GATES ON MAIN STREET

CROSSING OF THE M. C.

Division Superintendent Sutherland Grants Request of Common Council for Proper Protection of the Public.

D. S. Sutherland, of Detroit, division superintendent of the M. C., was in Chelsea, Monday forenoon of this week, looking over the property of the railway company. Among the improvements that is to be made for the safety of the public, Mr. Sutherland informed Hon. Frank P. Glazier, president of Chelsea, that in accordance with the recent request of the common council the railroad officials will have gates placed at the Main street crossing, and the work will be started as soon as possible.

The railway officials also decided to have several bad curves in the yards here straightened, and they have a force of carpenters at work rebuilding the docks at the freight house.

School House Site.

On Saturday, August 3d, from 8 o'clock in the morning until 8 in the evening, the citizens of this district will have a chance to express themselves on the matter of a site for a new school building to be bought and building built with money recently voted for that purpose. This money was voted on a clean-cut contest as to whether the building was to be east or west of Main street, and the first proposition (east) was turned down nearly two to one, while the last proposition (west) was carried over two to one.

Now, it is necessary to select a site and carry out the expressed wishes of the voters. No matter, how legal voters may have been intimidated by challengers at past elections, they may be sure that their votes will be accepted and counted.

Every person in this school district over twenty-one years of age, who has resided in the district for three months, is possessed of property assessed, or is the parent or guardian of a child or children of school age, should be sure to turn out and record their wishes in the matter.

One Hundred Years Ago.

Time flies quickly, but it is well for us to remember that it is only just a century since none but the Indians had any claims upon the land in Washtenaw county. It is hard to realize this from any appearance of the country at this time.

It is just a hundred years since the Indian title to the land in Washtenaw county was extinguished. This was done by a treaty made by Gen. Hull with the Chippewas, Ottawas, Wyandottes and Pottawatomies at Detroit in 1807. At that time what is now Washtenaw was simply a hunting ground for these bands of Indians. They did not take kindly to the American occupation of Detroit as they had to the French, who had so many years traded with them, and there was a vast stretch of territory to the west, so that the Indians were drifting farther away from English civilization, and had no compunctions to ceding what is now Washtenaw county.—Ypsilanti Press.

Many Freaks Coming.

While the racing numbers on the state fair program this year promise more than the usual number of interesting events, the management has also arranged for special attractions for visitors who do not care to visit the races, and these entertainments will continue while the speed contests are in progress.

"This year we realize that many who go to the fair do not go to the grandstand, and while we are not neglecting the track, we are making special preparations for entertainments about the grounds," said General Manager Floyd, Saturday afternoon. "The band will give concerts during the afternoon and evening, and special attention will be given to the make-up of the shows along the wandlerust.

"Besides the usual breath-catchers and spine-wrackers and other purely amusement features, there will be many exhibitions of general and instructive interest, among which will be an elaborate museum of natural history and a mammoth collection of war relics. Two animal shows, one of wild and the other of domestic animals, will add to the little folks' delight, and a bird show, European circus, an ostrich farm, and an oriental show will be included in a long list of other attractions.

"Besides the hurdy-gurdies, the merry-go-rounds, the circle-swing and the Ferris wheel, there will be many other open-air shows, including the midgots, giants and monstrosities generally.

"One of the new attractions this year will be an exhibition of famous old paintings; the old Strassburg clock painting; and others."

In the world of timepieces there will be Meyers mechanical clock, which shows the time of day, weather forecast, history of the month, chronology of the famous events in the world's history, and a hundred other data. It is said this clock was 15 years in building and that it is one of the wonders of the age.

Pay Proper Postage.

Postmaster Hoover called The Standard-Herald's attention to the fact that people seem to need warning in regard to putting notes in packages of merchandise or with papers, without paying letter postage, or placing merchandise in newspapers without paying merchandise rates. Last year the postoffice department collected $59,065 in fines for this violation of the postal laws.

The fine for a violation of this kind is $10, and if a person does not pay at once when the inspector visits him, he is taken down to the United States court.

If you would avoid trouble in this line, always be sure that you have paid the proper postage, as the excuse that you were ignorant of the law is no excuse in law.

DOCTOR WAS EASY MARK

LOSES $540 ON SURE THING.

Enters Into Game to Fix a Wrestling Match and Milk the Public, and Gets Fleeced.

The following was taken from the Detroit Evening News of July 24: "An amateur 'fixer' of fake sporting events, who got himself most righteously 'fixed' by the professionals with whom he was operating, appeared before Justice Jeffries this morning in the person of H. H. Avery, dentist, of Chelsea, Mich. He said that 'Farmer' Chadwick the wrestler and his gang had done him out of $540 in connection with a match pulled off Tuesday night at Millett's saloon, 1113 Trumbull avenue.

"Farmer," or Bert Chadwick, went to Chelsea last Friday to tell Avery about the game they had arranged to strip the public of its money and let him get in on it. They said it was all fixed for 'Kid' Burns to win the match from Chadwick. Chadwick would see that he did. To prove his sincerity, the 'Farmer' gave the country doctor $300 of his own money to bet for him.

Avery placed Chadwick's $300 and $540 of his own. The stakes were held by a man unknown to the police, who said he was Joe Jackson, the sporting editor of a morning paper. When the match came Chadwick threw 'Kid' Burns twice in quick succession, and Avery had lost his money.

So he complained to the police. Detective Good arrested Chadwick and this morning Avery managed to get a warrant for Chadwick.

"I think you got just what you deserved," the justice told Avery, "but I will give you the warrant in order to expose Chadwick and prevent him from catching any more suckers."

The wrestler was arraigned before Stein just before noon and he pleaded not guilty to a charge of grand larceny. His examination will be held next Tuesday. Bail was set at $1,000 with one surety.

Will Not Flow Forever.

Many localities in Michigan and many more individuals will be interested in a suggestion which comes from the state geologist, that artesian wells will not flow on forever, and that this water supply should be regarded as a limited quantity which should be jealously guarded and preserved. In most cases the water from these wells is permitted to flow on uninterruptedly night and day throughout the entire year. It seems to be assumed that they will flow on for all time. But the state geologist calls attention to the fact that many of these wells in Michigan have ceased to flow and that the others will ultimately reach the end of their usefulness.

To farmers and residents of villages possessing artesian wells this warning should come as one of immediate importance, and from all the people of a state so generously provided with such wells an appeal for their better care and protection should receive the attention it surely deserves.

The promise of no contest on the part of the railroads of Michigan in opposition to the two-cent passenger fare legislation, which is suggested at least by the fact that no action has been taken or talked of to question its full validity, is pleasing to the people of the state so far as it goes. Inasmuch as the law does not take effect until the last week in September, however, opportunity yet exists for opposition to the reduced-fare requirement if any purpose in that direction exists. The fact that two cents a mile is already the fixed fare in the states touching Michigan on every side will be a strong argument in behalf of quietly permitting that rate to go into effect in Michigan in September.

WRECK ON TROLLEY LINE

REV. JOSEPH RYERSON INJURED

Head-on Collision Between Passenger and Construction Cars Last Sunday Morning—Four Hurt.

Four persons were injured Sunday morning when the Detroit, Chicago & Jackson electric passenger car, due in Ann Arbor at 9:15, met the construction car in a head-on collision some two and one-half miles west of Ann Arbor.

Rev. Joseph E. Ryerson, pastor of the Chelsea M. E. Church, who was on his way to Ann Arbor to deliver the annual memorial sermon to the Elks, of which order he is the Grand Chaplain, was the most seriously injured.

Mr. Ryerson was sitting on the front seat. When the collision took place Mr. Ryerson was hurled bodily through the space and into the vestibule where the motorman is stationed. In the meantime the motorman had jumped to save his own life. The crashing woodwork of the front of the passenger car fell on Mr. Ryerson's back with serious results and fractured the bones of his left hand. He suffered great pain and Dr. Belser, of Ann Arbor, had to administer opiates after being hurried to the scene of the wreck in a special car. Rev. Ryerson was placed on a stretcher and brought back to his Chelsea home.

Motorman Haak, of the construction car, did all possible to avert the collision. Sitting beside him was his 8-year-old son, Fred, and in the car was Claude Hale, a lineman. Hale saw the danger and could have jumped, but instead ran to Haak's side and, picking up the lad, threw him to the rear of the car. The boy was injured by the fall, but his life was saved. Haak was badly cut and bruised, and Hale received bad cuts about the head from the broken woodwork. Haak and his son were taken to the hospital in Ann Arbor.

Dr. Woods, who has charge of the case, informs The Standard-Herald that both of Mr. Ryerson's ankles are sprained, one hand injured and his back badly bruised. While the patient is gaining each day, it will undoubtedly be a number of weeks before he fully recovers.

Mrs. Ellen Rowe-Guthrie.

The funeral of Mrs. Ellen Guthrie was held at her late home Saturday, July 20, 1907, at 2 o'clock, Rev. T. D. Denman officiating.

Miss Ellen Rowe was born in Ireland, May 12, 1823, of Scotch parentage and died July 17, 1907. Her age being 84 years, two months and five days.

At the age of eighteen years she came with her widowed mother to New York city and afterwards to Detroit, Michigan, where she was married to Mr. Hugh Guthrie, January 13, 1845. In July of the same year she came with her husband to the present homestead and settled in a log cabin surrounded by a forest.

To them were born four daughters. Their married life was brief, for March 23, 1861, her husband died, leaving her with her family of small children to provide for their needs and clear away the forest. With courage, fortitude and determination rarely manifested she hewed her way through every difficulty, until she saw a more comfortable home take the place of the log cabin and the humble instruments of toil laid aside for more useful implements of husbandry. Sorrow was also added to her burdens, for the death angel entered the family circle and took from her her daughter Mary, aged 12 years.

In the midst of these hard struggles she thought of others, and many a sick neighbor shared her kindly ministry. Neither did she forget her God, being an active member of the Baptist church all these years and doing what she could for her divine Master.

Mrs. Guthrie had a strong constitution and was young for her years. For over a year her strength has been gradually failing and, although confined to her bed but four days, the last few weeks of her life she suffered much but patiently. All was done for her that loving hearts and hands could do, yet it was of no avail and, giving those about her a farewell look, she whispered, "I'm going home," and she fell asleep to rest from her labors until the morning of the resurrection.

"And so there is one clear, sweet thought pervades my beating breast— That mother's spirit now has flown To its eternal rest. And while I wipe the tears away, There whispers in my ear A voice that speaks of heaven and home And bids me seek her there."

"Suffered day and night the torments of itching piles. Nothing helped me until I used Doan's Ointment. It cured me permanently."—Hon. John Garrett, Mayor, Girard, Ala.

SERIAL STORY

THE HOUSE OF A THOUSAND CANDLES

By MEREDITH NICHOLSON

Author of "THE MAIN CHANCE," "ZELDA DAMON," Etc.

Copyright 1916 by Bobbs-Merrill Co.

"It pleased my fancy to follow him; and by the time I had studied your diggings here a trifle, things began to happen below. It sounded like a St. Patrick's day celebration in an Irish village, and I went down at a gallop to see if there was any chance of breaking in. Have you seen the room? Well," he gave several turns to his right wrist, as though to test it—"we all had a jolly time by the fireplace. Another chap had got in somewhere, so there were two of them. Your man—I suppose it's your man—was defending himself gallantly with a large thing of brass that looked like the pipes of a grand organ—and I sailed in with a chair. My presence seemed to surprise the attacking party, who evidently thought I was you, flatterer I must say, to me!"

"You undoubtedly saved Bates' life and prevented the rifling of the house. And after you had poured water on Bates, he's the servant,—you came up here—"

"That's the way of it." "You're a brick, Larry Donovan. There's only one of you; and now—"

"And now, John Glenarm, we've got to get down to business,—or you must. As for me, after a few hours of your enlightening society—"

"You don't go a step until we go together,—no, by the beard of the prophet! I've a fight on here and I'm going to win if I die in the struggle, and you've got to stay with me to the end!"

"But under the will you dare not take a boarder."

"Of course I dare! That will as though it had never been as far as I'm concerned. My grandfather never expected me to sit here alone and be murdered. John Marshall Glenarm wasn't a fool exactly!"

"No, but a trifle queer, I should say. I don't have to tell you, old man, that this situation appeals to me. It's my kind of a job. If it weren't that the hours are at my heels I'd like to stay with you, but you have enough trouble on hands without opening the house to an attack by my enemies."

"Stop talking about it. I don't propose to be deserted by the only friend I have in the world when I'm up to my eyes in trouble. Let's go down and get some coffee."

We found Bates trying to remove the evidences of the night's struggle. He had fastened a cold pack about his head and looked slightly otherwise than was the case—silent and inexplicable.

Daylight had not improved the appearance of the room. Several hundred dollars' worth of furniture, the floor and the shelves that had held them were backed and broken.

"Bates, if you can give us coffee—let the room go for the present."

"Yes, sir." "And horses—"

He paused, and Larry's keen eyes were bent sharply upon him.

"Mr. Donovan is a friend who will be with me for some time. We'll fix up his room later in the day."

He limped out, Larry's eyes following him.

"What do you think of that fellow?" I asked.

Larry's face wore a puzzled look.

"What do you call him,—Bates? He's a plucky fellow."

Larry picked up from the hearth the big candelabrum with which Bates had defended himself. It was badly bent and twisted, and Larry grinned.

"The fellow who went out through the front door probably isn't feeling very well to-day. Your man was swinging this thing like a windmill."

"I can't understand it," I muttered. "I can't for the life of me, see why he should have given battle to the enemy. They all belong to Pickering, and Bates is the biggest rascal of the bunch."

you were sailing home. I'll wager you the best dinner you ever ate that there's more at stake than your grandfather's money. The situation is inspiring. I grow interested. I'm almost persuaded to linger."

CHAPTER XIX.

A Triple Alliance.

Larry refused to share my quarters and chose a room for himself, which Bates fitted up out of the house stores. I did not know what Bates might surmise about Larry, but he accepted my friend in good part, as a guest who would remain indefinitely. He seemed to interest Larry, whose eyes followed the man inquiringly.

When we went down Bates was limping about the library, endeavoring to restore order.

"Bates," I said to him, "you are a very curious person. I have had a thousand and one opinions about you since I came here, and still I don't make you out."

He turned from the shelves, a de-fused smile in his hands.

"Yes, sir. It was a good deal that way with your lamented grandfather. He always said I puzzled him."

Larry, safe behind the fellow's back, made no attempt to conceal a smile.

"I want to thank you for your heroic efforts to protect the house last night. You acted nobly, and I must confess, Bates, that I didn't think it was in you. I'm only sorry that there are black pages in your record that I can't reconcile with your manly conduct of last night. But we've got to come to an understanding."

"Yes, sir." "The most outrageous attacks have been made on me since I came here."

we gazed at each other,—he, Bates, the servant, and I, his master! He had always addressed me so punctiliously with the "sir" of respect that his declaration of fealty, spoken with so sincere and vigorous an air of independence, and with the bold emphasis of the oath, that I stood spellbound, staring at him. The silence was broken by Larry, who sprang forward and grasped Bates' hand.

"I, too, Bates," I said, feeling my heart leap with liking, even with admiration for the real manhood that seemed to transfigure this hireling,—this fellow whom I had charged with infamous conduct, this servant who had cared for my needs in so humble a spirit of subjection.

The knocker on the front door sounded peremptorily, and Bates turned without another word, and admitted Stoddard, who came in hurriedly.

"Merry Christmas!" he called heartily, in tones hardly consonant with the troubled look on his face. I introduced him to Larry and asked him to sit down.

"Pray excuse our disorder,—we didn't do it for fun; it was one of Santa Claus' tricks."

He stared about us derisively.

"So you caught it, too, did you?" "To be sure. You don't mean to say that they raided the chapel?"

"That's exactly what I mean to say. When I went into the church for my early service I found that some one had ripped off the wainscoting in a half a dozen places and even pried up the altar. It's the most outrageous thing I ever knew. You've heard of the proverbial poverty of the church mouse,—what do you suppose anybody could want to raid a simple little country chapel for? And more curious yet

The woman had been curious to see the national game and the friend had been obliging.

"But," he had asked, "will you have it college or professional? The difference is that college teams sometimes play real ball, while professionals play it always."

"Now, don't try to explain things," said the woman virtuously as they settled into their places. "I know what a nuisance it would be. Just watch the game and enjoy yourself, and let me look."

And yet she asked questions. Questions like: "They don't run very well, do they? What makes them fall down so often when they stop?" Or "Why does he make such angry faces at that other man with the muzzie on his head?"

Next her, on the other side from the friend, sat a red-headed youth, alone; a youth of the proletariat, liberal, minded, gregarious. The fate that gave him that day no mate had been unkind. He suffered for some one to talk to.

The first time that the friend answered a query of the woman's with "I don't know" this young man with an evident specialist's depth of information. He did it shyly, knocking his hat further back from his freckled brow, shifting his cigarette hard apart, and with his eyes unswerving from the game.

But he might never have spoken, might never have existed, for all the recognition the friend vouchsafed. The friend was no snob, but he considered that youth excessive in local color when one had a lady in charge.

Again and again it happened. A less genial one would have congealed. But the red-headed one too truly abounded in good fellowship easily to believe in an intention to rebuff.

Nevertheless, he felt a certain something, and his remarks grew rarer and more rare. The woman was sorry. But this was the friend's party, and he knew best.

The game progressed. Innings waxed and waned. Then came a moment when the visiting-pitcher, given heretofore to pyrotechnic sweep and velocity in his play, stood suddenly motionless with the ball held close before his face.

Seconds flew, and still he stood, with never a shift from that queer attitude.

"What is he doing? Whatever can he be waiting for?" cried he woman, now keen after the idea of the game.

"I'm sure I can't guess," answered the friend.

The red-headed youth stirred uneasily. Mental stress showed in the very twist of his shoulders.

He had meant not to speak again. But this was too much! His resolution shook and fell.

Ostensibly apostrophizing the pitcher, toward whom his face was turned, but with his mouth so wrenched awry that it spoke straight into the woman's ear, he jerked out, deep and hoarse, this brief, enlightening truth:

"Aah, you, Maggie! Stop spittin' on dat ball!"

Feminine Privilege or Tears.

The new preference for the bright side of life is probably due—in woman, at least—to the undeniable truth that they no longer cry as easily as they used to do, says a writer in Black and White. At one time a good weep was a recognized feminine luxury which, like a summer shower, had a marvelous effect in clearing away clouds. Now all but a few members of the sex seem to have lost the art of crying becomingly and readily, and when they begin it is a painful and unsightly business. To be able to weep without shedding tears is a real gift. It is rare that masculine spectators can resist the soft suspicion of moisture in beautiful eyes; but they object to the deluge which reddens the nose and puckers up the face. The woman who cries because she can't help it usually succeeds in driving a man away; but sorrow under restraint, with a possible smile hidden behind the curtain of tears, is an irresistible invitation to him to stay and comfort.

Also the Worst.

EXPLAINING BASEBALL

It was at a professional baseball game in Philadelphia. On the great tiered, half-moon benches 5,000 people made so slight a showing that one heard their number with surprise.

Only the bleachers were full. They, with their solid alternation of coats and faces, looked like a dark blanket thickly polka dotted with dingy white.

Up in the second story of the grand stand, where you pay 75 cents and don't care who knows it, sat rank and fashion, indicated by the presence here and there of flowery hats. That the wearers of the hats were familiar of the place would have impressed even a detective, for when a stray ball hot from the bat shot straight in among them, striking the boards with a fearsome crash, not a shriek, not a squeal, scarred the tense silence of the throng.

Down on the floor below, in the very front row, and just beyond the screen behind the bat, sat a woman who had never seen a ball game before. Beside her sat a friend.

You pay only 50 cents in the lesser story, but you really see better than from anywhere else, and you really feel that you are one of us. Flowery hats count for nothing there. All distinctions sink unnoticed under a happy haze of ball.

The woman had been curious to see the national game and the friend had been obliging.

Only the bleachers were full. They, with their solid alternation of coats and faces, looked like a dark blanket thickly polka dotted with dingy white.

Up in the second story of the grand stand, where you pay 75 cents and don't care who knows it, sat rank and fashion, indicated by the presence here and there of flowery hats. That the wearers of the hats were familiar of the place would have impressed even a detective, for when a stray ball hot from the bat shot straight in among them, striking the boards with a fearsome crash, not a shriek, not a squeal, scarred the tense silence of the throng.

Down on the floor below, in the very front row, and just beyond the screen behind the bat, sat a woman who had never seen a ball game before. Beside her sat a friend.

You pay only 50 cents in the lesser story, but you really see better than from anywhere else, and you really feel that you are one of us. Flowery hats count for nothing there. All distinctions sink unnoticed under a happy haze of ball.

The woman had been curious to see the national game and the friend had been obliging.

"But," he had asked, "will you have it college or professional? The difference is that college teams sometimes play real ball, while professionals play it always."

"Now, don't try to explain things," said the woman virtuously as they settled into their places. "I know what a nuisance it would be. Just watch the game and enjoy yourself, and let me look."

And yet she asked questions. Questions like: "They don't run very well, do they? What makes them fall down so often when they stop?" Or "Why does he make such angry faces at that other man with the muzzie on his head?"

Next her, on the other side from the friend, sat a red-headed youth, alone; a youth of the proletariat, liberal, minded, gregarious. The fate that gave him that day no mate had been unkind. He suffered for some one to talk to.

The first time that the friend answered a query of the woman's with "I don't know" this young man with an evident specialist's depth of information. He did it shyly, knocking his hat further back from his freckled brow, shifting his cigarette hard apart, and with his eyes unswerving from the game.

But he might never have spoken, might never have existed, for all the recognition the friend vouchsafed. The friend was no snob, but he considered that youth excessive in local color when one had a lady in charge.

Again and again it happened. A less genial one would have congealed. But the red-headed one too truly abounded in good fellowship easily to believe in an intention to rebuff.

Nevertheless, he felt a certain something, and his remarks grew rarer and more rare. The woman was sorry. But this was the friend's party, and he knew best.

The game progressed. Innings waxed and waned. Then came a moment when the visiting-pitcher, given heretofore to pyrotechnic sweep and velocity in his play, stood suddenly motionless with the ball held close before his face.

Seconds flew, and still he stood, with never a shift from that queer attitude.

"What is he doing? Whatever can he be waiting for?" cried he woman, now keen after the idea of the game.

"I'm sure I can't guess," answered the friend.

The red-headed youth stirred uneasily. Mental stress showed in the very twist of his shoulders.

He had meant not to speak again. But this was too much! His resolution shook and fell.

Ostensibly apostrophizing the pitcher, toward whom his face was turned, but with his mouth so wrenched awry that it spoke straight into the woman's ear, he jerked out, deep and hoarse, this brief, enlightening truth:

"Aah, you, Maggie! Stop spittin' on dat ball!"

Feminine Privilege or Tears.

The new preference for the bright side of life is probably due—in woman, at least—to the undeniable truth that they no longer cry as easily as they used to do, says a writer in Black and White. At one time a good weep was a recognized feminine luxury which, like a summer shower, had a marvelous effect in clearing away clouds. Now all but a few members of the sex seem to have lost the art of crying becomingly and readily, and when they begin it is a painful and unsightly business. To be able to weep without shedding tears is a real gift. It is rare that masculine spectators can resist the soft suspicion of moisture in beautiful eyes; but they object to the deluge which reddens the nose and puckers up the face. The woman who cries because she can't help it usually succeeds in driving a man away; but sorrow under restraint, with a possible smile hidden behind the curtain of tears, is an irresistible invitation to him to stay and comfort.

Also the Worst.

EXTRABAGANT LUXURIES OF WOMEN OF FASHION

By Harriet Prescott Spofford

Great Commercial Value of the Fashionable Woman—Benefit of Wage-Earners Through Purchase of Costly Pearls and Splendid Raiment—Toilers and Business People in All Vocations Profit by Supplying Her Requirements—Believes Herself the Inspiration of Big Enterprises.

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

When in the time of great Elizabeth the young wife of Lord Compton requested in her allowance the sum of £4,000 for a string of pearls, she asked for less than the grand dame of to-day thinks of spending for the same ornament. The little circle of pearls that the young girl wears about her throat may have cost, say, only $3,000, but the somewhat larger ones, dropping just to the waist, which her mother wears, cost no less than $40,000.

To the political economist this means a profligate waste of money that would support many families. But the wearer of the pearls claims that their price is supporting many families already. There is the diver and his family, she will tell you; the maker of his boat, his ropes and all his paraphernalia; the cleanser of the shells; the polishers—all to be paid, and all with the money passes. Then there is the work of the jewelers to be satisfied, of the architects and builders of the shops in which they find themselves, of the men and the clerks who buy and sell; and after that one must reckon with the thousand and one industries pertaining to the ships which bring the finished article over seas, ramifying into countless families; to say nothing, finally, of the customs duties which the pearls yield and which assist in carrying on the work of a great government.

Of course one string of pearls is but an infinitesimal matter in the broader view; but it is the many strings that come into the commercial value of the fashionable woman; for she is by herself but a fragment of society and is of moment only by reason of her numbers. Thus she claims that these many strings and ropes of pearls are the means of sending right money employment into wide and far paths of industry; and that while she might lock their price into a bond and shut it in a safe, conscious that it represents money in active use, yet that her string of pearls represents no less money in no less active use. And if the affair stops short with the pearls which are no longer earning, while the bond will still be at work giving her yearly revenue, to be again put into active use, then she claims, in response to such suggestion, that there are other wants than the purely material ones, and the increment of beauty in the pearls, the tints and lusters and environment, are of as much use and value in pleasuring the world as the equivalent in blankets and in beef might be.

When you see the woman of society in all her sweet bravery, a picture in soft colors and lovely raiment, whether she herself be beautiful or not, her jewels, her lace, her flowers, her shining silks, making her a vision of that beauty which is its own excuse for being, you hesitate to show her that there is any fallacy in her argument.

But it is not alone in the matter of her jewels that the woman of society claims commercial value; they are a trifle in the sum total, for there is not an article of her apparel or surroundings that does not merely create but stimulate trade. She knows that as she sweeps by in her grace and her splendor the onlooker is apt to think of her as an idle moth fluttering in the sunbeam and of no use in the world. But without her, she asks, where would the multitude of milliners and modistes with all their dependency of designers and cutters and seamstresses, the weavers of delicate hosiery and underwear, the makers of fine b. s. fine gloves, fine everything, the wholesale people, the middlemen, the retailers? The silk-worm spins for her, she thinks; for her the gem is delved from the mine; for her the trapper sets his snares in the snow; for her the lacemaker swings her bobbins and sends her crepes and India her muslins and France her velvets; for her strips across the sea and caravans the deserts and railways the continents, the whole world tributary to her desires; and if Tenyson's dream of airships were to come true, "pilots of the purple twilight dropping down with costly bales," the costly bales would be for her.

In her home she further claims, the decorator finds his affairs, after builders and their people have had their percentages; the painter hangs his pictures on her walls, the sculptor brings her his marbles and his bronzes, Europe gives her tapestries and silken draperies, the orient gives her rugs, fax fields are sown and open their blue flowers for her napery, silver and gold are wrought for her table, the workmen in the factories of Sevres and Dresden and other great establishments compete for her favor. The support of the finishing schools, for her children, with their teachers of science and art and languages and manners, and that even the toys of these curled darlings of fortune give food and clothing to whole companies of folk in Swiss valleys, in French workshops and in the hidden places of our own cities. And whether enough is paid for any of these possessions of hers, whether wages should be higher and costs lower, is a question she demurs as something altogether on one side of the value to the society of the woman.

And not only to the toilers, to her labor, does she insist that she is chief source of income, but that she is of financial importance from another point of view. She contends that the great opera, the symphony, in which the musician has scaled the strains of heaven, is heard by those of less means only by reason of her numbers; that she affords a theme to the novelist and buys his book; that the playwright, and his patron, and that the newspaper which has the best record of her daily doings has the best circulation and in consequence the able, through its larger receipts, give the latest intelligence and the fullest reading—for to most other women this success, one, so called, is an object of interest, and they follow her movements as they do those of a heroine of romance.

That the fashionable woman carries on and endows various great benevolences she does not mention as showing her value, since she does not do such things because she is a fashionable woman, but because she has the purse of one; but, nevertheless, she organizes in "sweet charity" name, require services which spread money broadcast, and if she does spend her days among the poor, she her income in gifts to them, she learned from the political economist himself that the wages which are paid for her comforts and pleasures are more beneficial in the receipt than in the charity. Whether or not she leads the life that is best for herself, in so far as it has no other aim than enjoyment of the passing hour or the obtaining of social supremacy, it is a life she believes good for myriad others, and if she loses her soul in social policy, losing it, others find their advantage. It may be, it doubtless is a poor and vicious state of society that makes her life possible, but society being as it is the fashionable woman looks upon herself as an unmitigated benefactress.

The bonnet rouge at work upon the streets, who sees the carriage or automobile of the fine lady roll by, huris a curse after it, does not realize anything of this claim of hers or of her wheels gives him work to do and bread to eat. The tired pedestrian who looks after her with envy, the poor woman who draws her skirts closer from the dust of her horse, do not consider that the fashionable woman has nothing on her work which does not represent about her done and wages paid and share of comfort to those receiving them. But the fashionable woman herself, feeling all she claims in justification to be true, declares that she even so much a butterfly fluttering from pleasure to pleasure, she is the less a factor in the business of the world and a distinct addition to its wealth, and, with her financial importance hardly second to that of the wheat farmer or the ironmaster, drags commerce in her train.

It is not to be expected that she should take the political economist's view of herself and her expenditure. He may call her a luxury; she believes that she is a necessity. He may say that she is the incubus of a state army, whose sole excuse is that she does the safety it guarantees; she can be undertaken and prospered; he will answer that the desire on the part of her husband or father to give all that becomes her arouses those energies that make enterprise, business success and big fortunes. Although one may bitterly deplore the condition of society which diverts much capital and labor from the ferent order of production which cheapen food and clothing and complete the birthright of all, with white society is what it is, the selfish abuses of altruism, her numerical value is a feature of her importance.

With the use of the oxy-acetylene blowpipe a temperature of 7,000° obtained, which is almost double that obtained with the oxy-hydrogen flame.

"By God, I Will Stand by You, John Glenarm!"

You know what I mean well enough. Mr. Glenarm never intended that I should sit down in his house and be killed or robbed. He was the gentlest being that ever lived, and I'm going to fight for his memory and to protect his property from the scoundrels who have plotted against me. I hope you follow me."

"Yes, Mr. Glenarm." He was regarding me attentively. His lips quivered, perhaps from weakness, and he seemed distressed and ill.

"Now I offer you your choice,—either to stand loyally by me and my grandfather's house or to join these scoundrel. Arthur Pickering has hired to drive me out. I'm not going to bribe you,—I don't offer you a cent for your help, but I won't have a traitor in the house, and if you don't like me or my terms I want you to go and now."

He straightened quickly,—his eyes lighted and the color crept into his face. I had never before seen him appear so like a human being.

"Mr. Glenarm, you have been hard on me; there have been times when you have been most unjust—"

"Unjust, unfair—my God, what do you expect me to take from you! Haven't I known that you were in league with Pickering? I'm not as dull as I look, and after your interview with Pickering in the chapel porch you can't convince me that you were faithful to my interests at that time."

He started and gazed at me wonderingly. I had had no intention of using the chapel porch interview at this time, but it leaped out of me uncontrollably.

"I suppose, sir," he began brokenly, "that I can hardly persuade you that I meant no wrong on that occasion."

"You certainly can not,—and it's safer for you not to try. But I'm willing to let all that go as a reward for your work last night. Make your choice now; stay here and stop your spying or clear out within an hour."

He took a step toward me; the table was between us and he drew quite near but stood clear of it, erect until there was something soldierly and commanding in his tall figure.

"By God, I will stand by you, John Glenarm!" he said, and struck the table smartly with his clenched hand.

He flushed instantly, and I felt the blood mounting into my own face as are all creatures of habit, and women alike, and the habits and surroundings of daily life have a profound influence on the character of the individual. The root of all bad manners is selfishness when self ever is first, fore-consideration for others always is behind in time that it disappears entirely. "One cannot keep up the proper and etiquette of society at home." True, for between these two can be laid aside. They are the rivets that keep society together, but not courtesy and consideration. The latter ought to be much the habit with each of us. It will become our second nature, therefore can be no more laid aside than an arm or a leg.

Her Pointed Retort.

The old lady put her head out of the window and inquired of the railway porter what the train stopping for the young man that he would have a little fun at the lady's expense. "The engine was out late last night," he remarked with a smile, "and she's got a thirder on her this mornin', they're giving her a drop of it."

The old Scotch lady used to be asked by a doctor to whom she in- dicated a guinea when he went to her. He had told the friends that she lived that her death was probably sudden, and one day she was hurriedly sent for, as she had become unconscious. When she arrived he saw at once that she was dead, and, taking of her right hand, which was cold, but not rigid, he calmly ex- claimed from the fee which she had demanded for him, and as he did so murmured: "Sensible to the

"What is it," she said, looking in her lover's eyes, "that chilled me so then?" The shriek of that engine cut my heart like a knife.

Two hours afterward she knew. Standing in the bay window, through the early twilight she saw the tall figure of a man coming up the pathway—a tall, foreign figure, with a Spanish cloak thrown over the shoulders and a wide-brimmed hat slouched over the eyes.

She clutched Herbert Bell's arm with hands like ice and her face grew ghastly. As the stranger passed the bay window he lifted two fierce, black eyes—eyes that Herbert Bell saw in his dream—and touched his hat with a mocking smile.

A moment later he entered the room, and Vivian Marchwell dropped down at Herbert Bell's feet. He stooped to lift her, but the swarthy stranger was in advance.

LOVE'S VICTORY

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

Vivia was a mystery to the whole seashore party—the butterfly "set" who had come down to the sea to rest and recuperate after their winter's dissipation. They had been there but a few days when Vivia Marchwell appeared among them. Who she was, from whence she came, none knew.

The men loved her. Richard Howe's artist-soul blossomed out suddenly in the passion flower of love after one glance from those haunting eyes. And Carl Neville, poet and dreamer, was fostering a passion too mighty for that frail frame. Nor artist nor poet were destined to stir the slumbering depths of Vivia Marchwell's heart.

"Oh!" she said over and over again, "these men love me, and they want an answering love from me. I wish I could, oh! I wish I could love some good man. But I never can, I never can. I think my heart is dead, and its ashes are over the sea."

Then Richard and Carl's friend, Herbert Bell arrived from the city.

Down the beach the three friends sauntered, asking questions and answering.

Herbert Bell paused suddenly. "Who is that, Carl?" he whispered, glancing toward a group of girls a few feet distant.

"The girl with dreams in her eyes," Carl Neville understood, indefinite as the words were.

"Vivia Marchwell," he said. "You shall be presented this evening—and prepare to lose your heart. But be warned in time, for Miss Marchwell has no heart to give in return. She cannot love, she says."

"You seem to know the state of the lady's mind," laughed Herbert; "I think I understand. Oh, well, I shall not trespass."

But a nameless thrill shot through Herbert Bell's heart that evening as he met the fathomless eyes "with dreams in them."

That same night Vivia Marchwell lay awake and questioned her heart.

"Why does the face of this man haunt me so?" she asked. "I cannot close my eyes but his face glows in the mists before me, and my heart thrilled at the sound of his voice like a harp to the touch of a master hand."

There was a grand piano in the drawing-room, and Herbert Bell sought it the following morning. You would know, to see him touch the keys, even before the sound came forth, that he was king and master there. Heaven endowed him with great musical talent, and all that education could add had been added. You knew this when the sound rolled out beneath his masterly touch. Vivia Marchwell knew it, sitting hidden there in the bay window. It touched her soul and opened the fountains of her heart as they had not been opened in years.

She was weeping, her face upon her hands, when the music ceased. Herbert Bell sought the window and stood amazed at the sight.

"Come," he said, and Vivia Marchwell went.

"My darling," he said, and folded his arms about her.

CROP CONDITIONS IN WESTERN CANADA

Lateness of Spring Overcome by Excellent Growing Summer Season.

Once more the farmers of Western Canada rest at ease and grow rich while they slumber. Their season of anxiety is over. For a time it looked as though a backward season was for once going to prevent the western country from maintaining its preeminent position as leader of the grain growing countries of the world.

The unusual lateness of the spring coupled with the rapid advance in the price of food-stuffs gave the pessimists some reason for their gloomy forebodings, and among even the optimistic Westerners imbued as they usually are with a spirit of buoyancy and hope, there commenced to glimmer a fear that perhaps this year their sanguine expectations were not to be realized.

On May day when a large proportion of wheat had usually been sown there was this year very little seeding done. Finally, however, winter which had tarried so late in the lap of spring in all parts of the Continent vanished before the vertical rays of the sun, and the hurry and bustle of spring work commenced on the western prairies.

By the 20th of May 85% of the spring wheat was sown and the fall wheat in the districts devoted to its cultivation was covering the fields with a mantle of green. Wheat sown in the districts was also in the ground. The heavy snowfall during the winter left the ground in excellent shape when once seeding operations commenced and from the time weather conditions permitted the commencement of work until planting was completed, the farmers were a busy class. The area in wheat is not much larger than last year, but oats, barley and flax are much in excess of past records, the farmers deeming it wiser on account of the lateness of the season to put in a heavier proportion of the coarser grains. From the most reliable reports to hand it appears that the acreage as compared with 1906 will show an increase of 12% in oats, 15% in barley and 15% in flax.

Around Aketokys-High River, Nanton, Claresholm and other winter wheat centers, if the present weather conditions continue, the winter wheat will be in head by the middle of July.

The backward weather in the early part of May allowed the newly sown grain to get a firm root in the ground, and now with an abundance of moisture and warm weather the growth is remarkable. All danger of injury from droughts is practically over as the green crop covers the ground retaining the moisture required for its growth and preventing the too rapid evaporation which might otherwise take place.

Crops in Western Canada mature in one hundred days of good weather, and as the weather conditions have been ideal since seeding, and with spring wheat now from 14 to 18 inches above the ground, a full average crop is confidently expected.

In addition to the cheering prospects of this year's yield the farmers are to be congratulated on the fact that they still have in their possession five million bushels of wheat from last year's crop which they are now disposing of at high prices.

The splendid yield of 90,000,000 bushels of wheat raised in 1906 in the three provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, together with the almost certain assurance that this year will see a considerable increase, is, as in the past, calling the attention of the world of the "Last Best West," and thousands from the United States and the agricultural districts of Europe are each month securing free grant lands or purchasing farms in the land which has proved itself peerless among the grain growing countries of the world.

The Goat Comes First.

Switzerland is the only country in the world where the goat is placed ahead of all other animals, and even of human beings. If a boy plagues a goat he can be fined and sent to jail. If a person meets a goat on a path, and drives him aside he can be arrested.

If a goat enters the yard of a person not his owner and is hit with club or stone the person guilty of the offence must pay 30 cents. If a railroad train sees a goat on the track the train must halt until the animal can be coaxed to remove himself. There's many a boy in America who wishes he were a goat in Switzerland.

Unkind Advice.

Two Irishmen were eating their lunch, when one asked the other: "Pat, an' what be you thinking about?"

Pat replied: "Shure, Mike, I was a-thinking how I would be getting me clothes over me wings when I would get to heaven."

"You would better be thinking how you would be getting your hat over your horns when you get to the other place," answered Mike—Ally Sloper.

"Bacon?" a man asked me for money on the street to-day.

Quite the Contrary.

"No, Naguss; it ended tragically. The total sales were 17 copies."

PROUD IN HER POVERTY, Young Woman's Brave Answer to Insulting Landlord.

Frank P. Sargent, the United States commissioner of immigration, said one day in Washington:

"There is fine stuff in some of these poor people who come to our shores. I heard recently of a young Swedish woman, brave, witty and honorable, she could bring splendid young Americans into the world. A short time after she arrived among us, her husband got out of work. Naturally, then, the rent fell behind. The landlord called for it one day in her husband's absence. He listened to the young woman's tale of misfortune, regarding the while her yellow hair, her clear blue eyes, her red mouth and white teeth. Suddenly, bending toward her, he said:

"Give us a kiss!"

"She drew back, and her blue eyes, as cold as ice, dwelt on him disdainfully.

"No," she said, "my husband and I may be too poor to pay our rent, but we are not so poor that we can't do our own kissing."

AWFUL EFFECT OF ECZEMA.

Covered with Yellow Sores—Grew Worse—Parents Discouraged—Cuticura Drove Sores Away.

"Our little girl, one year and a half old, was taken with eczema or that was what the doctor called it. We took her to three doctors but by this time she was nothing but a yellow, greenish sore. One morning we discovered a little yellow pimple on one of her eyes. Doctor No. 3 said that we had better take her to some eye specialist, since it was an ulcer. So we went to Oswego to doctor No. 4, and he said the eyesight was gone. We were nearly discouraged, but I thought we would try the Cuticura Treatment, so I purchased a set of Cuticura Remedies, which cost me $1, and in three days our daughter, who had been sick about eight months, showed great improvement, and in one week all sores had disappeared. Of course it could not restore the eyesight, but if we had used Cuticura in time I am confident that it would have saved the eye. Mrs. Frank Abbott, R. F. D. No. 9, Fulton, Oswego Co., N. Y., Aug. 17, 1906.

Europe's Extinct Auerochs.

Professor A. Martens of Magdeburg has reviewed all the early literature and documents relating to the famous wild ox of Europe, the auerochs, or urus, and shows that it was not identical with the wild ox of the present time. The auerochs also lived in Europe in the time of the auerochs. It is on record that a herd of thirty auerochs were living in Poland in 1564. In 1627 a few half-domesticated auerochs were still in existence, but the race has since become extinct. The typical color of the auerochs was black, but there was a gray variety in Poland and a red one in Germany.

WOMEN WHO CHARM

Health Is the First Essential Toward Making a Woman Attractive.

MISS HULDA KUGLER MISS ELIZABETH WYNN

There is a beauty and attractiveness in health which is far greater than mere regularity of feature.

A sickly, irritable, and complaining woman always carries a cloud of depression with her; she is not only unhappy herself but is a damper to all joy and happiness when with her family and friends.

It is the bright, healthy, vivacious woman who always charms and carries sunshine wherever she goes.

If a woman finds that her energies are flagging and that everything tires her; if her feminine system fails to perform its allotted duties, there is nervousness, sleeplessness, faintness, headache, bearing-down pains, and irregularities, causing constant misery and melancholia, she should remember that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made from native roots and herbs will dispel all these troubles. By correcting the cause of the trouble it cures where other treatment may have failed.

Miss Elizabeth Wynn, of No. 205 8th Avenue, New York City, writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:— "For months I suffered with dreadful headaches, pain in the back and severe hemorrhages. I was weak and out of sorts all the time. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound helped me when all other medicine had failed. It seemed to be just what I needed and quickly restored my health."

BACK GIVES OUT.

Plenty of Michigan Readers Have This Experience.

You tax the kidneys—overwork them. They can't keep up the continuous strain. The back gives out—it aches and pains. Urinary troubles set in. Don't wait longer—take Doan's Kidney Pills. Michigan people tell you how they act.

Daniel Harrington, living at 30 Bridge Street, Petoskey, Mich., says: "Doan's Kidney Pills cured me of a kidney trouble that was so bad that it caused me to lose many days' work. The kidneys were weak and the secretions contained a heavy brick dust sediment, were very offensive in odor. My back pained me intensely especially when I caught cold, as it always settled on the kidneys. I got so that I could not bend, stoop or lift and at times I was laid up in bed, having in addition to the other troubles the severest kind of headaches. After trying different remedies and prescriptions I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills. The result in my case, as I have stated, was a cure. I will be glad at any time to personally corroborate every word of this statement should anyone ask me my opinion of Doan's Kidney Pills."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York. Sole agents for the United States. Remember the name—Doan's and take no other.

Fritz on the Dachshund.
Little Fritz was told to write an essay on his favorite dog and he wrote the following on the dachshund: "Der dachshund was a German dog dot looks like a bologna sausage mit legs. Vonce fader had a dachshund dot was so long ven it ran around der block ut had to hold up its hind legs, keep from running over uts hind legs. Der dachshund was an obedient dog, but ven you call him to come quick he is always long. He can't help ut—he was born dot vay. Above all, der dachshund ves der only member of der dog's family whose breath comes in long bants. All der rest comes in short bants. Hurrah for der dachshund!"

The World His Oyster.
The novelist of to-day has one great advantage over his fellow of half a century ago. The telegraph, the newspaper and the illustrated weeklies and magazines have opened up the whole world to him and made it contributory to his talent. He can go to the uttermost points of the earth and the knowledge of the reader has preceded him. It acts as a fillip to the imagination; it certifies the correctness of the description; it adds always to the interest. The minute a place is mentioned, the mind of the reader gets at work and thus reinforces the novelist in a most vital point, that of atmosphere.

Long Live The King.
Is the popular cry throughout European countries; while in America, the cry of the present day is "Long live Dr. King's New Discovery, King of Throat and Lung Remedies" of which Mrs. Julia Ryder Paine, Truro, Mass., says: "It never fails to give immediate relief and to quickly cure a cough or cold." Mrs. Paine's opinion is shared by a majority of the inhabitants of this country. New Discovery cures weak lungs and sore throats after all other remedies have failed; and for coughs and colds it's the only sure cure. Guaranteed by Freeman & Cummings Co., druggists. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

Accidents will happen, but the best-regulated families keep Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil for such emergencies. It subdues the pain and heals the hurts.

Many bogus silver dollars are in circulation in Ypsilanti. This is the statement of the receiving teller of a local bank. He says that he has never had so many presented to him in a similar period of time as in the last few days. He offers no explanation as he says he knows of none.—Daily Press.

After twenty-five years of faithful work as pastor of Bethel church in Freedom, Rev. P. Irion has resigned to accept a call to Michigan City, Ind. His congregation very much regret to lose their beloved pastor and friend, but as his health is somewhat impaired it seems best for him to take the city charge. He takes charge of his new pastorate about the middle of October.

The vicinity of Howell and Pinckney was visited by a severe wind-storm Sunday afternoon from 4 to 5:30 and the lightning was awful. Trees and fences were blown down and considerable farm property was destroyed. An auto party from Lansing attempted to return home from Portage lake but was unable to do so because of the fallen trees and returned to the lake for the night.

The officers of the soldiers and sailors' reunion of Lenawee county met at H. W. Stevens' office Monday afternoon and fixed on Tuesday, August 27, as the date for holding the annual reunion and basket picnic. The place selected was the fair grounds at Adrian. The new immigrant law went into effect July 1. It requires every alien coming from Canada, who has not lived one uninterrupted year in that country, to pay a fee of $4 before he can enter the United States. When the immigrant enters this country he must be enrolled by the officials or he can never become a citizen of the United States. Immigrant inspectors say the new law will be enforced to the letter.

RIVER MADE HIM INSURE.

Got Tired of Falling Into Water and Bought Protection.

One of our men selling insurance tells of an instance where a special manifestation and a moving of the spirit and the flesh were necessary to make a New Madrid man take out a policy, says an insurance man in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. He had a place on the river bank below the town. His little shack was perched on a bluff which jutted far out over the water. There had been a good many landslides down there, caused by the disintegration of the bank. The agent sighted the shack the first thing when he made the town and that afternoon he went up there to talk business. There was nothing doing. The old fellow was a fatalist and he didn't believe in insurance. "I go as the spirit moves me," he said, solemnly. The agent was persistent. "You might fall in the river some day," he said. "Well, I tell you all, honey, I ain't never fell in yet. When I've done fell in you can come around and see me." Five months later the agent made the town again. He sighted the shack, but it wasn't where it had been. It was a mile or so back from the bluff. But the man who lived there was waiting at the gang-plank. He grabbed the agent's hand and said: "I thought maybe you was on the boat and I 'me down to wait for you all." After awkward pause he added: "I guess maybe I'll take that policy. I've done fell in three times. You'd better put a policy on the shack, too. I'm tired of fishin' it outen the river an' totin' it up the hill."

High Class Reporting.
English sporting reporters will have to look to their laurels, says the London Tatler. Rex Beach thus relates in Everybody's Magazine an episode in a prize fight at Tonopah in Nevada on New Year's day: "In a quiet interval between rounds I heard a reporter dictating high-class pugilistic literature: 'Herman's work in the fifth was classy and he fought all over the place. He stabbed the Dingle in the food-hopper three times and all but got his goat, then missed a right swing to the butler's pantry by an inch. If he had coupled it would have been the sunset glow for Dahomey, but Gans didn't fall for the gag, not hardly. He ripped an upper through the Yiddish lad and put him on the hop with a right cross.'"

There is more catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

Guaranteed to cure all sores, by Freeman & Cummings Co., druggists 25 cents.

Oklahoma will come into the Union with the most drastic prohibition law ever embodied in a constitution for the government of men. It prohibits not only the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, but does not allow them to be brought into the state. Oklahoma's interests are almost entirely agricultural, its citizens are mostly farmers, and it is greatly to their credit that they have decided to begin their career under an organic law that refuses to recognize the "divine right" of the hitherto potential despot known as King Alcohol.—American Farmer.

Wanten Slaughter of Game.

Kill! Kill! Kill! The word is on every tongue from the time the big-game season opens in the far west until it closes, two months later. Every man's hand seems to be against the wild things of the mountains—the harmless wild things which lend to the forest half its charm. If it were the aim of the people to exterminate the deer, elk and mountain sheep they could not kill with more avidity. The question of skill does not enter into it. If an elk is close enough to singe his hair with the powder, no matter, kill him! If the pack horses are already loaded to the limit, if not a pound of the meat is to be touched, if the head is worthless as a trophy and the horns valueless, no matter, kill just the same. The law permits each person his two elk, so take the limit. If an animal is crippled, do not bother to trail him, let him go; the wolves will pull him down eventually, or he will fall and starve—that elk with the shattered shoulder or the deer with the dragging hind leg. What does it matter to you if, a comparatively few years hence, the elk tracks and the print of the deer's pointed hoof are gone forever, if the forests are depleted and silent and a pair of antlers has become a curiosity? You have had your sport. And this, exclaims Caroline Lockhart in Lippincott's, is the way in which nine-tenths of the people reason who hunt in the big-game season. The real sportsman is not a menace to the game; he is its best friend, its protector. He is as jealous of it as though it were his own property, and he has a clearly defined code of honor in regard to the killing of it. But real sportsmen are rare in the big-game country.

New Jersey lives up to its reputation for producing original citizens. The latest case in point is that of Peter Mowry, an engineer on the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western railroad. One day when his train reached Millburn he discovered that he did not have water enough to carry him to the next water tank. He hesitated only a moment, then jumped out of his cab and disappeared. Before he climbed back to his seat the fire engines came tearing down the street toward the station. In reply to the foreman, who asked where the fire was, Mowry explained his needs, and said he had pulled the alarm because he thought maybe the fire company could run a hose to a hydrant and fill his tank. He did not judge his fellow Jerseymen wrongly, for the hose was unbound and the soon had all the water he needed.

Dr. Marade, the French inventor of voice telegraphy, says that the reason women can talk longer, and faster, and harder than men is because their larynxes are narrower. He asserts that there is need for a tremendous amount of power in talking with a broad larynx—that an orator talking to a big crowd does as much work as a porter who shoulders 400 pounds. On this basis there are several gentlemen loose in the country who are doing as much work as the average railroad.

It has taken the English five years to decide that Empire day, as the anniversary of Queen Victoria's birthday has been called since the queen's death, is worth celebrating. It has been observed in the British colonies, but at home hardly any official recognition of the day has been shown. This year, however, the London school children received a half holiday, and sang patriotic songs and saluted the flag before going home for the afternoon.

The New York legislature has passed a bill which gives women school teachers in New York city the same pay as men. It has long been maintained that for equal work there should be equal pay. The lower rate of pay for women teachers has, for better or for worse, left American common school education largely in the hands of women, and tended to keep men out of the profession.

Itinerant booksellers on the East Side in New York always find a market for manuals of etiquette. The foreigners, who crowd the district, are anxious to learn how to behave in the free society of America, and eagerly read instructions on eating, soup, when to rise and when to sit down, what to say and when to say it.

The king of Roumania rules over the youngest monarchy in Europe. The crown he wears is of solid iron, plain and unadorned. It was fashioned, by his desire, from a huge cannon which he and his brave Roumanian troops captured from the Turks at Plevna.

A piece of ice fell from the rear of a wagon in New York and killed the iceman. We didn't suppose the trust could be so careless—about the size of the chunks.

MRS. WASHBURN NOW TELLS NEW STORY OF THE MURDER OF REYNOLDS.

HAD SEVEN HUSBANDS.

She Becomes Sullen and Says Very Little—Opinion of the Authorities in the Matter.

Mrs. William Washburn, who in her 39 years has been the wife of seven different men, is now going back on her story that No. 6 husband, Alkali Bill Shimmel, murdered No. 5, who was Ira Reynolds. A few days ago in the Kent county jail she told in detail a story of how one night Shimmel called Reynolds to the door of their house near Grand Haven and killed him with a club, then took the body away in a bob sled.

Now Mrs. Washburn says that she is not sure whether Shimmel was the murderer or not. "It might have been some other man. It's so long ago I can't remember clearly," is the way she expressed it.

The prosecuting authorities have long had a suspicion that Shimmel killed Reynolds. Mrs. Shimmel talked freely when brought to the jail. Now she is sullen and saying little. It is not clear now how reliance can be put in anything she tells from now on.

Storm Freaks.

The severest electrical and rain storms that ever visited Traverse City occurred Friday night. The small fruit crop is considerably damaged. At Buckley the house of Frank Rapier was struck and the chimney knocked off, bed clothes on the upper floor were torn to pieces and a partition between the dining room and kitchen was broken to splinters. The family dog was killed instantly. Rapier, with his baby in his arms, his wife and two children were seated near the dog, and the babe was thrown to the floor heavily, but was not injured. Lightning struck a cherry tree on the B. J. Morgan farm, tearing a ladder to pieces. Mrs. Michael Knoll was picked up apparently dead, but was revived.

Owosso Unfortunates.

Two peculiar accidents happened in Owosso Friday, seriously injuring Richard King and John Cook. King was bitten on the shoulder by a vicious horse, a large chunk of flesh being removed. Some of the tendons were cut and it is feared the arm will be permanently stiffened. Cook, who is circulator of the Daily Press-American, was carrying the form and the first page of the paper, when he stubbed his toe and dove head first into a brick wall. The accident rendered him unconscious and the page was pried, delaying the paper three hours.

Bay City Troubles.

The bureau of public safety, provided by the last legislature to take over from the Bay City council the control of the fire and police departments, has begun mandamus proceedings in the circuit court to compel Mayor Hine and the council to turn over the books, records, etc., of the two departments. The mayor and council are contesting on the grounds that the appointment of the board by Gov. Warner is unconstitutional. Arguments will be heard and the case will go to the supreme court as soon as possible.

Gasoline Famine.

Because the Standard Oil Co. will not ship any gasoline to the Soo, the city faces a famine in the liquid fuel line. The last drop in the city was sold Saturday and all gasoline boats, automobiles and stoves are going out of commission. The tanks of the trust are empty, although a supply was ordered a month ago and it is claimed at the company's office that letters sent to headquarters regarding the trouble have not been answered. Housewives are sweltering over wood fires as a result.

Victim Walked Off.

While automobiling in Battle Creek Prof. Malcolm Watson felt a chug under his machine, but he rode on. Some one yelled "That was a man you hit," and Watson stopped. Seeing that the victim was prostrate in the road, he hurried to a telephone and called the police. When they arrived the man was gone. Neighbors say he walked away swearing at "that street car."

Many Violent Deaths.

There were 204 deaths by violence in Michigan, in June, according to the health reports, leading pulmonary tuberculosis deaths by 9. There were 424 deaths of infants under a year and 896 deaths of elderly persons. Of the violent deaths drowning caused 43 and lightning 3, and three died from sunstroke. Gov. Warner has named as members of the commission to secure and place a monument to Gen. Geo. A. Custer in Monroe the following: Col. George G. Briggs, Grand Rapids; Gen. J. M. Kidd, Ionia, and Lieut. F. A. Nims, Monroe. All were friends and served with Gen. Custer.

"COME OFF!"

Japan has decided to retaliate on Korea for sending its grievances to The Hague conference by ousting the present Emperor.—Cable Dispatch.

KOREAN TROOPS IN REVOLT

ESCAPE FROM BARRACKS AND FIGHT WITH JAPANESE.

Twenty-Five of Latter Killed and Wounded—Ito Disclaims Responsibility for Abduction.

Seoul, Korea. — Bloody fighting took place in the streets of Seoul Friday afternoon. It was started by a company of Korean troops who mutinied, escaped from their barracks and their officers, and attacked a police station. After firing several volleys they scattered, continuing a desultory firing and attacking individual Japanese.

They were joined by the populace, who used stones and clubs. Ten wounded have already reached the hospital in the Japanese quarter, where the Japanese are flocking for refuge. The correspondent while on the scene noted seven Japanese and four Koreans dead, and three Japanese and two Koreans wounded. Gen. Hasegawa is sending dismounted cavalry to reinforce the police, who are now searching for the mutineers. The military have been ordered out.

All traffic has been stopped and the Japanese shops are guarded. The police report that 25 Japanese were killed and wounded in the day's rioting. The casualties among the Koreans are unknown.

The elaborate ceremony of transferring the imperial seal to the crown prince took place Friday forenoon. Some shops were closed because of the sympathy of the proprietors with the emperor, and the streets around the palace were filled with people.

At the Japanese residency, Marquis Ito and Viscount Hayashi, in answer to an inquiry regarding the effect of the emperor's action, its importance in effecting a settlement of the whole Japanese-Korean situation, and whether or not it was in accordance with the plans of Japan, said they were not prepared at the present to make a statement.

Marquis Ito, however, desired it to be emphatically stated that both before and during his audience Thursday, when the emperor and cabinet were weighing the question of abdication, he refused any participation. The emperor repeated his declaration that he was not responsible for the sending of the Korean delegation to The Hague and asked Marquis Ito's opinion of the cabinet's representation regarding abdication. Furthermore, Marquis Ito declares, the cabinet's whole course of action was based on its own initiative.

HAYWOOD EVIDENCE EXCLUDED

That Bearing on Alleged Counter Conspiracy Shut Out.

Boise, Idaho.—The field for argument both for the prosecution and defense of William D. Haywood was limited by Judge Wood, who in a decision handed down Friday removed from consideration of the jury all evidence bearing on the alleged conspiracy of mine owners and others against the Western Federation of Miners.

Immediately following the announcement of this decision argument commenced. Judge Hawley, leading counsel for the state, spoke for two hours and fifteen minutes.

His address after the opening statement, in which he explained that he had "none of the grace of words that constitute an orator," was at times eloquently impassioned, but with a plain analysis of the case. He characterized the case as the "most important ever given to a jury in the United States," and urged the jury to a serious consideration of the responsibility placed upon it. His denunciation of the defendant and his co-conspirators as the "worst band of criminals that ever infested any section of this country," was forceful, and his eulogy of ex-Gov. Steunenberg eloquent in the extreme.

An hour afterward, it was reported that preparations for a lynching were under way. BRAVERY ON THE GEORGIA

CAPT. M'CREA TELLS INCIDENTS OF THE AWFUL DISASTER.

Courage of Rescuers Who Plunged Unhesitatingly into the Turret—How One Man Died.

Boston.—Capt. Henry McCrean, of the Georgia, seated in his cabin Wednesday, told about the explosion on the battleship Monday that caused the death of nine men and the injury of 12 others. Said the captain:

"I was on the bridge making the run for the practice. I was taking observations of each shot. I saw we were beating the records of the other ships of the fleet. On the bridge I could hear the command from the after turret. So I knew when the next shot was coming.

"I heard the 'hot fire,' but there was no shot, and then I saw men running aft, and quickly the fire hose, that is always laid out in readiness when there is firing going on, was manned.

"I rushed to the after bridge near the turret to see what was the matter. The water was already being poured into the turret. The boatswain and Midshipman Gravesroed led the way for their men with the hose. I tell you, there was courage! No man knew what had happened and no man knew into what danger he might be rushing.

"Probably one little act, or rather one great act, of one of the men, prevented a far greater disaster. I don't know his name. He's dead. He and one other stood by the second gun, that had just been loaded. The last powder bag that had been put in was protruding a little from the gun. When he saw the flash, instead of dashing to the ladder to save himself, he crowded home the charge in the gun and with the help of the other men got the gun closed before the flames reached the bag. If the flames had touched that bag there would have been an awful explosion, for the powder was confined in the gun and would not have flashed as the other did, but would have exploded. Not a man in the turret would have been left alive, whatever other damage might have been done. That man gave his life for the others.

"I am told President Roosevelt has inquired about a man that gave his life in closing the shutter from the ammunition room to save the ship from blowing up. I would be very wrong to have a story like that go out, because I cannot find that there is any foundation for it, or need for a man to make any attempt to do anything of the sort. But if the president wants heroism let him look up this brave man who stood by his gun to save the rest."

The young woman was sometimes known under the name of Lillian Ryan.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE.
The Christian Science Society will meet in the G. A. R. hall at the usual hour next Sunday, July 28th. Subject: "Love." Golden text: "Hear, O Israel: The Lord our God is one Lord: And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might." Deuteronomy, 6: 4, 5. Responsive reading: Deuteronomy, 10: 12, 13; 24: 14-22.

Better Than the Mule.
At a dinner the other night little Algy offered a toast to women. Said Algernon: Here's to woman, beautiful, fascinating woman. Made after man, and has been after him ever since. Ha! Ha! "And here's to man," responded the ingenious debutante. "Man is the paragon of animals. On his own ground he surpasses the lion in magnanimity, the fox in acumen, the parrot in wit, the monkey in versatility, the ant in thrift, the spider in all that goes to make it a valued member of society. Briefly, a man is more of a success than the mule." She vowed that, inspired by Algy, she made it up right off the wheel. At any rate, none of the other women present has as yet lauded it either in the ladies' home journals or "Heart to Heart Talks with Women," so maybe she did. She is clever enough about other things, dear knows.

Saved.
M. Jacques Bonhomme et sa femme were entertaining a company of select friends. They had just got seated at table when Baptiste, the waiter, rushed into the room in a state of wild alarm, exclaiming: "Quick! a glass of wine." Everybody stared, but his wish was complied with, and Baptiste swallowed at one gulp a glass of wine poured out by the lady of the house, who inquired what was the matter with him. "Oh, madam, I am dreadfully upset. That glass of wine has done me good; it has brought me round. Only think! I have just had the misfortune to break your two large dessert dishes of Sevres porcelain."

"Nothing Doing."
"Nothing doing!" Is that slang? I thought it was until last night, when I came upon the words in Dickens' "Dombey & Son." In chapter IV, old Sol Gills is explaining to his nephew Walter why the shop must be closed and the business abandoned. "You see, Walter," said he, "in truth this business is merely a habit with me. I am so accustomed to the habit that I could hardly live if I relinquished it; but there's nothing doing, nothing doing." So, you see, the phrase had its pathetic fitness half a century ago, and is not slang at all.—Watson's Weekly Jeffersonian.

His Salvation.
"I wuz so low down in de finances," said the colored philosopher, "dat I wuz des erbout ter hang mysef ter a white oak limb w'en a man come 'long en paid me 40 cents he'd been a-owin' ever sence freedom broke out, en I postponed de occasion en quolled de rope up, en went home ter supper!"—Atlanta Constitution.

Illusion.
Woman (expecting a call from her lover)—"Oh, this waiting is something terrible! I can't stand it. (To maid.) Sophie, go outside and ring the bell three or four times, hard!"—Translated for Tales from Meggendorfer Blatter.

BEAUTIFUL ANTIQUE TYPES FOR THE COLLECTOR

For the Teeth.
An eminent dental surgeon advocates the cleaning of the teeth daily with a toothbrush dipped in a mixture of vinegar and water, equal parts, and the immediate subsequent use of powdered pumice, powdered opium shell or powdered chalk. Then the mouth is to be rinsed.

Good Nail Polish.
Here is a good powder for polishing nails: Finest powder one-half ounce, pulverized gum stone two ounces. Mix thoroughly, add fifteen grains of carmine and a few drops of oil of rose if a perfume is desired. Mix through silk bolting cloth.

Hair Restorer.
Shampoo the hair before the first application. Apply to the scalp each night with a brush; massage for five minutes. When the color is restored use but once a week.

Thin Neck.
Hollows of the neck may be filled out by using massage and drinking milk. A glass

Eyebrow Tonic.
Apply this tonic to the brows with a fine sable brush, twice a day:
Sulphate of quinine.....5 grains
Sweet almond oil.....1 ounce

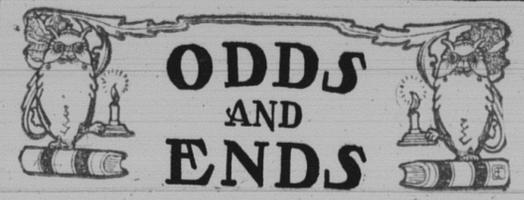

Three Valuable Hints.
The garments worn during the day should always be removed at night and fresh garments substituted.
A few drops of any good toilet water in the last rinsing water gives a faint suggestion of perfume to the hair that is very refreshing.
In extreme cases it may be wise to use alcohol, bay rum, borax or ammonia to open the pores and cleanse the skin, but if used freely these things tend to dry the skin and should be avoided.

OLD FURNITURE.

It is a mistake to suppose that there is no old furniture left. The supply is, of course, growing less every year, but there are still unworked mines and if one search long and diligently enough, the right pieces will eventually be found. The trouble with the amateur is that she can not wait and so she clutches eagerly at the first things that fall into her way. Later, when she finds really desirable pieces, she learns to her dismay that her funds have been dissipated. This can never happen to the woman who has fortified herself with knowledge. She knows a good piece the moment she sees it. In order to prepare herself for the work of making selections, however, she must first study the old styles, learn which are desirable, whether a piece is well made and worth making over, and she must also have some knowledge of woods. Even after the piece is bought, however, the hardest task is before her. It must be refinished and probably no collector was ever yet satisfied with the finish of a piece of fine mahogany. It is a case of trying them all and liking none. Besides, the cost of such work is so great that most women must think twice before ordering a piece restored.

ODDS AND ENDS

Worth Knowing.
Try dipping lamb chops in lemon juice just before broiling them. They are delicious.
Pieces of felt glued to the tips of the chair legs will prevent them from marking the hardwood floor.
Instead of rolling the cream cheese balls in minced English walnuts, try rolling them in chopped black walnuts.
To remove the "shine" from a dark wool material sponge it with a solution of common washing blue and water and press it, while still damp, under a thin cloth. This is said to be a very efficacious treatment.

Cleaning Chamois.
Very dirty chamois skins should be cleaned by rubbing soft soap into them and allowing them to soak for two hours; then rub till clean. Rinse in a weak solution of warm water, soda and yellow soap. Wring in a rough towel and dry quickly, pulling until soft.

Tinting Lace.
To color lace for a gown, procure a tube of oil paint, the color desired, and squeeze it into a cup of gasoline and stir until dissolved. Then pour into a larger vessel. Dip a small piece of the lace into it and if too deep add more gasoline until the shade desired is obtained. When it is the right color put all the lace into it. After a few minutes take out, shake gently and dry in the open air. Flowers and straw may be tinted by the same method.

Medicinal Vegetables.
Beets are fattening, and good for people who want to put on flesh, so are potatoes. Asparagus stimulates the kidneys. Bananas are beneficial to sufferers from chest complaints. Cranberries are astringent, and correct the liver when it is suffering from inaction caused by overeating. Cabbage is good for pulmonary complaints.

Dates are exceedingly nourishing, and also prevent constipation.

Chandeliers.
If you have old-fashioned overhead chandelier lights in your house, some time during the summer try to have the change made to the more artistic and convenient side lights. A pair near the piano, the desk or bookcase, and over a corner seat, will be found to add to the furnishing of the room and apparently increase the size of a small apartment.

Cleaning Velvet.
Velvet can be cleaned by rubbing with a cloth that has been dipped in powdered magnesia. Shake occasionally, and when entirely gone over brush with rather a stiff brush.

BUYING COOKING PANS.
Steel will be found smoother than iron and it will last longer, because it does not break so easily. Do not purchase cheap tinware; if of good quality tinware will last well for a long time and it is excellent for many purposes.
Such articles of food as layer cakes or anything that requires quick cooking are best cooked in tin, but neither tin, iron nor steel should be used for acid foods.
Peas and beans will not cook soft in enamel ware, but will soften quickly in a tin saucepan.
Fruit should never be cooked in tin or iron, but only in porcelain or enamel lined saucepans; neither should tin be used for frying, boiling coffee or for any purpose where it must be exposed to intense heat, for tin melts at a very low temperature, and if exposed to heat at a high temperature the result is apt to be disastrous, says an exchange.
Aluminum ware is, of course, the very best of all. It is light in weight, very clean looking, as it really is, and altogether it seems to leave nothing to be desired. It is very expensive, however, although its purchase is economy in the end.
A simple washing with pure soap suds and warm water, then a thorough drying, is all that is necessary to keep aluminum bright. Strong soaps and powders must not be used on it or it will become discolored.
For baking dishes, bowls, custard cups and the like the little brown German ware dishes are clean and pretty; they are creamy white inside.
At the first empty quart milk bottles with a metal top will be found excellent for keeping cereals and other supplies. They do not take up much room on the shelf and for this reason are preferable to crockery jars. One can also see the contents at a glance.
Later on the jars may be purchased if one desires them, for they are very pretty, but do not at first slight cooking utensils for receptacles in which to keep food.

Furniture Covers.
The woman who expects to remain at home for the greater part of the summer is beginning to plan for creature comfort in hot weather already. One of the first things to be ordered is linen coverings for the furniture and if these are to be made by the upholsterer they ought to be talked about pretty soon, before his busy season commences.
Nothing looks or feels cooler in summer than linen or cretonne covers over the heavy upholstered chairs and sofas. If she wishes to have her bedroom or boudoir pretty as well as comfortable a woman does well to select flowered patterns for her covers in English fashion instead of the usual plain or striped effects. The English have rather a pretty habit of keeping their light, expensively covered chairs covered with pretty cretonne slips all the year round unless company is expected and two separate pieces, waist and skirt, and the waist was outlined with a band of white silk about one inch wide. It was sleeveless with a surplice front, the fullness being drawn in under white shoulder straps. The gumpie was of soft, thin lace. The skirt of nine gores, looked neat in wide plaits, which were stitched only a short distance from the waist enough to give a smooth effect over the hips.

Cleaning Fruit Cans.
Tops of fruit cans can be cleaned if they are placed in sour milk or vinegar, and left until the mold comes off easily, when they are washed in water. They should also be scrubbed with a brush to clean the grooves in the side of the lid.

The newest veils for traveling, motor, yachting, etc., are of green net.

A HANDY BOX.
A new piece of bedroom furniture that is practical as well as novel is the chest of shirt-waist boxes. The ordinary shirt-waist box is not particularly new. They have been seen for some time in the smart shops, with the box covered with cretonne, which, however, quickly becomes soiled if it is continually handled, and the whole set looks unpleasant and ugly. The success of this chest of boxes is the use of sanitas for covering. Sanitas is made now in the faintest colorings and very pretty designs, and can be readily cleaned when soiled.

Cleaning Kitchen Utensils.
Wet a coarse cloth with hot water, soap it well and apply to copper. Sprinkle powdered borax over it; and

FROM FASHIONDOM
Omber taffeta or liberty is an ideal fabric used for the foundation of shawl frocks. A skirt of gauze or chiffon, for example, is made over a colored silk barely tinted at the waist, but shading to a much deeper hue at the skirt bottom.
Women with good figures still like the corset skirt. A smart suit recently seen was in hop-green chiffon broadcloth, worn with a wide-steeled bolero, embroidered and applied with stitched strapings. With it was worn a chemisette of Alencon and Irish lace.
Little taffeta boleros in emerald green, Havana brown, suede gray, etc., are much worn by Parisians over their batistes, voiles, etc. The little coats are very short and fitted, trimmed in tiny ruffles of the silk and buttoning with one large button at the waist line.
The craze for every one of the shawl shades exceeds all expectations. They rise out of the golden brown, the golden brown out of the rust brown into a gamut or scale that ends in the palest biscuit tones which make for full-dress occasions. Figured or plain silks, if in the Rajahs, of the natural silk color (which is one of the shades in vogue), are to be the traveling costumes most in demand.
Brown stockings embroidered in self-tones are in the best style and taste, though some are shown which are ornamented with tiny sprays of small colored flowers. The greatest variety seems to be in the black variety where a touch of color is not objectionable and some of the embroideries on these are most elaborate. The pink roses or wreaths of forget-me-nots make many of them very attractive.
The development of green silk gauze in a jumper suit is worthy of mention. The dress was made in

MOONEY MIGGLES AND THE MAGIC GAP

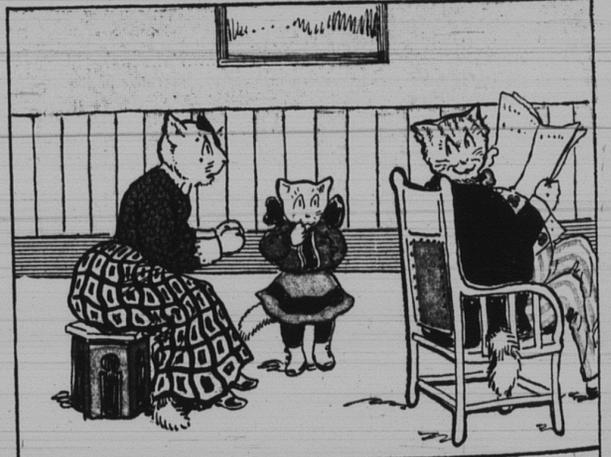

PINKIE PRIM

Papa Prim grew prosperous;
He got another job.
Went to work for Uncle Tim;
At club then did hobnob

With millionaires and brokers,
Until you couldn't rest.
He even grew so sporty,
He got a spotted vest.

"Seems to me," said Mrs. Prim,
"The time is ripe to move
To a better neighborhood."
Said Papa, "I approve!"

So, the Prim's pulled up their stakes,
And found them a "Queen Anne,"
Gables, towers, ev'rything,
Included in the plan.

Of course, the boys were tickled,
And Mamma Prim was, too.
Papa Prim grew eloquent!
But Pinkie's words were few

Back to her old neighborhood
To mingle with the crowd,
Frequently went Pinkie.
She wasn't least bit "proud."

Even Gibraltar can't compare with the foundation of our bank, because the famous rock has underground passage and our bank has not. Built squarely on honesty, every depositor can be sure of fair treatment, security for his money, and a constantly-earning interest on same. Most rocks can be blasted and crumbled, but the foundation on which this bank is built bids defiance to both. Got in line with our big family of satisfied depositors and build for future comfort on our solid foundation.
