William Penn's Buttons.

The following, taken from the Los Angeles (Cal.) Record, refers to a former resident of Chelsea. Mr. Ackley was born in Lima, Mich., in 1835, and helped to raise the first building in Chelsea:

"A dozen worn brass buttons, unceremoniously threaded on a discolored bit of old string, are the sole companions of E. N. Ackley, resident of Los Angeles and pioneer of California.

"Ackley has carried this strange keepsake for years and years. Behind this fact there is a quaint story and a bit of "Ackley claims that these dozen but the Electric Light and Water Works tons, that long ago lost their outside coat of shininess, were originally the property of Wm. Penn, and were taken off his coat to give to an Indian as part

"They were given to Mr. Ackley years ago by Jerry Ridgeway when both men lived in Santa Rosa. Ridgeway, in the years before, had been a resident of Pennsylvania. Ackley admired them, believed in the pretty story of their historic setting and was given them by his friend. Since then he has guarded them jealousy. They are his constant companions. He lives alone now, but his little room is always home and his mind is always at rest if he knows the buttons are safe in their hiding place.

"Mr. Ackley has had a history of his own. Despite the fact that he has lived in Calfornia about 50 years, he has had plenty of opportunities to taste the bitter as well as the sweet experiences of travel in other lands. Among many things he remembers with more sadness than joy is a whole night in the water during the Galveston flood." .

to hurt her, and that there is no harm in them anyway.

It is not the purpose of this article to support either party. It is proposed merely to show that the new woman in these matters as in others is not quite so new as she is painted and that if a reactionary goes back far enough he will discover that there is nothing new under the sun.

As generation succeds to generation each is gravely assured that Times are not what they used to be," and as each new crop of grumblers develops they find the same time honcred plaints to make of the woman of their day, that women have departed from the excellences of their mothers to practice new and previously unheard of faults and follies, especially in the matter of dress.

However, the sin of "newfangilness of geir" is such a becoming one and so charmingly feminine withal that it is usually regarded with a certain kindly toleration.

Does the reactionary to-day find fault with the twentieth century woman for learning to drink, swear and smoke because he considers these things inherently vicious? P obably not, but they are special masculine indulgences, a little unpleasant in som ways, and, so quite unfeminine according to the nineteenth century notion of femininity which decreed that woman should be exquisite, delicate, gentle and altogether on a higher spiritual plane than man.

The watchword of feminine respectability was "Avoid the appearance of evil." To-day we replace it with "Evil to him who evil thinks," because we are all for broadness and toleration, and women would much rather be good fellows than angelic

So much for the difference in the point of view, a thing to which reactionaries are proverbially blind. When those same captious souls tell you that neither your mother nor your grandmothers nor your great-grandmothers swore or smoked they speak truth. Not only would it have been very shocking to them to do either, but it was even considered insulting

Perhaps the most curious revelations of all are to be found on the question of women's drinking. It is often said that the reason women are accused of drinking more than they relating to the masticating apparatus used or ought to, is that they do not of the horse, which someone has aptly hesitate now to drink in restaurants termed his "dental battery." The Horse's Dental Battery.

It is interesting to study evolution a peep into an old book of etiquette such short-crowned teeth that they wore out in eight or ten years, so that he succumbed from inability to written in 1853 by the redoubtable chew food. This ...ie horse had five representative of the equine race, but Trace has been found of him grown to fourteen inches in height, then eighteen inches, or about as big as a sheep and later to forty inches, or the average height of a Shetland pony There are several different types too, and the teeth in each were gradually increasing in length and size of prehistoric horse had : even molars on each side above and I elow, while the modern horse has but six, in each jaw, As the four superfluous toes became or digit enlarged and strengthened, and was fi ted with a foot, making it and running weight-carrier extant. All the while, too, the mouth was lengthening and the molar teeth increasing in width and length, so that in the modern horse at least we find a set of molars so strong and long that they can well withstand twenty-five to thirty years of masticating.

The composition of these molar teeth is marvelously perfect for the purposes which they fulfill. They are made of three materials of different densities, and as the wear of each is necessarily different the bearing surface of each tooth is consequently kept rough, so that it may grind well, as does the burr stone of a grist mill: The three constituent substances of a tooth are Dentine, which is composed of 76 per cent earthy material and 24 per cent animal matter; Enamel, 95 per cent earthy matter and 5 per cent animal matter; Cement, 67 per cent earthy matter and . : per cent animal matter. The enamel is present in irregular curves and cylinders and columns from one end of the tooth to the other and between these layers is the dentine and the cement.

The enamel at all times projects above the other substances of the so long that their roots are close up to the eye in the skull, but as the animal ages the crowns gradually wear down and the necessary surface for mastication is supplied by gradual descent of the molar. The tooth does not grow, as some erroneously think. but it comes down in its socket so that the root is constantly becoming nearer and nearer to the gums, and is quite short by the time the horse is thirty years old.

The milk teeth are small, white and smooth. The permanent teeth (incisors or nippers) are large, broad, yellowish in color and have deep, brownsh yellow marks down their front surfaces. On the grinding surface of the upper and lower incisors there are cups surrounded by black-colored rims. These are the "marks" by which one can closely approximate the horse's age. When the full complement of milk teeth is present the first change is the substitution of two permanent incisors above and below in the center. This happens at from two years and nine months to three years; at three and a half to f ur years the lateral or second pair of incisors come in, and at four and a half to five years the corner or third pair of incisors appear and along with them (in males) the tushes or bridle teeth. At six the marks disappear from the central incisors, at seven from the laterals, at eight from the corners and nine from the middle pair in upper jaw and at ten a yellow mark or line appears at gum of corner upper incisor. and gradually comes down the tooth and is in wear at about twenty years. These nine and ten-year-old signs are indefinite and not wholly reliable. The hardest time in a coit's life is when he is past three, when he is casting twelve teeth and cutting sixteen. At this time he should therefore have the best of care, shelter and food.-W. S. Alexander in Farmers' Review.

success in the dairy, and in this study knowledge of chemistry is helpful. The market says that timothy hay is worth more for feed than is clover hay. Chemistry tells us that clover hay is worth twice as much as is timothy hay for the use of the cow. The cow agrees with the chemist and will make twice as much butter from a ton of clover hay. The cow and the chemist are right and the market is wrong. A hundred pounds of timothy hay has in it but 3 pounds of digestible protein, while a hundred pounds of clover hay has 6.8 pounds of digestible protein. The proper feeding of the dairy cow controls to a large exent the profitableness of the cow.

Many a farmer keeps his eyes on the price he is to receive for butter, not realizing that it is not possible for him to control that price. He loses sight of the farm end of the business, which he can control. A saving of one cent per pound is worth more to the farmer than one cent more added to the price he receives. Misunderstood. President White of Colby, Mass., was making an appeal for donations to the college, and in the course of his remarks cited the case of a wealthy gentleman in the west to whom such an appeal was not made in vain.

"I spoke of his boyhood days in Waterville," said President White; "I recalled the dear old landmarks he knew so well, and as I spoke of the college on the dear old Kennebec he made out April 5. a check, while tears ran down his cheeks. I tell you, gentlemen, he was touched." And President White, not as well versed in the slang of the day as in the management of an institution of learning, stood amazed at the rip les of merriment which followed his tale of pathos.

The Police Magistrate.

The police magistrates so often adnonish women complainants to come back and report any further wrongdoing on the part of husbands who have just been released that they fall into the habit of repeating the admonition on every occasion in which a man and wife are concerned. First Ascent of Mont Blanc.

The first ascent of Mont Blanc in 1905 by a woman was accomplished under great difficulties by Bessie Norton of London, on July 14. The journey from the Grand Mulets occupied nine hours, the ascent five and a half hours, and the return journey three and a half bours. The return was the more quickly accomplished by sitting down and sliding at all possible places. The cold was so intense that the breath froze inside Miss Norton's helmet, and one of the men of the party had icicles two inches long hanging from his mustache.

At the Maine station tor Heyburn, who was in charge of careful tests had been made to deterthe bill, as "the gentleman from mine whether being allowed to re-Idaho," which is the custom of the main in an ordinary pen and yard House. In the Senate they always while being fattened was as good as confine birds that are being fattened for market.

A tremendous blow was dealt at the old practice of heating poultry houses. The Maine station is at Orono, which is in a cold part of a cold state, where even this winter, which is unusually mild in Maine, the snow is piled high, as was shown by the photographs. Yet all this winter and for several winters past the birds have been protected from the cold only by a cloth front to their roosting place, being allowed to jump down and work in the straw of the scratching shed every day. This shed was and is open to the air on ordinary days and curtained by cloth on blustering days. The hens in such pens were unusually healthy, happy and produced eggs in abundance, though they ate more food than did the fowls in the pens that were warmed. But when the cost of heating the other pens was considered the balance was in favor of the hens that were kept in the cold pens. In the building of these pens great care was observed to have everything tight that drafts might not be possible. In the sleeping cabinet of the fowls, over which a curtain was drawn sach night, the droppings did not freeze on the cold nights, while in the morning no odors were noticed. All the gases from the bodies of the fowls had passed out through the pores of the cloth and had given place to pure air.

Professor Woods warned his hearers against putting faith in conclusions drawn from experiments with a small number of fowls, as fowls differ so greatly in laying capacity. A few hens of a breed pitted against a few hens of another breed will give results one way or another, but they are of almost no value. The aggregate laying capacity of one pen is certain almost not to be the same as that in the other. Only when many hundreds of birds are averaged can any definite results be obtained. The Maine station is now conducting tests with 4,000 birds belonging to a poultry producing company at Orono. The whole is as much under the direction of the station as if it belonged to the station. From it great things are hoped for.

Soft Food for Fowls.

It is not possible that soft food is not good for fowls. Those that insist on feeding their meal dry also insist that the birds have access to an abundance of water, in which case the fowls proceed at once to thoroughly wet down the dry food that has been given them. The only disadvantage of the wet food is that it may be sour some times through great carelessness on the part of the

The lingerie gown, whether it be a robe pattern or not, to be good form must not have its purity of outline blurred by outstanding bows, one's purse permits, as far as appliques, insertion, and exquisite hand work are concerned, but the outline must be clear, so that the silhouette of the wearer will be clear cut and graceful.

The less expensive robes-for all the summer goods are to be had in robe pattern's this year-are of batiste, crepe, challie and various new soft stuffs that come in clear colors, in printed and striped patterns and in beautifully embroidered designs.

These robe patterns are very easily made up by the amateur diessmaker. They have exactly shaped skirts, flounced and banded with embroideries, and require only a little deft fitting with tucks about the waistline and a band to give them quite the air of the best Paris lingerie frock. Even the bodices to these afford little more labor, for they are em dered and appliqued in such a fashion that a little tuck here and there will adapt them to any figure. White and all the light tints-lavender, pinks, blues and greens are favored in these embroidered robes.
