while the mayor was vowin' to see him hanged."

DOOM OF GREAT SALT LAKE.

Scientists Say It Will Dry Up Within Half a Century.

Statistics indicate that Great Salt Lake, the Dead sea of America, is doomed—that it is gradually drying up. The opinion now almost universally prevails among scientists that this mysterious body of water, located at an altitude of 4,210 feet above the sea level and 1,000 miles inland, and which has but a single rival, the Dead sea of Palestine, is certain within the course of a half century to disappear from the map. Some scientists, who have made a careful study of the fluctuations of the lake for the past several years, even declare that it will be dried up within a quarter of a century.

Sixteen years ago, in 1886, the area of the lake's surface was estimated at about 2,700 square miles. Taking twenty feet as the average depth at that time, one may estimate 1,505,433,600 cubic feet as the contents of the lake. To-day, according to recent surveys, the lake has an area of about 2,125 square miles. Multiplying this number by 11½, the number of feet in depth of the water that has disappeared and not been replaced, gives 669,778,400 cubic feet as the quantity of water less than what the lake had sixteen years ago.

Observers of the lake have assigned three causes for the shrinkage of its water. They are evaporation, irrigation and a subterranean outlet that some suppose to exist. There are ardent advocates of each of these theories.

He Was in a Hurry.

We were waiting for a train at a station in the country. The station agent combined the offices of trainmaster, express agent, telegraph operator and the rest. He looked wise when you asked him a question, but he wasn't.

"Does the next train carry a dining car?" we asked.

"Wal," he said, looking for a wide crack in the platform before he emptied an overload of tobacco juice from between his teeth. "I can't jest rightly say. I ain't never tuk much interest in them cypars."

"Does it stop at Swamptown?" was the next question. The agent was clearly uncertain on this point.

"Well, when is it due?" we asked, anxious to learn if he was certain of anything about the train.

"Wal, hits due at half-pas 3 or half-pas 4, I fergit which," he replied. "I kinder open up 'bout an hour after dinner and set aroun' till dark. Hit don't make much difference to me when she comes."

"Good Lord, man, don't you know anything about the trains through your own station?" we asked in desperation.

"Wal, now," he said, and it was easy to see that his feelings were wounded; "yer might give er feller er chanst to larn. I ain't had this job but three weeks."—Nashville Banner

Made Temporary Truce.

James VI of Scotland—afterward James I of England—in 1587, being much perturbed by the constant quarrels among his nobles, determined to end all disputes by a summary process of reconciliation. Accordingly, having assembled the nobles on Sunday, May 14, at Holyrood, in the lodging of Sir James Matland of Thirlstane, he drank to them and caused them all to shake hands. On the following day, after banqueting them in Holyrood, he caused the earls of Angus, Montrose, Mar and Glencairn, also the master of Glamis, and many others—all deadly enemies to one another—to march hand in hand two abreast from the abbey to Holyrood along the Canongate and High street of Edinburgh to the town cross, where the provost and bailiffs had a table spread with wines and sweetmeats. Here the company once more drank to their eternal amity and separated. But a few weeks later they were lying in wait, as of old, to kill one another.

Eternal.

Since the star Sirius crossed the Milky Way 'Tis but a single point in space and time— The sixty thousand years but yesterday That seems to us so vast and so sublime.

There is no measure for the infinite. The Past, the Now, the Future are as one— Through sixty million of our years the Light Has flown through space from that great central sun.

There never was a time there was no light. Or when Creation's work was first begun. No time when Thought, the act of Mind, In flight, Did not outstrip the swiftest light of sun.

Don't Carry Cigars.

I desire to suggest to cigar smokers: Don't, at this time of the year, or, in fact, at any time, carry one or several cigars in the left or right upper waistcoat pocket. The body is a rare absorbent, and, especially in summer, with wide open pores, if tobacco is in close contact, there is likely to be an absorption of its principles which will result in vertigo, faintness and perhaps worse.

Enjoying the best of health, I could not account for some very peculiar sensations at times which gave me the utmost alarm. Even in bed I would experience something approaching a sinking spell. I traced the cause to my habit of carrying cigars in my waistcoat pockets.—New York Times.

AGRICULTURE

Skill in Draining Land.

It is only in modern times that land drainage has been reduced to a science and the drainage engineer has put in an appearance. Previously to this time it was thought that any fool knew enough to dig a ditch in the soil and line it with stones or drain pipe and fix it so the water would run through it. This was very nearly true in sections of New England when land drainage came into vogue, for the reason that the ditch dug was large and the drain was made of stones. The flat ones were laid for a cover over the wall of smaller ones, and frequently the drain itself was a foot wide and more than that high. It was difficult to stop up a drain like that by the sediment that ordinarily came in with the drainage water. Then, too, the fall was generally so great that the water would push itself through anyway, carrying the sediment along with it. But when agriculture extended to the plains of the west the proposition was a different one. The great prairies were so flat that it was difficult often to discover in which way the natural fall lay. Then, too, the stones were absent and the drain tile had to be made out of clay. This gave rise to a business that was new to the country, that of making drain tile. The farmers, of course, did not want to buy drain tile a foot in diameter on account of the cost. So the smaller sizes were used, and at one time the practice was to put in tile only two and a half inches in diameter. This has now increased again to four inches, which is generally conceded to be small enough for the desired results, when properly laid.

But with tile came a new problem, that of making the ditch so perfect that the tile would lie even everywhere. The flow of the water being languid required to be unobstructed. The current in the tile would seldom have enough force to wash out the sediment and if there was a low place in the whole length of tile that would soon become stopped up. The novice tried to lay some of these drains and did so. But in a few years many of these drains became stopped up, so that they ceased to work. They had then to be dug up or the land left in the condition it was in before the tile was put in. After a good many expensive experiences of this kind the farmers began to employ civil engineers to run their lines and superintend the laying of the tile. This has been found to be the only safe way in the prairie states. There are some farmers now that think they are smart enough to do their own drainage work, but the attempt often proves very costly and will continue to do so at times. We cannot advise this sort of economy. It is cheaper to pay a drainage engineer to do the work properly than it is to have a drainage system that will not work or one that has to be dug out and reconstructed.

Wheat Scab.

From the Farmers' Review: We enclose two heads of wheat gathered in this county. They show blasted spots upon them. The farmers in the western half of the county are complaining that their wheat crops are badly damaged in this way. What is the cause of this?—Saline Brothers, Pulaski County, Kentucky.

We submitted the heads of wheat to Professor Garman of the Kentucky station, who replied as follows:

The heads of wheat enclosed by your correspondents are affected with what is known as wheat scab, a disease due to the attacks of a pinkish or yellowish fungus, described long ago by an English botanist under the name Fusisporium culmorum. The disease has at times been complained of by Indiana and Ohio farmers, but is not common in Kentucky, this being the first complaint that has come to me from this state. The rather cold, damp spring just closing has encouraged such diseases and probably other Kentucky farmers have suffered from the same trouble, but failed to recognize it.

The fungus attacks the chaff and seed from the outside, causing them to change in color, and the seed finally shrivels. Often only the terminal portion of a head is affected, but frequently the injury begins at the middle, where it may at first affect only a single seed and its glumes.

It is doubtful if any treatment that can be considered practicable would help the affected wheat, and it seems probable anyway that the disease is one of those that are not to be controlled, because very largely the result of weather conditions.

Many a farmer applies the wrong kind of fertilizer to his fields and loses the use of the money so spent. What is the use of adding to an element that may be so abundant in the soil that it will last for hundreds of years?

Agriculture is becoming very popular with the people in the cities, and a large number of well-to-do men are preparing their sons to enter the agricultural colleges of the country.

A continual weeding out should be practiced in the dairy. Successful farming is largely the keeping of weeds out of the growing crops. Successful dairying is keeping the poor cows out of the dairy herd. There are other things to be done, but this is one of the more important.

TOO MUCH FOR HER, EVEN.

It is Wonderful What One Can Eat Before Stomach Rebels.

On a certain voyage there sat across the table from us a pleasant English lady. I noted her daring experiments with admiration mixed with terror.

On the bill the English chef gave us such American delicacies as bluefish, pompano and red snapper. I am extremely fond of all three, but not so far from their native waters; I do not care for fish as it is being carried around the globe in various stages of decomposition.

But the English lady had a magnificent digestion, and she even tackled our American buckwheat cakes for breakfast—for they are found on several liners' lists.

She ate potted shrimps; she ate deviled lobster; she ate duck, grouse and snipe that had died in the dim past; she ate bloater paste; she ate apple dumplings, strawberry jam, raspberry jam, gooseberry jam, Stilton, Cheshire, Cheddar and Gorgonzola cheese.

But on the fourth day out she ate some Welsh rarebit. Then even her sturdy stomach gave way. The English lady collapsed. I think she ascribed it to a northeasterly gale that kicked up a slight sea. But I knew better.

When she reappeared at table she had an appetite, but nothing like her old one. Some of the glutinous and oleaginous dishes she passed unheeded by. One day she refused frankfurter sausage and sauerkraut.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Willing to Pay.

A lively looking porter stood on the rear of a car in the Pennsylvania depot. A fussy and choleric looking old man clambered up the steps. He stopped on the platform, puffed a moment, and then turned to the young man in uniform and said: "Porter!"

"Yes, sir."

"I am going to St. Louis. I want to be well taken care of and can pay for it. Do you understand?"

"Yes, sir; I hope."

"Never mind what you hope. You listen to what I say. Keep the train boys away from me. Dust me off whenever I want you. Give me an extra blanket, and if any fellow has the berth above me slide him over into another one. I want you to—"

"But, say, boss, I—"

"Don't talk too much, young man. Here's $2. Now I want to get the good of it. Not a word, sir."

The train was starting. The porter swung off to the platform.

"All right, boss," he shouted. "I'm powerful sorry you wouldn't let me talk, but I ain't going out on that train."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Greek as Some Collegians Get It.

The professor of Greek in one of the great universities near Chicago recently gave to the members of his class a sentence for translation, which properly rendered into English is:

"Cyrus, I give this to you to satisfy you for the present, but if you need anything consider that all my possessions are yours."

One of the young gentlemen who are endeavoring to master the intricacies of the higher education furnished this as his idea of the manner in which the passage should be turned into English:

"O Cyrus, I now give this to you in those being present, in order that it is necessary for those if any one shall give it is necessary, he said that all you be such."

The professor endeavored to convince the student that there was something the matter with his translation, but the young man insisted that he had it just right and had preserved the idea in full.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Destiny.

Soul and body, follow me: Up above ye shall not find, Leave the vale of laughing ease Where the trees o'erhang the stream.

Come, my body, joy of sense Shall not henceforth be thy spoil, Leave, my soul, thy fellow-fre: Who aspires alone must toil.

Foetal riot, lure of love, Up above ye shall not find, Pine trees loom their spears of black O'er our track beneath the wind.

Whispering their music dies As we rise, and now I seek Lonely wastes of silent snow Spread below the windy peak.

Mote-like in the vale one stands Lifting hands to the waving flag, Signs that kindle, eyes that burn, Shall not turn me from my track.

On the ridge the mounded stones Hide his bones who tried the height, Though the daylight wane and fall, I must scale the peak to-night.

Soul and body, can ye fear When so near my battle ground? Fear the darkness's eye would flee Could ye see where I am bound. —Philip F. Graves, in the Spectator.

Lost Her Pencil.

Here is one of Speaker Cannon's stories: "When the county of DeKalb was organized in my state—I wasn't there, but I know it is true—a man named Shaff was chosen by the ballot casters as justice of the peace in one of the precincts. The justice lived in one of the regular old-fashioned log houses, and he held court in one of the rooms of his home. The old fellow was not much on 'book larin' and he deputized his good wife to act as docket keeper and do any writing or figuring which might be necessary.

"One day there was a trial on and the little room was crowded to its limit. Mrs. Shaff was busy taking notes, but dropped her pencil and began a search for it. The justice announced:

"This case will have to stop for the court has lost her pencil."—Washington Times.

A Beautiful Young Society Woman's Letter.

ST. PAUL, MINN.
531 Wabasha St.
Dr. Hartman, Columbus, O.

Dear Sir:

"I took Peruna last summer when I was all run down, and had a headache and backache, and no ambition for anything. I now feel as well as I ever did in all my life, and all thanks to due to your excellent Peruna."

—Bess F. Healy.

The symptoms of summer catarrh are quite unlike in different cases, but the most common ones are general lassitude, played-out, tired-out, used-up, run-down feelings, combined with more or less heavy, stupid, listless, mental condition. Relief for food and the ability to digest food seems to be lost.

Skin eruptions, shallow complexion, biliousness, coated tongue, fitful, irregular sleep, help to complete the picture which is so common at this season.

Peruna so exactly meets all these conditions that the demand is so great for this remedy at this season of the year that it is nearly impossible to supply it.

Peruna Contains No Narcotics.

One reason why Peruna has found permanent use in so many homes is that it contains no narcotics of any kind. Peruna is perfectly harmless. It can be used any length of time without acquiring the drug habit.

Thousands of women suffer from pelvic catarrh and catarrhal nervousness and don't know it. If you feel fagged out, begin at once taking Dr. Hartman's Peruna. It will relieve your catarrhal affliction and all your organs will be restored to health. Buy a bottle to-day, as it will immediately alleviate your case.

GAVE COLOR TO GEMS.

Jeweler's Trick Not One Easily to Be Detected.

"There are tricks in all trades." In a town in Virginia there dwells a man who sells semi-precious stones, which are much admired because they are unusually brilliant.

A few days ago a customer asked to see some specimens of yellow topaz.

"Ah!" he said, holding one up to the light, "this shows more remarkable coloring than any I have seen. How much do you want for this stone?"

The lapidary held it up to the light and told the price.

"I'll take it," said the customer. "I have never seen a yellow topaz which showed such remarkable colorings of red and blue."

Then the customer observed that the windows which faced the sunlight were set with a border of small panes of blue and red glass, and the light coming through them was reflected in the facets of the stone.

Afterwards he took the gem out into the cold light of the street and found that it was a plain yellow topaz. The blue and red lights were missing. They had been produced by the stained-glass windows.

Pun Won Promotion.

Perhaps the earliest instance of ecclesiastical promotion won by a pun is that of a curate named Joseph, who was prompted by Swift to take this text for a sermon preached in St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin, before the vicar, "Butler," the Duke of Ormond: "Yet did not the chief Butler remember Joseph, but forgot him."

HEALTH OF MANILA

IT HAS BEEN IMPROVED UNDER AMERICAN RULE.

Unsanitary Conditions Have Been Changed for the Better Throughout All the Islands—Death Rate Decreased.

American administration in Cuba led to the cleaning up of her unhealthful, dirty towns and to the stamping out of the dreaded yellow fever epidemics. Recent work comes that a like creditable word of reform is in progress in the far Philippines, where both imperialist and anti-imperialist must find commendable at least this one feature of American occupation.

In the five years the Americans have been struggling with the Filipino question, the board of health for the Philippine islands has brought about some reduction of the excessive death rate, has bravely and effectively battled with cholera and bubonic plague. A heavy burden has rested upon this branch of insular service; both during the organization under military government and the one formed later under civil authority.

Though in general the Filipinos are considered a robust race, they are less able than the white man to withstand acute diseases. Large numbers die annually of fever. In the spring the disease is especially disastrous. A certain author, writing of life in Manila, speaks of May as "month of fever and funerals." At that season many deaths occur, also from acute indigestion, caused by the eating of too much new rice. The board of health labors zealously to instruct the people in both precautionary and curative measures.

Leprosy has been existent in the islands for a long time—the emperor of Japan in 1633 sent a company of 150 lepers to the Philippines, consigning them to the mercy of the priests whom he knew had cared in the past for such unfortunates—and the St. Lazarus hospital was founded for the benefit of the afflicted with this curse. It is said the Spaniards, though bestowing care upon the sufferers, paid almost no attention to checking the spread of leprosy; those in present having authority over the lazarettos are engaged in a plan for the organization of a separate leper colony.
It being considered necessary to take this step owing to an increase of FILIPINO HUTS.

the disease in certain portions of the Philippines.

To its credit be it said the Spanish government years ago provided Manila with good drinking water, and city and suburbs are adorned with public fountains; but under Spanish rule sanitary conditions otherwise were anything but favorable, the lack of a sewer system being a constant evil. During the wet season, localities given over to the very poor presented a sight calling for radical reforms: the thatched-roofed huts stood over pools of stagnant water, the only drainage a ditch cut around each square;
when the dry season came on and evaporation commenced there resulted the fever mortality that might have been expected. The task of improving these quarters was taken in hand by the board and a great amount of sanitary work accomplished. There has been a thorough cleaning up of the worst districts, and a strict inspection of the buildings maintained.

In the history of the bubonic plague
there is chronicled no other success equal to that won by the plucky battlers of the fearful malady in Manila. System and boldness characterized the work, and the number of cases of plague were reduced from the 471 of 1901 to the three of 1902. Immediately the plague was stamped out, Asiatic cholera in a malignant form broke out in the Philippines.
Though the disease became epidemic, the board of health of Manila labored so untiringly that the per cent. of population attacked in the city was much lower than in the outlying provinces, where time was lost in enforcing health regulations.

Recent investigation of the continued excessive mortality in Manila shows that the death rate among infants is very high, and attention now is centered on educating the people as to the care of their offspring. Physicians and nurses have been assigned to the various health districts, and their services for mother and child are to be given free of charge.

At first (as is usually the case when semi-savages come in contact with hampering sanitary restrictions) the ignorant inhabitants of Manila evaded and rebelled against the work of the board of health, thought there was some of the new ruler's cruelty and tyranny; but gradually they are learning that these efforts of the health officers are being made on their behalf, that here, instead of enmity and oppression, is instance of friendly protection, provision for their welfare.

White Blackberries.

By means of cross-breeding Mr. Luther Burbank, of Santa Rosa, California, has developed a variety of blackberries which are perfectly white, and as bright as snow in the sunshine, and so transparent that the seeds can be seen inside the ripe fruit. The seeds are said to be unusually small, and the berries are as sweet and meltingly tender the finest of the black varieties. The familiar Lawson berry is described as the great-grandparent of the new white variety, to which has been given the name "Iceberg." The white berries are as large as the Lawtons.

Curious Way to Give Charity.

John B. Kerr and James Leslie, two wealthy oilmen of Bradford, Pa., sat in the lobby of a hotel in Lima, O., the other evening when a Salvation Army girl came in and passed her tambourine. "I'll chip in $5, Jim," said John.
"Go you, Jack," said James. They began tossing $5 bills into the tambourine in turn, then wrote checks for the same amount until the tambourine held $500.
"Guess that's enough, Jack; let's stop," said James. "Go you, Jim," said John,
and they adjourned.

The Eyebrows.

To increase growth of eyebrows make a cream of vaseline, half ounce;
tincture of cantharides, half ounce;
oil of lavender, five drops; oil of rosemary, five drops. Mix thoroughly and apply to the eyebrows with a small brush once a day for a week, then once or twice a week.

don't.
Tommy—You'd be a smart chap to

Came to Him in a Dream.

The idea for "Jekyll and Hyde" came to Stevenson in a dream, and he began it as soon as he rose on the following

The first draft of the tale was finished within seven days.

"Did you ever have any difficulty in making your cook keep her place?"
"No, indeed; she began to run the and she's never stooped."—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

An Easter Rule.

Until lately children under 14 used to pay half fare on the Vienna trans-ways, but the rule has been altered so that any child above three feet one and one-half inches in height will in future have to pay the full fare.

An Insane Merchant.

denly became insane the other day as he was walking along the street and threw away $12,000 he had in his pocket.
A policeman luckily was at hand and saved it.

A Considerate Burglar.

Though taking all the money he could find, a burglar who broke into a woman's house in Paris left a note saying he could not find it in his heart to take her jewels lest they were heirlooms.

France is the only great European country which is not increasing her im-

"what's imported and domestic?"
"A servant girl," replied pa, prompt-

The Convention of Macabees in Detroit—Rates and Elections.

The supreme tent of the Knights of the Macabees of the World opened in Detroit on Tuesday, and was welcomed by Gov. Bliss and W. C. Maybury, the mayor, with the glad hand.

Supreme Commander D. P. Markey, in his annual report set up strong arguments and gave numerous figures, gleaned from the experience of the order, claiming the advisability of the readjustment of the rates of assessment as proposed by the supreme tent.

The majority of the delegates were evidently with him and foreshadowed a raise of assessments.

The L. O. T. M. in their triennial session heard reports of officers which show a remarkable and healthy growth. Miss West, the supreme record keeper, in a long and valuable report, says:

"I report that the past triennial term has exceeded in growth and financial progress the record of all the preceding terms combined. Beginning the term with $4,657 members, we added during its three years over $8,000 new members, closing with a membership of 13,621, and having today a total membership of over 150,000, nearly doubling in membership during the term. Our emergency fund of $196,400 has grown to $388,788—a gratifying showing. Our total of certificates in force has increased from $62,103,033 to $99,881,443. The volume of business handled in our offices has doubled. We stand first among the women's orders of the world, and have, during the term, passed from tenth to seventh place in point of membership among the fraternal beneficiary societies of North America."

West, the supreme record keeper, were both unanimously re-elected, and in appreciation of their combined efforts, they were included in one resolution. They have had phenomenal success in the management of the order. Anticipating the action of the convention, the clerks in Mrs. Hollister's and Miss West's offices sent each a magnificent bouquet of American Beauty roses.

The matter of raising the rates, was happily adjusted, the increase affecting only new members. The Supreme Tent elected the following officers:

Past Supreme Commander—D. D. Aitken, Flint, Mich.

Supreme Lieutenant Commander—S. F. Bowser, Butler, Pa.

April 12, last, while crossing the Campus, he was struck by a boy on a bicycle and thrown to the pavement. A bone of one of his hips was fractured, but that trouble was being successfully coped with and the fracture was mended at the time of death. Mr. Thompson's fatal illness greatly puzzled Drs. McLean and Mann. No signs of complications could be detected and his liver and kidneys were in good condition. The senator simply seemed to have given up the fight and lacked the vitality necessary to carry him through.

A Brief Chronicle of All Important Happenings

TO A FINISH.

The Second Strike of Butchers Will Make a Fierce Fight.

The great sympathetic strike to aid the butcher workmen involves nearly 100,000 men and will effectively tie up the meat industry of the United States.

The packers had one last chance to avert the strike by acceding to the propositions of the unions before Monday. The packers, however, evidently made up their minds to fight, as telegrams were sent out through the country ordering non-union men rushed to the packing centers. The strike in its effect will be one of the most serious in the history of the nation. In fact, if it lasts any length of time, the country will find itself face to face with a meat famine. The decision to call a sympathetic strike was reached after all negotiations between the unions and the packers had been broken off.

The joint conference lasted from 9 a. m. until noon. The unions insisted on the reinstatement of butchers and casing department workers within forty-eight hours and all the other strikers within ten days. The packers absolutely refused to do this, contending that the original agreement would have to stand. Neither side would give in one inch, and finally the conference broke up.

Mrs. Maybrick Free.

Mrs. Florence Maybrick is free. She left Truro, Eng., Wednesday, on her way to France.

Mrs. Maybrick, who was Miss Florence Elizabeth Chandler, a member of a well known and prosperous Mobile, Ala., family, was married July 27, 1881, in St. James' church, Piccadilly, to Jas. Maybrick, of Liverpool. She was then 18 years old. Her husband was over 40 years of age.

In the spring of 1880, Mr. Maybrick became ill and in a few days he died. His brothers investigated his death and charged Mrs. Maybrick with the murder of her husband. A long trial followed, and a number of doctors swore that the deceased died of arsenical poisoning.

The defense proved that for 20 years Mr. Maybrick had been a confirmed user of arsenic and that he had taken doses large enough to have killed a dozen ordinary men.

Mrs. Maybrick was eventually sentenced to death by the judge, Sir Fitz-James Stephens, who spoke for two days in charging the jury, and shocked even the English bar and many American jurists compared it in venom and prejudice to the diatribes of Jeffries in the "Bloody Assizes." He subsequently died in an asylum.

Military Rule Over.

Before the end of the present week there will be no military rule in the State of Colorado. The troops in Teller, San Miguel and Las Animas counties will be withdrawn and the administration of affairs in these counties left to the civil authorities. The withdrawal of the troops will also bring about the dissolution of the military commissions now in existence in the Cripple Creek district. The results above referred to will be effected by orders from Gov. Peabody, who has arrived at the conclusion that conditions in these counties have become so peaceful as to no longer require the presence of the military.

Folk Is Nominated.

After an all-night session, marked by intervals of disorder and commotion that could not be quelled by the gavel, the Missouri Democratic state convention unanimously nominated Joseph W. Folk, circuit attorney of St. Louis, for governor and adopted a platform which promises vigorous, unrelenting crusade against corruption and hoodlums in Missouri in the event of Democratic supremacy at the polls.

In accepting the nomination Folk said: "If I am elected to a larger field of opportunity, I propose to make Missouri the most unhealthy place in all the land for corruptionists to operate in."

A new power canal enterprise involving an expenditure of $10,000,000 has been put under way at Niagara Falls, by the Niagara Irrigation & Water Supply Co. The water will be taken to Devil's Hole, below the falls, where there is a sheer drop of 300 feet.

William H. Siegel, aged 30, together with his team of horses and a wagon, were blown to atoms by an explosion of glycerin at Lima, O. A few pieces of flesh were found of the man and beasts, while a big hole marks the spot where the explosion occurred. Siegel was unloading "empties," having just returned from "shooting" a well.

A Joke and a Murder.

A joking remark passed between friends resulted in a murder in Arcade saloon in St. Joseph.

Cook, aged 50, known as the "man of the state," is the murderer. Burton Griswold, aged 35, of the town Transit, is the victim.

Cook and Griswold met and the latter made some half-poking, half-serious remark about one of Cook's ploys. Hard words followed, but they separated it was thought the matter would be dropped. An hour later in the Arcade saloon upon a word walked up to him and struck a blow on the jaw which felled like a log. Griswold's head struck marble pillar and he died almost instantly.

Cook was immediately arrested, on the way to the jail his friends interfered with officers and a fight ensued, and the police were forced to fight their way through the crowd. In the hand, it is feared an attempt may be made to liberate him from jail by force. Cook has been associated in business in Benton Harbor for number of years and enjoys a reputation. He, too, was a man of character.

Lost Finger and Ring.

Dugan Thompson, of Davidson, to the ice house to get some ice, throwing out a chunk he jumped to the door to the ground rather than climb down the ladder. In making the leap a ring on his finger caught on a protruding nail and the weight of his body caused the ring to slip off and fall below the second story. Dr. Lock amputated the stub, the ring and the portion of the finger cannot be found.

SENATOR HANNA GENEROUS.

Kissed Mary Little Girls and Paid for the Privilege.

The late Senator Hanna sat in a special car, delayed at the railroad station in Napoleon, Ohio. Some of the townsfolk found out that he was there, and they visited the station. Among the callers were two little girls about 12 years old. They climbed up to the car and one of them asked: "Be you Mr. Hanna?"

"That's what I am, little one."

"Will you please give me one of your pictures?"

Hanna ordered the porter to bring out one of his lithographs.

"Here is my picture, and a kiss besides." And, suiting the action to the word, he kissed both of the little girls square on their mouths, and in payment handed them each a quarter.

"And it was worth it," he nodded.

Five minutes later little girls came marching down the hill toward the station in blocks of five and ten and battalions.

Hanna was panic stricken.

"The two little girls have spread the news of the kisses and the quarters through the town," said Col. Herrick, "and they are coming to claim them."

Herrick was right for Hanna spent the next hour distributing quarters and kisses.

Locks Like "Mother Hubbard."

The latest thing in automobile clothes is a "Mother Hubbard" linen duster. It is of extraordinary length and of generous width. In fact, a rear view of it resembles nothing quite so much as one of the old-fashioned "Mother Hubbards."

When the average man who wears one gets out of the car he has to hold it up to prevent walking on it. The ribald small boy has fun with the wearers of these garments, and usually asks if he knows he has his nightgown on.

The nearest thing to the motorist's "Mother Hubbard" in the way of sporting attire is the long white coat worn by the umpire at a cricket match. On any public cricket grounds, such as in Prospect Park, the scolding by-standers seldom fail to inquire of the umpire: "What butcher shop do you work in?"

An inquiry than conveys an excellent impression of the sportsman's appearance.—London Answers.

Thought It a Puzzle Picture.

Jesse Lewisohn of New York is a discreet and learned collector of pictures. The other day he was conversing with Robert Henri, the painter.

"Art galleries and exhibitions," Mr. Lewisohn said, "are interesting places to haunt. I wish I had noted down all the odd comments I have heard in them."

"Only last week I stood behind two young women from the country in a Fifth Avenue picture shop. One of them called the other's attention to an atrocious animal piece."

"Two Dogs, after Landseer," she read from the frame. "I can see the two dogs, but where is Landseer?"

The other young woman studied the painting closely.

"Where is he?" she said. "I guess this must be one of them puzzle pictures."

His Source of Inspiration.

On Ibsen's table beside the inkstand was a small tray. Its contents were extraordinary—some little wooden carved Swiss bears, a diminutive black devil, small cats, dogs and rabbits made of copper, one of which was playing a violin.

"What are those funny little things?" I ventured to ask. "I never write a single line of any of my dramas unless that tray and its occupants are before me on the table."

I could not write without them. It may seem strange—perhaps it is—but I cannot write without them," he repeated. "Why I use them is my own secret."

Preferred Exodus to Numbers.

Dr. Henry Van Dyke bears his honors somewhat shyly.

"Never mind, doctor, there's safety in numbers," remarked a facetious fellow-clergyman at a recent reception in Princeton, where the popular author of "Fisherman's Luck" was surrounded by an admiring circle of ladies.

"Yes, but more safety in Exodus," replied Dr. Van Dyke, as he made good his escape.—New York Times.

Look for Big Sardine Catch.

During the years 1902 and 1903 there was an almost complete failure of the French sardine catch. This year, however, the indications point to a fine catch and the packers and exporters are hopeful for the first time since 1901. It now seems certain that the absence of sardines last year and the year before was due solely to the cold and boisterous spring.

All Steel Passenger Car.

The Metropolitan West Side Elevated railroad of Chicago has ordered an all-steel car for the purpose of experimenting and securing information with the view of fixing upon a design for general use in the near future.

Very Likely.

"It is said," remarked the man with the quotation habit, "that a king can do no wrong."

"That saying," rejoined the wise guy, "probably originated with a man who held four aces."

Power of Wealth.

La Mont—Goldwood is very sick. La Mont—He is rich enough to have a doctor's consultation?

La Mont—Rich? Why, he is rich enough to have bulletins issued.

WITH THE WORLD'S BEST WRITERS

WE ARE THE PEOPLE.

In accordance with an order just issued by Secretary Hay, the inscriptions "United States Embassy" and "United States Consulate" will no longer appear upon embassy and consular seals. Instead "American Embassy," "American Consulate" and "American Consular Agency" will be substituted on all the new record books and documents.

While the familiar abbreviation, "U. S. A.," may be missed by many, this is a sensible change. In spite of the fluff protests that now and then come down from Canada, citizens of the federal states are universally known as Americans. The United States representatives abroad are invariably called Americans.

When Secretary Hay first proposed the change that has now gone into effect the Canadian press declared that the people of the United States had no more exclusive right to the name of Americans than had the people of any other country in North or South America.

But national titles fit history and usage. It is not customary abroad to designate an American as a Canadian, American, a Mexican American, or a United States American. The real Americans are the Americans of the thirteen states. The real Americans are the citizens of the nation developed from the thirteen states. That is the verdict of history. That is international usage.

Had the civil war resulted in disunion, it might indeed have been different. As it is, the people of the union of states are the Americans. They are the American people.

It is an old dispute, but Secretary Hay's order officially settles it.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

MILITARY CONSERVATISM.

In his recently published reminiscences of the Duke of Wellington the late Rev. G. R. Gleig recalls that that famous commander was at all times strenuously opposed to new inventions.

He scorned, for example, such novelties as the Minie rifle, and good old "Brown Bess," the clumsy musket of Waterloo, was his ideal. It was with the greatest reluctance that he allowed flint and steel to give place to percussion cap. This is only an extreme instance of a feeling not uncommon among military men, nor is it unnatural. Most of the inventions that have revolutionized warfare have been due to civilians. Have they benefited the world? It is at least hard to show that they have tended to make war impossible, as was so generally held a few years ago.—Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

TWO VETERANS OF THE NAVY.

We cannot feel too tenderly toward the old ships that stood by us faithfully in times when the young nation needed their strength and powers.

The frigate Constellation, now at the Brooklyn navy yard, was first commissioned 107 years ago. She was the smallest of the three famous ships authorized by the direct intervention of President Washington on the matter of the reorganization of the navy in 1797, as she is the last of them to carry at her masthead the pennant of active duty.

Of her sister ships, the United States, once known as the "Old Wagon," was destroyed during the civil war, while the other, Old Ironsides, of immortal memory, has found a snug harbor in the Boston navy yard.

These old frigates were once the bulwarks of a struggling nation. They carried the flag in every sea and played their part so well that their deeds have become priceless national traditions.

The Constitution and the Constellation are the last visible links that bind us to deeds that stand forth in our naval annals as something to be proud of. The Constellation was in numerous brave fights off the coast of France and captured several ships of superior force. The country will see to it that both she and her veteran sister ship, the Constitution, remain an inspiration to the new men of the navy.

EDUCATED BUSINESS MEN.

Students of the history of education are familiar with the time when the object of the collegiate foundation was almost solely to train young men for the priesthood or the ministry. Then the desirability of general scholastic culture as a preparation for entry into the law was recognized, and lastly, as a preparation for entry into medicine. The ministry, the law and medicine—these almost up to our time have been the three learned professions. Except for the comparatively small number attracted by the notion that an academic education was fitted to gentility, the vast majority of academic pupils were destined, in the order named, for the pulpit, the robe and the chaise. From the three typical American universities the greater number of graduates now look forward to business careers or to technical pursuits which are closely related to business. The business can of the future is plainly to be a man of scholastic education. This tendency is likely to have an effect on business as it already has an effect on our universities.—New York Globe.

Used Philosophy in Fishing.

Herbert Spencer once won a curious wager. He was staying for a fishing holiday in the house of Sir Francis Powell, the president of the Scottish academy, and while angling for trout he happened to drop his eye glasses into a deep pool of the river. In the evening he related his misadventure to his host and the guests, and said that he was prepared to bet that he would recover the pince-nez from the bottom of the pool. His friends declared that this was an impossible feat, but Herbert Spencer still offered to make the bet. His challenge was accepted by one of the visitors. Upon the following morning Spencer returned to the house with the missing eye-glasses. He had fastened a strong magnet on the end of his fishing line and fished for the glasses until it came into contact with their steel rims.

Pump Water by Electricity.

Electricity carried overland by wire some distance is being used in Oregon to pump water in irrigating farms. If the experiment proves successful, the system will be developed further.

Proved Beyond a Doubt.

Middlesex, N. Y., July 25.—(Special.)—That Rheumatism can be cured has been proved beyond a doubt by Mrs. Betsey A. Clawson, well known here. That Mrs. Clawson had Rheumatism and had it bad, all her acquaintances know. They also know she is now cured. Dodd's Kidney Pills did it. Mrs. Clawson tells the story of her cure as follows:

"I was an invalid for most five years caused by inflammatory Rheumatism, helpless two-thirds of the time. The first year I could not do as much as a baby could do; then I rallied a little bit and then a relapse. Then a year ago the gout set in my hands and feet. I suffered untold agony and in August, 1903, when my husband died I could not ride to the grave."

"I only took two boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills and in two weeks I could walk on myself and saw my own wood. I dug my own potatoes and gathered my own garden last fall. Dodd's Kidney Pills cured me."

Rheumatism is caused by uric acid in the blood. Dodd's Kidney Pills put the kidneys in shape to take all the uric acid out of the blood.

A Queer Question.

Prof. Leopold Barisen is in charge of the great X-ray machine in the Educational building at the St. Louis fair, and, naturally, in this position, he is called upon to answer innumerable strange questions.

Prof. Barisen recounted the other afternoon the old queries about X-rays that some boys had put to him in the morning.

"I was rather in the position," he said, "of a Harvard instructor who was lecturing on oxygen."

"Oxygen," the instructor said, "is essential to all animal existence; there could be no life without it; and yet, strange to say, it was discovered only a century ago."

"What did they do, then," a student asked, "before it was discovered, sir?"

Rail Rate Oddity.

It costs nearly $2 more to go on an excursion train from Berlin to Basel, Switzerland, than from Basel to Berlin. The difference is due to the fact that in one direction the baggage is free, but not in the other; wherefore a reduction is made in the latter case in the price of the ticket.

Lion and Unicorn.

The lion is the emblem of England and the unicorn of Scotland. On the union of Scotland and England in 1603, one of the lions was removed from the British coat of arms, and the unicorn substituted.

RACE DONE?

Not a Bit of it.

A man who thought his race was run made a food find that brought him back to perfect health.

"One year ago I was unable to perform any labor and in fact I was told by my physicians that they could do nothing further for me. I was fast sinking away, for an attack of grip had left my stomach so weak it could not digest any food sufficient to keep me alive."

"There I was just wasting away, growing thinner every day and weaker, really being snuffed out simply because I could not get any nourishment from food."

"Then my sister got after me to try Grape-Nuts food which had done much good for her and she finally persuaded me and although no other food had done me the least bit of good my stomach handled the Grape-Nuts from the first and this food supplied the nourishment I had needed. In three months I was so strong I moved from Albany to San Francisco and now on my three meals of Grape-Nuts and cream every day I am strong and vigorous and do fifteen hours' work."

"I believe the sickest person in the world could do as I do, eat three meals of nothing but Grape-Nuts and cream and soon be on their feet again in the flush of best health like me."

"Not only am I in perfect physical health again but my brain is stronger and clearer than it ever was on the old diet. I hope you will write to the names I send you about Grape-Nuts for I want to see my friends well and strong."

"Just think that a year ago I was dying but to-day, although I am over 55 years of age most people take me to be less than 40, and I feel just as young as I look." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

Look for the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in each pkg.

SOME SUGGESTIONS FOR SHIRTWAIST MEN

are always making jokes. Punch, on the other hand, evades these mistakes, "because it is really not a humorous, but a critical journal."

The American comic paper is like the professional funny man at a party. You listen and laugh for a while and then you want to murder him."

Water Everywhere.

"Water exists in nearly everything," said a temperance lecturer. "The doomed sailor, dying of thirst on his raft, contains a pound of water to every pound of flesh. Thus, if he should weigh 140 pounds, the poor fellow would yield, under hydraulic pressure, no less than seventy-five pounds, or five pails, of pure water."

"In the air this sailor breathes there is water—five grains of water to every cubic foot. There is water in the ring upon his hand. It is an opal ring, and opals are composed of water and flint."

Washington Wheat Output.

The wheat farmers of eastern Washington expect to harvest a crop of 30,000,000 bushels this season. They planted a larger area than ever before, planted a favorable season. Much of the harvesting is performed by modern machines, which head the grain and thresh it at the same time. Five men and thirty horses harvest twenty acres a day.

Victim of Circumstance.

Zola's method of studying the characters—many of which were so revolting in his great novels show that he takes the mind of his character and places it on the operating table as the surgeon places the body which is to be operated on. He studies every nerve, every sentiment, every thought, as the surgeon follows the veins and arteries laid open before his eyes. To Zola's mental vision certain conditions, certain environments, on certain characters, certain minds, would bring about certain results, and from the results of this surgical diagnosis of the mentality of his character he elaborates the life, actions and thoughts of the men or women whom his brain has created, says the New York Herald.

No surgeon can operate upon himself. No woman can know herself as she really is; therefore she can only see the truth about herself in so far as that truth is known to her by the training she has received, fitting her for the station in life to which she was born. Mayhap, I agree with the playwright that no woman can tell the truth about herself. Yet she is not a liar, only the victim of circumstances.

STOLE COMPANION'S MONEY.

Samuel Riter Took Herman Sump's Cash Yesterday Morning and Left for Parts Unknown—Officers Looking for Him.

Samuel Riter, aged 21, claiming Allentown, Pa., as his home, and who has been at work here for the past month, yesterday forenoon about 9 o'clock entered the room of Herman Sump and took a purse containing about $38.

Both of the young men have been working at the cement plant of late, and boarded at the home of Wm. Selfe where they occupied separate rooms. They were paid off Tuesday night and before retiring Riter saw Herman counting up the money he had on hand and made the remark if he had that much cash he would go to St. Louis to the exposition, and Herman replied that as soon as he had enough to make it $40 he would put it in the bank. Yesterday morning they both went to work as usual but Riter after working a short time quit and returned to his room. After a time some of the employees told Sump that Riter had gone to their boarding place and he at once thought of his purse which he had so carefully put away, and finally about 10 o'clock he concluded he would go and look after things in his room, but on arriving there found his cash gone. He reported the matter to the officer, who at once telegraphed the officials of all the nearby towns to be on the watch for the thief. Riter bought a ticket for Detroit over the electric line about 9:15 but it is not known to a certainty which way he went, and as we go to press no trace has been found of the fugitive.

MRS. ROSE SHANAHAN.

Rose Howe, daughter of Martin Howe of this place, was born in the township of Lyndon, August 28, 1867, and passed away at the home of her cousin, Mrs. Derum of Detroit, Saturday, July 23, 1904. Her entire life has been spent in Lyndon, and she was a woman very highly esteemed by a large circle of friends.

She was united in marriage with Edward Shanahan October 5, 1892, and was the mother of four children, three daughters and one son, who with her husband, father, one sister and brother are the surviving members of her immediate family.

The funeral was held from the Church of Our Lady of the Sacred Heart Tuesday morning, conducted by her pastor, Rev. Fr. Considine, who in well chosen language delivered a very fine sermon to the large assembly of friends who had gathered there to pay the last tribute to their departed friend and condole with the afflicted relatives. The interment was at Mt. Olivet cemetery.

RESPECTED CITIZEN AT REST.

Henry Schultz died at his home in this village Sunday, July 21, 1904, in the 74th year of his age. He was born, Hamburg, Germany, November 28, 1830, and was married in his native town in 1860, and for a wedding trip the young couple left immediately for America, locating at Dearborn the same year and residing there until 1875 when they moved to Dexter township, and two years ago became residents of this place.

The deceased leaves the wife of his youth, and eight children, six of whom are sons and two daughters, to remember a kind husband and loving father, and all of them have the sympathy of a large circle of friends in their bereavement. Mr. Schultz was a member of the German Evangelical church at Four Mile lake, and the obsequies were held from the Chelsea M. E. church Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, being conducted by the pastors of his church, the Revs. Pohley, of Freedom, and Frey, of Manchester, assisted by Rev. E. E. Caster, D. D. The place of interment Oak Grove cemetery.

HELP THE BOYS OUT.

The people of Chelsea will have an opportunity to show whether they want a ball team the rest of the season or not, as on Saturday the Selling & May team, of Detroit, will play here, and if a good crowd turn out for the game the boys will continue to play out their schedule, but if the people do not turn out it is said that the Junior Stars will disband after August 5. The Stars have put up some good games and it is now up to the people of Chelsea to support the team and not knock them simply because they have lost a few games. The Selling & May team are one of the best in Detroit, and a good game is expected. Beissel will undoubtedly make his first appearance in the box. Turn out and help win, but do not knock.

On Terms of Familiarity.

Henry Labouchere was once asked what he called the prince of Wales—now King Edward—when he dined at Marlborough house. "Well," said Labby, "when the soup comes on I address him as 'your royal highness.' The fish often softens the reserve, and I get a little chummier, and often as not I call him 'Wales,' while during the entrees and joints I get quite familiar, and he becomes 'Eddie,' while he slaps me on the back and dubs me 'Labby!'"

Concerning Dreams.

A relation between the character of dreams and the intensity of sleep has been shown by the experiments of N. Vashide. In profound sleep the dreams refer to latent recollections of long-past events and matters seemingly having no connection with the present; but the dreams of light slumber are inspired by recent occurrences and excitements, and are sometimes connected with what is transpiring around the sleeper.

Practical Dress to wear to the Races

The Very Dressy Shirt Waist Suit

Comfortable Summer Costume

Lingerie Blouse of Tucks and Valenciennes

IT REALLY would seem as though Dame Fashion, who is usually and popularly supposed to forget the very existence of all but her wealthy clients, had suddenly turned her attention to the girl who has good taste in dress and but little a year wherewith to gratify it.

Witness the vogue of the French hand-made lingerie blouse. Imported from the fashionable haunts of France, and with a goodly duty added to its price in transit through the custom house, the exclusive and specialty shops have no difficulty whatsoever in obtaining anywhere from $3 to $6 apiece for them. And since the average woman of fashion, who considers them suitable for all day and every day wear, usually buys them by the half-dozen at least, one can readily figure out to what a sum these necessary little items quickly mount.

Here is where the girl who is clever with her needle can indulge her tastes, and be in the very first flight of fashion—so far as her blouses are concerned, at least—and that for a mere fraction of what the shops demand. As already hinted in this column the midsummer sales are a time of joy to the girl who sews, for then all of the odd lengths of exquisite goods are closed out for whatever they will bring. Four, or even three yards of sheer white goods, will fashion her a blouse; and odd lengths of lace, entre-deux, embroideries, and any number of these dear little medallions, can be had for a very little. The bias tape, too, which comes already cut and folded, and may be had in several widths, is a source of much satisfaction; and there is simply no end to the clever designs that can be developed in these. It takes some planning, though, but the results will more than repay the time and thought and trouble involved.

waist pattern from heavy wrapping paper; and the French needlewomen who turn out such exquisite work always have a piece of glazed-paper calico basted over this, so that there is a colored background to every stitch they take, and this relieves the eye of strain. Have the shoulder seams come just to the shoulder joint; do not have it dropping on the arm, for that style will soon be entirely passe. The French models fasten in the back, and you may as well follow the imported designs all the way through. The front is then all in one piece, and the back in two. Take a plain sleeve, with a single seam for pattern, for you will tuck and decorate the goods before laying it on the pattern and cutting it out.

medallions, or whatever design you intend to use, to the calico, and try the effect. The combination of these with the bias bands fastened to fill in with is extremely modish; and the narrow Valenciennes insertions are also used in fanciful curving designs, circles, diamonds, bowknots with flying ends, and such.

Make your yoke or shoulder portion as fancy as you can; and to this the blouse portion is applied either with grouped tucks or shirring. Smocking is much used abroad, and quite elaborate designs can be fashioned in this with very little trouble. Make your cut to match the yoke, and tuck, smock or shir your sleeve just as you choose.

Many of the new importations are finished with a little shallow band around the neck, and no collar, just a whipping of lace to soften the throat line.

plan is to make the collar so that it may be worn separately, and have it en suite with the yoke.

Still more importations show the round or, as it is called abroad, the St. Cecilia neck; and when the blouse is of sheer mull or some such dressy fabric, then it were wise to cut it low and fashion a little chemise to be worn with it on occasions when a low-neck waist is not desired. An exquisite one seen the other day at a smart wedding was fashioned after this wise, and the wearer, a girl with a fortune, proudly announced that it was all her own handwork, copied from an imported model, and that she had some left from a $5 bill when she had paid for the choice remnants from which it was made.

And since we are on the subject of blouses, girls, one little caution must be whispered. Do not buy your dress shields too large, for they show up enormously in these sheer and dainty semi-transparent waists. The dress shield is something that should be unseen, and give while performing its duty.

tucked out of sight will, if sprinkled with a little talcum powder, do all the work of a large one, and still remain hidden.

And still another hint as to how fashion favors the economically inclined is shown in the way that all sorts of inserted and applied trimming schemes are used. Panels are decidedly in vogue, overlaid and inserted plaits of all kinds make their appearance on the imported models, with an applique band at the foot. This suggests several little economies, and the smart girl will not be slow to fashion her rainy-day skirt thus, cleverly combining the new foot trimming with the necessary skirt binding that effectually protects the edge of the skirt and saves her smart, shiny black shoes from rubbing at the same time.

The vogue of the taffetas costume remains unabated; and while black is, as always, much used, the tendency is to employ many of the less somber tints. Not only is this modish weave used for the omnipresent shirtwaist costume, the thing that should be unseen, but it fashions the drop skirt in one with the dancing frocks. And, by the way, the new dancing frock is built upon different lines from what we know as the ball gown. The dancing frock conspicuously lacks a train, it either just escapes or it barely touches the floor all around; and the girl can just give herself up to the enjoyment of the dance and not have to worry as to whether her train is being stepped on or her frock dragging on the floor.

But in order to attain just the correct outline in this, to have that graceful outward sweep from hip to hem, the drop skirt or petticoat must stand out well from the ankles, and the modes and methods of the modern dressmaker in this direction are interesting. The girl who fashions her own dainty dancing frocks will be delighted to learn that an insertion of the new linen-princess haircloth in her skirt or mohair drop skirt or petticoat gives just the desired result, and instead of stiffness her sheer organdie or muslin or chiffon frock has just that graceful swing that present fashions demand.

ferred to silk for summer wear—then the little fashions are a featherbone cord run in each hem, and the frock comes back from the waist with all its pristine flare preserved.

The fad for fruit trimmings on the hats is still another turn of fashion's wheel that tends to economy. A wreath of, say, cherries, which are so fashionable, will last twice as long as will a wreath of forget-me-nots or roses. They will even withstand sun and rain, neither will they fade or crush. The same applies to the little currants, and the trailing vines of blackberries with their artistic foliage that are seen to advantage upon almost any color of straw.

Altogether, this is the day when to be fashionable is to be more or less economical, even if you don't intend to be. The girl who desires to make a smart appearance upon the minimum of expenditure is assuredly the favorite of the fickle dame, for the passing moment at least; and if she uses her brains and her fingers there is no reason why she should not establish a reputation for clever dressmaking and
