White flags flying from a dozen factories in the tenement houses of Presna district, where the revolutionaries made their last stand, now bear mute witness to the end of the "December uprising in Moscow." The entire district is now occupied by troops.

During Friday night the vast majority of the members of the "fighting legions" either surrendered or, after throwing away their arms, endeavored to escape in the guise of peaceful citizens. Only the members who acted as a guard to the revolutionary committee stuck to their colors and the surrender of this handful this morning finished the last act of the sanguinary drama.

The staging of this last act was admirable-a snow-covered landscape, word reached Kalamazoo of the tragic death of Charles Eames at St. Louis on Sunday. A few spluttering shots replied from a window. The cannon spoke again and again until a dozen shots had been fired.

It looked like murder to the specta-tors on a hill and so evidently thought the officer in command of the battery, which ceased fire. A reserve company of the Seminovsky regiment then advanced and fired volleys at the upper windows. At the third volley a white handkerchief attached to a bayonet was pushed through a shattered pane. It waved frantically and all was over.

The little garrison of thirty marched out and laid down their arms, a strange collection of rifles and repeat-ing shotguns. All had revolvers.

Strange to say, not one of the men had ever been wounded, and when they found that they would not be imme diately executed they appeared to be rather relieved that the end of the struggle had come. They gathered around the soldiers' bivonac, stretched their hands eagerly over the cheerful fires and begged cigarettes from the guards.

The football question was para-mount in the high school section of the State Teachers' association in Lansing. One of the teachers denounced the game as it is played today as both degrading and degrading and demoralizing, while others were inclined to believe with President Roosevelt, that it should be modified and continued as a recognized college and high school sport on account of its value in the physical "We are bigger than the government."

One set of resolutions, providing for the suspension of the game for two years, was discussed and laid on the table. Afterward another resolution was offered putting the association on record in favor of the game on Satur-days and holidays only, discouraging the practice of employing professional coaches and in favor of ending the football schedule by the middle of November.

This resolution was adopted.

No, it was not locked, and the knob turned but did not unlatch. Meanwhile the bell rang again. What chould she do? Of course she could not make him hear, and she rattled the knob and pounded and pulled to no purpose. She lived in the lower flat of an apartment house, and her room had long windows opening on a small balcony. She rushed out there, only to find that she could not see the front entrance, but she hailed a boy, passing. "Boy," she called, "come here if you want to earn a dime." The boy came with alacrity. Katharine wanted to tell him he might ask anything if he would only take off that expression of calm disapproval which made her feel as if she were a naughty five-year-old. But she explained matters, in an embarrassed, hesitating way, which made her appear more charming even than usual

"Oh," what will he think of me?" moaned Katharine. "This is awful!" and she went, into the room for another try at the knob, which, however, proved futile.

The sound of steps called her back to the balcony. What in the world. The carriage, Mr. Payson on the box with the driver, was coming straight toward her. As it stopped, Mr. Pay son stood upon the seat, from which he could just reach to climb to the he said.

"Yes." answered Katharine. "Probably Harry is getting impatient." "Shall I answer it? We might as well relieve his mind. Or no; I can find the door and let you in, if you drive around to the front."

So it came to pass that Katharine was let into her own home by Mr. Payson, who, smilingly bade her welcome, the telephone meanwhile ringing wildly.

"Hello," Yes, this Katharine, No. but we're just star'ing. No, but we've ocen hindered. Oh, no matter how, Yes, we'll come right along now. Goodby."

"It was Harry," she continued, "and he's wild to know why I'm not there," her checks flushing as she remembered Harry's peremptory question: "Have you and Payson eloped?"

As they neared their destination, Mr. Payson said:

"Suppose we keep the events of the evening to ourselves, Miss Harrison? Not that you have anything to be ashamed of; but I know what your life will be if Harry Thayer gets hold of what has happened."

"Ho is an awful tease," said Katharine. "I never thought, but I'd have to explaia, though. It's kind of you -if we could avoid telling----

"Of course we can. It's agreed, then, that it's a secret between us."

Harry had no time to question as he dragged Katharine into the dressingroom, saying:

"I've had to change the program now so as to bring your first song later.

"Don't be cross, Thayer," said Mr. Payson. "Our delay was absolutely unavoidable, on her part, at least." "That was generous," thought Katharine. "And almost as if it was his fault."

She was at her best that evening, many telling her they had never heard her sing so well. Harry and Mr. Payson were on their way to her after the concert, when Harry said: "Much obliged of you, Payson, for escorting Miss Harrison safely here at last. But I'll relieve you now; I can take her home." "Thayer," said Payson, suddenly, "how much claim have you on Miss Harrison?"

"None at all," answered Harry, promptly, "only she's my cousin, and I've always known her." "Then I take her home," said Payson, decidedly. "Hope you won't be as long getting there as you were coming here," laughed Harry, adding, as Katharine came toward them: "Mr. Payson-insists on finishing up the escorting business, Kit, so I'm out."

As they left the carriage, Mr. Payson said:

Walks of the Charterhouse an Oasis in Turmoil of Twentieth Century City

(Special Correspondence.)

From the turmoil and bustle of | said, indeed, that governors sometimes made use of their powers of nomina-tion to endow comfortably their own superannuated hutlers, but an occazional abuse in the administration of a charity of such ancient date is probably inevitable.

Anecdote of Weilington.

At what time the ancient rule that no children should be placed in the school whose parents have any estate in land to leave them, but only the children of poor men that want means to bring them up," was first departed from, is apparently not known; certainly this rule has been a dead letter for a very long period.

boarded and partially clothed free of charge, besides receiving scholarships to the universities on leaving, nominations were naturally in great demand.

An anecdote is, indeed, told that the Duke of Wellington when Prime Minster complained that he had more requests for a nomination to Charter-house school than for any of the civil and military appointments within his control. claim to have trained and sent out a goodly number of scholars who have afterward made their mark in the world. In the field of literature, more particularly, Old Carthusians have distinguished themselves.

Addison and Steele.

Addison was a Charterhouse boy, though not on the Foundation. He was probably not at the school for a very long time, but long enough to form that close friendship with Richard Steele which was to lead to one of the most remarkable literary partnerships ever known. Richard Steele himself was a gown boy, nominated by the Duke of Ormonde. Richard Lovelace and Crashaw were both Carthusians; and also, if it be not bathos to montion his name in such company, ly damaged. There is considerable Martin Tupper, the author of the fa anxiety to know whether the plant mous "Proverbial Philosophy."

Not many military men appear to have been trained in the school, but one great soldier Charterhouse can claim-Sir Henry Havelock, who was a* pupil there from 1804-11, showing as more than 250 years have sounded with the shouts of the Charterhouse boys at "cloister cricket;" and there, still, like shadows of the past, the black-gowned pensioners go softly by to their daily service in the chapel. "O floreat acternum Carthusiana Domus" is a prayer in which every lover of old London will join with every old Carthusian. For the tide of London's trade and business is washing higher and higher against these ancient walls, and more than once the old monastery has been seriously endaugered. Yet a building with historical associations dating back to more than five centuries ago might surely deemed sacred. For Charterhouse, the original Charterhouse of which some portions still remain, was founded in 1371. In that year the gallant Sir Walter Manny established on the site a Carthusian monastery. Among their other dutics, the monks were to offer masses for the souls of those whom Sir Walter Manny had killed in battle -doubtless a goodly number, since gusted with me. I'd made you so the knight had earned great fame as a much trouble, and I knew you were so warrior in the French wars of Edward III.

Pursuant to his opinion, as quoted some time ago, that the new tax com-mission law is unconstitutional, Attorney-General Bird is preparing to test the law in the supreme court as soon as the annual assessment of the rail-roads is made next month.

This act was known in the legisla-ture as the Galbraith bill, and gives the commission power of equalization between the assessment of corporate between the assessment of corporate and general property in taxing the former. Bird has always contended that the granting of such power to the commission was a violation of the con-stitutional provision requiring all property to be assessed at its true cash value.

Gov. Warner, who signed the bill, and the tax commission have agreed with Bird that this will be the most satisfactory method of deciding the validity of the law. As soon as the January 15 assessment is made the attorney-general will bring suit, probably in the form of a writ of mandamus, requiring the tax commission to make its cash value assessment as under the old law. The tax commission will be represented by special counsel. Corpor-As boys on the Foundation, or Gown-boys, were educated, lodged, Chief Assistant Hally have agreed not to institute action in the name of the Detroit board of education, as they had threatened to do, leaving the matter to a friendly solution inside the state administration.

Burning Homes.

Rich landed proprietors and their families boarded the train at Pskoff with nothing but hand satchels. They told Mr. Smith that they were glad to escape alive.

Bay City's Great Fire.

The American Shipbuilding Co.'s entire plant in Bay City, excepting one warehouse and the office, was de-stroyed by fire, causing a loss of $256, 000 and throwing 1,000 men out of em-ployment. The fire was one of the most rapid ever seen, the flames spreading throughout the plant in ten minutes. A boat being built for the Gilchrist Transportation Co., was badwill be rebuilt.

Yes," said the boy.

"Then please go around to the en trance and tell the gentleman who is at the door of this flat that Miss Harrison cannot come to the door just now, and ask him to please wait a few minutes. Do you understand it?"

Yes'm," said the boy, and repeated the message. Then he started off.

"Oh, come back a minute. Do you know where the janitor's rooms are? Then please go and ask him to come at once to Flat 1, and fix a door that won't open. Now, don't tell the gentleman that," she added, as she tossed him a dime.

A moment or two later, she heard steps, but instead of the small boy or the janiior, it was Mr. Payson. Her first impulse was to hide, but the glare of the street light made her conspicuous, so he had already seen her. Lift-ing his hat, he said, "Good evening, Miss Harrison," as calmly as if it was his daily custom to greet from the lawn a young lady on a balcony. "Oh," began Katharine, "I told the boy not to tell you."

"I see but one way for you, Miss Harrison," he said. "I'll ask the driver to stand at the horses' heads, and if you can climb over the rail-it's not very high-I'll stand on the seat and help you down. Can you manage it, do you think?" His eyes were dancing with fun, as he looked into hers. Could it be that the precise Mr. Payson him good-night .- The American Queen, was enjoying this escapade?

"I can do it all right," admitted Katharine, "but, yes, I will. I mustn':

disappoint Harry." "Hope it won't hurt your gown," he said, as he sprang lightly down to the seat. "That's it; very gracefully done. Now, take care your dress doesn't catch. There, that was dead easy. Now wait a minute. Here you are on terra firma. Miss Harrison's carriage." as he opened the door with a flourish and a very low bow. Then, to her surprise, he mounted to the balcony again. went in, turned out the light and closed the window.

"Now we are all right," he said, as he settled himself comfortably beside her, and the carriage rolled along 'We shan't be very late, either; only fashionably so."

"Thank you so much," murmured Katharine, unsteadily. He turned quickly to her.

"Why, you poor little girl! You are trembling! Don't take it so hard. Accidents will happen, you knew, and 'all's well that ends well.' Cheer up," and he smiled so genially that she naturally responded. Suddenly she

The name of the greatest surely among all the old Carthusians-William Makepeace Thackeray-it is natural to reserve to the end. But, wherever Thackeray is read, the name of the Charterhouse must always be tenderly remembered. The picture the great novelist has drawn of the old Grav Friar school, of Founder's Day, and the Latin creation, of the service in the chapel, where rosy-cheeked boys, full of life and health, stood in striking contrast to the old gray-headed stooping figures of the black-gowned pensioners-that picture has immortalized the school.

As to Colonel Newcome. And the figure of Colonel Newcome, depicted by the same genius, has become such a living reality it is hard to believe that his name was never in fact on the roll. And when the scheme to sell a portion of the ancient Charterhouse site was before the House of Commons in 1886, one of the strongest arguments used in opposition was the plea for the aged pensioners, "the successors of Colonel Newcome." Long may those eighty old pensioners ba able in their historic hall to join in the old Charterhouse song:

He Had But Dim Ideas of Symbols in Public Library.

Aunt Sally Freeman's education had not been forced, and when she was on her first visit to Boston, a short time ago, and was shown the sights, the public library was not overlooked. Just inside the entrance she spied the brass figures of crabs, fishes, bull, etc., in the floor. After looking them over for a few moments, she asked the po liceman on duty why they were put there.

"Well, madam." he replied, "when I first came here and saw them, I thought they must have been sent by the meat and fish handlers' union, but I hear that they call it the sign of the Soda Act. Dramatic Criticism.

"The best dramatic criticism I ever heard." said Will Winch, the theatrical press egent. "was made by a man who was in his cups. The piece, an English comedy, was dragging awfully. "The curtain had been up nearly half an hour, I guess, and nothing had happened to check the yawns that were seen on the faces in the audience. At this point our slightly intoxicated friend straightened up, yawned, looked at his watch and said in a voice heard through the theatre and on the stage, 'Say, what time does this show begin?' Sacred White Elephant.

Some forty-five years ago the king of Siam possessed a white elephant which was the chief delight and pride of the sovereign in spite of his high education and good intellect. As the greatest compliment he could think of paying to the queen of England, he sent her, by the hands of her envoy, a few hairs pulled expressly for her from the tail of his beloved animal. Later, when the object of his affections died, he sent to his friend, Sir John Bowring, a touching letter in English and a small plece of "its beautiful white skin."

All Named for Saints

The vicar of Membury, Derbyshire, England, writes: "A hundred and thir ty-eight baptisms, and I have not yel had a 'Sarah Jane'-that delightful old-fashioned name." Amused, as he said, by the vicar's sad wall, a parishioner replies to the vicar, saying the reason is not far to seek. The custom of the parents residing in these parts is to consult with their incumbent regarding the choice of the name for the offspring. The natural consequence is that all children born on a saint's day are called after the saint. Thus a girl born on St. George's day would be christened Georgiana and one on St. Clement's day Clementina, and so on.

Vitality.

Keep up your vitality and you will never know disease of any kind. No disease can exist where there is an abundance of pure blood. To get the necessary amount, eat nutritious food; to circulate it perfectly, take proper exercise; to purify it, get fresh air and sunshine. If a perfectly healthy condition of the skin exists and an even temperature of the surface of the body is maintained, it is impossible to catch cold. Cold water baths taken every day will do much towards producing the former; proper food and exercise the latter .-- London Tit-Bits.

Courage of Arabian Horses.

Arabian horses show remarkable courage in battle. It is said that when a horse of this breed finds himself wounded and knows instinctively that he will not be able to carry his rider much longer, he quickly retires, bearing his master to a place of safety while is has yet sufficient strength. But if, on the other hand, the rider is wounded and fails to the ground, the faithful animal remains beside him. unmindful of danger, neighing until assistance is brought.
