New Deputy Warden.

Warden Stone has appointed H. N. Thompson as his deputy at the Jackson state prison. Mr. Thompson for the past seventeen years has been an officer at that institution, and during the past eight years has held the office of hallmaster. In the position of deputy warden, Mr. Thompson succeeds Timothy H. Ryan. An appointment has not yet been made to fill the vacancy caused by Mr. Thompson's promotion. Warden Stone said the reason he made the change was because he thought it was for the best and that he considered Mr. Thompson better able to fill the position than Mr. Ryan.

The Responsible Parties.

According to an opinion rendered by the supreme court recently, a township is held responsible when an accident occurs on a bridge improperly protected by railings. The supreme court also holds that the owner of a traction engine may be held responsible when fires originate from a threshing machine.

Jackson Woman Makes Ascension.

Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Clarke, with Pilot H. N. Arnold, made a beautiful ascension from the Jackson grounds of the Michigan Aero club, at 10:40 Monday forenoon in the balloon Michigan No. 1, going in an easterly, slightly north, direction.

The Clarks are among Jackson's society people. Mr. Clark being a banker. Mrs. Clark is a Wyoming girl. She kept in the back ground until the time for her to enter the basket. Smiling and waving her handkerchief, she composedly sailed away into the clouds.

It is reported that there was no evidence of it, and only once did she sit down in the bottom of the basket, that being when the pilot was trying to make the start, the balloons swaying so much that it was not safe to have one's head near the ropes.

In about ninety seconds after the balloon started, it was about 4,000 feet in the air, and moving almost steadily.

Mrs. Clarke is the first woman, outside of professionals, to make a balloon ascension in Michigan, and Jackson is talking excitedly of her daring feat.

The balloon was seen by the residents of this place at about noon, south of town. The balloon landed about three miles from Mt. Clemens at 2 o'clock on a farm. The party returned to their Jackson home at 7:40 in the evening.

Workmen Find Old Skeleton.

Ann Arbor Times News: Workmen excavating for the cellar of the new Brown building on Fourth avenue next to the city Y. M. C. A. last week came across a mystery that probably dated from the early years of the county.

Digging in the middle of the new cellar under what was once the cellar of the old Goodrich house a workman's shovel struck pieces of what seemed stone. Investigation proved the stone to be really bones and those who looked at them were satisfied they had once formed a part of a human skeleton. The gruesome find consisted of a lower jawbone and what seemed to be parts of an arm and some ribs. Having been found under the cellar of the old hotel that was built way back in 1831 before the Washtenaw house, speculation is rife as to how they came there, and whether they are the evidence of some undiscovered crime.

Soap Swindlers.

Soap agents have been swindling housekeepers in a number of Michigan towns. They take orders for fifty bars of a well known brand of soap for $2, and a set of dishes with each order of soap. The agents have been collecting $1 down, the remainder to be collected on delivery. It now develops that there is no soap company of the name they gave.

Monroe's Sheriff Shot.

Sheriff Edmond Dull, of Monroe county, who was shot Monday night by a negro whom he sought to arrest, died late Tuesday night.

Travis Wilson, the negro arrested at Flint Tuesday, suspected of being the man who shot the officer, was landed in the county jail at Monroe Tuesday evening. He has been identified by Albert Hayes, the white man who is said to have been robbed and thrown from a train by Wilson.

That the authorities anticipated trouble and feared to expose the negro to the residents of Monroe was evidenced by the fact that the train was stopped at Dunbar crossing, five miles north of the town, where an automobile was waiting and the prisoner was thus rushed into the town before the people knew of his arrival. Wilson was placed in the only steel cage cell in the county jail and extra guards were placed about the jail for the night.

Another negro named Wm. Harris, was taken by Monroe county farmers to the county jail Wednesday, and has also been identified by the women who gave him food as the man who shot the sheriff. Both suspects are being held by the authorities.

How To Save Babies In Hot Weather.

Hot weather as a cause for the big infant death roll was vindicated partly by Dr. Wiley, chief food expert of the department of agriculture in an interview Friday. The baby sacrifices are due, in a large measure, to artificial foods, he said.

"Statistics show," said Wiley, "that high temperatures are generally accompanied by high infant mortality, but it is the babies who are obliged to eat artificial foods who are most generally affected."

"The only safe food for infants is the milk of healthy mothers."

"The next healthy food is fresh milk given by healthy cows, properly modified, but as this can be obtained by only a few persons, recourse must be had to the general supply. In this hot weather; it is apt to be very bad, especially for infants, tending to produce that most fatal disease, diarrhoea."

"However, the danger could be avoided to some extent by keeping the milk cool from the time of its production to its delivery."

The Web Worms.

Web worms and various cousins of the same hungry tribe, have commenced summer boarding on the foliage of fruit and shade trees. The web worms starts with a modest little silken web of gossamer on the tip of some branch. As soon as the green food supply within the little enclosure is consumed the protecting tent is enlarged, while the little worms get to be fuzzy big ones and your trees are stripped of foliage. No tree is too big for them to kill and smaller ones fall an easy prey. There is a voracious red worm with a black head that attacks the foliage at this time of year and another woolly one that leaves only the ribs of the leaves while the red one is getting all but the center mast. A kerosene torch is the most efficient and convenient method of killing these tree pests. Search your trees carefully and frequently. You can get the jump on them while the colonies are small.

COMFORTED THE LITTLE ONE

Soothing Touch of Ugly Deity, and Childish Faith, Wrought Instant Cure.

Every one knows the comfort little people derive from a kiss on the bruised spot, a loving pat, soft soothing, on the bumped head. Even folk of greater growth are not proof against such sympathetic alleviations of their pain of body or mind. A tender little bit of human nature is told by Gilbert Watson in "Three Rolling Stones in Japan." The author visited a temple where one of the big stone gods was supposed to heal all bodily hurts.

"How does he work his cures?" asked I.

"By personal contact. Rub the place you wish healed with the same hand you have rubbed him. If we wait we will be sure to see some one try it."

No one came for a long time, save one old woman, who laid a little bunch of flowers between the feet of the image, in gratitude, doubtless, for restoration from disease. By and by a shrill, childish cry made us turn. A little girl had fallen and hurt herself; the little knee had bruised itself; the sharp corner of an uneven flagstone. Tears welled up in her eyes and trickled down her cheeks as the small one held up her knee for the old woman's inspection. The rose-leaf skin was broken where the pavement had scratched it.

The old woman bent, over the little sufferer and whispered consolation. The look of pain passed, and confidence took its place. Hand in hand, the two crossed over to the figure of the god. The woman clasped her hands, uttered a prayer, stroked the god's knee with her withered hand, and then rubbed the little human knee very tenderly.

The cure was effected at once; the child smiled up at the ugly deity gratefully, with naive affection in her eyes. The impressive stone statue seemed beautiful to her now. The dear old god had kissed her knee and made it well, so of course she loved him, and would think of him often, sitting there in the temple, waiting to heal little children who had hurt themselves.—Youth's Companion.

A Poached Egg.

He was trying to read, but the other two occupants of the compartment kept up such an incessant chatter that staid application had become a practical impossibility. One of them had black hair and the other red, and they were discussing the forthcoming carnival.

"I'm going as Hannibal crossed the Alps," declared the first to his red-headed companion. "What are you going as?"

His companion ran his fingers through his flaming locks.

"I can't think," he replied. "I've considered Isaac Newton, G. L. Jessop, a cavalier, Socrates, Bart Kennedy, St. George and Tom Jones. But I don't quite like any of them. Then I've thought of Hal Caine, Little Tich, Richard the First, James J.—"

The old man cast down his Times angrily.

"Young man," he snapped, addressing the red-headed gabbler, "if you want the first prize I should advise you to poke your head through a sheet and call yourself a poached egg!"

Housemaid's Knee in High Life.

Synovial effusion of the knee, from which the German empress seems to suffer, is a most painful affliction and one that too often comes to stay. Persons on whom there is considerable nervous strain are liable to it, and more particularly if they eat much meat. Since the motor has come so greatly into use in West-End Paris this complaint has become prevalent there, for rushes about in motors overexcite the nerves.

Sisters of Charity are so subject to synovial effusion that a knee with a hard swelling just below the cap on the other side is called in the hospitals "a Sister of Charity's knee"—what in England is called "housemaid's knee."—London Truth.

Swedenborg's Versatility.

Perhaps even the devout Swedenborgian is not aware of the versatility of his hero and that he added to mysticism an all-round scientific equipment. When Charles XII, for instance, was in difficulty as to the transport for a siege in the dead of winter it was Swedenborg who constructed a 16-mile-long canal through mountains and over valleys for the conveyance of the necessary implements of war; it was he who gave to Sweden a better method of fixing the value of money; it was he who, as assessor of mines, studied the smelting works of Europe and put his countrymen in the way of eclipsing their methods.

GRAND TRUNK STRIKE IS ENDED

WAGE SCALE PREVIOUSLY OFFERED ACCEPTED; PROMISE OF MORE IN 1912.

FORMER EMPLOYEES TO BE PUT BACK TO WORK AS SOON AS POSSIBLE.

Settlement Brought About by Efforts of Canadian Officials; Strikers Express Satisfaction.

The strike of conductors, trainmen and yardmen which began on the Grand Trunk and Central Vermont systems on July 18, was officially called off.

Under the terms of the agreement signed by President Hays, for the railroads, and all the union officials, the men will receive, dating back to May 1 of this year, an advance of approximately 18 per cent, and beginning January 1, 1912, a rate of wages slightly below the eastern association schedule, for which they struck, but an advance in many instances of over 30 per cent.

Much credit for the successful outcome of the peace negotiations is given to W. L. Mackenzie King, Canadian minister of labor, who has persisted in his efforts to bring the men together despite discouraging setbacks.

The agreement follows: "The company will put back as soon as possible all men who have been or may be found guilty of acts of violence or disorderly conduct, the understanding being that there is to be no coercion or intimidation towards the new men."

The company will put into effect from May 1, 1910, the rates named in the schedule of rates dated July 18, 1910, those rates to be embodied in the present schedules now in effect on this line, it being understood that those rates shall in any existing rate.

Put in C. P. R. Rates of Pay. "The company will on January 1, 1912, make effective in train and yard service on the Grand Trunk and Central Vermont the rates and rules contained in the schedule of rates on that date in effect on the lines of the Canadian Pacific railway east of Port William."

In the case of the Central Vermont the same settlement applies, with the exception that the standardization to be applied on January 1, 1912, is to be that of the Rutland railway, and not that of the Canadian Pacific, which will only apply to the Grand Trunk system.

The news of the ending of the Grand Trunk strike received with considerable satisfaction by the strike leaders in Detroit. The men were instructed to report to work at once, and some of them did so. From now on the trains will be in charge of the regular crews, and already the strike breakers are being dropped, more or less quietly.

"The strike has been settled on a basis satisfactory to the officers in charge of the organization," said E. P. Curtis, vice-president of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen. "The back pay on the difference in the old and the new scale, dating from May 1, will amount to a considerable sum. However, if I had my way, there would have been no compromise. We could have won all we wanted."

Grace Whitney Sinks; Two Dead.

Ran down by the steamer Ogdensburg, about three miles below Bar Point light, the wooden barge Grace Whitney was sunk in nearly 30 feet of water. Mrs. Heath, wife of Capt. Ross Heath, Marine City, master of the barge, and Frederick Heath, their little 9-year-old son, went to their death in Lake Erie.

Michigan Lynx, 369 Macomb street, Detroit, and Horace Heath, Marine City, late of the Whitney, and father of Capt. Heath, were aroused from sleep by the crash. They leaped into the lake and narrowly escaped with their lives. Members of the Whitney's crew place responsibility for the accident on the steamer Ogdensburg.

Ask State to Set Rates.

Following agitation over the electric lighting and power rates in Saginaw and as the result of the Eastern Michigan Power Co. taking over the Bartlett Illuminating Co. and the installation of the former's rates, in many instances higher than the old company's, the common council decided to ask the state railway commission to investigate and establish an equitable schedule of rates for this city. The mayor and city attorney were instructed to appeal to the commission at once and work or preparing the appeal was commenced today and it will be forwarded to the commission as soon as possible.

Railroad Have Own Tax Boards.

One of the greatest surprises ever encountered by the officials at Lansing was when it was made known to the state tax commission that the various railroads of the state have formed a "tax commission" of their own.

It appears that for some time the railroads have been quietly working on the scheme, have perfected their plans, and already have a force of men working throughout the state verifying the sales of general property and comparing them with the tax assessments.

The special bond election for a high school building, at Monroe, carried by a vote of 192 against 143. Fifty thousand dollars' worth of bonds were authorized. The school trustees have a fund of $50,000 in addition to the amount authorized by the election.

"The state of Michigan does not owe a cent outside of the regular running expenses for the month, such as salaries, etc., and more than that, the state is not only out of debt, but is in the million-dollar class, having a cash surplus on hand of $2,304,000." Such was the statement made by Auditor-General Fuller.

MICHIGAN ITEMS.

The state convention of the Sons of Hermann will be held in Escanaba, August 4, 5 and 6.

The annual meeting of the Eighth Michigan Volunteer Cavalry association will be held Sept. 21.

Otto Hornbacher, a farmer 26 years old, hanged himself in his father's barn. No cause is known for the act.

Fire wiped out four summer residences and threatened the entire lake front in Park Bieder, Lake Gognac, near Battle Creek.

The postoffice department at Washington will decide in a few days which of the six locations offered will be purchased for the new federal building at Boyne City. The site is to cost not over $15,000.

Preparations are being made for the reception and convention of the Probate Judges' association of Michigan, which convenes in Saginaw, September 13 and 14. It is expected 60 probate judges will attend.

Ben F. Shaver, formerly teller and bookkeeper for the Lumberman's National bank, at Bay City, who is charged with making false entries and stealing $24,000 from the bank, was held for trial in the circuit court.

George Gibson, a "dope" fiend, awaiting trial in the circuit court at Cadillac, was sick, while sitting in the sheriff's office, and escaped when the officers went into another room to telephone for a physician.

The Wholesalers and Manufacturers' association, of Saginaw, has decided to give a merchants' week in connection with the annual industrial exposition held each September. It will take the place of the annual trade excursion.

A public hospital for treatment of tuberculosis will be built this year midway between Negaunee and Marquette by the Marquette county board of supervisors. The structure will be two stories high, 60 feet long and 40 feet wide.

William Hallinan, 25 years old, unmarried, fell 500 feet down a shaft of the Baltic mine, at Calumet, meeting instant death. Abraham White, 54, was killed in Tamarack mine by falling rock. He leaves a widow and five children.

Frank Lawrence, claiming Louisville, Ky., as his home, is alleged to have made his escape from Flint after having passed two forged checks amounting to $20 each. It is charged the accused forged the name of his brother-in-law, A. W. Crossman.

Deputy Warden Timothy Ryan, of Jackson prison, who was conspicuous during the expose furnished by a convict relative to alleged opium smuggling at the prison, has been "fired." Hall Master Thompson was appointed by Warden Stone to succeed Ryan.

Mrs. Gustave Rauhaala, wife of Matt Rauhaala, now in the county jail at Hancock, has filed suit against nine Hancock shooneekers in the sum of $10,000 for damages alleged to have been sustained because of her husband being sold liquor in their places of business.

Reports from the state board of health show that July was the hottest during 31 years, and that the monthly mean rainfall for that month was 2.31 inches less than any July since 1879. The monthly statement of the state's finances show that at the end of July there was a cash balance in the general fund of $1,250,225.54, as compared with $52,810.61 a year ago.

President Scully, of the state railway commission, has taken exception to the statement of Mayor Ellis, of Grand Rapids, who recently said in an Ionian speech that Scully is the only member of the commission who was willing to give him a hearing in the fight for control of public utilities in Grand Rapids, by gas and street car interests. Scully says every member of the commission favored granting Ellis' request.

Prof. F. D. Davis, who was recently ousted as superintendent of schools at Escanaba, and later secured an injunction restraining the school board from interfering with him in the discharge of his duties, has been locked out of the school buildings. Another man has been hired to replace him. The board members are disinclined to compromise with Davis on any basis, and the differences will likely be adjusted in court.

The State Holiness Camp Meeting association opened its twenty-fifth annual ten-days' meeting at Riverside park, Eaton Rapids, with the largest number of visitors present that has ever attended the services on the opening day. The opening sermon at the Tabernacle was preached by Rev. F. E. Walker, of San Dimas, Cal., to a congregation of more than 2,000 people. Nearly every state in the union is represented at the camp grounds.

The quarterly report of State Oil Inspector Neal for the term ending June 30, 1910, shows the inspection of 4,470,093 gallons during the three months of April, May and June; total receipts, $9,000; interest $58.49. Total expenses including the salaries of deputies, state oil inspector and office expenses, $7,315.79. This leaves a balance of $1,771.70 to be turned into the state treasury. The total net balance for the six months, ending June 30, to be paid into the state treasury by this department, is $7,264.33. This is the largest net cash balance for the first six months in the history of the department. Last year at this time, it was the largest it had been in many years, and the amount now is about $1,500 in excess of the same period of 1909.

That Stephen Popowit, helper in the excelsior shop underneath the flat, and the proprietor, Nathan Carling, were guilty of contributory negligence in connection with the disastrous fire in the Ledger building, Grand Rapids, in which three lives were lost, was the finding of the coroner's jury inquiring into the death of Mrs. Grace Wilson.

When a slate roof covering the Robert Gage mine No. 6, at Auburn, fell Joe Argoni, an Italian laborer, and William Adwood suffered injuries. The left leg of Argoni was broken between the knee and ankle. Adwood suffered only bruises.

HAGLE MUST SERVE 5 TO 14 YEARS

OXFORD FORGER AND DEFAULTER, ALONE IN COURT, HEARS HIMSELF COMMITTED.

EMBEZZLED $24,000 FROM THE VILLAGE OF OXFORD AND BANKS AT LEONARD AND HADLEY.

Sheriff of Monroe County Shot by a Negro While Trying to Make an Arrest.

Judge Smith sentenced Mark L. Hagle, at Lapeer, charged with forgery, to hard labor at Jackson prison under the indeterminate sentence law for a period of five to ten years without any further recommendation.

Hagle embezzled $24,000 from the village of Oxford, of which he was treasurer, and the banks of Leonard and Hadley last October, forging the names of several Hadley men to a note with which he secured the money. When his peculations became known he disappeared and no one knew of his whereabouts except his wife and a friend in Detroit until he was captured in Miles City, Mont., a few weeks ago.

Hagle told a story of having been forced to steal to replace the shortage of a nephew, Ray Price, in the bank at Leonard. There is a warrant out at Oxford for his arrest on charges of forgery. Whether this will be served on the expiration of his term is not known.

Sheriff of Monroe County Shot.

While attempting to arrest an unknown negro at Erie Sheriff Edmund Dull, of Monroe county, was shot and badly wounded. The negro and a white man were riding in a box car of a southbound Pere Marquette freight train, when the negro robbed his white companion of a valise containing clothes and $25, then throwing the white man from the train.

Conductor Edward Grau, sitting in the caboose, saw the man fall and immediately stopped the train at Erie. Sheriff Dull was quickly notified and ordered the train crew to hold the negro until his arrival, but for some reason they neglected to do so and pulled out for Toledo.

Dull reached Erie at 6 o'clock and a few minutes later got on the trail of his man two miles further south. Taking a farmer, William Reau, with him, Dull trailed his man two miles, finally bringing him to bay in a cornfield on the farm of Felix Buseau. Reau, who was armed with a shotgun, handed the weapon to Dull, who ordered the negro to throw up his hands. This the latter did, and advanced to meet the sheriff. When the latter attempted to handcuff the prisoner a slight scuffle ensued and Dull hit the negro with the shotgun, breaking it.

The negro appeared to stagger and partly fell, but instantly regained his feet, and when he did he held a revolver in his hand. Before the sheriff could draw his own pistol the negro had fired three times. Reau started to run and was shot through the right arm.

Could Close Saloons in Part of U. P.

By virtue of an Indian treaty negotiated and ratified in 1854, the absolute power rests in President Taft to prohibit the sale of liquor in the western half of the upper peninsula of Michigan. All that portion of the peninsula lying west of the Escanaba and Chippewa rivers was ceded by the Chippewa Indians under the stipulation that the sale of intoxicants should be under the sole control of the president of the United States.

The president has never taken any action in the matter, but the possibility that he may is emphasized by the turmoil at present raging in the northern part of Minnesota.

Farmers' Wives Swindled.

Many farm wives in the vicinity of Lansing have been victimized lately by a pair of swindlers who, representing themselves as agents of a certain soap company of Chicago, have been taking orders for 50 bars of a well known brand of soap for $2, and a set of dishes with each order of soap. The agents have been collecting $1 down, with the understanding that the remainder would be collected upon delivery of goods. August 20. It now develops that there is no soap company of the name given in Chicago, the soap for which the pair of agents have taken orders being manufactured in another city.

Passenger Crew Blamed for Wreck.

New developments in the investigation at Lansing into the recent wreck on the Michigan Central at Vassar, when passenger train No. 208 crashed into a freight which was switching on the main track, in which wreck Engineer Watson of the passenger train was killed, were brought out when Conductor Keegan and Engineer Henner made their statement to the Michigan railway commission that, in their opinion, the accident occurred because the passenger train was ahead of time and exceeded the speed it should have had at the time of the wreck.

CRIPPEN CAPTURED, LENEVE GIRL ALSO

OFFICERS, GARBED AS PILOTS, BOARD SHIP AND TAKE THEM BY SURPRISE.

CRIPPEN, PACING DECK UTTERLY UNAWARE OF DANGER, UNTIL HE SEES INSPECTOR DEW.

As "J. Robinson and Son" They Had $10 and Tickets for Detroit—Won't Fight Requisition.

After one of the most dramatic pursuits in criminal annals Dr. Hawley Crippen, formerly of Detroit, Coldwater and Ann Arbor, Mich., is in custody at Quebec with Ethel Leneve, his typist, who fled with him from London disguised as a boy, following the disappearance of Belle Elmore, his actress wife.

The arrest of the pair on the steamship Montrose at Father Point, Sunday, charged with "guilty knowledge of an abominable crime," closes a chase in which the most wonderful invention of modern days, the wireless telegraph, played the chief part.

The capture of the pair was made with vigor the fact that the wireless has become a deadly thing to the criminal who seeks an over-sea refuge, and that he is much safer ashore.

The steamer Montrose, upon which the fugitives were arrested while the vessel was still 160 miles from Quebec, arrived at her pier there at 1:35 o'clock Monday morning.

The prisoners were hastened through an enormous crowd to the provincial jail where they were placed in separate cells for the night. Here they got a few hours sleep, the best rest which either had had since they fled from London on July 9, shortly before detectives found in the cellar of the Crippen home the bits of human flesh which the authorities have tried to establish, once went to make up the body of Belle Elmore, Crippen's lawful wife.

Dr. Hawley H. Crippen announced in the provincial court Monday that he will not resist his return to England to stand trial for the killing of a woman believed by the police to be his missing wife, Belle Elmore, the American actress.

When Crippen and Miss Leneve were arrested on board the incoming steamship Montrose they were charged with identical crimes, the slaying and mutilation of an unknown woman.

Miss Ethel Clare Leneve, the typist who fled with Dr. Crippen, former Detroit, Ann Arbor and Coldwater, Mich., physician, in spite of pressure exercised upon her by the Quebec police, remains loyal to the alleged wife slayer.

Thus far, even in her moments of extreme shock and weakness, the police assert, Crippen's companion has remained loyal to him so far as her silence is loyalty and has said absolutely nothing about the crime or their relations.

JOHN G. CARLISLE DEAD.

Former Secretary of Treasury Expired in New York.

John G. Carlisle, secretary of the treasury under Cleveland, who had been critically ill for the past two days, died at his apartments in New York of heart failure, accompanied by oedema of the lungs.

An intestinal complaint of long standing, which wore down his vitality, lay behind the technical fact of heart failure. He was attacked last spring by the same trouble, complicated by an ailment of the kidneys, and for a time hovered near death. But his remarkable vitality triumphed then, as it seemed it might even in the illness which ended Sunday night.

John Griffin Carlisle was born in Kentucky, Sept. 5, 1835. He was educated in the public schools, later studying law and was admitted to the bar. Always a consistent Democrat and interested in public affairs as a young man, he rose from the Kentucky house of representatives to the state senate, served as lieutenant-governor, and finally graduated into national affairs.

Lee Statue in Hall of Fame.

That the statue of General Robert E. Lee, in Confederate uniform, cannot be removed from Statuary hall at the capitol in deference to protests from grand army posts is the decision of Attorney-General Wickersham, approved by President Taft.

In addition to deciding the question on a purely legal basis, Mr. Wickersham argues the matter from an ethical point of view, declaring that Lee has come to be regarded as "typical" of all that was best in the cause to which he gave and unflinching acceptance of the complete overthrow of that cause.

That the state of Virginia should designate him for a place in Statuary hall as one illustrious for distinguished military service, the attorney-general declares, is but natural and warranted under the reading of the law.

A MODEL PRISON.

Marquette Closed Among Five Best Prisons in World.

Capt. Alanson Himes, who has been in Marquette for several days in the interests of the Grolier society of London, visited the Marquette prison. Capt. Himes served in the British army during the Boer war and was attached to the secret service. Later he was made provost marshal of Chicago.

He has traveled all over the world and has made a special study of criminology, having made it a practice to visit prisons wherever possible in the course of his travels. He is well versed in all phases of this subject, which he considers the fundamental problem of society.

"The Marquette prison is one of the best conducted and most up-to-date penitentiaries I have ever visited," said Capt. Himes at the conclusion of his inspection of the institution. "The warden has recognized the finding of modern thought and that the function of a prison should be to cure rather than to punish. From this humanitarian viewpoint, the Marquette prison should be classed with four others in the world—the prison at Elmira, N. Y., the prison at Milan, Italy, the prison at La Plata, Argentina, and the prison at Milbank, England. I know of no other penal institutions that are being conducted as fully along the lines of modern science as these five."

Finding Fighters for Uncle Sam

BY EDWARD B. CLARK
COPYRIGHT BY W.A. PATTERSON

THE war department is trying to find ways and means to increase the number of cadets at the United States Military academy. Since the Spanish war, when the army was enlarged, there have not been anywhere near enough graduates to fill the vacancies in the commissioned ranks of the army. The result has been that not only has it been necessary to promote men of the army who can pass the required examination, but to appoint each year to the service large numbers of civilians.

Naturally enough the war department officials feel that the commissioned officers should be men educated to the profession of a soldier. There seems to be a pretty general feeling, one hard for the authorities to account for by the way, that every man is born a soldier and that the military profession is the only one for which no special training is required. Gen. Winfield Scott, at the close of the Mexican war, said that if it had not been for the officers of his army who were graduates of the military academy the war would have been prolonged for years. This praise of the institution and the men whom it turns out was given by a man not a graduate, and who, therefore, could not be said to be prejudiced in favor of the institution. The course at West Point is a particularly hard one and a good many cadets are found deficient every year, generally in only one study. West Point, however, differs from all other schools of the world. There they do not strike an average of studies, taking all the lessons taught in a lump. For instance, if a man stands at the head of his class in four studies, but is a little bit below the proficient average in one study, the authorities throw him out, whereas in other schools they would strike an average and give such a man a high standing.

The result of such a system as this is that men who are qualified for the service in practically every way, but who may be a little lame in French or a trifle off in geology or chemistry, are separated from the army to which they might possibly be a credit if an average of excellence was struck by the authorities.

It is quite often the case that men who do not graduate but who have had several years' training at the academy succeed in getting commissions in the service. There are no records to show that any man who spent two years at West Point failed to pass his examination for a commission after he had been successful in getting an appointment to the army from civil life.

Some of the boys who have been at West Point, but have not graduated, enlisted in the United States army in order to get their commission from the ranks. When a man does so enlist he may be sent as a private soldier to a company in which some classmate is a lieutenant. Now it must be remembered that there is a deep gulf between officers and enlisted men in the regular army, a gulf which it is necessary to have remain fixed, because familiarity of intercourse between officers and enlisted men would lead to lax discipline. It is not the case, as some people seem to think, of an officer being too proud to associate with enlisted men. The officers of the army hold the enlisted men in high esteem. They know that they are the backbone of the army and they know that on their loyalty, obedience and courage hangs success in war and the credit of the army in peace. Every army in the world has learned the lesson that there must be a lack of familiar intercourse in a social way between the commissioned officers and the enlisted men.

When a young fellow who has been at West Point enlists he is likely, as has been said, to get into a command in which one of his classmates may be an officer. Then it is that a curious relation results. The enlisted man meets his former classmate, whom he once called Bill or Jim and with whom he possibly roomed as a cadet, and he must salute him as any other enlisted man would, and pass without a sign of "familiar recognition." Now this does not mean at all that Jim or Bill does not want to speak to his former classmate. It means simply that the enlisted man wants to preserve his own standing with his fellow soldiers and does not want to put his former classmate by and chance in an embarrassing position. If the enlisted man should learn that their newly enlisted fellow was a former classmate and a friend of one of the officers they might think that it was going to be a case of currying favor on the one side or of showing favor on the other. The man who is once a cadet and who enlists is more careful if he is built right, and he generally is, to maintain a proper attitude toward the men who rank him.

They tell a story in Washington of a young fellow who came of rich parentage, but who never had been at West Point, by the way, who enlisted in the army to get his commission. He attempted to presume on the fact of his wealth and he not only got the officers down on him, but the men as well. His lot was not altogether a happy one. It can be said, however, that cases like that of this young man are few and far between. The man who is willing to enlist in order to get his commission, generally speaking, is of good stuff enough to make him willing to take things as they come and to take rather more than his share of the duties and the hardships of the enlisted man with whom he is thrown. There was once upon a time a cadet who, having spent time enough at the United States Military academy to cover a considerable part of the course, was compelled by the government to sever his connection with the school he had hoped would prove to him a fostering mother until the end.

This cadet, who shall be nameless because of a modest desire to avoid the use of the pen in the first person, had a yearning for military life, and so a few years after leaving the academy he walked into a Boston recruiting office and enlisted. Several classmates and several other army friends knew of the enlistment and told the enlisted one prior to his application for admission to the service to strike out for a commission, and, above all things, not to let any of the enlisted men, or any of the officers who did not know him, have knowledge of the fact that he had been at the military academy, for otherwise they might think he expected favors.

The advice was needless, for whatever else the recruit intended to do he desired that his service should be performed on the same level with that of every other man in the United States army, but the truth is that this determination and its carrying out led to some complications that had humor enough at the time even though they lose the humor because of lack of power in the story-teller.

This cadet recruit was landed at David's Island, New York harbor, where there were 700 other recruits undergoing instruction, and a green lot they were. The cadet was turned out for squad drill with five other recruits, not one of whom knew enough about soldiering to keep his heels together. A tall, raw-boned Irish sergeant with the euphonious name of O'Baldwin was in command of the squad. He began to explain the position of a soldier. He found that the recruit on the right of the line already was in the position of a soldier. The truth was he couldn't help himself.

O'Baldwin eyed him critically. "Fall out!" he said. The one-time cadet fell out. "What regiment did ye desert from?" said O'Baldwin, pleasantly.

"This is my first enlistment," answered the recruit, and in answering he told the truth, for a cadet isn't enlisted.

"What company are ye in?" asked O'Baldwin, though he knew perfectly well, for his own bunk was not three bunks removed from that of the recruit.

"D company," answered the queried one, and that's where he made the mistake of his life.

That apparently simple answer proved conclusively to the sergeant's mind that he had an ex-regulator before him, for all the national guardsmen would have answered, "Company D" instead of "D company." The regular who would speak of his command as "Company D" would be considered deserving of the guard-house for a month, for to put the letter after the company name when it is written is to the army man the height of things unmilitary.

"You go to your quarters; we'll look into this," said the sergeant.

The recruit went to his quarters and half an hour later the first sergeant of the outfit sent for him. The "Top" opened the conversation cheerfully with a query as to what regiment the recruit had left in the church. Finding that he was bound to be considered a deserter, the unhappy one took the bull by the horns thus: "I am serving my first enlistment in the army; I never was in the marine corps and I never saw the inside of a national guard armory."

"Ever been in one of them private military schools?" asked the "Top."

"Never."

"Go to your quarters."

In another hour the recruit was given a rifle and cartridge box and belt and was ordered to turn out with the squad of recruits who had advanced far enough in the manual of the soldier to receive lessons in the manual of arms. Now as a matter of fact the recruit knew the manual of arms so well he couldn't have hidden his knowledge if he had tried. This time there was another sergeant in charge. His eye took in the way the recruit on the right handed his piece and executed the manual.

In less than a minute the sergeant ordered him who was showing such proficiency to step to the front, and ordered "place rest" for the remainder of the squad. Then turning his attention to his victim, he said: "We'll try the bayonet exercise a bit. Guard!"

The recruit came down to "a guard" possibly with as much precision and in probably as proper style as the veteran sergeant had ever seen it done.

"Passing yourself off for a recruit. It's a fraud you are. Get to your quarters." And the recruit went to his bunk again, knowing that he was in deep disgrace.

About half an hour later he heard two old soldiers talking outside of the barracks window. One of them said to the other: "There's a cuss in there who ain't never been in the marine corps, nor in the militia, nor in the reg'lars, nor to one of them military schools. The sergeant says he's either a blankety-blank liar or else he learnt his soldierin' from books, which ain't likely."

That night just after "tattoo," the first sergeant appeared and told the recruit that the company commander wanted to see him at once in the orderly room. The recruit went to the presence of the commissioned officer and stood attention as he had stood attention as a cadet a thousand times before. The captain looked him up and down. "I understand," he said, "that this is your first enlistment; that you have never been a national guard; that you have never been a marine and that you never attended a private military school."

The recruit acquiesced with a respectful "Yes, sir."

"About face."

The recruit made an about face, and then at a repetition of the command, again faced the captain, who was grinning.

"Go to your quarters," said the commanding officer.

The recruit went and in ten minutes the top sergeant was there, saying: "You can't fool the old man. You've been made a lance corporal and you go on guard as corporal of the third relief tomorrow morning."

There are a good many officers in the United States army today who served for a while at the military academy as cadets, but who were compelled to stay five years at the academy in order to get their commissions, having been "turned back" into the class next below them either for deficiency in studies or for breaches of discipline. If General Sheridan had not been given another chance after he had engaged in a little affair which was considered a breach of discipline while he was a cadet the wonder is who would have been the right-hand cavalry leader of Grant during the Civil war.

A few months ago Gen. Hamilton S. Hawkins died. He entered the military academy some time prior to the opening of the Civil war, but the authorities did not allow him to graduate. Hawkins was not discouraged by the failure and as soon as the Civil war broke out he offered his services to his country and was given a commission. He held in the regular army until the time of his death and so strong was his love of the military academy that before his death he asked that he might be buried in the cadet cemetery. It was Hawkins' custom each year when he could get away from his command to visit the school where he had spent three years of his boyhood. He had just as strong a love for the institution as did any graduate in the army.

Recently there has been a disposition on the part of the graduates of the military academy to give more consideration to the men who spent some time at the school, but who did not graduate. One class organization includes in its membership all the cadets who at any time were members of the class, and no distinction is made between graduate and non-graduate, even the offices of the organization being open to men who did not complete the course.

Other class organizations are said to be preparing to follow the example of that of the members of 1884 and if the custom of taking into full brotherhood the non-graduates becomes general the belief is that good will come to the academy and the country.

Statue of Liberty Grafters

If the visitors who paid good money to a soldier for the privilege of climbing up the steps of the statue of Liberty had only known about the sixty-second article of war they never would have graduated from the dead-end class on a reservation belonging to Uncle Sam, the New York Herald says. As it is, under the last general order from the war department two soldiers who levied tribute are doomed to penal servitude for their speculative enterprise.

According to the army orders, Axel T. Holm, a first-class private of G company, signal corps, and Edward A. Bagnall, of the same grade and command, organized a syndicate for the exploitation of the French evidence of friendship for America, which, following the actual language of the order, operated, as to Holm, after this fashion:

"He, the said Holm, did despoiled and fraudulently obtain money from certain visitors to the statue of Liberty, fees for the privilege of going up into said statue, by knowingly making false pretenses that such fees were necessary."

And as to the enterprising Bagnall: "That he did knowingly assist in fraudulently obtaining money from visitors to the statue of Liberty by acting as a 'lookout' with the duty of actually giving warning to the man collecting the fees in case an officer were approaching."

All of this, according to the charges and specifications upon which conviction was made, and approval then passed, violated the sixty-second article of war. In the case of Holm the department orders his dishonorable discharge and his confinement for two years at Fort Leavenworth. Bagnall gets off with reduction to the grade of private, four months' confinement and the forfeiture of $13 a month. He will work his sentence out around the base of the statue, cleaning up such litter as the tribulation visitors see fit to make.

The evidence showed that the two men arranged a scheme to tax all visitors ten cents a head for the pleasure of climbing to the head of the goddess, with the ever-burning torch, and the story was printed exclusively in the Herald at the time. While one of them took in the toll the other lingered about to give the collector a tip if an officer chanced to be bearing down upon the post exchange. Capt. D. J. Carr, commanding the post, is very proud of this pretty show station, and he broke up the game just as soon as he found what was in the air.

STREET TRAFFIC OF PARIS.

There are nearly half a million horses and motor vehicles of all kinds in Paris today, with 20,000 hand carts and 9,000 wheelbarrows. In 1909 65,870 accidents were caused in the Paris streets by 31,868 vehicles. These statistics are contained in a report drawn up by M. Emile Massard at the request of the Paris municipal council on the incumberment of the Paris streets. One of M. Massard's calculations shows that the street traffic of Paris, if stationary, would occupy 445 acres of the 2,079 acres of streets which Paris possesses. Last year 600,000,000 persons traveled by omnibus and tramway, and there were 294,000,000 passengers on the underground railway.—Indianapolis News.

RACER DARES DEATH

BRIM NERVE OF MECHANICIAN AT RIVERHEAD CONTEST.

When the Steering Gear Becomes Disabled He Climbs Out Over Auto's Hood and Rides on Cranking Shaft.

One of the nerviest spectacles ever seen on an auto raceway, says Hampton's Magazine, occurred in the Long Island stock car Derby at Riverhead. Herbert Bailey, mechanic for Louis Diabrow and his No. 1 literary shook hands with death.

When the car had passed the stand on its fourth lap and was two miles from the repair pits the pin fell out of the reach rod, disabling the steering gear. The machine threatened to become unmanageable.

What did Bailey do but climb out over the hood, lower himself down on the little cranking rod and sit facing the radiator with his feet propped against the front axle. With one hand he prevented himself from being dashed under the wheels by holding on to the little water cap on the top of the hood.

The other hand held the disabled steering gear together. Bailey rode twenty miles in that manner, with the car going full speed, until the circuit was completed and the repair pits made.

George Robertson had an experience in the famous backstretch of the Merrimack Valley course which might have had pretty serious consequences. "We were making seventy miles an hour," said Robertson in telling the story, "when suddenly I heard a crack. The next second I fell through to the floor of the car. The seat had broken under me. There I lay with my hands on the wheel and my feet sticking up in the air."

"I could not see the road in front of me, and did not know where the car was going. Just before Glenn Ethridge, my mechanic, grabbed me by the shoulders and pulled me up, the car tilted perceptibly. It almost tipped over. I tell you, I thought we were goners! No, I haven't said anything about it. Why should I?"

Smiling George they call him, and his sunny countenance certainly bears out the nickname. Robertson is a big, solid, good looking youth, who gives the impression that nothing could move him. He fairly radiates vitality. In everyday life he is an easygoing, merry, careless chap.

In a race he is another man. At times he acts like a maniac. He has been known to strike the men in the repair pits when they did not work fast enough to suit him. On the road he is absolutely fearless. The other drivers "turn out" for him. On more than one occasion Robertson has scraped the paint off a car that was slow in giving him leeway.

A story is told of Robertson's behavior during the Briarcliff race. It was said that he had hurled a monkey wrench at another driver who deliberately tried to block him. When Robertson was asked about this he appeared high incensed.

"Honestly, do you think I'd throw my wrench at any one? Why, it's absurd! Suppose I should need that wrench during the race! If I threw anything, I throw spare nuts."

Nominated But Not Elected. "It's getting harder every year for a faker to get by," remarked Attorney M. B. Excell. "Whatever line a man's in, whether it's politics or selling groceries, it doesn't pay for him to try much four-fushing. I always think of the case of a man I knew in a town near here who ran for a county office one year and had a bright young chap there to write a speech of acceptance for him, to have ready in case he was nominated."

"He did get the nomination, and delivered the speech in great shape, without the use of manuscript or notes. The speech was wonderfully well put up, too—so good, in fact, that everybody wondered who had written it, for the speaker himself was regarded as a person who would have difficulty in writing a letter asking for a seed catalogue without getting somebody to help him with the spelling and the grammar."

"When he had finished and sat down, there went up a wild tumult of applause above which could be heard shouts of 'Author! Author!' just like they do after the first performance of a play in which the actors have delivered their lines well."

"And that cry was the thing that defeated the candidate."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Passing It Along. "I've lost all confidence in Blinkers since he worked that old horse off on me," said Markleigh. "I'll never trust him again."

"What are you going to do with the animal?" asked his wife. "Why—I expect a friend of mine over this afternoon to look at him," replied Markleigh.

Paradise in Advance. "The man died eating watermelons," some one said to Brother Dickey. "Yes, suh," he said. "Providence sometimes puts us in paradise before we gets ter heaven."—Atlanta Constitution.

Thompson's Eye Water

W. N. U., DETROIT, NO. 32-1910.

Clever Joke of Kind King. King Edward's good nature was illustrated the other night by a London correspondent at the Press club in New York.

"The king," said the correspondent, "was visiting Rufford Abbey, and one morning, in company with his host, Lord Arthur Savile, he took a walk over the preserves."

"Suddenly Lord Arthur, a big burly man, rushed forward and seized a shabby fellow with a dead pheasant protruding from the breast of his coat. 'Sir,' said Lord Arthur to the king, 'this fellow is a bad egg. This is the second time I've caught him poaching.'"

"But the king's handsome face beamed, and he laughed his gay and tolerant laugh. "Oh, let him go," he said. "If he really were a bad egg, you know, he wouldn't poach."

A Protection Against the Heat. When you begin to think it's a personal matter between you and the sun to see which is the better, buy yourself a glass or a bottle of Coca-Cola. Carrying His Audience With Him. Nobody was more witty or more bitter than Lord Ellenborough. A young lawyer, trembling with fear, rose to make his first speech, and began: "My lord, my unfortunate client—My lord—"

"Go on, sir, go on!" said Lord Ellenborough, "as far as you have proceeded hitherto the court is entirely with you."

Know How To Keep Cool?

When Summer's sun and daily toil heat the blood to an uncomfortable degree, there is nothing so comforting and cooling as a glass of served with sugar and a little lemon.

Surprising, too, how the food elements relieve fatigue and sustain one.

The flavour is delicious—and Postum is really a food drink.

Gen. Knox's Carriage.

Frank B. Hills, first selectman of Thomaston, hitched up in front of the Rockland postoffice a day or two ago with a "pedigreed carriage"—the one in which Washington's first secretary of war used to ride. The carriage was built in Boston 130 years ago and was the private carriage of Maj. Gen. Henry Knox, secretary under the first president, and not only is it one of the most historic vehicles in the United States, but it is also probably the oldest able bodied private carriage in existence on the continent. In spite of its 130 years, a quaint substantial vehicle it is. Gen. Knox no doubt had it made, just as history tells it, in Boston, for there were no carriage builders in Thomaston in those early days, and as Gen. Knox operated a packet line of small sailing vessels between Boston and Thomaston it would have been easy for him to have the carriage brought to Thomaston.

To Gain Social Success.

To be successful socially, a woman must possess brains and looks, a ready wit and perfect manners. She must be well posted on general topics and have a fund of what the English call "small talk." She can never rise to any prominence in the social world unless she has a firm will, sound sense and ready sympathies. These qualities, added to enough of wealth to do as she would do, make the best and most representative type of the American society woman. But then, our women possess all these qualities even when their lives are not thrown in the most pleasant places. No woman in the world possesses the adaptability of the American woman. She always knows what to do and when to do it.

Holding Down Brutality.

No longer are we having brutal war to lick us into shape. All the rude brutality of the peasant hordes of Europe, still the primitive type of man, is here to be handled—brutality which war and the sword have kept subdued into a sort of fierce gentleness for 2,000 years; now this Pandora's box of latent savagery, which has been fearfully held down by iron imperialism, is turned loose to hell and havoc, if not tamed and disciplined by education and gentling thought. By peasant blood I mean you and me, for after all is said there is no drop of straight nobility or gentry blood in this land.—New York Press.

Aviation and Islam.

It is said that aviation is not considered orthodox among Mussulmans. M. de Caters has given his impressions to a Paris contemporary of his visit to Constantinople. He says the Turks and Arabs greatly amused him. "The Koran says that only God is able to exalt himself above men, so no one can imagine how awestricken the Turks were when they saw me in my aeroplane above their capital. They looked upon me as a demigod. As to the biplane, most of the Turks did not dare approach it. Those who did made their salaams to it."

QUEER CITY OF TROITSA

TOWER OF IVAN

THE queer old Russian town of Troitsa lies about forty miles from Moscow and is even more insular than its big neighbor. Neither foreigners, their architecture nor their customs have filtered past the frontier to this ancient retreat on the river Ramenka. Between here and Moscow the railroad runs through an almost unbroken line of pine woods in which stand pretty summer villas of the city folk. These houses are built of pine, the natural color, and recall the type of buildings existing in Moscow before 1812, a few of which may still be seen within inclosed courts.

When Kiev ceased to be the capital and the village of Moscow continued to grow in importance, Troitsa, the monastery of the Holy Trinity, began to compare with the Lavra of the older town. This was in the fourteenth century when Saint Sergius, humble as he was pious, lived and worked at Troitsa. As years passed the monastery accumulated fame and wealth, and in the eighteenth century it owned countless acres and over 20,000 serfs. Emperors and boyars had enriched its altars until today the Troitsa treasury of sacred vessels, ornaments and vestments is considered the most extensive and valuable in Russia. Since the last revolution the treasury is not shown to visitors and a current report has it that much of the most valuable plate and gems have found its way to Saint Petersburg to meet the drain of the Japanese war.

Russian monasteries have the appearance of fortified towns, as in truth they are. The Krim Tartar hordes failed to capture Troitsa, and in 1608, when the monastery was attacked by the Poles under Sigismund, the monks kept the besiegers, 30,000, at bay for 16 months. For just such emergencies the monastery has a reservoir capable of holding 9,000 pails of water. The grounds are inclosed with a high, covered rampart, two miles in circumference; great round towers guard each corner, and entrance is by four noble gateways. I walked around the ramparts with a young monk whose eyes sparkled as he showed me the best points for sighting the enemy, come what direction it might. The walls are pierced with loopholes for the monastery guns.

Though repairs are being made continually, yet there is an air of centuries resting upon the thick, gray walls, quaint, arched doorways and dark, narrow passages, that sets one dreaming. Peter the Great delighted in heavy, floral decoration and his taste is conspicuous in a huge, long building, the monks' refectory. The same tables and benches are used today as of old, generations of occupants succeeding one another. The monastery includes three churches and double that number of chapels, with a tall bell tower in the center. In a mortuary chapel lie buried former metropolitan bishops of Moscow.

Troitsa's famous shrine is the church of Saint Sergius, the convent where the good abbot ruled wisely and well. The decoration is richer than the most elaborate of any of the old Moscow churches. The doors of the inkostus, the screen separating the sanctuary from the nave, are of solid gold with wonderful embellishment of sacred subjects. Flanking them either side are sacred pictures studded with jewels; the whole from floor to ceiling is a mass of dazzling beauty. Walls and ceiling are frescoed completely with old Byzantine studies, broken here and there with some rare old picture with robe of beaten gold or hammered silver and crown and necklace of pearls and precious stones. Saint Sergius rests in a catafalque of embossed silver whose intrinsic value would ransom half the convicts in Siberia. I liked best the quaint architecture of the one-time convent, but it is difficult to trace, so much does the wealth of mural decoration obscure the eye.

In the open square is a gray stone obelisk commemorating the repulse of the Poles. It is inclosed with a fence made of the enemy's cannon and chain. At the base a number of pilgrims were resting as they munched at some black bread, while others were drinking from a sacred fountain, first throwing into the basin an offering of kopecks.

Two miles from Troitsa is another monastery of men, the Tschernoi. It is situated beautifully and is quite modern, having been built within the last 50 years. The monks own the land for miles around, hence there is no village nearer than Troitsa. The carriage road led through fragrant pine and in every direction I turned were avenues of it, stately isles of nature's temple. This monastery has two sections separated by a pretty inland lake. Only one is opened to the public and from the second, women are excluded.

Convents for women, if less numerous and less wealthy than those for men, are still vastly interesting from their intimate connection with the country's history. Moscow has several, the most celebrated being the Novodievichi. Helen, "the maid," was its first abbess. The convent lies on the outskirts of the city where the Moskva curves around at the foot of the Sparrow Hills. Its ancient site was called the Maidens' Field, where tradition locates the market place at which the Tartars in olden times bought the pretty, fair faced Muscovite girls for the Mohammedan harems at Constantinople and Ispahan. One sunny afternoon, I found myself at the gates of the Maidens' convent, Novodievichi. Two hospitable nuns invited me within their simple, but clean apartments, brought out steaming samovar, some black bread and jam and bade me rest and refresh myself. Afterwards they showed me their retreat.

Russian nuns wear an all-black costume, not a vestige of white is visible. Their time is employed in doing needlework for the church and outside patrons. Community rule is not rigorous nor secluded as that observed by the sisterhood of the Catholic church. It was at the Maidens' convent Peter the Great imprisoned his half-sister, Sophia, compelling her to take the veil under the name of Suzanne. A regiment of the Streltsi, who had remained faithful to Sophia, Peter put to death, and had their heads hung on pikes outside of the imprisoned woman's window. The Streltsi was an organization of fighters formed under Ivan the Terrible and later they grew into an hereditary militia. They fought for Moscow when called upon, and in return were exempted from taxation and permitted to trade, keep shops and mills and ply various handicrafts.

As we were strolling about the gardens I was continually hearing a clock striking. Then the gentle nun told how Peter, to annoy Sophia, as also to show her how time was passing and her chances to the throne becoming no nearer, built the bell-tower in which he placed a clock that would sound a gong every minute. On their way to Moscow the French army halted at the convent-fortress; Napoleon forbade any injury done it while the king of Naples ordered divine service to be celebrated daily, as usual. But later, after the French was again quartered there and on leaving, they endeavored to blow up the bell-tower where the stores were held. The heroic nuns interrupted the fired train and succeeded in saving the convent.

Easy Way to Cut Glass.
If you wish to cut a window glass and have not at hand a glass cutter, the following simple method may be resorted to: Tie about the glass on the dividing line a string soaked in kerosene oil. Set fire to the string and while the glass is still hot, break in two with the fingers. The break will come exactly along the track of the burnt string.

INJURIOUS GREEN AND ROSY APPLE APHIDS

Former Attacks Terminal Shoots and Tender Leaves, Restricting Growth, While Latter Seriously Affects Fruits.

(By W. E. BRITTON, Connecticut Agricultural Experiment Station.)

The most troublesome plant lice on apple in Connecticut are the green apple aphid, A. pomi De Geer, and the rosy apple aphid, the identity of which seems not to have been well established. For instance, we find accounts of apparently the same insect as Aphis sorbi Kalt., as Aphis pyri Boyer, and as Aphis malifolia Fitch. The green apple aphid was described briefly and figured in the report of this station in 1903. It attacks the terminal shoots and tender leaves, causing the leaves to curl. It affects the tree chiefly by restricting the growth and is much more serious on young orchard trees and nursery stock than upon old trees. All stages are bright green except the oval egg, which is green when first laid but soon turns to a shining black. Eggs are laid on the terminal twigs late in the season.

On November 12, 1909, the aphids were laying eggs, though but few could be found.

Gillette states that lime and sulphur mixtures are among the substances most effective in destroying eggs of the green apple aphid in Colorado.

The eggs of the rosy apple aphid hatch about the middle of April just as the green leaves begin to show at the end of the buds. On April 16th in an orchard at Meriden, the aphids were hatched and the buds had opened just enough to show the green tissue. Many newly-hatched aphids could be seen on the opening buds, though many eggs were still unhatched.

These aphids were abundant through blossoming time and were thick on the young fruit. During the latter part of June, or about the first of July, they disappeared entirely from the trees, and did not return until October.

On November 12, 1909, the aphids were laying eggs, though but few could be found.

Gillette states that lime and sulphur mixtures are among the substances most effective in destroying eggs of the green apple aphid in Colorado.

Rosy Apple Aphid.

1. Winged viviparous female; 2. apterous viviparous female; 3. young nymph; 4. antenna of apterous viviparous female. All greatly enlarged.

and are conspicuous and often abundant. The rosy apple aphid is pink or purplish in color and seems especially prone to attack the fruit spurs and the inner portions of the tree top rather than the terminal twigs and exterior part. The eggs are smaller and much less conspicuous than those of the green apple aphid, and one often needs to hunt carefully in order to find them at all, as they are hidden among the buds, sometimes partly under the scales.

The attacks of the rosy apple aphid affect seriously the fruit and prevents its growth and development, causes it to be gnarled and irregular in shape. The leaves curl early and often turn yellow and fall late in June if badly infested.

The green apple aphid remains on the apple leaves and shoots throughout the season, but the rosy apple aphid leaves the apple and goes to some other unknown plant host—during the latter part of June—returning in October and later laying eggs to carry the species through the winter.

CORN HELPS IN PASTURAGE

Easy Means of Supplementing Grass in Pastures and Stimulating Flow of Milk in Dairy in Late Summer.

An easy means of supplementing grass in the pastures and stimulating the flow of milk in the dairy herd is to feed green corn late in the summer. With a continuance of the present drought this supplement is liable to be required earlier than usual. A small amount of corn cut each day and fed to the pasture will amply repay the labor it costs in an increased flow of milk. As soon as ears begin to form green corn can be fed to advantage; and it may be so fed until it is near maturity. The Minnesota experiment station at St. Anthony Park has records of good crops of fodder corn planted as late as the middle of July. In view of the present dry season it may be advisable to plant a crop of fodder corn this month, as pasturage is reported to be very short and a scarcity of hay is likely to follow. It is better to try fodder corn now on any vacant land the farmers may have, and to cultivate it well, than to allow the land to grow a crop of weeds.

Haying Machines.

Equally wonderful have been the improvements made in machines for handling the hay crop. The modern mowing machine is a marvel of simple efficiency, says the Ohio Farmer. The old revolving, wooden-tooth hayrake has given place to the self-dump silky steel hayrake. This machine can be operated by a ten-year-old boy, who can do more and better work than could a man using the old method. The hay-tedder enables the farmer to cure his hay quickly and greatly improves the quality of the hay. By means of the hay loader timothy, clover or alfalfa can be taken direct from the swath and loaded on the wagon. With the modern sweep rake the hay can be taken direct from the swath or cock and put into the stack with the hay stacker. The derrick hay fork is also used quite extensively, especially when the hay is to be put away in the mow.

Alcohol from Cobs.

One ton of corn cobs will make 40 gallons of alcohol of 180 proof, and after deducting the corn cobs may be burned for fuel. The alcohol is worth $20, the cost of extraction is $4.

Hints For Hostess

TIMELY SUGGESTIONS
for Those Planning Seasonable Entertainments

An Announcement Luncheon.

An unusually pretty luncheon was given for a recent bride. The floral decorations were entirely of bridal wreath and American beauty roses. The centerpiece was a large circle of bridal wreath, over which a beautiful double heart of American beauties was suspended. At each plate was a long stemmed "beauty" to which was attached a wee heart-shaped envelope containing the cards of the happy pair. Tall silver candlesticks held pure white candles with American beauty shades. The favors were white satin heart-shaped boxes, with a hand-pointed beauty rose and the monogram of the couple in gold. They were filled with heart-shaped bonbons. At the wedding all the attendants wore coronets of bridal wreath and carried beauty roses; the gowns were all white. It was a most beautiful and striking procession.

A Sand Pile Party.

An innovation in children's parties was certainly started by a mother of three, whose babies clearly loved company. She sent cards illustrated with "sunbonnet" babies asking a dozen children to come in their "rompers" from 3 to 5. On a bright Saturday afternoon the merry throng appeared to find a load of delightfully clean sand; a set of sand toys for each child and a pail and shovel. There was a low table, a tub of water with which to mix the sand to the right consistency for pies; spoons, cake tins, and shakers to sprinkle "sugar" and "salt." Oh joy, there was a dish of flour for icing.

It was the jolliest, happiest party imaginable. Sandwiches, ice cream, cake (angel food) and lemonade were served and each child took home the sand toys for souvenirs, including the shovel and pail.

A "Cat" Contest.

At a party of the "Splinters" club, the host passed little programs cut out of cardboard in shape of a cat; the heading was "Cats You Have Met," the following questions were written; the hostess reading the answers later.

1. A dangerous cat—Catastrophe.
2. An aspiring cat—Catamount.
3. A cat that can swim—Catfish.
4. A cat that can fly—Catbird.
5. A cat that will be a butterfly—Cat-erpillar.
6. A library cat—Catalogue.
7. A cat that asks questions—Catechism.
8. A cat's near relation—Catkin.
9. A cat that is good to eat—Catsup.
10. A horned cat—Cattie.
11. A cat that throws stones—Catapult.
12. A tree cat—Catapala.
13. A water cat—Catatract.
14. A cat that flavors the grapes—Catawba.
15. A cat that covers acres of ground—Cataclysm.
16. A subterranean cat—Catacomb.
17. A cat that, living, appears dead—Catalepsy.
18. A cat prized as a gem—Catseye.
19. A cat with a cold—Catarrh.

An Outdoor Fete.

A young woman who lived in the country, also near the shore of one of our great lakes, planned this happy day for her friends.

She was entertaining a house party of four, then she issued charming cards bearing a "snap" shot of the house, with the following diversions; from ten to twelve, "tennis," "croquet," "archery," luncheon al fresco at once; on the veranda until three; surf bathing and beach party with picnic supper at six. Lawn party with dancing at half after eight. The guests took in all or as many of the features as they could, all showing up at the party. The lawn was beautifully decorated with lanterns, fairy lamps and several electric headlights, making it a scene like fairy land.

A few stringed instruments furnished the music. Refreshments consisting of watermelons, ices, fruits, small cakes and bonbons were served on the porch from the dining room that opened out on it by a series of French doors. Automobiles met the trains and took city guests to the station. The men wore flannels and the girls short dainty wash frocks at the dance and all had a glorious time.

Novel Table Decoration.

At a dinner party there was a charming Jack Horner pie made of pink crepe paper, the top covered with pink carnations in the center of the table. Pink satin ribbon went to each place, held down by a wee white porcelain jardiniere in which one pink lily stood erect and stately; beaming against these dainty favors were the place cards lettered in gold. There were nine guests and the effect of the circle of lilies was lovely. The tiny jardinieres were filled with earth so the lilies did not fade. This idea may be carried out in any flower. With the dessert course, ribbons were pulled revealing a souvenir for each guest done up in pink paper. They were all characteristic of some fad of the guest and created much merriment.

MADAME MERRI.

THE SCANTY NEW SKIRTS.

A Woman Should Well Consider Her Lines Before Wearing One of These Deformities.

The modern fashions with their scanty skirts and tied up look about the heels, does not make for grace and should be judiciously worn if one is not to appear ridiculous.

A woman who dons one of these deformities should not only consider her lines but must go to a dressmaker who knows lines. Otherwise results are deplorable when not laughable.

If you cannot afford to go to the best dressmakers never go to for exaggerations. Put thought into your toilet and remember that if women who are sensible will not refrain from being slaves of the passing mode with no thought of incongruity, women who are vain should.

Go especially slow on the new skirt. Some are impossibly ugly; most are unbecoming, save to the beanpole type, as they cut us in two; and all give women a carriage that is a combination of slide and wriggle which makes the walk of the Chinese woman of fashion with her bound feet an athletic stride in contrast.

FANCIES OF FASHION.

Chantilly lace, or the silk lace of Spanish shawls, is an effective fancy for straw hats.

A French looking hat is a large leg-horn trimmed with lavender orchids and finished with a knot of pale blue velvet.

The use of black lace on white satin chignon, etc., is general, and here one often finds the addition of the vivid color note in connection with black and white frocks.

White chiffon or net covered with beads of silver, gold or the pure white, is being used as a lining to many of the handsome gowns or waists made of diaphanous materials.

Among the smart buttons shown this spring are those of cut steel, set in colored stones. These buttons are mounted in mother-of-pearl rims, matching the stones in color.

The craze for veiling the frock appears to be as keen as ever, and nearly every smart dress is veiled with chiffon or fine crepon. Royal blue, veiled with black chiffon, is frequently to be seen.

SCRATCHED SO SHE COULD NOT SLEEP.

"I write to tell you how thankful I am for the wonderful Cuticura Remedies. My little niece had eczema for five years and when her mother died I took care of the child. It was all over her face and body, also on her head. She scratched so that she could not sleep nights. I used Cuticura Soap to wash her with and then applied Cuticura Ointment. I did not use quite half the Cuticura Soap and Ointment, together with Cuticura Resolvent, when you could see a change and they cured her nicely. Now she is eleven years old and has never been bothered with eczema since. My friends think it is just great the way the baby was cured by Cuticura. I send you a picture taken when she was about 18 months old."

"She was taken with the eczema when two years old. She was covered with big sores and her mother had all the best doctors and tried all kinds of salves and medicines without effect until we used Cuticura Remedies. Mrs. H. Kiernan, 663 Quincy St., Brooklyn, N. Y., Sept. 27, 1909."

Merely a Prevaricator.

A doctor relates the following story: "I had a patient who was very ill and who ought to have gone to a warmer climate, so I resolved to try what hypnotism would do for him. I had a large sun painted on the ceiling of his room and by suggestion induced him to think it was the sun which would cure him. The sun succeeded and he was getting better rapidly when one day on my arrival I found he was dead."

"Did it fail, after all, then?" asked one of the doctor's hearers.

"No," replied the doctor, "he died of sunstroke."

Wife and Country.

Paul D. Cravath, the noted New York lawyer said at a luncheon at the Lawyers' club: "Vacation time is here, and already that dreadful song about the wife gone to the country is being resurrected. But a variant to the song was furnished by a conversation I heard the other night."

"Hello, Smith," said one man to another, "I'm glad to see you back at the club again, old fellow. Wife off to the country, eh?"

"No," growled Smith. "She's got back."

There should. Fritz the gardener was a stolid German who was rarely moved to extraordinary language. Even the most provocative occasions only caused him to remark mildly on his ill-luck. Not long ago he came back from the city in the late evening after a hard day in the market place. He was sleepy, and the train being crowded, the baggage man gave him a chair in his roomy car.

Finally the train reached Bloomfield. Fritz still slept as it pulled in and his friend had to shake him and tell him where he was.

"I thank you," said Fritz, as he rose slowly to his feet. The open door of the car was directly in front of him. He walked straight out of it.

The baggage man sprang to look after him. Fritz slowly picked himself up from the sand by the side of the track, looked up at the door, and said with no wrath in his voice:

"There should be some steps."

SERIAL STORY

THE LITTLE BROWN JUG AT KILDARE

By MEREDITH NICHOLSON
Illustrations by RAY WALTERS

Copyright 1908 by The Bobbs-Merrill Company.

Thomas Ardmore and Henry Maine Griswold stumbled upon intrigue when the governors of North and South Carolina are reported to have quarreled. Griswold allies himself with Barbara Osborne, daughter of the governor of South Carolina, while Ardmore espouses the cause of Jerry Dangerfield, daughter of the governor of North Carolina. These two ladies are trying to fill the shoes of their fathers, while the latter are missing. Both states are in a turmoil over one Appleweight, an outlaw with great political influence. Ardmore and Griswold set out to make the other prosecute. Both have forces scouting the border. Griswold captures Appleweight, but Jerry finds him and takes him to Ardmore, her own prisoner. Griswold and Barbara, while investigating the outlaw's disappearance, meet Ardmore and Jerry, the latter reveals the presence of Appleweight at Ardmore. Ardmore arrests a man on his property who says he is Gov. Osborne. Meanwhile another man is arrested as Appleweight by the South Carolina militia.

CHAPTER XVI.

The Flight of Gillingwater.

"It will be better for me to break the news to Col. Gillingwater," said Jerry, "and you must go and meet the troops yourself, with Mr. Cooke and that amusing Mr. Collins. There is no telling what effect my tidings will have on Rutherford, or what he will decide to do. He has never before been so near trouble as he is now, and I may have to give him his first aid to the injured when he finds out that the South Carolina troops are on Raccoon creek, all ready to march upon our sacred soil."

"But suppose your adjutant general shouldn't go back to his troops after he sees you, then what am I to do?"

"If you don't see him by ten o'clock you will take personal command and exercise your own discretion as to the best method of landing Appleweight in a South Carolina jail. After that we must find papa, and it will be up to him to satisfy the newspapers and his constituents with some excuse for his strange disappearance."

Collins had come from Raleigh on the evening train, and he had solemnly assured Ardmore that the present state of affairs could not be maintained another 24 hours. He had exhausted all his professional resources, and the North Carolina newspapers of all shades of opinion were clamoring for the truth, and were insisting that, for the honor and dignity of the state, Gov. Dangerfield should show himself in Raleigh.

"We've got to find Dangerfield or bust. Now, where is that eminent statesman, Ardmore? You can't tell me you don't know; but if you don't, Miss Dangerfield does, and she's got to tell."

"She hasn't the slightest idea, but if the newspapers find out that he's really and truly missing, he will have to show up; but first we've got to take Appleweight off that case of Chateau Blisset and lodge him in the jail at Turner Court House, and let Gov. Osborne have the odium of incarcerating the big chief of the border, to whom he is under the greatest political obligations."

"But it's all over the country now that Osborne hasn't been seen in Columbia since he and Dangerfield had that row in New Orleans. Cranks are turning up everywhere, pretending to be governors of various states, and old Dangerfield is seen on all the outgoing steamers. There's been nothing like it since the kidnapping of Charley Ross."

Ardmore drew on his riding-glove reflectively, and a delighted grin illuminated his countenance.

"I caught a lunatic down on the Raccoon this afternoon who said he was the governor of South Carolina, and I locked him up."

"Well, he may be Osborne," remarked Collins, with journalistic suspicion.

"And he may be a Swiss admiral or the king of Mars. I guess I'm a governor myself, and I know what a governor looks like and acts like—you can't fool me. I put this impostor where he'll have a chance to study astronomy to-night."

"Then he isn't on that case of Chateau Blisset with Appleweight?"

"No, I locked him in a corn-crib until I get time to study his credentials. Come along now!"

Ardmore, Collins and Cooke rode rapidly away through the wide gates of the estate along the Sapphire road, over which, by his last bulletin, the adjutant general of North Carolina was marching his troops. They had left Cooke's men with Paul's foresters to guard the house and to picket the banks of Raccoon in the immediate neighborhood of the camp of the South Carolinians.

"I guess those fellows can hold 'em till morning," said Cooke. "We've got to clean up the whole business by tomorrow night. You can't have two states at war with each other this way without shaking up the universe, and if federal troops come down here to straighten things out it won't be funny."

They had ridden about a mile, when Cooke checked his horse with an exclamation.

"There's somebody coming like the devil was after him. It must be Gillingwater."

They drew rein and waited, the quick patter of hoofs ringing out sharply in the still night. The moonlight gave them a fair sweep of the road, and they at once saw a horseman galloping rapidly toward them.

"Lordy, the man's on fire!" gasped Ardmore.

"By George, you're right!" muttered Collins, moving nervously in his saddle. "It's a human sunburst."

"It's only his gold braid," explained the practical Cooke.

Seeing three men drawn across the road, the horseman began to check his flight.

"Men!" he shouted, as his horse pawed the air with its forefeet, "is this the road to Ardrey?"

"Right you are," yelled Cooke, and they were aware of a flash, a glitter that startled and dazzled the eye, and Col. Rutherford Gillingwater thundered on.

They rode on and saw presently the lights of camp-fires, and a little later were ceremoniously halted at the roadside by an armed guard.

It had been arranged that Collins, who had once been a second lieutenant in the Georgia militia, should be presented as an officer of the regular army, detailed as special aide to Gov. Dangerfield during the encampment, and that in case Gillingwater failed to return promptly he should take command of the North Carolina forces.

An open field had been seized for the night's camp, and the tents already shone white in the moonlight. The three men introduced themselves to the militia officers, and Collins expressed their regret that they had missed the adjutant general.

"Gov. Dangerfield wished you to move your force on to Ardrey should we fail to meet Col. Gillingwater; and you had better strike your tents and be in readiness to advance in case he doesn't personally return with orders."

Capt. Collins, as he had designated himself, apologized for not being in uniform.

"I lost my baggage train," he laughed, "and Gov. Dangerfield is so anxious not to miss this opportunity to settle the Appleweight case that I hurried out to meet you with these gentlemen."

"Appleweight!" exclaimed the group of officers in amazement.

"None other than the great Appleweight!" responded Collins. "The governor has him in his own hands at last, and is going to carry him across the border and into a South Carolina castle, as a little pleasantry on the governor of South Carolina."

The militia officers gave the necessary orders for breaking the half-formed camp, and then turned their attention to the entertainment of their guests. Ardmore kept track of the time, and promptly at ten o'clock Collins rose from the log by the roadside where they had been sitting.

"We must obey the governor's orders, gentlemen," said Collins courteously, "and march at once to Ardrey. I, understand, am only a courier, and your guest for the present."

"If you please," asked Cooke, when the line had begun to move forward, "what is that wagon over there?"

He pointed to a mule team hitched to a quartermaster's wagon that a negro was driving into position across the rough field. It was piled high with luggage, a pyramid that rose black against the heavens. One of the militia officers, evidently greatly annoyed, bawled to the driver to get back out of the way.

"Pardon me," said Collins politely, "but is that your personal baggage, gentlemen?"

"That belongs to Col. Gillingwater," remarked the quartermaster. "The rest of us have a suit-case apiece."

The pyramidal baggage wagon had gained the road behind them, and lingered uncertainly, with the driver asleep and waiting for orders. The conspirators were about to gallop forward to the head of the moving column, when Collins pointed across the abandoned camp-ground to where a horseman, who had evidently made a wide detour of the advancing column, rode madly toward the baggage wagon.

"The gentleman's trying to kill his horse, I should judge," murmured Ardmore. "By Jove!"

"It's Gillingwater!" chorused the trio.

The rider in his haste had overlooked the man in the road. He dashed through the wide opening in the fence, left by the militiamen, took the ditch by the roadside at a leap, wakened the sleeping driver on the wagon with a roar, and himself leaped upon the box and began turning the horses.

"What do you think he's doing?" asked Cooke.

"He's in a hurry to get back to mother's cooking," replied Ardmore. "He's seen Miss Dangerfield and learned that war is at hand, and he's going to get his clothes out of danger. Lordy! Listen to him slashing the mules!"

"But you don't think—"

The wagon had swung round, and already was in rapid flight. Collins howled in glee.

"Come on! We can't miss a show like this!"

"Leave the horses then! There's a hill there that will break his neck. He'd better stop him if we can!" cried Cooke, dismounting.

They threw their reins to the driver of the wagon, who had been brushed from his seat by the impatient adjutant general, and was chanting weirdly to himself at the roadside.

The wagon, piled high with trunks and boxes, was dashing forward, Gillingwater belaboring the mules furiously, and hearing the shouts of strange pursuers, yelling at the team in a voice shrill with fear.

"Come on, boys!" shouted Ardmore, thoroughly aroused, "catch the spy and traitor!"

The road dipped down into the shadow of a deep cut, where the moon's rays but feebly penetrated, and where the flow of springs had softened the surface; but the pursuers were led on by the rumble of the wagon, which swung from side to side perilously, the boxes swinging about noisily and toppling threateningly at the apex.

Down the sharp declivity the wagon plunged like a ship bound for the bottom of the sea.

The pursuers bent gamely to their task in the rough road, with Cooke slightly in the lead. Suddenly he shouted warningly to the others, as something rose darkly above them like a black cloud, and a trunk fell with a mighty crash only a few feet ahead of them. The top had been shaken off in the fall, and into it head first plunged Ardmore.

"There's another coming!" yelled Collins, and a much larger trunk struck and split upon a rock at the roadside. Clothing of many kinds strewn the highway. A pair of trousers, flung fiercely into the air, caught on the limb of a tree, shook free like a banner, and hung there somberly etched against the stars.

Ardmore crawled out of the trunk, screaming with delight. The fragrance of toilet water broke freshly upon the air.

"It's his ammunition!" bawled Ardmore, rubbing his head where he had struck the edge of a tray. "His scent bottles are smashed, and it's only by the grace of Providence that I haven't cut myself on broken glass."

They went down the road, stumbling now and then over a bit of debris from the vanished wagon.

"It's like walking on carpet," observed Cooke, picking up a feathered chapeau. "I didn't know there were so many clothes in all the world."

They abandoned the idea of farther pursuit on reaching a trunk standing on end, from which a uniform dress-coat drooped sadly.

"This is not our trouble; it's his trouble. I guess he's struck a smoother road down there. We'd better go back," said Cooke.

In a moment they had climbed the hill and were in hot pursuit of the adjutant general's abandoned army.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Southern Gold and Southern Cotton. Before 1849 the south furnished the chief gold fields of the country, but since that date the south has not been in the running. This section has been outclassed by California, by Colorado, by Nevada, and last but not least by Alaska. In the last fiscal year Alabama produced gold to the value of $41,200 and silver to the value of $200. This state was outranked in gold production in order by North Carolina, Georgia, and South Carolina, but no one of them turned out enough gold to make the round figure of $100,000. The entire production of gold in the south in the last year was $256,400 and $273,000 in silver. Nearly all the silver was mined in Texas.

It is pretty plain that Alabama and all the rest of the south can get more gold out of the soil via the cotton boll than it can dig out in the gold mines proper. The climate and the soil can in that way be coined into gold. The method is a trifle more circuitous, but it yields in cotton alone more money nine times over than do all the gold fields in the country, for the total yield of gold in the last fiscal year in this country was but $94,560,000.—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Woodpecker's Foresight. In California the woodpecker stores acorns away, although he never eats them. He bores several holes, differing slightly in size, at the fall of the year, invariably in a pine tree. Then he finds an acorn, which he adjusts to one of the holes prepared for its reception.

But he does not eat the acorn, for as a rule he is not a vegetarian. His object in storing away the acorns exhibits foresight and a knowledge of results more akin to reason than to instinct. The succeeding winter the acorn remain intact, but becoming saturated are predisposed to decay when they are attacked by maggots, which seem to delight in this special food.

It is then that the woodpecker reaps the harvest his wisdom has provided, at a time when the ground, being covered with snow, he would experience difficulty otherwise in obtaining suitable or palatable food.

The KITCHEN CABINET

HERE are so many things—best things—that commonly come when youth is past, that it may well happen to many of us to find ourselves happier and happier at the last."

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

When the rubber plant droops, its leaves turn yellow and drop off. Mix a teaspoonful of mustard in a cupful of boiling water, cool a little and pour on the soil in the pot; sometimes a long, black hard-shelled worm comes to the top, and if this is killed the plant will usually recover.

Another treatment good for other plants troubled with worms, is to bury a small piece of fresh beef in the pot near the surface, and the worms will come up to eat it, when they can be killed.

Out-door roses may be slipped as any plant with good success if care is taken to keep them moist.

Try using borax dissolved in hot water to remove the spots made by grease of any kind on woolen fabrics. Fold a clean cloth for a pad to use under the spot and then simply put the spot with a cloth wet in the borax water until the spot is removed.

One may have fresh corn on the cob in these days the year around. Take off the coarse outer husks, remove all the silk and tie a cord lightly around the end to hold the inner husks in place. Put into a brine strong enough to hold up an egg, put under a weight, and you will have corn on the ear any time, by soaking it over night.

Mint Sauce. Mint sauce is such an addition to the lamb roast or chops that it should always be served. Prepare it by mincing the mint very fine with a sharp knife. To two tablespoonfuls of minced mint add a tablespoonful of powdered sugar, a tablespoonful each of boiling water and vinegar. Let stand a few minutes to season before serving.

Cream Sauce. Melt a tablespoonful and a half of butter, add the same amount of flour, cook until thick, then add a cupful of hot milk. Season and simmer for ten minutes. Add half a cupful of green peas previously cooked, and serve hot.

WE MEASURE success by accumulation. The measure is false. The true measure is appreciation. He who loves most has most.—Henry Van Dyke.

SUMMER BREAKFASTS. The summer breakfast is even more of a problem than that of any other season. The appetite is so fickle that dishes that appeal to the eye are especially sought after. On a hot morning serve the cereal cooked the day before and placed on ice. Served with cream and fresh fruit it is most wholesome.

When one feels the need of a heartier dish at breakfast, croquettes of various kinds are both filling and appetizing. The rice left from the pudding of the day before may be used. Add to a pint of boiled rice two well beaten eggs, two tablespoonfuls of butter, one tablespoonful of chopped parsley, salt and paprika to taste with a few drops of onion juice. Set aside until cold, then make into croquettes, dip in egg and crumbs and fry in deep fat.

Baked eggs in cream make a pleasant change in serving eggs. Whole wheat bread made with nuts is a highly nutritious bread and served with fruit makes a good, well-balanced meal.

A slice of well prepared toast with fresh butter and berries served with a cup of fragrant coffee, rich with cream, is sufficiently satisfying to most appetites these hot mornings.

Back to the Home. We are hearing so much these days about getting back to the farm. We need more tillers of the soil, it is true; but we also need a more earnest desire for home building in our cities and towns. There are so many opportunities for starting a home on small savings that a home of one's own should be the first consideration.

The thousands of people with little children who are living in the close quarters of an apartment house or tenement, who might be in cozy homes of their own, need to be shown what they are losing in a thousand ways. What an incentive it is to be saving to have an object such as a home to work for. The hand-to-mouth liver in the apartment house knows nothing of this joy.

Cafe Parfait. Set a bowl in a pan of cracked ice, and turn into it one quart of thick cream. Add to this one-half cupful of very strong filtered coffee and one-half cupful of powdered sugar. Mix lightly with cream, whip with an egg beater, skimming off the top and draining in a sieve. Continue to beat until no more froth will arise. Turn into a mold rinsed with cold water and pack in ice and salt for four hours before serving.

BREVITIES

LANSING—The state records show that 300 Indian babies were born in Michigan last year. The majority of them were named John or Mary.

DEXTER—Dog poisoners have once more appeared in Dexter. A short time ago Miss Viola Stockford's pet dog Don was poisoned, and Saturday morning a most valuable bird dog of Markus Stebbins was poisoned.

ANN ARBOR—The crook who has been working in various Michigan cities, including Adrian and Jackson, obtained $17 Friday at Ann Arbor. He is the man who orders coal or some other commodity and requests that change be sent for a $20 bill. The change and the man always disappear.

HOWELL—For some months past Mrs. James Amos has been at the county infirmary. In looking over her effects stored away one day the past week, $287 was found in an old can. This was somewhat of a surprise as it was not thought the old lady had any means along this line.

MANCHESTER—At each end of the bridges on exchange place and Boyne streets the highway commissioner has put sign boards warning people not to drive across faster than a walk, but how little heed is given to them. It seems a waste of time to pass laws which are not enforced.

ANN ARBOR—Mrs. Emma H. Myer, a former resident of this city, now living in Denver, Col., has commenced suit for divorce, alleging non-support. Mrs. Meyers is one of the best known woman politicians in Colorado and was twice elected superintendent of instruction of the Denver schools.

MILAN—The three barns on the farm of Sherman Cook of York township were destroyed by fire about 1 o'clock Tuesday morning. All the season's crops gathered so far went up in them and the loss is complete. The barns and their contents were insured for $2,500. The cause of the fire is unknown.

ANN ARBOR—William Bucholz, the Ann Arbor boy arrested last week in Rockford, Ill., for passing $50 worth of bad checks in this city about three weeks ago, was arraigned before Justice Doty yesterday afternoon and on examination was held for trial. His bail was fixed at $200 which he gave. John and George Wagner signing the bond.

PINEKEY—St. Mary's church of Pinekey will hold their annual picnic in Jackson's grove, on Thursday, August 11th. Addresses will be delivered by Hon. W. E. Thompson, of Detroit, Hon. A. Tuttle, of Leslie, Wm. Devereaux, of Milwaukee and Richard Roche, of Howell. Ball game, Pinekey vs. Stokbridge, and music by the North Lake Band.

LANSING—E. C. Joslin a well-to-do farmer at Gregory, was arrested Saturday p. m. when found lying in an intoxicated condition in the little Downey restaurant. Joslin it is thought, got his liquor in Jackson as he insisted when arrested that he was in Jackson and confined in a cell, confident that he was in the Jackson police station—Lansing State Republican.

PLYMOUTH—Surveyors for the new Detroit, Lansing & Grand Rapids electric line, were through the village this week. The line comes in from the north at DuRoi's corners, thence east on Sutton street to Ann Arbor, to Depot street, thence north to Lovers Lane, going under the P. M. railway at Lewis's mill, back to Main street, thence east out the Plymouth road—Mail.

SOUTH LYON—While threshing was in progress at William Jones' farm, about six miles east of here, Saturday, the barn caught fire from a hot box on the separator and was soon beyond control of the men. One large barn and a granary, the separator, new this season, with all the grain and hay gathered this year were destroyed. The house was saved after removing all the furniture.

ANN ARBOR—A movement has been launched here looking to the formation of a $4,000,000 independent telephone company, comprised of 14 smaller companies. The deal is thought to be a part of a plan to consolidate the 221 independent companies in the state into three big corporations with headquarters at Detroit, Grand Rapids and one other city in the lower peninsula. The proposed new corporation is to be known as the Home Telephone Co., of Michigan. The Commonwealth Trust Co., of St. Louis, Mo., backed by St. Louis brewing interest, the Faustus and the Koebler and independent telephone magnates of the Missouri city are said to be financing the deal, which will not be closed until matters which are said to be pending with independent phone companies at Flint, Saginaw and other cities have been settled.

HOWELL—Everything is progressing nicely for starting the wheels of the new factory in Howell. At present proceedings are being taken to dissolve the name of the old organization in Detroit so that the new factory in Howell will be known and conducted under the same name. When this is done, which will be only a few days, everything will be turned Howell way. Several sites for the location of the new factory are being considered.—Democrat.

Domestic Financiering

They sat in front of the open fire. The only light in the room was that of the flames. It was just the right setting to invite confidence.

"Now tell me all about him," said the young married woman to the engaged girl, as she stirred the fire.

"Oh, he's perfectly lovely—" began the engaged girl.

"Of course," interrupted the young married woman. "He is so much like my Jack."

"Oh, he isn't a bit like Jack—" "Indeed!" The married woman stiffened perceptibly.

"I didn't mean it that way," protested the engaged girl. "They are both the very nicest men in the world—only different. We are to be married very soon and I wanted to ask you about the expenses of a flat."

"Yes, I can tell you all about it," said the mollified young married woman. "Jack says I am the best manager he ever saw—best at spending and best at saving. It sounds paradoxical, doesn't it? Now I am going to confide our secret to you, though Jack says, 'Let's not let the world know. So you mustn't tell any one.'"

"You can rely on me," said the engaged girl. "That is, of course, I'll tell Harry."

"First, let me advise you to learn to manage your husband," counseled the young married woman, sagely. "This part, of course, you mustn't tell Harry. Let all important suggestions come from him. If you need a new hat tell him he looks so nice that you hope he won't be ashamed to go out with you in your old hat—that you just can't afford a new one—and see what will happen. Second, don't economize."

"But we'll have to," said the engaged girl. "We must be very careful the first year."

"Beware! That will be a precedent he'll always expect you to live up to. Don't do it. You can save money another way—our way. The usual trouble with a bride is that she makes the grocery bill so small at first her husband thinks it is economy to be married and so he allows himself more cigars than ever."

"As for clothes! Women make over their trousseaus until a man thinks dresses and hats grow on trees. No, my dear, that isn't the way. It is much easier to get money when you are first married than it will be later. I know mamma always had to wait until winter for her summer clothes and then it would be warm weather before she got her winter outfit."

"I can do my own sewing and I am learning to make bread—"

"Stuff and nonsense! Not that I don't believe in learning to cook—Jack encouraged my going to a domestic science school as soon as we began to keep house. Mamma's experience was so different. They didn't have the domestic science schools in her day and she said she cried every meal the first year she was married. Papa's mother was a splendid cook and for a long time mamma just couldn't get the knack. But, as I was telling you, learned to make rarebit, salad dressing and wine sauces first. Of course, Jack asked why they didn't teach us to make bread and to roast meat; but what is the use of learning to make those common things when one can always buy them? At first I did try, but soon I just took to buying everything except my soufles—"

"But the expense?"

"Jack doesn't mind if they do cost a trifle more. He says he thanks his stars there are plenty of delicatessen stores. Anyway, we are saving so much money that the extra cost of food doesn't worry us."

"Jack is so good about giving me all he earns—every cent. I save it all and buy what I want on credit. Jack didn't know at first that I had the money put away in an old trunk."

"When the bills began to come in thick and fast he laughed—that is, at first; then he scolded and I cried. That made him feel so like a brute that he said I could charge anything I wanted to, though goodness knows how he could pay the bills. Then I told him I was saving his money—"

"I don't think Harry would want me to charge things," said the engaged girl, doubtfully.

"When I explained it to Jack he thought me a perfect wonder. 'Give me the cash for the grocery,' said he, 'and I'll give you a nice new bank check for the amount and you may keep it as long as you want to—the longer the better.'"

"I told him I would keep all the checks he gave me until we had been married 25 years. He was so pleased! Now he writes me extra big checks every month and takes the cash to pay the bills. I keep the checks safely."

"So we have everything we want and save a lot, too. It isn't necessary to economize—that is, if Harry is half as generous with his bank checks as Jack is."

What Worried Him.

"You look worried, Biffkins."

"I am."

"Somebody ill at home?"

"No."

"Business isn't what it should be, eh?"

"That ain't it."

"Well, then, what worries you?"

"I was just wondering how it's going to be possible to heat them aeroplanes in the winter."—Cleveland Plain Dealer

Candidate on the Republican Ticket for Nomination for Sheriff is the right man for the office. His own town has honored him a great many times. He has held the office of Assessor two terms; Member of the Common Council three terms; President of the Village four terms; Member of the School Board two terms; Supervisor of the Township four times; and has held the office of County Auditor seven years, and in every instance has given public satisfaction.

Why Not Try Him For Sheriff?
