TENTH SENATORIAL DISTRICT CONVENTION

Consisting of Jackson and Washtenaw Held at Grass Lake Thursday Afternoon and A. J. Peck Was Nominated.

The 10th senatorial district convention was held in the town hall at Grass Lake last Thursday afternoon was oratory music and enthusiasm. Besides 48 delegates from Jackson and Washtenaw there was a big crowd of visitors and it was a happy crowd.

Mr. Warren, of Ann Arbor, called the convention to order and in doing so he spoke of the absence of W. W. Wedemeyer, the chairman of the senatorial committee, and went on to deliver an earnest and eloquent speech, outlining the object of the convention and of the harmony of feeling existing between the two counties.

Captain E. P. Allen, of Ypsilanti, was made chairman and he delivered a speech of 30 minutes.

Following the captains speech John F. Forward, of Jackson, was made secretary and the usual formalities of committees was dispensed with, except that of the resolutions these being selected as follows: Gilbert S. Loomis, of Jackson, chairman, and James E. Harkins, of Washtenaw, and Robert Campbell, of Jackson.

While this committee was at work the nominations were called for and when the roll was called Mr. Davis, of Jackson, in a speech brimful of metaphors presented the name of Archie Peck.

When Washtenaw was called Frank E. Jones made a speech in favor of ex-Senator Andrew Campbell, of Ann Arbor but in view of the harmony of feeling commented upon he afterwards withdrew and proposed that Mr. Peck be made the unanimous choice of the convention. This called for renewed applause and it was evident that Mr. Peck was a big favorite.

The resolutions were next submitted and they were brief but to the point consisting of an endorsement of the republican platform, the support of the national and state candidates and expression of confidence in Theodore Roosevelt, statesman, patriot and ideal citizen.

After this came some singing from James Harkins, who is a candidate for county clerk, and Julian Bennett, who gave his German song and when endorsed "I Had But Fifty Cents," which pleased the crowd.

A speech followed by ex-Senator Andrew Campbell, which was eloquent and a recital of the fundamental principles of our government. He referred to Mr. Warner, candidate for governor, as a man who did his own thinking and as a clean man spotless in his reputation as a man and a citizen. He said the republican principles are the shaping power of the world's government. They are founded on the rock of reason and they will stand the test of time.

Following this Captain Allen, as chairman said such a convention as this had been should carry its influence in the coming campaign, and he felt no uncertainty about the outcome.

The district is composed of Washtenaw and Jackson counties.

The motion to adjourn was carried and a general visit took place.

RUSH HAS SET IN.

Students Are Flocking To Ann Arbor—Increased Attendance In Engineering Department Looked For.

Ann Arbor is again commencing to assume the lively appearance which the presence of students adds to the town. College opened its doors Tuesday to all departments and of course there is a rush in these early days of students to get registered and select rooming and boarding places. These are Secretary Wade's busy times in making out slips of registration which will entitle the students to have the privilege of paying Treasurer Soule the entrance and annual fees.

No attempt is made at any estimate for the coming year, but Secretary Wade says that prospects for an increased attendance are good. One thing seems to be certain and that is the engineering department will have a marked increase, owing to increased facilities and the great reputation which the department has built up.—Ex.

PROTECT HOME LABOR.

Shall We Have Our Skilled Work Done at Home or Abroad—Which Would Be Best For All?

The unqualified denunciation of a protective tariff by the democratic platform "as a robbery of the many to enrich the few" makes it very evident that the usual quadrennial campaign against the protection of our industries will be carried on with great vigor. Whatever may be the real or supposed injuries inflicted on the consumers of American goods by our manufacturers, the remedy proposed would be a terrible one.

Virtually it is a proposition to have our skilled work done in foreign countries and to set adrift our skilled workers to seek employment in the unskilled vocations. It is a proposition to encourage capital invested in manufactures abroad and discourage it at home. To increase the number of mills in Europe and close them in America. To increase the demand for labor on the other side of the Atlantic and diminish it on this side. It is strange that a party, eminent in its professions for the welfare of the working class, should be foremost in advocating measures to take from that class their employment to give to people of other countries or to compel them to accept the wages of the downtrodden of the Old World.

FOOTBALL GAME.

The Ann Arbor Wolverines defeated the Chelsea Juniors in the opening game of the season Saturday afternoon by a score of 10 to 7. The features of the game was the team work of Ann Arbor and the playing of the Bennett brothers and Kelly for Chelsea. Time of halves, 30 minutes. Touchdowns for Ann Arbor, Peterson; for Chelsea McLaren. Referee, Lee Palmer. Umpire, Howard Holmes.

The Boy.

A headless boy he was and troublesome
Beyond compare. Vexatious, wilful,
He hated books—a boorish, untaught
child.
I looked upon his face; no good can come.
I said, for nothing innocent is there.
One day I came upon the traitor's
A sleep beside the water, where the glad,
Bright sunlight warmed the hazy autumn
air.
The vicious brow was smooth and fair,
No trace
Of sullenness about the lips that smiled
As if a vision holy held the child.
In awe I looked upon that angel face.

The Gift of Roses.

BY ERNEST HERBERT

Dicky Amber had often read of cases like his own—with this important difference; the stories usually ended happily whereas he knew that for himself it would be madness to hope for anything save disappointment.

He was in love, desperately, madly in love with Nella Renshaw, a clever and popular actress, the admired of all admirers.

He enshrined her in his heart the very first time he saw her, which was the day on which he commenced his engagement as violinist in the orchestra of the London theater at which she was playing a leading part.

He made no effort to check this hopeless love, which grew and grew as he watched her night after night.

He could only see her when the action of the piece brought her well forward upon the stage; but he soon learned to know when these places came, and was always ready for her so as not to lose a single second of the time that she was in his view.

Once her eyes met his upturned gaze. That night he walked to his poor lodgings with his head among the stars. After that he found her look turned toward him on several occasions. On these nights he lay awake for hours asking himself whether the smile in those beautiful eyes could possibly have been for him; but by morning he had called himself a fool for imagining for one instant that what was obviously an accident in her acting, could have any significance for him. Yet, for all his reasonings, those glances made him absurdly happy.

Then came a blow that hurt him cruelly. Nella was to tour in America. Even the pleasure of looking at her was now to be denied him. He would not see her for a long time—perhaps never again.

A farewell performance was announced, and, sick at heart, Dicky took his accustomed place. Before then he had always felt a thrill of pleasure and pride when came the thunders of applause in acknowledgment of Nella's superb art, but on this night it filled his heart with sadness and a great lump came to his throat. This was the last time he would see the triumph of the woman he loved—the last time.

Then, as the curtain fell, he did a thing that he had never dared before to do. He quickly made his way to the stage door and waited there to watch her departure. As she passed him the fragrance of her dainty silks and laces seemed to hold his whole soul in bondage, and when her rustling skirt brushed him he nearly swooned.

She carried a magnificent bouquet that had been presented to her, and when she was half way to her carriage a rose dropped from it to the pavement. Dicky darted forward and picked it up. Murmuring something, he knew not what, he stepped to the side of the carriage and handed it to her.

As she took it she looked straight

Clever and popular.

into his eyes. Then, quickly drawing another blossom from among its lovely fellows, she smilingly thrust it with the other back into his hands.

"Keep them, and—thank you," she said.

As the carriage drove off Dicky was staring in wonder at the exquisite flowers. Because of this he did not see that which would have filled his heart with an even greater joy. Her eyes had filled with tears.

Every now and again, during the year that followed, audacious thoughts that filled Dicky's mind as he gazed on his most cherished possessions—two withered roses. Soon after, however, he usually read in some newspaper one of the numerous accounts of Nella's trans-Atlantic success. Then his splendid hopes collapsed dimly. Yet they were always there, and though he did not know it, grew stronger and stronger until they became part of his life.

At last Nella came back. She was to open the Autumn season at her old theater and once more Dicky could see her every night. He played first instead of second violin now and his position had been altered to one from which he had a far better view of the stage.

It was not that thought, however, which set his heart pounding with excitement as he went toward the theater that day—the day on which he was to behold her again after a year. In his heart there was a great hope that she would recognize him in some way or another. Surely she must. Then he would wait at the stage door and perhaps she would speak to him again.

Blither and terrible was his disappointment. Not even a glance came his way.

The next day he was not at his place in the orchestra. Instead he sat at home in his room before a table covered with manuscript songs. They were those which he had written out of his great love.

Slowly, almost mechanically, he took them up and scanned every note. Then, having seen that all were as perfect as he could make them, he gathered them together in a heap.

He was going away—where he did not know or care. During the last year he had so lived on the almost unconscious hope born in him by the gift of roses that the realization that it had been founded on nothing had dazed his every faculty. It was as though he had fallen from the clouds.

At first when the wish to leave the place of sorrow had come to him, he had determined to burn his songs; but they were his children—the only children of his love—and he could not. Then came a wild desire that she should know of his heart's longing, and, after examining them all to make sure that they, at least, were worthy of her attentions, he gathered them together to send them to her.

He took the withered roses from his breast. She should have them, too. Pressing them passionately to his lips, he laid them tenderly on the top of the pile.

Then the stupor that had dulled his understanding went and in its place an awful despair seized him. He laid his head on his arms and sobbed—sobbed as only can the man from whom is taken the only hold on life.

For a long while he lay. Then there came a tap at the door. He did not hear it. The door opened gently and a woman entered. It was Nella. Quietly she stepped to the table. Her eyes rested on the roses. She read her name on the dedication of the song on which they rested, and a great sob half of sorrow, half of joy, rose in her throat. Very tenderly she touched the bowed head.

Dicky started up and stared at her without comprehension. Then a light came into his eyes. "You," he said, huskily.

"Yes, I," she answered, smilingly.

"But—but—I—"

"You?" he said, huskily.

"You?" he said, huskily.

"You?" he said, huskily.

"You?" he said, huskily.

"You?" he said, huskily.

"You?" he said, huskily.

"You?" he said, huskily.

"You?" he said, huskily.

"You?" he said, huskily.

"You?" he said, huskily.

"You?" he said, huskily.

"You?" he said, huskily.

"Tell me," she said, stopping him; "why you kept those flowers?"
Though her voice was without emotion, Dicky saw something in her face that sent the blood leaping in his veins. He rose and drew her to him.
"Because I love you," he whispered, his voice almost fierce with joy.
It was Nella who wept now.

"Dicky," she sobbed, "when I didn't see you in the orchestra I fancied all sorts of dreadful things, so I asked your address from the doorkeeper—and came here to find out what had happened to you. Why didn't you write to me while I was away, Dicky? I thought you would understand when I gave you the flowers. Oh, Dicky, Dicky, I have loved you ever since I looked down into your eyes that night. I thought that you loved me until I went away and you did not write. Then I was miserable, Dicky. But it doesn't matter now."

"Nothing matters now," said Dicky, and he kissed her on the lips.—Chicago American.

THE FLIGHT OF TIME.

Single Men and Women Have Little Sense of Its Passage.

Men and women who remain single are apt to lose all sense of the passage of time. They are conscious of no perceptible difference in their own feelings—they grow older so gradually that they do not notice any particular difference in their appearance, so it is no wonder that every now and then they are brought up, as it were, with a disagreeable shock, says the New York Tribune.

"Where have you come from?" said a man to a college chum whom he met at the Grand Central station, and whom he had not seen for what seemed to him only a few years.

"I've just been seeing Tom off to school," said the other.

"To school?" repeated the friend, looking puzzled. "Why, surely, he must be at college by this time."

The second man gave a great laugh. "Why, wake up, Rip Van Winkle!" he cried. "My brother Tom, if you are thinking of him, has been through college long ago, and is married. I am talking of my son, who is 12 years old, and is going up to G— for his first term."

"Great Scott!" exclaimed the first man, feeling somehow as if the years had shriveled up and blown away. "How did you do it all so fast?"

"It is very difficult to keep track of people that you do not see all the time," remarked a suburban woman. "The other day I went off by my own route and took the ferry to Staten Island to visit a friend. On the boat I saw a woman with whom I used to be quite intimate. 'You know Nelly has been so very ill,' she said, 'but now we are so happy, for the doctors have pronounced her out of danger.'"

"I am so glad," I exclaimed cordially. "How relieved you must be!" The truth of the matter being that I did not have the slightest idea who Nelly was."

Young Love Lived Once in a Humble Shed.

Young love lived once in a humble shed. Where roses breathing, And woodbine's wreathing, Around the lattice their tendrils spread, As wild and sweet as the life he led. His garden flourish'd, For young Hope flourish'd The infant buds with beams and showers; But like though blooming, must still be fed, And not even Love can live on flowers.

Alas! that Poverty's evil eye Should ever come higher, Such sweets to wither! The flowers lay down their heads to die, And Hope fell sick as the witch drew nigh.

She came one morning Ere Love had warning, And raised the latch—where the young god lay. "Oh, boy," said Love—"is it you? good bye!" So he opened the window, and flew away.—Thomas Moore.

Death Dealing Canoe.

Abolish the canoe and Canada might have a war every five years and then lose fewer young men than the great number that must go down to death in ten years of summer holidays.

It is pitiful the mothers who weep, the fathers who mourn and the homes that are darkened simply because young people will take chances that they have no business to take.

Death may part the young man from his canoe. Good advice cannot. "Ephraim is joined to his idols," and the victims of the canoe habit will neither keep out of canoes nor be careful while they are in canoes.—Toronto Telegram.

Frailty.

"Frailty—thy name is woman." 'Tis False.

All for a pair of melting eyes, And for the winsome glance that in them lies;

For a shifting dimple in a rounded chin,

A slyken nose and a foot therein;

For a smothered sigh, a tangled tress, A "cuddle doon," and a soft caress.

He fell.

Frailty—thy name is Man.

An Entertaining Slouch.

A man who was "wanted" by the police had been photographed in six different positions, and the pictures were duly circulated among the police. The chief of police in a country town wrote to police headquarters of the city in search of the malefactor a few days after the set of portraits had been issued as follows:

"I duly received the pictures of the six miscreants whose capture is desired. I have arrested five of them, and the sixth is under observation and will be secured shortly."—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

The Apache at Home.

(Special Correspondence.)

One day when our party sat around a camp dinner in the shadow of an Aztec ruin in northern Arizona, we were surprised by the noiseless appearance of two Indians, a man and a woman, apparently of middle age. Both were tattooed in radiating blue lines from mouth to chin, showing them to be Apaches, and both were very dusty and travel-worn. The woman, who was stout and awkward and homely of feature, wore a kaliedoesopic blanket of Indian weave, queer canvas boots turned up at the toes, and a number of cheap bead bracelets. The man wore faded blue overalls, a shirt that had once been pink, and a pagodalike Mexican hat much the worse for wear.

He took a buckskin wallet from his shirt bosom, from which he got out a scrap of paper, and presented it, without a word, to one of our party, who read its written statements aloud. It was dated three weeks back, and bore the official seal of the agent at Fort McDonald that Ya-lipa and Sata-lai, both Yuma Apaches, were united in the bonds of matrimony in the presence of the white witnesses whose names were affixed to the document.

"One time," said he with reminiscent solemnity, "the Apache big Indian. Now he beg or work like white man. An' sometimes he starve. We beg for bread now 'cause my wife she very tired and much hungry. Will white friends give her bread?"

The unconscious dignity of his appeal lent a strange interest to the queer, ragged figure, which was neither erect nor stalwart, yet not without manliness. When he looked at the brown, silent face of his bride there was something in his own face that reminded one of the world-wide kinship of the human race. Some one heaped a plate full of eatables and Chief Charley Mojave was induced—through the medium of a moneyed bribe—to invite us to visit his camp, which lies at the base of an old Aztec village. A circle of ruins screened our approach until we were quite close to the cluster of brush and canvases wickets before which three squaws squatted in lazy contemplation of a fourth, who was engaged in basket weaving. All four were in a state of squalid frowsiness, which contrasted painfully with our romantic ideas of the noble race at home. Surprise at our unexpected appearance struck them dumb, apparently, for they said not a word until we asked, through Chief Charley, to be permitted to see the children; whereupon the chief's grandson, a sturdy little buck of eight or thereabout, made a successful grab at a pair of grimy overalls that hung, with other articles of family apparel, in the cleft of a mesquite bush, and disappeared in the surrounding scrub. There was the sound of a struggle which sent the pebbles spluttering in all directions, then a shrill little voice protested vigorously against some outrage perpetrated by the victor, who presently reappeared leading a very unwilling two-year-old boy whose movements were seriously impeded by overalls adjusted the wrong side before. He was pretty and bashful, but plucky. He choked back his natural fear of white strangers by doubling both his brown fists over his mouth while he halted under the fire of his enemy's scrutiny. A younger papoose, strapped in his tight little basket, stood tilted against a near-by shed.

There was not much to see about the camp, for Mrs. Charley's housekeeping is of the most primitive order. Her wicket, little and low, contains three heaps of grimy bedding, a couple of soap boxes, two beautiful hair lariats and a gun. The little brushwood shed beside it is evidently used as a living room in fair weather. The kitchen equipment consists of a few agate-ware utensils set bottom up on a broad, flat stone beside the camp fire and an earthenware olla or water cooler.

A Plentiful Menu.
"Probably the most varied diet in the world," said a traveler who had just returned from the Malay Peninsula, "is that of the Jakuns of the Sea, or Orang Lauts, who are the real Malay pirates. These people have about all that there is to eat, and they eat every thing as it comes along."

"Although they have all kinds of fine fruits, at certain times of the year they eat a yam which is so poisonous that they have to grate it and mix it with slaked lime before they dare swallow it."

"In the way of flesh they eat monkeys, deer, wild pig, birds, fish, porcupines, lizards, squirrels, rats, mice and snakes. And they seem to turn from venison to rat, or from wild pig to snake, with equal appetite."

Would Stop Runaway Horses.

Once, when Daniel Webster was riding along a New England road in a stage coach, so the story runs, he was annoyed by the jolting, and poked his head out of the window to yell at the driver.

"Hey, can't you drive a little slower?"

"No," responded the coachman, "the horses are running away, sir."

"Run 'em into a fence corner," advised Daniel.

"Can't sir," said the driver reluctantly and despairingly. "They've got the bits between their teeth, sir!"

"Well, run them into debt, then," thundered Daniel. "That'll stop 'em!"—Detroit News.

Some people live up to their ideals and others have to live with them.

SCIENCE and INVENTION

Perpetual Activity of Radium.

The radium electroscope is a little instrument in which the departure of negative ions from a speck of radium inclosed in a sealed vacuum tube perpetually changes the leaves of an electroscope; also inside the sealed tube. While the action is probably not perpetual, so long as the radium lasts, say 30,000 years, the tiny leaves of the electroscope will, it is said, go on opening and shutting so many times a minute, like a clock or a perpetual motor. There is also an arrangement by which the periodical discharges of the electroscope, when the leaves touch the side of the sealed glass tube, in which a wire connects two inner coatings of zinc foil to earth, ring a bell or print a record of every contact of the leaves. Each discharge from the outside terminal of zinc foil and wire when the leaf strikes the inner foil is sufficient to act on a coherer similar to that which is used in wireless telegraphy. The coherer, as in a wireless telegraphic system, is put in a bell circuit, and each time it is acted on by a train of Hertzian waves it rings a bell. With a three milligramme speck of radium the bell was rung every seventy seconds. Thus a perpetual minute bell could be devised.

Novelty in Envelopes.

In no other business is there such a continual search for novelties as in the printer's art. The up-to-date printer is always on the lookout for something new, and especially is this true of what are generally called "novelties." To be successful he must be able to present something that is attractive and artistic and at the same time substantial and it is seldom that he does two pieces of work alike. His work really covers such a wide range that he must be able to present something different for every business.

All printers do more or less pamphlet work and a very unique novelty in this line is that shown in the illustration. It consists of an ordinary booklet of any number of pages with the envelope combined therewith. The cover is made larger than the outside booklet, allowing an edge of about an inch all around, which is partly separated from the main portion by perforation. This edge contains an adhesive substance, which can be easily moistened and the back and front of the cover brought together. This eventually seals the envelope and when received can be quickly opened by tearing off the perforated edge. The name and address of the recipient can be written on the front the same as in the ordinary envelope and a stamp affixed.

Picking Coal by Machine.

England is soon to have a complete coal screenings plant for the express purpose of "picking" coals. The coal is carried on a traveling belt, while operatives, standing on each side at short distances, pick out the stone, shale and other substances as the coal passes along. The plant will have picking belts, jiggling screens, revolving triples and various conveyors, together with the necessary steel structural work and gearing. The revolving tripler, with a diameter of six feet six inches, is arranged to convey all the coal from the tubs to the screens without waste and to reduce the breakage to a minimum. The tripler sorts into three classes of coals—smudge, nut and best. On the underside of the jiggling screen are two steel plate shoots for delivering the nut and slack to the picking belts. There are three belts arranged to convey the coal to the trucks, with lowering shoots at the end. At the end of each conveyor are three steel plate shoots for delivering the material into the wagons. The plant is designed to deal with an output of 500 tons a day.

Making Steel Without Pig Iron.

Reports come from Victoria, Australia, of the successful experiments by the Iron, Steel and Metals Manufacturing company of that city in producing wrought iron and steel without the use of pig iron. The magnetic iron sand of New Zealand is treated first with electro-magnetic separators, so as to leave a pure magnetic iron oxide. These particles of ore are dropped automatically into a slowly revolving cylinder in a furnace, which uses fuel oil and the waste gases. The particles are reduced thus to the metallic form while retaining their individuality. From the revolving cylinder the ore particles drop into a smelting bath.

Working Under Compressed Air.

The physiological effects of compressed air may be inferred from the following suggestions: Men required to work under compressed air should be sound, small, temperate, and at last 25 years old. For a pressure of two atmospheres the shift should not exceed four hours, and the time of passage through the lock on coming out should be thirty minutes, while for a pressure of five atmospheres the length of the shift should be reduced to one hour and the time in the lock should be twice that amount. After leaving the lock on coming away from their work the men should have a complete rest of one hour.

SEEK A BURIED TREASURE.

Mexicans in Concerted Effort to Find Hoarded Gold.

Reliable parties from Westphalia report that a number of Mexicans with teams, plows and scrapers are excavating in that vicinity, claiming to have in their possession maps and charts showing treasure to be buried there to the amount of $100,000 in Mexican doubloons.

They say that the treasure is buried near what is known as the Bull Trench, and have agreed to pay the owners of the land on which they are at work a certain per cent of the find for the privilege of excavating. This treasure is said to have been buried during the Texas and Mexican war. It is said a tradition has existed that a large sum in Mexican doubloons was buried somewhere on the banks of Poudre creek and another that there was treasure of considerable amount in Mexican money buried at some point along the banks of the Brazos river near Marlin.

Many excavations have been made to locate the buried treasure, both on Poudre creek and the Brazos river. These efforts were not only made by home people, but strangers have gone in and excavated, among whom were Mexicans. A few years ago it was no uncommon thing to see deep holes dug along the banks of these streams, presumably by parties in search of the lost treasure, but if any money has ever been found in this manner the fact is not known.—Galveston News.

Preached From Engine Footplate.

Hundreds of audiences have been addressed from railway trucks; but Dr. Parker once had the unique experience of preaching a sermon from the footplate of an engine. Nearly two thousand men were gathered around him, and he has been heard to say that that was the most interesting episode in his life.

Ocean Traffic in Beef.

There has been just one branch of the transatlantic freight traffic satisfactory to the steamship agents of Boston this year, namely, the shipments of live stock and fresh beef, these two, more than anything else, having kept freighters plying to and fro between that port and Europe, when otherwise they must have been withdrawn or retained in the service at a big loss.

Lesson For Women.

Jersey Shore, Pa., Sept. 26 (Special).—"Dodd's Kidney Pills have done worlds of good for me." That's what Mrs. C. B. Earnest of this place has to say of the Great American Kidney Remedy.

"I was laid up sick," Mrs. Earnest continues, "and had not been out of bed for five weeks. Then I began to use Dodd's Kidney Pills and now I am so I can work and go to town without suffering any. I would not be without Dodd's Kidney Pills. I have good reason to praise them everywhere."

Women who suffer should learn a lesson from this, and that lesson is, "cure the kidneys with Dodd's Kidney Pills and your suffering will cease." Woman's health depends almost entirely on her kidneys. Dodd's Kidney Pills have never yet failed to make healthy kidneys.

Explosives in Cabbage.

In these days of chemical manure, we often consume a lot of explosive when we eat a cabbage. Ground, the nature of which requires it to be fertilized with nitrate of potash, yields some of this up to the plant in the course of growth, and so it reaches the interior of the body.

CHAPTER XVII.—Continued.
"Very well," said the courier, "respect his wishes until he awakes. I will see him myself before I go. Alexis Petrovsky," he added, as he entered the name in his book. "It will be my duty to lay his noble conduct before the authorities with a view of getting him a pardon." He paused a moment and then sharply asked: "Why was he gagged when I arrived?"
"He had been vilifying our imperial master the czar," said Katherine.
"And cursing our holy church,"
added Nicholas.
A shade of disappointment passed over the face of the courier. "I am sorry to hear it," he said.
Then he was silent and thoughtful
for a moment.
"See that I have fresh horses ready by daybreak," at length he said, "and that my rest is undisturbed."
"You go hence to—," said Katherine waiting for the courier to complete the sentence.
"I go hence to Stralsensk," replied
the courier, "where I am to deliver a pardon to a young girl who has proved herself a heroine, having been the only nurse who was available during a terrible outbreak of fever. Her pardon has been granted at the request of the governor of the province, who petitioned for it on the ground that the young girl's unselfish devotion and unflinching exertion was undoubtedly the means of saving scores of lives. More than that, she appealed to the convicts and prevented a dangerous uprising when the guards were stricken down. All Russia is ringing with the story of her good deeds."
"Ah," said Katherine, "and may I ask the name of this heroine. Doubtless she is celebrated, but we hear so little of the world's news in this out-of-the-way place."
"Certainly," answered the courier,
"her name is Ilda Barosky!"
"Ilda Barosky!"
The name was uttered together by Constantine Karsicheff and his wife and son. It was spoken with such a bitterness of surprise—that the courier could not help giving expression to his curiosity.
"Do you know her?" he asked.
"Know her?" replied Katherine. "I do know her. A vile nihilist, a daughter of the gutter of St. Petersburg—an assassin, a reptile—I do know her,
and I shall protect against her pardon,
even to the czar. I have some claims yet on his majesty. He cannot afford to forget what has been done for the Russian crown by the ancestors of Katherine Karsicheff!"
"Katherine Karsicheff! Are you—this then is—you are General Karsicheff?"
It had been the first time the name was spoken in the presence of the courier, and he repeated it with scarcely less surprise in his tones
than the three persons before him
had the name of Ilda Barosky a moment before.
What caused his surprise?
That was what the Karsicheffs
wanted to know.
Their anxiety was interrupted by the marked change in the courier's manner. It had been polite before when he spoke. Now there was in his voice an unpleasant ring which boded
no good.
"So!"
The courier paused a moment,

thoughtfully, and then, as if he had made up his mind, he produced a large official envelope. Handing this to Karsicheff, he said: "You will forward these papers immediately to-morrow morning by a trusted messenger
on who you can rely to the isprav-nik at Chitka. You must lose no time and use relays of horses where necessary. Sign a receipt for the pardons!"
"Pardons?"
"Yes. This envelope contains pardons for two politicals, Alexis Nazimoff and Ivan Barosky. Strange," he paused as the similarity of the name struck him. "Can he be any relation to the girl for whom I have the pardon
at Stralsensk?—no matter! These papers," he continued, addressing Karsicheff,
"have been forwarded by special relay from the frontier, and are to be delivered at the earliest moment. You will be held responsible for any delays. You will sign the receipt."
Karsicheff signed the paper—the receipt for the pardons.
"Call me at daybreak," said the courier; "and now where is my apartment?"

pointing to the prostrate form of Katherine. "She was overcome by the excitement of the night and became hysterical."

Katherine apparently began to revive and opened her eyes. "Where am I?" she asked in the voice of one just recovering consciousness.
Cobb turned his head away and smiled. The query recalled a joke he had heard some years before.
Karsicheff raised Katherine to a sitting position, and then gave a suggestive look to Cobb and the courier.
Rightly construing it as a request to withdraw they went back to the open air to finish their cigars.
The courier and Cobb had scarcely withdrawn from the room when the Russian turned to his companion and said: "Do you believe that the cry
we heard was uttered by that woman?"
"No! I'll be — if I do," was the emphatic reply of Cobb.
Heretofore their conversation had been of a general character.
They had discussed their military services, their travels, the dangers of the wolves, and other matters. But the pointed inquiry brought them on a common ground regarding the Karsicheffs.

"Why," asked the courier, "do you not believe that story?"
"Can I trust you fully and freely?"
asked Cobb.
The courier extended his hand. The action was enough. A thousand oaths could not have made the promise more binding. Cobb in a few words told the courier all that he knew of the Karsicheffs. He told of the lives of Ilda and Alexis and of Olga and Ivan, of the raid on the nihilist rendevous, the arrests and the circumstances under which they took place,
ending with the scene where Karsicheff
sentenced the prisoners.
The courier listened with intense interest. When he heard that Ivan and Alexis—the very men for whom he had given the pardons to their bitterest enemy—were the heroes of Cobb's story, his amazement knew no bounds.
His sympathies for the unhappy Olga were keenly aroused. Suddenly he had a revelation.
"And that cry was?" he paused.
"The cry of Olga!"
"My God! the poor, poor girl," said
the courier.
Cobb said nothing. He kept thinking. Olga and the baroness under one roof. The baroness would never leave until she had made an effort to rescue
the unhappy girl.
Suddenly the courier turned to Cobb. "You have trusted me freely,"
he said, "and in return I will trust
you."
Then to Cobb's profound amazement
he told him of the pardons granted to Ilda, Alexis and Ivan. Ilda, he explained, was at Stralsensk, where he was going under orders to deliver her pardon in person. And Ivan and Alexis were at Chitka, to which point
the pardons were to be forwarded by Karsicheff.
(To be continued.)

Three of a Kind.
Representative Rodenburg accompanied one of his distinguished constituents, Judge Charles W. Thomas of Belleville, Ill., to the marble room recently, where the two were joined by Senators Dolliver, Hopkins and Cullom.
"This meeting," declared Mr. Dolliver, "reminds me very forcibly of a visit I made to Belleville not many months ago. I was the guest of Judge Thomas, and passed the night in his fine old colonial mansion. After several hours of very refreshing sleep I attired myself and descended, filled with thoughts of the splendid entertainment given me. All at once there was a hoarse voice from an adjoining room, which said, in a contemptible tone:
"Where the dickens did you come from?"
"I felt rather cheap at being spoken to in such a way, and was looking about for the person who had thus addressed me. It didn't take long to discover that this first sign of inhospitality I observed in the mansion came from the judge's parrot. He was as wicked a bird as it was ever my fortune to encounter."—Denver

Tunnel for English Channel.
Since a French engineer named Gammond planned a submarine tunnel, in 1857, various projects have been advanced for connecting England with the continent. The latest is the suggestion of Bunau-Varilla, who wants to build a tunnel to within three kilometers of England, and thence a bridge, which England (which has not favored a tunnel) could destroy at any time in case of danger of a foreign invasion, thus rendering the tunnel useless.

TOILERS OF THE MINES.
Millions of Men Make Their Living Underground.
Mining and quarrying throughout the world command the personal attention of more than four and a half million men. Of the grand total of 4,738,393, no fewer than 1,592,050 belong to the British empire, the remaining 3,146,343 being "foreigners." Great Britain and her colonies and possessions have been specially favored by the forces of nature in so far as there is an abundance of valuable mineral which may be mined, and thus add to the wealth of the empire.
More than half the miners of the world are employed in getting coal alone. Great Britain employs over three-quarters of a million, the United States and Germany over half a million each, France 165,000, Belgium 135,000, Austria 123,000; whilst India comes along with close upon 100,000.

The Bank of England.
The Bank of England generally contains sufficient gold in sixteen pound bars to make 20,000,000 sovereigns.
The bank, which stands in three parishes in London, covers three acres of ground, and, as the current price of land in the vicinity works out at £1,000,000 an acre, it is easy to form an idea of the money value of the home of England's wealth. The ratable value is nearly £1,000 a week. The bank employs about 1,000 people and pays £250,000 a year in wages and £35,000 a year in pensions. There are £25,000,000 worth of notes in circulation, which have been handed over the ban's counters.

Service Shocked Her.
A certain noble family in Scotland adopted the Episcopalian faith and carried out its ideas regardless of expense. On the first introduction of the full choir service into the local church the great lady who had been active in the work was anxious that a favorite woman servant of hers—a Presbyterian of the old school—should have an opportunity of hearing the service. Accordingly she took her down to church in the carriage and on returning asked the old woman
what she thought of the music. "Oo,
it's verra bonny; but, oh, my lady,
it's an awful way of spending the sabbath!"

Settled Bill by Marriage.
A poetically-minded literary man,
hailing from North Dakota, not long since married his landlady, who keeps a small hotel in the Latin quarter of Paris. This young man, who for eleven years had paid not a single sou for board or lodging, was at length taken severely to task by his long-suffering hostess, who threatened summary ejection. Such a cold prospect was little to his liking, so he proposed to cancel his bill by marriage. The lady was willing, and the twain were made one.

European Forests.
The percentage of the wooded areas of European countries, as compared with their total areas, is as follows:
Finland, 51.2; Sweden, 49.3; Russia,
40.4; Austria, 32.6; Luxembourg, 29.1;
Hungary, 27.7; Germany, 26.1; Serbia,
24.9; Turkey, 23.4; Norway, 22; Rou-mania and Switzerland, 21.4 each; Bulgaria, 20.8. The other European countries have less than 20 per cent of woodland. England has the smallest wooded area, 3.6 per cent.

Fought Over Mince Pie.
A farmer residing in Adams county,
Pa., caused the arrest of a neighbor for having entered his kitchen "and taken from the stove and eaten a large and juicy mince pie." The offending neighbor was held to answer
by the justice. That official remarked that he regretted "that a mince pie should disturb life-long relations between friends and create another war
so near a battlefield (Gettysburg) that is already sufficient history."

As to the Teeth.
A dentist says that the more teeth are used, legitimately, the better for them; that perfect mastication on both sides of the mouth prevent receding gums and tends to ward off decay. Those who chew on one side have poor teeth on the disused side, and that the bad of chewing every mouthful very fine is one of the most sensible fashions humanity has ever taken up.

THE STRAIN OF WORK.
Cost of Backs Give Out Under the Burden of Daily Toil.
Lieut. George G. Warren, of No. 3
Chemical, Washington, D. C., says:
"It's an honest fact that Doan's Kidney Pills did me a great lot of good,
and if it were not true I would not recommend them.
It was the strain
of lifting that brought on kidney trouble and weakened my

using Doan's Kidney Pills I have lifted six hundred pounds and felt no bad effects. I have not felt the trouble come back since, although I had suffered for five or six years, and other remedies had not helped me at all."

How Gas Consumes Air.
An ordinary gas light, sixteen candle power, consumes as much air in an hour as four men.

Trout Swallowed Young Rats.
Caught in an English river, a moderate-sized trout was found to have recently swallowed two young rats.

Miss Nellie Holmes, treasurer of the Young Woman's Temperance Association of Buffalo, N. Y., strongly advises all suffering women to rely, as she did, upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—Your medicine is indeed an ideal woman's medicine, and by far the best I know to restore lost health and strength. I suffered misery for several years, being troubled with menorrhagia. My back ached, I had bearing-down pains and frequent headaches. I would often wake from restful sleep, and in such pain that I suffered for hours before I could go to sleep again. I dreaded the long nights as much as the weary days.
I consulted two different physicians, hoping to get relief, but, finding that their medicine did not seem to cure me, I tried your Vegetable Compound on the recommendation of a friend from the East who was visiting me.
"I am glad that I followed her advice, for every ache and pain is gone, and not only this, but my general health is much improved. I have a fine appetite and have gained in flesh. My earnest advice to suffering women is to put away all other medicines and to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Miss NELLIE HOLMES, 540 No. Division St., Buffalo, N. Y.

Miss Irene Crosby, prominent in Social Life in East
Savannah, Ga., adds her testimonial to the value of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—"It always gives me pleasure to find an article of real value and unquestioned merit. I have found Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound well calculated to relieve and cure
the various troubles arising from irregularities and menstrual pains.
"Much suffering could be spared if we only paid more attention to proper living and diet, but as long as women do not do this,
your Vegetable Compound has come to the front as a true friend in need. I have been very pleased indeed with the relief it has brought me. I find that I have perfect health now, and that my mind is also more clear and active since I used your Vegetable Compound. It has been of great benefit to me, and I gladly recommend it.
Very sincerely yours, Miss IRENE CROSBY,

Answer of Valet Showed the Two Sides to an Excuse.

Gen. Frederick D. Grant, who has recently been assigned to the command of the Department of the East, is noted for the equanimity of his temper.

Gen. Grant believes in self-command. Concerning hasty tempers, he said one day:

"The plea of the quick tempered is that if they are soon angered they are soon pleased again. There is an answer to this plea, though. The former valet of a friend of mine has a good answer to it.

"This valet, an excellent servant, worked for my friend two months. Then he said that he was going to leave.

" 'Why are you going, James?' my friend said kindly.

" 'Well, sir, to be frank,' James answered, 'you are too quick tempered.'

" 'Pooh, pooh, James,' said my friend. 'What if I am a bit quick tempered? My anger is no sooner off than it is off.'

" 'True, sir,' said James respectfully 'but it is no sooner off than it is on again.'" disloyal to my first and second. Finally I solved the problem by having a three rings welded together.

"It does make rather a broad band," she said, holding up her left hand and looking at the circlet in question, "but then, you see, it makes me feel that I am being constant to all three of them."

"It is a dry time and the roads are dusty. So much the worse for the hens. I suppose it is different with hens in the cities and towns, but along the country roads they have never yet learned to make proper calculations for escape from the automobile. The hen is of a mathematical turn of mind. She rolls in the dust of the highway and no horse-drawn vehicle was ever known to run over one. She figures closely, but always escapes. Now, it is different when she comes to take the automobile into consideration. She expects to escape by the length of a horse. The horse is not there, and she falls under the wheels of the juggernaut, a victim to old fog notions not in accord with modern speed devices."—Indianapolis

All Guns to Be Resighted.

Plans are being drawn in the bureau of ordnance at Washington for the resighting of all the guns in the United States navy. The cost of this work will be tremendous, but its necessity was recently realized when called to the attention of the president and the orders have already been issued. Improved variety of sight will be used and the work will be pushed with the rapidity practicable. For the rapid-fire guns a telescopic sight will be used, of a kind that will permit continuous aim. Nearly all of the guns are in need of resighting.

Reciprocal Trade Treaties a Necessity of the Situation—Underhand Methods of the Administration in Panama Denounced—Justice for the Filipinos Urged—National Leader Pleads for Co-operation of All Members of the Party in the Struggle for Wise Legislation and Good Government.

Imperialism.
If we would retain our liberties and constitutional rights unimpaired, we cannot permit or tolerate, at any time or for any purpose, the arrogation of unconstitutional powers by the executive branch of our government. We should never mislead of the words of Webster: "Liberty is only to be preserved by maintaining constitutional restraint and a just division of political powers."

Already the national government has become centralized beyond any point contemplated or imagined by the founders of the constitution. How tremendous principles of the Democratic faith, and the necessity for it was never greater than at the present time. It is an undertaking at once in the interests of our people.

The Dingley tariff is excessive in many of its rates, and, as to them at least, unjust, on the ground of above-named principles. It secures to domestic manufacturers, singly or in combination, the privilege of exacting excessive prices at home for products of above-named principles, made regularly by them abroad with promptness, and it thus giving a bounty to foreigners at the expense of our own people. It levies oppressive and unjust taxes upon people of all nations, and, as a whole or part, it secures the raw material of many of our ly urged in behalf of the Dingley tariff and against tariff reform generally, the necessity of caring for our infant industries. Many of these industries after a hundred years of lusty growth are looming up as industrial giants, in their case, at least, the Dingley tariff invites combination and monopoly, and gives justification to the expression that the tariff is the mother of trusts.

For the above-mentioned reasons, among many others, the people demand reform of these abuses, and such reform demands and should receive immediate attention.

The people demand reform of existing conditions. Since the last Democratic administration the cost of living has grievously increased, those having fixed incomes have suffered keenly; those living on wages, if there has been a increase, know that such increase has not kept pace with the advance in the cost of living, including rent and the necessities of life. Many to-day are of work, unable to secure any wages at all. To alleviate these conditions, in far as is in our power, should be our earnest endeavor.

The determination of this question was left by the people in framing the constitution to the judiciary and not to the executive. The Supreme Court of the United States has recently considered this question, and, in the case of Western Union Telegraph Company v. The Call Publishing Company, to be found in the one hundred and eighty-first volume of the United States Supreme Court reports, at page 92, it decided that con-

mon law principles could be applied by United States courts in cases involving interstate commerce in the absence of United States statutes specifically covering the case. Such is the law of the land.

Reciprocity.

In my address to the notification committee I said that tariff reform "is demanded by the best interests of both manufacturer and consumer." With equal truth it can be said that the benefits of reciprocal trade treaties would enure to both. That the consumer would be helped is unquestionable. That the period of exclusiveness is past. The expansion of our trade and commercial relations with the rest of the world are unprofitable. A policy of good will and friendly relations will protect our interests and will bring us in hard money with the spirit of the times; measures of retaliation are made in the interest of our manufacturers whose products are being sold in foreign markets. The problem of more markets requires our urgent and immediate attention. How can we get our goods into foreign markets? 'stand pat' policy must give way—there must be a reduction of duties to meet the competition of goods from foreign markets. The last words of this president—who had won the affection of every man who has any doubt of the necessity of a reduction in tariff rates—were: "I am for free trade." They are present with clearness a situation and a proposition which I believe to be a problem in our platform which declares that: "We favor liberal trade arrangements with all nations, and we favor trade with other countries where they can be entered into with benefit to American agriculture."

reduction in return for an equivalent concession. McKinley understood this very well. President McKinley undertook honestly to carry out the purpose of the Act. A number of his cabinet members were negotiated, which, if ratified, would have had the two-fold result of cheapening many imported products and Americanizing the market by opening and enlarging foreign markets to American producers. Not one of those agreements was ever consummated. The Republican masters of the Senate. Indeed, they did not even permit their consideration. The view of the Senate of the present executive, no new agreement need be expected from him. Nor does the Republican platform contain a single word of the kind suggested by the treaty. The reciprocity clauses of the Dingley act seem destined to remain a monument of the Republican faithfulness to their faith unless the people take the matter in their own hands at the ballot box. The United States will be obliged to return for reciprocal concessions.

Reclamation of Arid Lands. A vast expanse of country in the Western portion of the sixteen states and territories mentioned in the law, is directly affected by the national statute—the outcome of intelligent and judicious legislation. The law, providing for the reclamation of the arid lands for the benefit of homesteaders. During the years of the development of the measure which finally became law, the Senate of the United States, the upper house of Congress, it encountered opposition, based to a large extent upon the view that the aim of its provisions was to saddle the public domain upon private owners at government expense. The aim of the statute is, however, to enable this vast territory to reclaim its arid lands without calling upon the government for aid.

The methods by which the executive acquired the Panama canal route rights were not the subject of a formal investigation. To them, the statement that thereby great public work was assured to the profit of our people is not a sufficient answer. The question is, did it not also result in the loss of national good faith. They appreciate that the principles and healthy conviction which in their working out have made free and great and useful a nation are not the kind of suggestion that we shall be blind to the nature of the means employed to promote our welfare. They hold that adherence to principle, whether it costs us anything, is the only way to have a more beneficent influence on our future destiny than all our material wealth.

American shipping in the foreign trade was greater by over one hundred thousand tons in 1810—nearly a hundred years ago—than it was last year. In the face of the continuous decline in the record of American shipping during the last forty-three years, the promise of the Republican party to restore it is without encouragement. The record of the Democratic party gives assurance that Pensions for Our Soldiers and Sailors.—The National Democracy favors liberal pensions to the families of fallen soldiers and their dependents, on the ground that they deserve liberal treatment. It pledges by its platform to "extend to the families of fallen soldiers the right to a pension to the end. But it denies the right of the executive to usurp the power of Congress to legislate on the subject of pensions. It has been tempted by Pension Order No. 78, and effect has been given to it by a Congress that dared not resent the usurpation. It is the duty of the National Democracy to point out the error made in the performance of a duty imposed upon the president by act of Congress, but the president is not a traitor. He has not pointed out. The act to which the order refers, which is the one relating to pensions to Civil War veterans, does not look at all to the condition or the age of the veteran. It grants pensions to those "suffering from any mental or physical disability," without consideration of the character, nor the result of their own vicious habits, which so incapacitates them from the performance of manual labor, rendering them unable to earn a support." This specified requirement of incapacity is in effect set aside by Order No. 78 as to all persons over sixty-two.

The foreign relations of the government have in late years assumed special importance. Prior to the acquisition of the Philippines we were preoccupied with our struggle against attacks by foreign states. Those tropical possessions, however, seven thousand miles from our shores, have changed all this. We have in effect not used our power to keep the peace. The new conditions call for a management of foreign affairs the more the national expenditures for the year 1875, which amounted to $274,000,000. A situation which has resulted in a majority of our people, justified an imperative demand for reform in the administration of public affairs. As the expenditure of the last few years has amounted to an enormous total of $582,000,000, it is evident that a thorough investigation of the public service and the immediate abandonment of useless and extravagant expenditures are the pressing necessities now that they were then. This astounding increase is out of all proportion to the increase of our population, and finds no excuse in the growth of the world. In this situation, The national Democratic platform declares that "large reductions gation may discover other cases of malfeasance? When the chief executive reported to Congress that, through fraud and forgery, the laws relating to the bribery of public officers had been violated, the laws relating to the proper conduct of the public service in general, and to the due administration of the postoffice department had been violated, "there was a general popular demand for a rigid, sweeping investigation by Congress, in addition to that undertaken by the executive." Such an investigation the Republican majority in Congress would not permit, although the minority me solicit the cordial co-operation and generous assistance of every man who believes that a change of measures and of men at this time would be wise, and urge harmony of opinion on the part of all so minded.

The issues are joined and the people must render the verdict.

Shall economy of administration be demanded, or shall extravagance be encouraged?

Shall the wrongdoer be brought to bay by the people, or must justice wait upon political oligarchy?

Let the people stand for equal national policy there are honest differences of opinion. I believe in the patriotism, good sense and absolute sincerity of all the people. I shall strive to remember that he may serve his party best who serves his country best.

If it be the wish of the people that I undertake the duties of the presidency, I pledge myself, with all my heart, to do my whole power and energy to the duties of this exalted office.

A SILLY CHARGE.

About the only argument that is being made by the democratic press of Michigan in support of its state ticket is that the republicans are dominated by railroad influence which controls and directs legislation in this state. This is "important, if true," but the facts in the case do not bear out the charge. Every citizen of Michigan who has done any traveling outside of this state knows that passenger rates are lower in Michigan than in any adjoining state. If any one doubts the truth of this statement let him take a trip on any of the main lines of railroad running through Michigan. He will not have to go far nor make any large expenditure of money to learn that the citizens of Michigan are especially favored in the matter of railroad fares and that, too, by legislation enacted by republican legislatures. Let him take the Grand Trunk Western, Wabash, Michigan Central, or Lake Shore & Michigan Southern. As long as he keeps within the state of Michigan he will be able to ride at a cost of two cents per mile, but the moment he crosses over the line into an adjoining state the rate immediately jumps up to three cents per mile. If this is the effect of railroad influence upon our legislatures the democratic press will not be apt to get the people greatly excited over it.

The pastors' wife was presented with some hand painted china and some silver by the ladies of the church. Mr. Shank goes to St. Ignace.

Judge Kline has granted Mrs. Emma Mills $4 per week as temporary alimony during the pendency of her divorce proceedings against Glenn V. Mills. The case is one of the most sensational as regards charges that has ever been started in the country. Mills is well known about the state, being interested in city directories at Lansing, Flint, Pontiac and other places.

Another old landmark of the Baptist church corner was pulled down Saturday when W. H. Barr dug out the large maple tree which stood at the corner of the church yard. This was necessary for two reasons; first that the walk from the new building to the street may be put down and the tree stood directly in the line, second it cut off almost entirely the corner view of the church.—Saline Observer.

A good joke is told on Rev. Eldred. Returning from evening services Sunday last, while crossing the flats with one of the feminine members of his congregation, a violent gust of wind removed his hat in the darkness. Stationing his companion as a land mark and groping down the stairs, after much calling back and forth he at length succeeded in recovering his property and went on his way rejoicing.—Blissfield Advance.

"Two sisters attended Washtenaw county institute fifteen days. They came eighteen miles every day and were not tired once. They got up at 4 o'clock each morning, harnessed horse drove part way, put out horse, took trolley to place of institute, and went home every night. Who'd think it? Right here in old Washtenaw? Why that's a regular out-west record." The preceding item was clipped from the latest issue of Moderator Topics, the school publication. The young ladies referred to are the Misses Hattie and Alice Corwin.—Ann Arbor Times.

Judge Chester of Adrian Saturday morning appointed J. W. Helme receiver of the Monroe & Lenewee Counties Farmers' Insurance Co. It seems that soon after the company was organized the barn of Richard Diver, in Deerfield, burned. The company paid the full loss with the exception of $200, for which it gave Mr. Diver its note. The officers of the company levied an assessment on the membership for the payment of the note but most of the members refused to pay. The receiver will proceed to levy and collect this assessment, those who refuse bringing themselves up against a lawsuit.

A POWER FOR GOOD

The pills that are potent in their action and pleasant in effect are De Witt's Little Early Risers. W. S. Phillips, of Albany, Ga., says: "During a bilious attack I took one. Small as it was it did me more good than calomel, blue mass or any other pill I ever took and at the same time the effect was pleasant. Little Early Risers are certainly an ideal pill." Sold by Glazier & Stimson.

THERE are changes and novelties enough apparent already in the new fashions to satisfy even the most exacting of mondaines. Of course, there are always those who will cry discontentedly that there is nothing whatever new under the sun, and there are those who will rise up and tell you that your most cherished possession in the sartorial line, of course, something that you enjoy as a novelty, something new and essentially stylish—is merely a replica of something that she had or wore or saw some cycle of a century ago. And perhaps, to add insult to injury, there may be an insinuation that your modern possession cannot compete for an instant with that ancient and elderly production whose memories you have evoked!

Just now the girl who studies the fashions, even if she does not follow them in all of their charming vagaries—is treading in the footsteps of the great makers of the mode in Paris, and is hunting up torics has grown to wonderful dimensions in these latter days, and no doubt the dressmakers' assistants and the salesmen are posting themselves so that they can correctly designate each and every one of the exquisite costumes that pass through their hands.

And with these newer modes—they have only just risen above Fashion's horizon in Paris and already their appearance has been made in this land of the setting sun—there has come the newer figure. We are just beginning to recognize the new-line when we see them; but it must be confessed that with the exception of a few of the real leaders of fashion on this side of the water, the great masses of the purchasing public have not arrived at or achieved the new figure as yet.

But with the purchase of the autumn wardrobe will come the realization of the change. The extremely low-busted corset which we have all of us been wearing with such comfort for some time past, is altogether out of line, out of drawing, out of proportion to the outline of the gowns of the Louis and the Directoire periods.

their American customers to follow this rule that they adopted the expedient of having a corset department of their own, and the customer was introduced to the right kind of corset not only for her figure but for the style of gown which she was ordering. Thus the customer was doubly satisfied with her purchase, for not only was the figure often improved, but she could wear that gown with her ately less to make a gown, they cut to so much better advantage. Then, too, the favored modes of trimming are all somewhat detached. For example, those motifs which one buys by the yard—and they are all delightfully reasonable in price these days—they never see the light of day upon a frock in just the same way as they were sold. They are all cut apart and smoothed and defined with fine braids tions upon the cloth gowns that are just now making their way through the Custom House. Intersecting circles fashioned in the same way are very effective; diamond designs, interlacing scrolls, and in fact, all of the simply and easily accomplished geometrical outlines that will readily suggest themselves to the girl who is clever with her needle will all be in the very height of the fashion.

For the first of the autumn days, days when the mornings are chilly enough for a coat, but the midday and afternoons rather too warm for this addition to the toilette, for these days there are delightful novelties being prepared in shirtwaist suits. These are entirely different from the suits which we called by this name in the summer time. To meet the milder days the blouses or shirtwaists are usually of flannel, either plain, striped or plaided—and the gamut of fashion goes upward in this sequence—while the skirt is invariably of plain color to harmonize, and may be of some lightweight goods, such as serge, cheviot, sicilienne or mohair.

And, by the way, the shirtwaist suit is now to be retired with the summer and fall days. The overcoats and tourista coats, as they are variously called, that are a feature of fall and winter fashions, permit of-day, almost demand—the shirtwaist suit of silk or solefine or mohair or other medium weight fabrics.

a deep cuff from there. And the cuff is always trimmed. Chemisettes, vests of varying degree and character and epaulettes characterize these newer productions; and these features are almost invariably in some contrasting color, and hence add a more distinctive feature to the blouse. The belt which accompanies these is either of the patterned solefine or of the trimming material, except when this latter

Louis heel, and hence the skirts are cut to show just the tip of the smart shiny black shoe. For the black shoe, and a shiny black at that, is the correct accompaniment of the autumn modes. And now the newest dictum in the wardrobe must match the costume in coloring. At this late date it is hardly necessary to indicate that the handbag is per se, the acme of style; and when the

Queen
Quality

The Shoe, Not the Foot.

It's the shoe that decides beauty, not the foot. If your shoes look well, your feet look well, but the handsome foot counts for nothing in the unshapely shoe.

There is one shoe that is doing wonders toward making handsome feet--that shoe is "Queen Quality."

By the Evidence of Michigan People.

The daily evidence citizens right here in Michigan supply is proof sufficient to satisfy the greatest skeptic. No better proof can be had. Here is a case. Read it:

George W. Closson, Prop. of the large livery stable and hack line, at 137-139 West Main St., and residing at 330 Territorial street, Benton Harbor, says: "Doan's Kidney Pills procured at Harry L. Bird's drug store have been used in my family and undoubted results were obtained. My wife first learned of them through her brother-in-law, Mr. J. P. Mitchell employed as mail clerk on the Michigan Central R. R., between Detroit and Chicago. He advised her to use them and they proved to be an excellent remedy. I heartily join Mrs. Closson in endorsing this valuable medicine. To anyone complaining of backache or any of the incidents which follow in the wake of that far too prevalent complaint kidney disease, my advice is, use Doan's Kidney Pills."
