Water Shut Off.

A broken cog wheel on the pump at the village wells on North street caused a shut down of the pumps in the power house at six o'clock Friday night. The employees of the plant put in the night making the necessary repairs and the water was turned on about ten o'clock Saturday forenoon. Some of the patrons who were not notified of the intended shut down did some lively searching for wells in their neighborhoods to get a supply of aqua pura for the household.

After a long illness, Henry O'Neil one of the county superintendents of the poor, and well known throughout the county, died Monday morning at his home in Sharon.

In 1835, Mrs. Jesse Smith died, her death being the first in the township. At that time no ground had been set apart for the burial of the dead, and the fact that mortality would thenceforth certainly claim his victims among the settlers, perhaps for the first time rested on their minds, and they came to the conclusion that a cemetery was needed in their midst. Aaron Lawrence, who owned land on a corner east of Orlo Fenn's gave a parcel of ground for a burial place, reserving a lot for his own family. The remains of Mrs. Smith were deposited here and thus the spot was consecrated as the resting place of the dead, and called the Vermont cemetery. Afterwards a cemetery association was formed for the government of the grounds, and one acre has been added, making an area of two acres. It is the resting place of nearly all the pioneers of Sylvan as well as many of their decendants. Well, the years slipped away as the years have a habit of doing. The Vermont settlers worked hard and prospered, but withal they had their good times. Mother says that grandpa would hitch up his team and take a load of old and young up to Mr. a load of old and young up to Mr. Boyd's at Sylvan Center, and they would trip the light fantastic toe into the wee small hours. My grandmother was passionately fond of dancing, which fact may explain some traits that have cropped out later.

The Chelsea station was built in 1850 and there is much of interest. 1850 and there is much of interest that could be said of the men who settled here at that time, and helped to bring Chelsea where it is today. Perhaps it is not good form to laud our own praises, but we can't help being proud of our little city as it is today, with its waterworks system and electric light plant, and its up-to-dateness in every way.

But in closing, let us go back to the green fields of the Vermont Settlement and note the change there. Nature in its wild state has given place to cultivated nature. The homesteads of civilized man dot the beautiful sections of the land and promise peace and plenty forever.

Commerce Court Judge Will Be Tried in Senate.

Voting to report articles of impeach ment against Judge Robert, W. Archbold, of the supreme court, who has been under investigation for alleged mis-behavior in office in connection with a "culm bank" transaction with the Erie railroad, the house judiciary committee decided to make its report in congress during the week of July 1. Chairman Clayton will present the report from the floor as of the highest privilege and will give to the house the charges and specifications the committee makes accusing the judge of misbehavior. With the report will be a resolution appointing five or possibly seven of the leading lawyers of the house to act as managers of the trial, which will be held by the senate. The culm bank transaction will fur-

In the same connection, he stated, that it was well known that after Wall street had dictated Parker's nomination it "dumped" him and took up Taft. Bryan went on to say that representatives of predatory wealth, who were at the Chicago convention, were more brazen in the present gathering, and that it was up to the delegates-representatives of the common people—to show that they are not afraid of Thomas Fortune Ryan or Wall street.

In presenting the name of Senator Kern he referred to him as the man who is fighting Lorimer and a democrat of 40 years' service. #### Means Bitter Fight,

The action of the national committee is expected to result in bitter faction and a struggle for supremacy between the Bryan Democrats and so-called conservatives that may affect the presidential nomination

A wealth of decorations in white and gold and the national colors greeted the early arrivals at the scene of the Democratic national convention. The big hall, ordinarily a huge steel-beamed, brick-walled armory, was transformed by thousands of yards of bunting. The steel girders under the roof were hidden by a false ceiling of light netting. From the galleries hung the banners of the various states and the territories and insular possessions. The delegates, as usual on the opening day of a convention, were slow in making their appearance. A pouring rain and a scarcity of vehicles made tels to the armory a somewhat serious problem.

age of forty, whose big wig and the legalistic turn of his talk betrayed the fact that he was a disciple of the then living Blackstone. Somewhat inclined to be trascible, censorious and vain, he was yet a man of high public character and pure private morals-a diluted Puritan, viewing the world through the Puritan's susicious and somewhat jaundiced vision. younger by seven years, slender of frame, with reckled skin, curly red hair and hazel gray yes that betrayed a kindly yet withal a determined spirit. Though a Virginia gentleman of large means, he displayed a disposition toward what in later days was called "demoeratic simplicity." He brought with him a reputation for science, literature and a happy talent for composition. It was whispered that, in addition to the classics, he understood Spanish, French, Italian, was learning German and contemplated studying Gaelic; that he new how to calculate an eclipse; plan a building, set a broken bone, try a lawsuit, and dance the minuet. Those of his fellow-members who came to know him intimately discovered that he was, in addition, a most agreeable and considerate companion, that he was passionately fond of playing the violin, and that occasionally he wrote poetry. These men were John Adams and Thomas lefferson. They speedily became friends. Adams wrote of his fellow-member: "He was so prompt, frank, explicit and decisive upon amittees and in conversation that he soon won my heart."

A year passed, and the revolt that was becun to preserve our rights as Englishmen spened into revolution. The time came when a separation that already existed in fact must be formally recognized in name also. And upon the roll of the committee of five named to prepare the declaration of that fact to the world stood the names of Thomas Jefferson and John Adams.

Jefferson wrote the immortal document, but the task of defending it before the Congress all chiefly upon the doughty Adams. And well d he perform it. "He was our Colossus on the floor," wrote Jefferson in grateful acknowl-

Unlike as Jefferson and Adams were in temperament, training, and political ideals, those taxious days of association in a noble work created a bond of sympathy that time nor all the bitterness of party strife could not defor some years, however, their paths lay different places. It was not until they repented their infant country at two European courts that they were again thrown into close ssociation. When the Adamses visited Paris 1785 they were frequently entertained by Jefferson, and the relations between the two amilles were so friendly that Abigail Adams wrote: "I shall really regret to leave Mr. lefferson; he is one of the choice ones of Subsequently, in describing the diffitles of her husband's position at an un-maly court, she said: "In Mr. Jefferson he has a firm and faithful friend with whom he consult and advise .... setting up aristocracies and monarchies had our forefathers emigrated to America, subdued the wilderness and won independence. "Born free and equal" was a phrase that must have

Against the aristocratic tendencies that he saw about him Jefferson set himself to fight with a quiet but grim earnestness. For a time, however, the Adams-Hamilton party triumphed. Adams was elected president to succeed Washington; Jefferson was forced to be content with the vice-presidency. Then came the quasi-war with France, and with it a decided reaction against Jeffersonian republicanism. But in the pride of their might the Federalists overreached themselves in the fatal alien and sedition acts, while Adams bravely refused to be pushed into an unnecessary war with France by the reckless Hamiltonians. By so doing he wrecked his party, but rendered his country the greatest service of his career. Years later he said: 'I desire no other inscription over my gravestone than this: "Here lies John Adams, who took upon himself the responsibility of the seace with France in the

During these years the friends frequently reminded each other that there was nothing personal in their political conflicts. But personal pique inevitably crept in, and neither was always able to refrain from attacking the other. His defeat in the election of 1800 was a great blow to Adams. Deprived of the coveted second term, he behaved with a pettiness that was out of keeping with his real greatness. After putting Federalists in every vacancy on which he could lay his hands, he shook the dust of the capital off his feet, and on the early morning of March 4, 1801, before his triumphant enemies were astir, drove off northward without waiting to see his successor installed in office. It was seemingly a final sad ending to a friendship between two men who, each in his own way, were as sterling patriots as ever lived.

But time works great changes, Jefferson's administration, especially during the first few years, proved so successful that most Federalists turned Republicans. Though he had bitter enemies who even plotted the formation of a "Northeastern Confederacy," they were not numerous enough to figure largely in the election returns. After all, Adams hated Hamilton and his satellites far more than he hated Jefferson. His son, John Quincy Adams, unable to swallow such British outrages as that committed by the "Leopard" on the "Chesapeake," severed his relations with the feeble remnant of the pro-British Federalists and became a Republican. When Timothy Pickering published a pamphlet arraigning the administration, John Adams replied to it, thus appearing as a supporter of Jefferson's policy.

In 1804, Jefferson lost his "ever dear daughter," Mary. "I, of my want," he wrote sadly, "have lost even the half of all I had. My evening prospects now hang on the slender thread of a single life." The news proved too much for great-hearted Abigail Adams. Without her husband's knowledge, she wrote Jefferson a letter of condolence, in which kind feeling, goodness of heart and a proud, unforgiving spirit were curiously commingled.

Jefferson's reply was that of a noble man to a noble woman. After thanking her in suitable language, he made an earnest effort to revive the perishing friendship between the two families. Several letters were exchanged, but the wounds the Adamses believed they had received still smarted, and cordial relations were not then restored. In 1811 Dr. Benjamin Rush of Philadelphia expressed to Jefferson a desire to bring about a reconciliation, and Jefferson gladly embraced it. In a letter to Rush he said many complimentary things of Adams, and added that in the preceding summer two of his Virginia neighbors had visited Baintree and that Adams had said to them: "I always loved Jefferson, and still love him." "This," wrote efferson, "is enough for me. I only needed this knowledge to revive toward him all the affections of the most cordial moments of our

Thus encouraged, Rush addressed to the two fellow-laborers in the cause of freedom an eloquent appeal to bedew their "letters of reconciliation with tears of affection and 'joy."

The hopes of the peacemaker were realized. Although Adams answered the appeal in a facetious and somewhat deprecatory letter, he ended with a half promise to comply with Rush's wishes. Taking as an excuse the sending of some specimens of New England homespun, he wrote a friendly letter to his old comrade and rival.

The joy with which Jefferson received this worded reply. Without even waiting for the arrival of the homespun, he hastened to write an answer that in part was as follows:

"A letter from you calls up recollections very dear to my mind. It carries me back to the times when, beset with difficulties and dangers, we were fellow-laborers in the same cause, struggling for what is most valuable to man, his right of self-government. Laboring always at the same oar, with some wave ever ahead threatening to overwhelm us, and yet passing harmless under our bark, we knew not how, we rode through the storm with heart and hand, and made a happy port.

"Of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, I see now living not more than half a dozen on your side of the Potomac, and, on this side, myself alone.

"You and I have been wonderfully spared, and myself with remarkable health, and a considerable activity of body and mind. I am on horseback three or four hours of every day; visit three or four times a year a possession I have ninety miles distant, performing the winter journey on horseback. I walk little, however, a single mile being too much for me; and I live in the midst of my grandchildren, one of whom has lately promoted me to be a great-grandfather. I have heard with pleasure that you also retain good health, and a greater power of exercise in walking than I do. But I would rather have heard this from yourself, and that, writing a letter of mine, full of egotisms and of details of your health, your habits, occupations and enjoyments, I should have the pleasure of knowing that in the race of life you do not keep, in its physical decline, the same distance ahead of me which you have done in political honors and achievements."

Thenceforward no cloud was ever allowed to come between them. Both had wrongs to forgive and forget, but they did it nobly. Though they never again saw each other in the flesh, they wrote long and frequent letters, telling of their daily lives and discussing politics, religion, philosophy and other topics.

In one of Jefferson's letters occurred what seems almost a prophecy of something strange to come. "The simultaneous movements in our correspondence," he wrote, "have been remarkable on several occasions. It would seem as if the state of the air, or the state of the times, or some other unknown cause, produced a sympathetic effect on our mutual recollections." Could it be that between these two great minds there existed a sort of mental telepathy? At all events, a more touching intimacy of patriotic souls was never beheld. In the fulness of years and of honors, did these two venerable patriarchs, once friends, then enemies, and now again friends, march in concord down the path of time toward a day that was to link their names yet closer in a glorious

Eight years passed. Jefferson was eightythree and Adams ninety, yet both retained the full enjoyment of their faculties. It was the year 1826, the fiftieth anniversary of the nation's birth. Throughout the land great preparations were making to observe the national holiday. Party feeling was sunk in common love of country, and the attention of the public was universally turned toward these venerable patriots who, with Chas. Carroll of Carrollton, were the sole survivors of the "Signers." Both men were in the feeblest of health, and were aware that their end drew near, but both desired to behold the glorious day; and life, like a flittering taper, prolonged itself in and could give but a feeble flicker. "'Tis a great day! 'Tis a good day!" he said to the anxious relatives who surrounded his bed. Reason wavered, but the fluttering mind in its last earthly moments recalled the friend of Monticello-the old comrade who had stood with him shoulder to shoulder in the fight for free-"Thomas Jefferson still survives," he murmured in a voice so feeble that the last syllables were scarcely distinguishable. Those were his last words. His spirit departed with the descending sun. He died in error. Thomas Jefferson did not survive. For days the good Democrat had felt the approach of death and had prepared for it, desiring only that he might live until the Fourth. On the third the stuper into which he had fallen became almost continuous. 'Ah, doctor," he said, awakening in the night, "are you still there Is it is Fourth?" "It soon will he." answered the physician. As midnight approached those watching noted anxiously the passing of the minutes, hoping and praying that the feeble thread might hold and death be hallowed by the great anniversary. The wish was granted. Not until fifty minutes past the meridian did the soul of the great commoner exchange immortalities.

It was before the days of telegraphs and railroads. The news spread slowly. Five days elapsed ere the denizens of Baltimore and Washington learned of what had happened at Braintree. Meantime the inhabitants of Virginia and neighboring states mourned the death of Jefferson, marveling greatly over the strange coincidence that one who had been the author of the Declaration should die upon the fiftieth anniversary of its adoption.

Then came the news from the north, and men realized that not one but two patriarchs of liberty had departed on the day when hearts were bounding with joy over blessings which sires of a former age had handed down-that almost simultaneously these two had been translated in the midst of the acclamations of millions to the judgment of their God. Had steeds and charlots of fire descended to take up these partners in earthly fame and coheirs of eternity it might perhaps have been more wonderful but not more glorious.

As the news spread over the land to the villages and the hamlets, "it raised everywhere a thrill of emotion, such as has never been Sherman in his tent one day," he caused by any public event. THE NATIONAL WELL AS Conducted by Charles M. Gardner, Editor of the National Grange, Westfield, Mass.

ENERGETIC MASTER OHIO'S

Theodore C. Laylin Now Serving Second Term of Most Successful Administration.

One of the most efficient Grange leaders in the country is Theodore C. Laylin, master of the Ohio State Grange, whose photograph is presented herewith. Mr. Laylin is now serving his second term as Ohio state master and his administration has been one of marked success along every progressive line. The Ohio membership has steadily increased, until the 40,000 mark has been reached and passed and the condition of the order in every part of the state is highly prosperous. The organization in that state is very progressive, participates actively in public affairs and in the latter is a highly influential factor. During the agitation of Canadian Reciprocity, Mr. Laylin went to Washington and entered a vigorous protest before the senate finance committee; afterwards leading an effective opposition fight in Ohio against the Canadian measure. Mr. Laylin is a strong speaker, a clear thinker and in every sense. leader. Grange affairs in Ohio will have to hum so long as Mr. Laylin is at the helm.

Up to the Members.

There is such a widespread demand for the introduction of the initiative, referendum and other "progressive measures," in many of the states, that the Grange has been forced to take a stand in numerous cases. The issue is at present on in New Hampshire, and the members of the order as a whole are to decide for themselves.

State Master Richard Pattee and the executive committee of the State Grange have recently issued a call to every subordinate Grange in the state, asking that action on the question be taken at once, in the local Granges, after thorough discussion of the questions involved. The notification thus officially sent out is as follows:

"Resolved, That we, the members of the New Hampshire State Grange, hereby urge the members of the constitutional convention of 1912 to submit to the voters of New Hampshire a constitutional amendment embodying the principles of the initiative and referendum, that the sense of the voters may be taken thereon. It is asked that every subordinate Grange use this resolution as the basis of discussion, and then take a vote on it. The consensus of opinion thus gathered will all be sent to State Master Richard Pattee, and will be declared the position of the State Grange on this important question.

A great deal of interest has been aroused throughout the state on this matter, and the Grange discussion is certain to be an animated one. By this method of procedure it is expected that a clearer expression of the Grange opinion of the state will be se cured than in any other way.

Grange Selling Committee. In a Vermont town where maple sugar is an important product the Grange took a hand this year in marketing the crop. A selling committee was appointed and all the farmers put their crop into the hands of this committee, refusing to negotiate single with any buyers. In consequence this selling committee were placed in a position of peculiar advantage, with so large a crop to offer, was the result that a much better price was secured for every pound of sugar made in that locality than could have been possible if each farmer had gone to market alone.

Successor of Lyceum. The Grange is in a distinct sense the successor of the old Lyceum of a century ago in the country towns, especially in the east. The Grange, however, is broader than the Lyceum, inasmuch as it includes the girls as well as the boys and is broader in all re
