Death Came Without a Warning.

The residents of this place were greatly shocked Sunday afternoon to learn of the sudden death of Mrs. A. A. Schoen which occurred at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Eschelbach, of Grass Lake township.

Rev. and Mrs. Schoen left here at noon to spend the afternoon at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Eschelbach, and after dinner Mrs. Schoen retired to the bed room to attend to the wants of her infant daughter. The members of the household heard a noise and hastened to the room where they found the mother and child laying on the floor. A physician was called from Grass Lake who announced that death had been instantaneous, and gave heart trouble as the cause. The deceased to all appearance seemed to be enjoying good health.

Miss Bertha Charlotte Poock was born in Dayton, Ohio, November 14, 1874, and was united in marriage with Rev. A. A. Schoen, June 15, 1911, at Dayton, Ohio, and during her residence in Chelsea gained the esteem of all with whom she came in contact. Mrs. Schoen was a musician of marked ability and was often called upon to take a part in both church and social gatherings.

She is survived by her husband, a 5-months old daughter, one brother, Oscar Poock, of Dayton, two sisters, Mrs. Paul Tappan, of Dayton, and Mrs. George Ahlers, of Pittsburg, Pa.

Services were held in St. Paul's church at 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon. Rev. S. A. John, of Ann Arbor, Rev. G. Eisen and Rev. Dr. Mayer, of Freedom, Rev. Wulmann, of Manchester, Rev. Meister, of Detroit, two other German ministers, and Rev. C. J. Dole, of Chelsea, delivered short and appropriate addresses. The services were attended by twenty-one clergymen and it is estimated that fully one thousand were present. The Ladies' Aid and Young People's societies of St. Paul's church formed an open line through which the funeral party, headed by the visiting clergymen, marched from the parsonage to the church. All of the business places were closed and the bells tolled, during the passage of the funeral party from the church to the Michigan Central passenger station.

The remains were taken to Dayton, Ohio, where the funeral services were held Wednesday afternoon, Rev. Karl Schaeffer officiating.

Fire at Brooklyn.

Property worth between $50,000 and $60,000 was consumed in a disastrous fire that swept the village of Brooklyn Monday night. The fire started in a warehouse back of the Culver state bank and spread rapidly. A high wind blew the flames and sparks in a direction which swept away the east side of the business street.

Some fifteen buildings were burned and very little of the stocks of merchandise were saved. The Brooklyn Exponent was in the burned district and most of its printing material and machinery was destroyed. The fire broke out about 9:30 o'clock and it was about one o'clock Tuesday morning before the blaze was under control. The village is practically without fire protection and the Jackson fire department was called to assist the panic stricken village. This is the second disastrous fire that has visited Brooklyn, the other being in 1897, which was equally as bad. There was very little insurance on the destroyed property.

Origin of the Day.

With the approach of Decoration, or Memorial Day, perhaps a brief note of its origin will be interesting. It is, as every school child knows, a day set apart in the United States for the decoration of the graves of soldiers who fought in the Civil war. The custom originated before the close of the war when the women of the south went to the graves of the fallen soldiers and decorated them with wild flowers. At about the same time a similar custom arose in the north, and on May 5, 1868, General John A. Logan, then commander in chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, fixed May 30 of that year as the day upon which the graves of soldiers should be strewn with flowers. Since that time, though there has been no Federal legislation, most states have appointed May 30 as a holiday for this purpose. In the south, the day is generally called Memorial Day, in the north Decoration Day.

Graduating Exercises.

The graduating exercises of the rural eighth grade pupils who will receive their diplomas will be held in the Chelsea high school auditorium at 7:30 o'clock Friday evening, June 5. Prof. H. C. Lott of the state Normal college at Ypsilanti will deliver the address.

The schools from this vicinity that will be represented are as follows: District 5, 7, Dexter township; district 2 Freedom township, district 4, 4 fr. 7, 8, 10 fr. Lima township; district 4 fr. Sharon township; all the districts of Lyndon township; all the districts of Sylvan township.

Flag Week in September.

Gov. Ferris has received a request from Baltimore to use his influence during the week of September 6 to 13 to have the American flag made general use of during the entire week.

The period marks the one-hundredth anniversary of the birth of the "Star Spangled Banner" and the governor is getting ready to have a general observance of the week.

BROOKLYN VISITED BY FIRE TUESDAY

LOSS OF FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLARS IN BUSINESS PART OF VILLAGE.

JACKSON CHIEF GIVES AID

Flames Sweep East Side of Main Street and a Number of Stores and the Newspaper Office Are Destroyed.

Brooklyn, Mich.—Fire which started in the warehouse of Parker's general store burned the east side of the main street in the business section early Tuesday morning, and caused a loss estimated at $50,000.

The buildings burned were in connection with the following: The Culver State bank, Culver & Parker's general merchandise store, including the Farmers' phone exchange, located above the store; C. A. Milck's grocery and shoe store, the Brooklyn postoffice, W. H. Pitcher's meat market, Murray sisters' millinery store, Claude Teachout's residence, occupied by W. D. Thompson; the Brooklyn Express, newspaper and printing office, and the apartments of Editor Walter Ford's father and mother above the printing office; Peter Aldrich's agricultural implement store, a residence owned by Howard Ambler and occupied by Claude Austin, four barns owned by Claude Teachout, O. O. Arnold's livery barn, a barn owned by G. L. Worthington & Sons, undertakers; the kitchen in the rear of the Brooks home.

Brooklyn's fire equipment consists of a chemical engine, and when the fire was seen to be beyond control help was asked for from Hillsdale and Jackson. The former was unable to respond, as it had no engine, and Chief King, of the Jackson department, had no means of transportation for an engine to the fire. With three firemen, however, he made a quick response in his motor car and was of assistance in tearing down buildings in the path of the fire.

This is the second disastrous fire in Brooklyn. In 1897 a fire destroyed a part of the business section.

COLLEGE CAN NOT BORROW

Attorney General Rules That Credit of State May Not Be Pledged for Funds for M. A. C.

Lansing, Mich.—The Michigan Agricultural college's last hope remains in the decision of the supreme court, which is not expected before June 1.

The proposition of borrowing funds to tide the institution over until such time as the supreme court's decision clarifies the atmosphere was sent glimmering Saturday night, when Attorney-General Fellows handed down an opinion, asked for by the state board of agriculture, as to the legality of the board making a loan of $75,000. The attorney-general says the board has not the constitutional authority to borrow money, pledging therefor either its creditor the credit of the state. The attorney-general holds that the act of creating the state board of agriculture does not include the right to borrow money, that it would be beyond the power of the legislature to bind the state by borrowing money in any case except as particularly specified in section 10 of article X of the constitution, which says the state can borrow only "to meet deficits in revenue, repel invasion, suppress insurrection, defend the state or aid the United States in time of war."

REPUBLICANS IN DETROIT

Meeting of Three Thousand Tuesday Hears Three Senators.

Detroit—About three thousand Michigan Republicans gathered in the armory Tuesday in what was styled a "get-together meeting." A number of prominent men of the party made addresses including Senators Borah, of Idaho, and Smith and Townsend, of Michigan. Resolutions were passed appealing to the Progressives to join with them and presented a united front to the Democrats.

SENIORS "FLUNK" AND LOSE ORGANIZATION

Albion, Mich.—Because they imitated the college students Wednesday of last week, and held a "sneak day," when they "cut" classes and went on a picnic, the senior and junior classes of Albion high school were ordered by the school faculty Tuesday to disband their class organizations for the rest of the year and turn over all class funds to Supt. McKone.

The ban is placed on any kind of class activity, including the annual junior-senior reception, and even the class day exercises of the seniors. Commencement will be a tame affair.

HOME RULE GIVEN TO IRISH PEOPLE

THIRD PASSAGE OF BILL BY HOUSE ASSURES VICTORY AFTER LONG FIGHT.

LORDS UNABLE TO VETO ACT

By a Majority of Seventy-Seven Liberal Party Redeems Its Pledge to Nationalists Made Eight Years Ago.

London.—The Irish home rule bill passed its third reading in the House of Commons Monday by a majority of 77.

The vote was 351 for and 274 against home rule. The division was strictly a political one and the vote was practically the same as on the last enactment of the measure, with the exception of the few votes gained by the Unionists in the recent by-elections.

The quick vote on home rule, at the demand of the Unionists, came as a surprise to the public, who early in the day flocked to Westminster and crowded the galleries in anticipation of a vigorous old-time debate.

This is the culmination of Ireland's unremitting 44 year fight for self-government. The dreams of Butt, Davitt and Parnell will become all but an accomplished fact. The house of commons has passed for the third time in three successive sessions the Home Rule bill in substantially the same form as it was introduced two years ago by Premier Asquith. The Liberal party, thanks to the operation of the veto act which prevents the house of lords from thwarting the will of the people after their representatives have thrice approved the same measure, have redeemed its pledge to the Irish Nationalists, only through whose cooperation it has been able to retain control of the British government during the past eight years.

It was a wonderful blending of riotous color, quaint dances, quainter music, court and war scenes and the final trial and death at the stake of Joan, the maid of Orleans. Every scene was as nearly correct historically as it was possible to make it, and in the final scene Miss Marjory Nicolson of Detroit, who wrote the scenario, had taken from the records of the trial the exact words of the trial bishop and the seemingly inspired answers of the maid of Orleans.

While all the characters were given careful interpretation, the title role, portrayed by Miriam Hubbard, stood out greater in its perfection than any other.

STATE EMPLOYE IS KILLED

Auto Accident Near Lansing Costs One Life and Injures Three.

Lansing, Mich.—Leslie Clark, head of the corporation department in the secretary of state's office here, is dead and Miss Pearl Gilbert, a stenographer in the same office, and Miss Jessie Vandenberg, a stenographer in the state tax commission department, are injured, the result of an auto accident near the Michigan Agricultural college late Sunday night. Sabius Serardi, the driver of the car, has slight bruises. The women's hurts are not regarded as serious.

The party was driving toward Lansing, when they met a car. Serardi turned off the lights of the machine when the glare of the cars' headlights showed him the path. After the car had passed, Serardi turned his lights on, but not before the machine had been run to the edge of a steep embankment, over which it toppled before Serardi could change his course.

The auto turned over, pinning Clark under and killing him instantly.

To Test Local License Law. Cheshaning, Mich.—A test of the right of cities and villages to impose a local license fee for saloons, in addition to the $500 state license, will be made, unless the Cheshaning council refunds $1,025 to T. G. Baldwin. Baldwin was a hotelkeeper in Cheshaning in 1912 and 1913, and besides his state license paid $500 each year under a village ordinance imposing that extra fee for saloon licenses. He now demands the refund of that amount, with $25 interest, and says he will sue if the money is not paid. The council has so far refused to do so.

Drowned in St. Clair Lake. St. Clair, Mich.—Carl Fleury and Albert Busha attempted to change seats while fishing from a rowboat in Lake St. Clair, Sunday and Fleury was drowned. Busha was rescued by other fishermen.

PAGEANT IS GREAT SUCCESS

Seven Thousand Persons Witness "Joan of Arc" Given by University Students.

Ann Arbor.—Seven thousand persons witnessed the spectacular Joan of Arc pageant, presented Thursday night on Ferry field by the Women's League of the University, and so great was the success of the production that hereafter some sort of a pageant will be an annual feature of Michigan activities.

It was a wonderful blending of riotous color, quaint dances, quainter music, court and war scenes and the final trial and death at the stake of Joan, the maid of Orleans. Every scene was as nearly correct historically as it was possible to make it, and in the final scene Miss Marjory Nicolson of Detroit, who wrote the scenario, had taken from the records of the trial the exact words of the trial bishop and the seemingly inspired answers of the maid of Orleans.

It is Thought That Huerta Has Given Consent to the Program So Far Outlined by the Niagara Conference.

Niagara Falls, Ont.—Substantial agreement on many of the main points involved in the mediation conference has been reached by the American and Mexican delegates.

The discussion Tuesday covered actual terms and details of many of the things deemed necessary to the pacification of Mexico. The mediators and the opposing delegates were decidedly optimistic. An early agreement is now looked for.

The situation was summoned up in the following announcement by Justice Lamar, on the authority of the mediators:

"We have begun to discuss the actual terms and details of a plan of pacification. On a number of them, we find ourselves in substantial agreement. Others are still under discussion and as to them there has been no disagreement. It would, of course, be improper for us to specify the particular points we have discussed or those we will consider further."

From the mediators themselves it was learned that some of the vital points had been reached. Those are understood to include the manner in which the present regime in Mexico City would give way to a new provisional government.

That Gen. Huerta had given consent to the program thus far outlined here was one of the reports, from reliable sources, on which some of the optimism displayed was believed to be based.

NO DAMAGES FOR VICTIMS

Supreme Court Holds That Owners of Titanic Are Not Liable.

Washington.—The Oceanic Steam Navigation Co., owner of the steamship Titanic, which foundered April 14, 1912, is not liable for the millions of dollars damage claims filed against it for loss of life and property in that great disaster, according to a decision of the supreme court of the United States.

The court decided that the claims must be filed under the American law which limits the liability of the company to $51,805, the money collected as passage money, freight and salvage, which in effect makes invalid the claims for damages in excess of this sum.

SENATOR BRADLEY IS DEAD

Was First Republican Governor of Kentucky and Brilliant Orator.

Washington.—Senator William O. Bradley, of Kentucky, a silver-tongued orator of the old school and the first republican governor the state ever had, died here at 9:45 Saturday night, as the result of an acute attack of gall stones. He had been ill some time, and no hope had been entertained during the last day or two for his recovery.

Senator Bradley was just completing his first term in the senate. He was elected to the senate six years ago by means of four democratic votes which switched to him, breaking a deadlock in the legislature. He was a soldier of the union army during the civil war.

ON THE RUSSIAN FRONTIER

LONG the path by the river we heard the slow tramp of heavy military boots. In the breathless silence of the summer evening they rang clear and strong on the sun-baked soil—Russian and the Russian soldier guarding the frontier. He peered through the dusk toward the opposite bank, which Finland. The country on both sides of the river was typically Finnish for the frontier is only an artificial wide stretches of pine forest broken here and there by sand and wooden houses, writes Nor-Ebbott in London Graphic.

We stood there, Stoypan Arsenyev and I, the soldier came up to the field uniform of the Russian corps, khaki with green facings. Across his back was slung a loaded—with fixed bayonet. "Good-day," he said gruffly. "Good-day," we replied.

He made a step forward, but halted and turned to us. It was silent and the thirst for comradeship was upon him.

"Any luck?" he asked, referring to fishing-rods we carried.

The river was not an ideal one for fishing, and Stoypan Arsenyev held a small, thin fish on a string—a result of an afternoon and night by the river.

Watch for Revolvers. The soldier laughed.

Tomorrow by the washing-butchery, the water's deep there; it's a place. Yesterday I saw a man there nearly as long as his arm. And he laughed again.

"How long are you on duty?" asked Stoypan Arsenyev.

Six hours patrol, six hours for eating and sleeping, then another six hours duty, and again six for rest. "A hard life," added the soldier.

"What are you watching for?" I asked.

"The curt reply. I know. But what do they expect?"

"Matches," said the soldier. He was diplomatic in his simple way.

He showed of force all along the frontier is not simply intended to prevent the free entrance of matches. The reason of this ment, at the beginning of the summer, that nobody would be allowed to cross from one side to the other in boats, as several cases of smuggling had recently occurred. After long negotiations, my host, an officer of high rank, obtained special permission to cross the river "for the purpose of attending church only." His wife took advantage of this the very next day, and Ivan, the dvornik, rowed her over. He was just in mid-stream on his way back when the guard perceived him. "Halt!" he cried, as he unsling his rifle. Ivan, overcome with fear, lost his head, turned back again, and pulled like a madman for the opposite bank. The soldier promptly fired three times into the air, and after a short interval again three.

By this time, Ivan, having regained his senses, obediently crossed and gave himself up. But the soldier's shot had given the alarm, and roused the frontier, and in a few moments an officer and two troopers galloped up, fully armed. Ivan was taken away to the barracks, shouting, imploring, and protesting with great indignation. In due course he was set free.

Peaceful Afternoon Disturbed. The explanation of this dramatic scene, which so rudely disturbed a peaceful summer afternoon, was that, it being only the day after the permission was granted, all the soldiers had not yet been informed of the new order.

Our soldier chuckled as he thought of it.

"He was a fool, that man," he remarked. "A big fool. He should have stopped. He might have got a piece of lead in that stupid head of his."

Again I lit my pipe. It was getting late, the sky was peppered with stars, and the silence had grown more breathless than ever, broken only by the jumping of some belated fish not yet asleep. We talked a few minutes longer; the sentry told us how he sat in holes in the bank which he dug out in the soft earth with his bayonet, and watched for hours unseen; and we related how a friend had smuggled over a lot of matches. In spite of his insistence that matches, and matches alone, were the cause of his being there, this information did not seem to interest him. We said "good-night," and the soldier continued his solitary tramp, and his heavy footfalls died away in the distance. As we turned to go I lit my pipe once more, and then only did I notice that the box of matches which I had brought out several times during the conversation was of Finnish manufacture. I had bought several such boxes secretly (and cheap) at a little shop in the village where the shopkeeper winked as he sold them. Contraband, of course, and the soldier must have noticed them. But, then, that diplomat was after bigger game.

Poor Courtiers. The Emperor Menelik of Abyssinia, about whose death there appears to be no doubt this time, was a bit of a humorist in his way.

On one occasion an American mission presented him with some firearms, and he immediately opened fire from the throne, to the consternation of his retinue, who fled for their lives.

Hearing that the mission carried some blank cartridges for saluting purposes, he asked for a few.

"I am going to my country place at Addis Alem next week," he said, when they gave him the cartridges, "and I expect to amuse myself with these cartridges. I shall be accompanied by many officers, and I shall be able to teach them to show courage under fire!"

"I don't know, my dear," answered mother. "He's getting along very nicely now as bookkeeper for the Stearns-Rabbit company."

"Twenty dollars a week as bookkeeper," answered papa, in contempt. "But, my dear, many respectable people only earn twenty dollars a week. You mustn't think everybody can be like you, entering a broker's office as an office boy and rising to a salary of fifteen thousand at forty."

"I must admit the old man hasn't treated Eustace any too well," said papa.

I told Miss Penton that Uncle Eustace was coming to visit us for Easter. Miss Penton seemed almost as old as Uncle Eustace. She was a sort of fixture in our town, too. She had taught school since she was a girl, and she had known Uncle Eustace and papa since they were boys. Miss Penton always encouraged me to tell her about my family, but somehow she never came to visit us, though papa always took off his hat to her when they met.

And then a very strange thing happened. Grandfather Mortlock, papa's father, died in his big house in far-away New York. I had never seen him. He had got sort of crabby when he grew old, and didn't care about people. It was said that Uncle Eustace had embittered his life when he was a boy by declining to go into his business, and therefore grandfather had cut him off with a dollar. Uncle Eustace had just drifted through life. At forty he was a broken man. Then papa got him a position with the Stearns-Rabbit people, and he had stuck there and was "making good." But, as papa would say, how can anyone "make good" at forty-five?

Well, Grandfather Mortlock died, about two weeks before Easter. You know how such a thing affects the mind of a child. I cried all day, although I had never seen the old man. Then, about five evenings later, I heard papa talking about the will.

"Elizabeth," he said to mother, "what do you think? The old man has left Eustace a cool hundred thousand dollars, and only fifty thousand apiece to the rest of us."

"You don't envy him, my dear?" asked mother, slipping her hand into his.

"Envy him? I'm heartily glad," said father. "Dear old Eustace! Nobody thought the old man would leave him a penny. I guess he'll be pleased. That ought to mean five thousand a year to him."

I told Miss Penton about that, too, and she was so pleased that I almost thought she was crying instead of laughing.

"What does your Uncle Eustace look like now?" she asked. "Has he the same black, curly hair that he had when he was a boy?"

"Why haven't you seen him since, Miss Penton?" I asked her.

Miss Penton shook her head, and something seemed to whisper to me to leave her. So I did.

At Easter Uncle Eustace came to see us. He looked just the same as ever, except that he was wearing a new suit of clothes and a brand-new overcoat. His hair was grayer than it had been the last time, and he was beginning to grow fat.

"I tell you, Jim," he said to father, "it's a mighty fine thing for me to have that money. I was beginning to get played out. I'm an old fellow now—it's time I took life easy."

"What are you going to do with it, Eustace?" asked father. "Why don't you invest it in a good mortgage or two? I'll take care of it. If you like, you know you never had much business sense."

"I've been thinking," said Uncle Eustace, "about a nice little farm, such as I've always longed for—say twenty-five thousand dollars' worth of land, and the rest—"

"Eustace, why don't you get married?" asked mother, looking at uncle in a queer sort of way.

"Why, who would have an old fellow like me?" he asked.

"You are not old, Eustace; you are just in your prime," said mother angrily. "If you think of yourself as an old man you will really be old."

"Tom," said Uncle Eustace to me next morning, "when does your school open again?"

I told him, and he seemed quite anxious to go to school with me and find out what they taught us nowadays. He said there had been a great change in the educational system since he was a boy, and he was interested in school work. He also wanted to see the buildings and the way they were ventilated.

"Why, Uncle Eustace, you won't have to wait till school opens," I told him. "Miss Penton is always glad to show visitors round. I'll ask her."

"No! Here, Tom! Wait a minute!" Uncle Eustace shouted, but I was already running down the street ahead of him. You see, I had always wanted Miss Penton to meet Uncle Eustace, about whom I had told her so much, and this seemed like a heaven-sent opportunity.

When I reached Miss Penton's house they told me she was in the school, looking over some holiday work, so I went back and explained to Uncle Eustace. "I guess we can go straight there," I said to him.

HIS OLD SWEETHEART

By FRANK FILON.

Uncle Eustace seemed to be as old as the hills. He was about forty-five, I suppose, but to a boy of twelve that is an immense age. He was very ruddy, very gray and very clean-looking, and slow and deliberate in all his movements. He used to come to spend a week with us three or four times a year. Uncle Eustace was papa's brother.

"Poor old Eustace," papa used to say, after he was gone, and there was a sort of affectionate contempt in his voice. "He'll never amount to anything."

"I don't know, my dear," answered mother. "He's getting along very nicely now as bookkeeper for the Stearns-Rabbit company."

"Twenty dollars a week as bookkeeper," answered papa, in contempt. "But, my dear, many respectable people only earn twenty dollars a week. You mustn't think everybody can be like you, entering a broker's office as an office boy and rising to a salary of fifteen thousand at forty."

"Tom," he said in a hoarse sort of whisper, "I don't feel well. I think I'll go home."

"Oh, Uncle Eustace!" I exclaimed. "I did want you to meet Miss Penton."

"I tell you what, my boy," said Uncle Eustace. "You run home and get me my glasses. I've got a nervous headache from not wearing them. That's a good chap. I'll wait for you outside."

I ran home as fast as I could and got the glasses, but when I reached the school house Uncle Eustace wasn't in sight. So I went in to find Miss Penton and tell her he was coming.

I had barely stepped inside the hall when I heard voices in the little room where Miss Penton used to sit to prepare the lessons, and when I got to the door I heard the strangest noise. I hadn't opened the door before I saw Uncle Eustace and Miss Penton standing next to each other, each looking at the opposite wall, and Miss Penton's face was redder than I had ever seen it before.

"Here are your glasses, Uncle Eustace," I said.

"Oh, darn!" said Uncle Eustace. "Say, Tommy, you run back with them and tell your mother I'm going to bring Miss Penton home for dinner."

I went out without saying anything. Because, you see, I had known all the time that Uncle Eustace and Miss Penton had been sweethearts twenty years before.

SALT WATER MORE BUOYANT

Considerable Difference Between the Fresh Liquid of the Rivers and That of the Oceans.

A Chinese lad dropped his ball in a narrow hole and could not get it out, according to a writer in the Illustrated Sunday Magazine. So he poured water in the hole, thinking that he would float the ball to the surface. As the ball was slightly heavier than water, it remained on the bottom. Then he thought of mixing salt with the water, as he knew that salt water would float denser objects than fresh. This he did, and was rewarded with the floating ball.

This particular fact is demonstrated at the mouths of rivers. Objects rolling along the bottom of a fresh river, too heavy to come to the top, will rise when they are carried out to sea. The general rule also applies to floating bodies. For instance, a ship with a cargo on the sea will sink sometimes a foot on entering a fresh water port. On the other hand, if she leaves a fresh water port with her cargo, she will rise when entering the ocean. So a ship may be loaded apparently too much at a wharf and still be all right on the waves.

In building a dam the fact that salt water is heavier than fresh must be taken into consideration, and the dam for the same head must be a good deal stronger; this too without taking into consideration the beating of waves, etc.

Peculiar Political Economy.

Public attitude on the liquor question has shown a decided change even during the present generation, remarks a writer in the Chicago Inter Ocean. It no longer seems to be the fashion to be bibulous. A rather amazing attitude on this problem appears in "The Compleat English Tradesman," a quaint old volume that I picked up at a secondhand book store the other day. The author—who is supposed to be De Foe, appears much perplexed by the problem as related to trade. "What a poor nation must we have been," says he, "if we had had a sober, religious, temperate nation! Innumerable poor must have starved unless the rich had run into excesses. In a word, it looks as if we were bound to be wicked or poor, and go a-setting or go a-begging; the wealth of the country is raised by its wickedness."

Such was political economy in England in the year of grace 1737.

Slender Silhouette in 'Tailored Gowns

IN tailored gowns there is little departure from the slender silhouette. Skirts, with all their drapery, cling rather closely to the figure.

Coats are short in the front and lengthen more or less toward the back. Many of them reach only a little below the waist line. Most of them open at the front and are finished with revers. The rolling, or standing collar, worn with the coat, is made of fine net or lace and wired to stay in place.

An original design is portrayed here which differs in a few particulars from the majority of suits. It is very practical and quite graceful.

There is in this model a peg-top skirt, narrow about the feet, with a short tucked skirt over it. The jacket buttons up the front but may be opened to the bust line, with oddly shaped pointed revers finishing it at the sides. The sleeves are smaller and longer than in the most popular of the tailor-made suits. There is a wide frill of lace hanging over the hand and standing about the neck. Small pockets are simulated at each side on the body of the coat.

Besides being unusual and attractive this model possesses much distinction. Its thoroughly practical points make themselves evident.

Combinations of two materials are featured in tailored gowns for spring. A plain cloth skirt with a plaid jacket, or a cross-barred skirt with a plain coat, or a figured material trimmed with checks, are bright and pleasing. Perhaps the best-liked combination of all is that of black moire silk in bands and flounces on cloth of a contrasting color.

The draped collar must not go unmentioned. It lies in loose folds across the back and is cut sailor-fashion with pointed ends forming a "V" at the neck. It is among the most striking and becoming of the touches that mark the tailored gowns of this season.

The extremely short jacket and coat fronts lengthen the appearance of the figure at the front. By observing the different models a selection is possible that will either lengthen or shorten the apparent height of the wearer.

Altogether, we have not had more attractive suits than these. But coats have been more shapely and rather more difficult to make than the loose-hanging variety which is now the vogue.

Pretty Hats of Jet and Maline

FOR those who like jet in millinery, combinations of jet and maline prove themselves most attractive. Masses of maline absorb and hide the light, but jet tosses it about, plays with it incessantly, and this union of quiet and glitter makes the jet and maline hat fascinating. There is nothing new in the combination; anything so good does not need to be new, for it is recommended by more sterling virtues than mere novelty.

What is new in jet and maline hats is the manner of combining the two materials, and the shapes. Just a glance at the three hats shown in the picture illustrates how original and effective the designer can be in using the materials given her.

A dainty, jaunty little hat hints of the Napoleon shape, with a jet coronet extending about the head, and a crown of a half-dozen thicknesses of maline. There is a border of folded maline softening the outline of the brim and two brushes or cockades of jet finishing the trimming. The drooping one at the right side might be dispensed with, if the hat is to be worn by an older woman. It is a shape that may be placed on the head at several angles, and this widens its field considerably. For the jet hat has the advantage of appropriateness on both youthful and elderly heads.

The turban with soft crown of maline and brim of jet, trimmed with curled peacock feathers, is so smart and unusual in style that it would arrest the attention anywhere. In this, folded maline follows the outline of the brim, and the crown is made of several thicknesses of maline. It is a shape for the youthful wearer. The placing of the feathers is especially clever.

One of the shapes which lifts away from the left side of the head with its crown forming a background for the profile is shown in the third picture. It is one of the most successful of hats. There is a bandeau which almost amounts to a cap, covered with frills of maline. The shape is draped with net, spangled with tiny jet sequins. An upstanding spray of fine feathers completes the model.

CANADA'S PLACE AS A PRODUCER

Canada Is Getting a Great Many Americans.

"Three young provinces, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta," says a New York financial journal, "have already made Winnipeg one of the greatest primary wheat markets of the world. In 1904 they raised 58,000,000 bushels of wheat. Five years later they produced 150,000,000 bushels. In 1913 the crop approximated 200,000,000 bushels. At the present rate of progress Canada must soon pass France and India, and stand third in the line of wheat producers. Ultimately it will dispute with Russia and the United States for the first position. Wheat has been the pioneer of our development. Undoubtedly it will prove the same with Canada. In the last calendar year our trade with Canada amounted to 497 million dollars. Only with two countries—the United Kingdom and Germany—is our trade greater. No vivid imagination is needed to see what the future development of Canada means to the people of the United States.

The influx of American settlers to the Canadian prairies is now in full swing. Within the past few days over 80 of those arrived at Bassano carrying with them effects and capital to the value of $100,000. Fifty settlers from Oregon arrived in Alberta a few days ago; while 15 families of settlers from the state of Colorado arrived at Calgary on their journey northwards. The goods and personal effects of this party filled 20 box cars. Of live stock alone they had 175 horses, 15 cows and 2,000 head of poultry. Another class of settler has arrived at Peers, 110 miles west of Edmonton, where no fewer than 200 German farmers have taken up land. These are from good farming families and brought with them a large amount of capital.

Then in South Western Saskatchewan, there are large numbers settling, these from the United States predominating, while in the northern and central portions of all these provinces, the settlement of new people is going on steadily. Early in April, Peter Goertz arrived in Cardiff after a six-day journey from McPherson, Kansas. Mr. Goertz who had purchased land here was in charge of a party of 33 people from the same part of Kansas and they came through with a special train which included all their stock and implements. The equipment was all Rock Island cars, and was the first full immigrant train ever sent out by that railroad. The farms purchased by the members of the party are amongst the best in the district.

When the Panama exposition opens next year any of the three transcontinental lines in Canada will make convenient means of transport for those going to visit, and in doing so agricultural districts of Western Canada can be seen, and ocular demonstration given those who have heard but not before seen, of that which has attracted so many hundreds of thousands of American settlers.—Advertiser.

The Inference. "Are you a policeman?" asked one paying guest of another at a charity picnic dinner.

"No," said the other. "Why do you ask?"

"Merely, that I noticed," said the first speaker, glancing at the section of fried chicken in the other's fingers, "that you are pulling a tough joint."

Wants to See Things. "Poor old Jaggsby is off the water wagon again."

"I can't help admiring his frankness, though."

"He doesn't try to excuse himself?"

"No. He merely says he prefers a scenic route."—Baltimore Sun.

The Button Doctor. During the short seven years of her life, little Florence Louise had become duly impressed with the prevalence of specialists in the medical profession.

One day, after returning from a visit to a small playmate, she calmly announced:

"Rena swallowed a button."

"Are you worried about her?" she was asked.

"Oh, she will get along all right," Florence Louise complacently replied. "They sent for a regular button doctor."—Judge.

Limited Intentions. "How do you propose to support my daughter, sir?"

"I didn't propose to her to support her at all. I only proposed to her to marry me."—Reheboth Sunday Herald.

Proving the Punch. Skids—You think his story has a real punch to it?

Skittles—Sure thing! You ought to have seen the way it put me to sleep.—Puck.

Disasters. "My baldness dates from that terrible year."

"Oh, yes! 1870."

—THE—UNITED STATES CREAM SEPARATOR

Almost Impossible to Wear One Out

Its gears and bearings are made of high-grade phosphor bronze, steel and iron—the kind that lasts for years.

All the gears are of medium size. Even the pinion gears are fully two inches in diameter. Consequently they make less than half as many revolutions and are subject to about one-third the wear of the one inch pinion gears in other separators.

Its gears and bearings are entirely enclosed. Dirt, dust and grit cannot get at them to grind them out.

Enclosed parts are more thoroughly oiled. U. S. Separator gears and bearings run continuously in a spray of fresh oil, automatically supplied. (Note spray in picture.)

The bowl parts are of tough rustless Nickel Silver. They wear longer and the bowl does not get out of balance as with light tinned steel devices.

We have these U. S. Separators on our floor where you can examine them and see for yourself.

SYNOPSIS.

Joseph Hayward, an ensign in the United States army, on his way to Fort Harmer, meets Simon Girty, a renegade whose name has been connected with all manner of atrocities, also headed for Fort Harmer, with a message from the British general, Hamilton. Hayward guides him to the fort. At General Harmer's headquarters Hayward meets Rene D'Auway, who professes to recognize him, although he has no recollection of ever having seen her before. Hayward volunteers to carry a message for Harmer to Sandusky, where Hamilton is stationed. The renegade Indian tribes are ready for war and are only held back by the refusal of the friendly Wyandots to join. The latter are demanding the return of Wap-tah-tah, a religious teacher, whom they believe to be a prisoner. Hayward's mission is to assure the Wyandots that the man is not held by the soldiers. Rene asks Hayward to let her accompany him. She tells him that she is a quarter-blood Wyandot and a missionary among the Indians. She has been in search of her father. She insists that she has seen Hayward before, but in a British uniform. Hayward uses a request and starts for the north accompanied by a scout named Brady and a private soldier. They come on the trail of a war party and to escape from the Indians take shelter in a hut on an island. Hayward finds a murdered man in the hut. It proves to be Raoul D'Auway, a former French officer who is called by the Wyandots "white chief." Rene appears and Hayward is puzzled by her insistence that they have met before. Rene recognizes the murdered man as her father, who was known among the Indians as Wap-tah-tah. Brady reports seeing a band of marauding Indians in the vicinity and with them Simon Girty. Brady's evidence convinces the girl that there is a British officer by the name of Hayward, who resembles the American. They find escape from the island cut off. Reconnoitering around the cabin at night Hayward discovers a white man in a British uniform and leaves him for dead after a desperate fight. The Indians capture the cabin after a hard struggle in which Hayward is wounded. Rene saves Hayward from death at the hands of the savages and conceals him in the cellar of the cabin. Hayward discovers a half-breed negro in the cellar. They engage in a fierce fight which ends when the negro accidentally butts his brains out against the low roof of the cellar.

CHAPTER XV—Continued.

I saw him now clearly, and he must have got his first fair glimpse of me, for he stared at my face in startled surprise that, for the moment, held him dumb. It was like looking at my own reflection in a glass—the eyes, the hair, the nose, the contour of the face, the massive figure, all alike the counterpart of my own. I would not have believed, except for the witness of my own eyes, that such similarity was possible. Even though fortified with sudden impression that this was the man for whom mademoiselle had mistaken me, the actual resemblance was so startling, as to leave me voiceless. We would have passed for each other anywhere, and yet as I stared at him, meeting his eyes fairly, I perceived a difference, faint, elusive, yet noticeable enough—his skin showed marks of dissipation; there was a peculiar insolent sneer to his mouth, and he must be older than I by five years. My mind seemed to grip all this in a flash, before his voice broke the silence.

"Odds life, man! and what's this!" he roared. "Some play acting, or a dream? Never before did I know I was born a twin. Who are you?"

The look on his face, as if he half suspected he saw a ghost, made me smile.

"My name is Hayward—Joseph Hayward."

He gasped for breath, his eyes fairly protruding, as he staggered to his feet.

"What! Say that again!"

I had full control of myself now, rather enjoying his consternation.

"I am Joseph Hayward," I answered with grave deliberation. "An ensign in the United States army, and a native of Maryland."

"Well, I am hanged! Say; do you know that's my name also? Is this some shabby joke?"

There was a gleam of anger in his eyes, a threat, I leaned on my rifle, and looked him in the face.

"I was better prepared for this meeting than you," I said, "for I happen to know you are here. It's an odd thing, our resemblance, and the similarity of names, but I was told about you some time ago."

"By whom?"

"Mademoiselle D'Auway."

"Who? I never met—oh, her!" with a quick laugh, "you mean the Wyandot missionary?"

"I mean the daughter of Captain D'Auway," I returned with some sternness. "The man the Indians call 'Wap-tah-tah.' She mistook me for you."

"And was not very nice about it I imagine—the little vixen will scarce give me a word."

"Possibly with reason."

"She told you so? She might be in better business than advertising my delinquencies among enemies. The girl has just enough white blood in her to make her act the fool."

of you there at the entrance, and sang out, I don't even feel certain who I am, let alone what I may have been up to."

"But surely you recall something."

"Well," puzzled, "not much. See here, I'm willing enough to tell you all I know. Let's sit down; my head spins around like a top."

CHAPTER XVI.

I held a prisoner.

He dropped back against the wall, but much of my old strength had returned, and I remained standing, leaning on my rifle. The man continued to stare up at me as if half doubting his own eyesight.

"Well," I said at last, growing tired of his silence. "You have my story—or, at least, a good part of it—and now it would seem the proper time for me to hear yours. Once we understand each other we will know better how to proceed."

He pressed his hands against his head in an endeavor to think.

"I was in there, unconscious and alone."

"No, not alone; there was a yellow-faced negro with you—a French mongrel, if I know the breed. He's there yet—dead; and I want to know the story."

"Oh, ay! I begin to get the straight of this at last," and his face brightened. "Not that it is altogether clear, but you furnish a clue; perhaps if we put the ends together we may make a tale. A French negro, hey! 'T would likely be the Kaskaskia half-breed, a treacherous whistled dog. But how ever did he come to be here? Ay! I have it! The fellow must have trailed me from the council at Sandusky, suspecting I sought D'Auway; there was hate between them."

"Then 't is likely he killed the man."

"No doubt of it, if he really be killed. Listen to what I know; in truth it is not much other than rumor; D'Auway had the fellow lashed by Wyandot squaws for some dirty trick, and Picaut—that's his name—swore vengeance. Saint Denis! That was a year ago, and Picaut has ever since been in his own country. 'T was the coming of war that brought him back. I thought I saw him at Sandusky as we held council there, but his presence was nothing to me."

"He had no quarrel with you, then?"

"No; I saw him whipped; he was like a snarling cur. Listen, and I'll tell all I know. I am not proud of my job, understand, but out here in the wilderness, we work under a double set of orders—one open and above board, the other secret. 'T is poor work for a soldier, but there's no help for it, except to resign, and then some one else would turn the trick. You know the game we play—our countries at peace, this land formally surrendered to you Americans, and yet there comes to us—to Hamilton—private instructions to retard settlement, and restrain our military posts. Lord knows what the ministry means, what they hope to gain by delay; we are only peasants in the game being played, yet what England says, we do. Yet how? There is only one weapon left to our hands—the savages. We cannot fight you openly, much as we might prefer, but if we can keep the Indian tribes hostile, we can hold back your settlements to the Ohio, until England can act openly. You know all this?"

"Yes," I acknowledged. "The policy is clear enough."

"And it was easily enough carried out," he went on, "but for the Wyandots. We were hand in glove with the tribes, and they hated the Americans. Our emissaries were in all their villages, and made the chiefs presents and promises. Raiding parties of young warriors swept through the forests clear to the Ohio, doing much damage, and driving the whites to their forts. But we needed open war, the alliance of all the tribes, and we were blocked in this—the Wyandots refused. I was sent there, and when I failed, Hamilton went himself, but with no better success. You know the reason?"

"I shook my head, afraid to interrupt for fear he might remember how convicting such a confession was, and refuse to continue. But apparently the man failed to conceive the depravity of his acts."

"The influence of D'Auway—ay! and that daughter of his, Saint Denis, but I believe she was the worst of the two. I actually made love to the witch hoping this to win her over to our side. I might have married her—who knows?" shrugging his shoulders, "but she certainly wouldn't listen to anything else. Lord, the wench was proud as Lucifer; ay! and laughed in my face, and mocked me, until even Hamilton had to grin, when I told him the story. 'T was then I made up my mind to win in spite of her."

"No, no! There was but one way of doing that, and it chances I possess a dialke for Indian blood. I mean the Wyandots to our scheme. 'T was Hamilton's plan, that I suggest to her was a visit to the Wabash tribes, for she was ready for any sacrifice to spread her faith among the red-skins. Ay! and by good luck the scheme worked."

"That then was what took her south?" I asked, deeply interested.

"Yes; I fixed up a fine story, and the priest gave her his blessing. Oh, it was safe enough; no Indian would dare lay hand on her in evil."

"The rest is short enough, but the girl's actions puzzle me. Once we were rid of her, the father had to be attended to. 'T was no easy task, for D'Auway was a chief, and quick to quarrel. 'T is small odds now how the trick was played, but I knew of this cabin, and once here I held him prisoner, while Hamilton used his disappearance as a whip to drive the Wyandots to war."

"He spread the rumor then that D'Auway was captured or killed by Americans, knowing what had occurred?"

"Partly that," with a chuckle. "He knew not where the man was, only that I had him safe."

"And by means of this lie you deliberately plotted to ravage the frontier with Indian outrage," I exclaimed indignantly.

"Nay, not so fast friend," his eyes hardened with anger. "'T was war; we but obeyed the orders that came from England; made use of the weapons at hand."

"I care nothing for the excuse. There was no war, and it was murder. Don't call me friend! I am no friend of yours. Though you may be of my own blood, of my own name, the act was murder—foul, treacherous murder. Yes! I wish I had left you to rot there in that hole."

He was on his feet, his face flaming with passion, but I flung forward my rifle.

"Ay! I mean it, Joseph Hayward, if that be your name," I went on, coldly enough now. "And I would say the same to Hamilton if he were here. Stand where you are, or I will kill you as I would a mad cur. Only a fiend would boast of such an act of treachery. Now go on, and tell me the rest. I want no lie, but the truth—how did D'Auway meet his death?"

He stood glaring at me over the rifle barrel, his hands gripping in desire, yet knowing well that any hostile movement meant death.

"Hanged if I'll tell you!"

"Then you die where you are, you dog," and I meant it. "You have said enough already to condemn you. I believe you killed D'Auway."

"I did not," he burst forth. "I did not even know he was dead. I am not afraid of you, or your threats, but I will tell you what occurred here. I'm ready enough, as you will discover yet, to answer for whatever I do, but I am not going to bear the blame for the dastard act of another. I was friendly enough with D'Auway, even if I did seek to trick him in this matter. There was no intent to take his life."

"Well then, go on."

"I held him prisoner here," he said sulkily, "although there was no violence or threat. The man did not even realize he was under guard, yet I saw to it that he retained no arms; and was never out of my sight. 'T was my orders to hold him quiet until I had message from Hamilton. He suspected nothing, and there was no trouble; not so much as a word of controversy between us. Once a day I made circuit of the island to assure myself we were alone. Occasionally he went with me, but the last time I left him in the cabin asleep. It was dusk when I returned; I had seen nothing suspicious, and was careless. I remember approaching the rear door, without thought of danger. I must have passed the opening of the cave here, when suddenly I was struck down from behind. I saw nothing, heard nothing of my assailant. When I returned to consciousness I was lying here. That is all."

"'T would be Picaut who struck you?"

"Beyond doubt, and then, thinking me dead, dragged me into this hole. Yet how came we both in here?"

"We can only guess at the rest. My theory would be that the negro was interrupted by our arrival at the cabin."

He discovered the entrance to the tunnel, and dragged you into it, thinking to escape himself. To make sure you were crept into the cabin, and recovered your jacket—you left it there, didn't you?"

"Ay! It was a warm night."

"The fellow must have seen something that frightened him, that drove him into hiding. Later I stood there in the cave mouth, looking about. Perhaps it was then he crawled into the tunnel, and replaced the door. Ah, I have it—he did that later when he recognized the voice of mademoiselle."

"Of who? Mademoiselle?"

"Mademoiselle D'Auway; she joined me as I stood there. Her presence would account for his fear."

He leaned forward, as if endeavoring to decipher my face.

"Are you telling me truth?" he asked hoarsely. "Is that girl here? What could have brought her to this place? What does she suspect? What does she know?"

"That I cannot tell, except that she believes you killed her father; the discovery of your coat convinced her of that. As to how she came here—she traveled with Girty from Fort Harmer, seeking to reach the Wyandots in advance of me. She came to the cabin alone, hoping to find her father, but instead found us in possession, and D'Auway's dead body. It was she who thrust me into the tunnel, and saved my life."

"And now, man, where is she?"

"With those Indians who attacked us, and burned the cabin—she may be a prisoner."

He laughed uneasily, shifting his position.

"No fear of that. She is a wonder worker with these savages; they are afraid of her; they think her cross will work miracles. Saint Denis! I would rather have her with me than all the chiefs."

"Could she save a man from the torture, the stake?"

"She has done it; ay! I saw it done, and it took some courage. But she might fall with these renegades. Who is the man?"

"Brady; the scout who accompanied me."

"I know of the fellow; she would have small chance of saving him." He paused, then asked suddenly: "What about me? Am I a prisoner, or free to go? Do you absolve me of murder?"

"Of killing D'Auway—yes. But your hands are bloody enough without that crime."

"Then I may go my way?"

"To more treachery? To those Indians to report my presence here?"

"No, I swear."

"I accept no pledge from you. You say 't is already war on the border; then I will act accordingly. We will wait here until she comes."

"She! Not Mademoiselle D'Auway."

"Yes," I answered tersely. "Mademoiselle D'Auway."

CHAPTER XVII.

An Effort to Save Brady.

The night had closed down without, but the remnants of fire still eating away the dry logs of the cabin, yielded a red tinge to the interior of the cellar. It was a spectral, very light, brightening as some breeze fanned the flames, and then as suddenly lapsing into dimness. Yet sufficient glow found way down the entrance to enable me to see my prisoner, and observe his movements.

A descending figure blotted out the red glare of the entrance. We both stared upward unable to decide who the visitor might be; I could perceive merely a dim, indistinct outline. The smudge of a figure descended quietly, yet with evident confidence that the dark cellar was deserted. I attempted to step back, so as not to be between the two, but something rattled under my foot, sounding loud in the silence. The intruder stopped instantly, drawing a quick breath of surprise.

"Who is here? Answer!" There was the sharp click of a gun lock; the words were French, the voice unmistakable.

"Hayward, mademoiselle."

She laughed in sudden relief. "Peste! You startled me! How came you out here, monsieur?"

"The smoke of the burning cabin drove me out; else I should have suffocated. I burst open the door."

"Burst it open!" incredulously. "Then it was not barred? Some one had entered from this end?"

"So I discovered, mademoiselle; one of them is here with me—an old acquaintance of yours."

"Of mine?"

"Ay! Step out into the cave so the light can find entrance; now, do you know the man?"

Bit of First Aid.

In cases of shock and collapse it may be advisable in certain cases where collapse is imminent to administer a little stimulant in the shape of brandy and water, but it has to be noted that the use of alcohol under such circumstances must be carefully carried out, inasmuch as in certain cases (as in apoplexy, for example) the administration of alcohol is calculated to prove highly injurious.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

"It Ain't a Menagerie; Pull Down the Fence!"

WASHINGTON.—From an obscure corner of the congressional directory and a not overly well-known portion of the state of Indiana, steps into the limelight, one Henry A. Barnhart, member of congress from the Thirtieth district of the Hoosier state, and leader of a constituency of 358,674 souls.

From May 1, 1914, until time shall be no more, the Indiana congressman will be canonized on the pages of fame as the man who discovered that wild animals no longer roam the granolithic sidewalks of the District of Columbia, and the man who accordingly introduced a resolution in congress asking that Secretary Lane of the interior department pull down the high picket fence that surrounds his bailiwick.

With a flowing wealth of legislative parlance, including sonorous and euphonic phrases, the "gentleman from Indiana" introduced his resolution in the house the other day.

It seems that at some time or other, the picket fence surrounding the Department of the Interior building, on the block bounded by Seventh, Ninth, F and G streets northwest, has held the attention of the Indiana congressman.

Lifting one hand majestically toward the skylight, Mr. Barnhart turned to the house, which waited with bated breath.

"Mr. Speaker," he announced, "this is my resolution: 'Whereas, wild animals no longer infest the business district of the national capital and horses, cattle and hogs are no longer permitted to roam at large thereon, and

"Whereas, ours is a nation of civilized people without need of restraint by barrier of high fences; therefore, be it

Tests Show the Value of Fresh Air Schools

THAT school children who are taught in fresh-air classrooms advance more rapidly in their studies and make greater improvement in weight and strength than children in regular classrooms is a conclusion demonstrated by Frank H. Mann of New York before the sociological section of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis.

The speaker reported on a series of experiments carried on jointly by the New York committee on the prevention of tuberculosis and the board of education, in which three groups of children were studied to note the effect of fresh air upon them.

In one group the children were placed in fresh-air classrooms and were fed during school hours with milk and crackers morning and afternoon; in the second group the children were left in the ordinary classroom under regular conditions. Every effort was made to eliminate or equalize in the comparison such variable factors as age, home conditions, physical condition, school conditions, nativity, etc. The two groups of children in the fresh-air classes were all undernourished and anemic at admission.

The results of this experiment, extending from September to June, showed that all of the poorly nourished and anemic children in the fresh-air classes gained in weight, red corpuscles in the blood, general nutrition and physical tone. The gains were made for the most part independently of the home environment and of the financial conditions of the children's family, suggesting that the association between poverty and malnutrition in school children is not so close as has been commonly assumed, and that cases of extreme poverty with lack of necessary food at home are not nearly so prevalent as has been frequently stated.

It was also demonstrated that, even without school feeding, fresh-air classes can be run with advantage to the children of poor families, although the greatest benefit was obtained where extra feeding of children was employed.

Further, he shall not sell this opium, cocaine, heroin or morphine except in pursuance of a written order on a form to be issued in blank for that purpose by the commissioner of internal revenue of the United States years by the dealer so that it may be accessible for inspection by federal and state officials. The purchaser of these drugs must keep a duplicate of the form for similar inspection.

In other words, if a citizen is addicted to the use of opium or cocaine, and purchases either of these drugs, he must be on public record as a drug fiend and the dealer on record as a person who is willing to sell to the unfortunates. The law will make certain exceptions in the use of these drugs for purely medicinal purposes when procured on a written prescription from a physician.

"Business" Is Now Dead for Capital's Beggars

"PANHANDLERS" who hang out under the trees along Pennsylvania avenue a few blocks from the treasury have come to the conclusion that "business" here is "dead." The "first aid" ticket of the Associated Charities is blamed by the beggars. The nickels and dimes obtained from citizens of prosperous appearance during the old rich years have gone. Instead the "panhandler" now is given a "first aid" ticket.

When somebody devised the ticket plan packages of the tickets, done up like mileage books, were issued to the business and professional men of Washington.

The "first aid" ticket is the printed application of a citizen for help on behalf of some individual who is supposed to need it. So far the plan has worked well, hence the complaint of the beggars that "business" is poor.

There was a time in Washington when an alert panhandler could net $4 to $6 on any pleasant summer evening—all in money, mostly nickels and dimes. But now times have changed. Within the past few weeks Washington has been flooded with "first aid" tickets and the tired business man, and goes his way rejoicing.

The officials of the Associated Charities are pleased with the plan. They say that a man really needing help will come to them, get what he requires and subject his case to the investigation of the charity workers. If he's a professional he wants cash and cash only and he never comes near.

810 East Elm St., Streator, Ill.—"A running sore broke out above my right eye, which spread over my entire face. It started as a small pimple. I scratched it open and the contents of this small pimple ran down my face. Wherever this ran a new sore appeared. They itched and burned terribly; I couldn't touch my face it burned so. It disfigured my face terribly and I couldn't be seen for everyone was afraid of it. It looked like a disease of some kind; it was all red and a heavy white crust on it. Everybody kept out of my way, afraid it would spread. I lost rest at night and I couldn't bear to have anything touch my face, not even the pillow. I had to lie on the back of the head. ## REMARKABLE CASE of Mrs. HAM

Declares Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Saved Her Life and Sanity.

Shamrock, Mo.—"I feel it my duty to tell the public the condition of my health before using your medicine. I had falling, inflammation, and congestion, female weakness, pains in both sides, backaches and bearing down pains, was short of memory, nervous, impatient, passed sleepless nights, and had neither strength nor energy. There was always a fear and dread in my mind. I had cold, nervous, weak spells, hot flashes over my body. I had a place in my right side that was so sore that I could hardly bear the weight of my clothes. I tried medicines and doctors, but they did me little good, and I never expected to get out again. I got Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier, and I certainly would have been in grave or in an asylum if your medicines had not saved me. But now I can work all day, sleep well at night, eat anything I want, have no hot flashes or weak, nervous spells. All pains, aches, fears and dreads are gone, my house, children and husband are no longer neglected, as I am almost entirely free of the bad symptoms I had before taking your remedies, and all is pleasure and happiness in my home."

Sizing Up Louie.

There recently came to a fashionable shoe shop in Chicago a daughter of a man whose wealth has been acquired within very recent years. The young woman was disposed to patronize the clerk, and rejected a number of "classy" slippers he produced for her approval. Finally she said:

"I think, perhaps, I shall take these two pairs. But Louis XV heels are too high for me. Give me a size lower—or, stay—perhaps Louis XIII will be high enough."—Harper's.

Queen Mary is a poor conversationalist. On some one being brought up to her it is said she will begin to talk with remarkable felicity, setting the other at ease and delighting him. Then, all of a sudden, she suddenly ceases, an acute silence supervenes and the other does not know whether to break the pause or slip away. The fact is the queen talks well by dint of concentration; this does not always last until the end of the conversation, and once the thread is broken she grows abstracted, thinking of something else.

Her Grandfather and His S.E. Kiser

JANET ROLFE'S dark eyes blazed with sudden anger. A deep flush overspread her cheeks and Harley Worthington realized at once that he had made a blunder.

They had known each other less than a month, but the few weeks that had passed since their first meeting had not been wasted by them. Daily they had either ridden their horses side by side or raced up and down the hills in Worthington's roadster, and by clever management upon the part of somebody they found themselves together every evening. Harley Worthington's friends looked on with much concern. He had neglected his work and managed to get himself so deeply in love that to him nothing seemed worth while if Janet happened to be where he could not see or hear her.

But she had a reputation! No, no! She was not a woman with a past—not that. She was merely a flirt—at least that was a common supposition among those who knew her. There were certain heart-broken men wandering upon the face of the earth and vowing that they could never forgive her. She may not have been to blame for their sorrowful plight. If they had insisted on falling in love with her that certainly did not place her under an obligation to return their love. At least that was the opinion she held, and she may have been right.

And now Harley Worthington was well started upon the way that must lead to madness. His sister-in-law had warned him early.

"Don't do it, Harley," Elizabeth Worthington had begged. "I know she is the prettiest girl in the world, and I know she has no intention of breaking your heart. She is just anxious to have a good time. She probably likes to be with you, and she may admire you—but, Harley, stop where you are. I'm talking to you as you ought to be talked to, not because I enjoy it, but because it's my duty."

I like you too well to stand aside without protesting while you are getting ready to have your heart broken."

But when did a man ever listen to his sister-in-law if a beautiful girl happened to be beckoning to him?

One day when they had ridden out beyond the limits of the city and into the pleasant countryside they halted their horses beneath a wild crabapple tree at the edge of a cemetery. While Harley was breaking off a blossoming bough Janet gazed curiously at a number of gravestones which were set in even rows and which all seemed to be exactly alike.

"Tomorrow is Decoration day, isn't it?" she asked.

"Yes. Tomorrow all those graves will be covered with flowers."

"I ought to be at home tomorrow," she said, with a little sigh. "There is a grave in the South that I have always decorated. My grandfather was in the Civil war."

"And my grandfather's grave is there," he answered. "It is the third in the second row from the right. I suppose your grandfather was in the Confederate army?"

"Yes."

"Well, there were good men on that side, too."

"The best men that ever lived were on that side."

"I can't agree with you there. Some of the best men that ever lived were on both sides."

"The war would never have ended as it did if the South could have put as many men in the field as the North did. You know that very well."

"Let us not get into an argument about that question now. The war is all over. We can both be proud of our ancestors who took part in it. I am ready to admit that your grandfather was brave and high-minded. He fought for what he thought was right. If he was mistaken it was unfortunate, but it does not lessen his heroism in the least. I honor him for doing what he considered his duty."

"Oh, please don't say any more about that. You northern people are always patronizing us by telling us how brave and how noble you consider our soldiers to have been. It is merely another way of telling us that you are ready to forgive us for being crushed. I have heard it so often that I hate it."

They rode on for a mile or two in silence. Suddenly Janet turned her horse, saying:

"Let us go back. I don't want to ride any more today."

"I'm sorry we came out this way," Harley replied. "There are some blossoms. May I get some of them for you?"

"Leave them where they are," she answered. "I shall never like crabapple blossoms again."

He experienced a feeling that he had never been conscious of before. It seemed to him that the glory of the day had suddenly vanished. He knew at that moment that he could never be happy again without her.

"If I have said anything I ought not to have said, please forgive me," he begged. "Promise me that you will not go away. Janet, I love you. Can't you see that I do?"

"And I hate you," she answered. "I never want to see you again. Will you please ride on? I prefer to return alone."

Harley Worthington passed a sleepless night, and Memorial day found him in the depths of hopelessness. He had no desire to participate in any of the usual ceremonies. Shutting himself in his room, he refused to see anyone or to seek forgetfulness in diversion. He could think of nothing but Janet Rolfe and he conjured up a thousand fancies concerning her, all of them leading to the conclusion that she had merely availed herself of the first excuse that presented itself to get rid of him.

At last his hopelessness turned to anger, and late in the afternoon he got his horse. He had no idea, as he galloped along, where he was going. He did not care.

The sun was low in the west when he drew up beneath the crabapple tree beside the cemetery where he and Janet had paused the day before. A horse was tethered there. Suddenly he realized that it was the horse Janet had been in the habit of riding. He looked into the cemetery at the freshly decorated graves, and there he saw her, standing beside the third in the second row from the right. She was in the act of placing a wreath upon it.

In a moment he was at her side.

"Janet," he said, taking her in his arms, "you are not going away?"

"No, dear," she replied, "not until you and I go away together."

They started back toward the city. When they reached the place where the road branched Harley asked:

"Shall we part here again?"

"I think," she answered, "the North and the South can trust themselves to travel together on one road, after this."

HOPE OF THE NATION IS IN ITS YOUTH

By THE RIGHT REVEREND BISHOP SAMUEL FALLOWS.

IN OUR common schools we have not only the nurseries, but the real West Points and Fort Leavenworths of the Republic. From there is to come the ever-flowing stream of our fresh young soldiery, who shall maintain the integrity and glory of the nation.

In more than 250,000 buildings they gather—in the rude log hut or primitive "shack" of the remote frontier and in the costly and commodious structures which we rear in the crowded city. Many thousands of officers of the Field and Staff and Line marshal and guide day by day 16,000,000 of these juvenile warriors—the infantry, cavalry and artillery of our homes.

It is upon the intelligence and morality and loyalty of the American citizen that the institutions of our country rest—"broad-based upon the people's will." Give our common school system to Mexico. Educate their children as we are training ours. Break up their great landed estates into small farms and let the common people own and till them, and barbarous Mexico would be wiped from the map of the world.

Surrender

Ground at ## Appomattox

AN American must recall brave memories as he looks upon the red clay fields and pine-grown land where the Army of Northern Virginia laid down its arms, or stands on the spot where the terms of surrender were agreed upon and signed. There must come to his memory these words of Grant: "I regard it as my duty to shift from myself the responsibility of any further effusion of blood by asking of you the surrender of that portion of the Confederate states army known as the Army of Northern Virginia." Also there comes to mind these words of Lee: "After four years' arduous struggle the Army of Northern Virginia has been compelled to yield to overwhelming numbers and resources."

General Grant in Wartime.

It is especially impressive to visit the surrender ground of Appomattox upon the anniversary of the events which gave to Appomattox everlasting significance. Today it is a ruined hamlet where a few drowsy persons dwell. The courthouse was burned 15 years ago, and around the desolated court square, cumbered with ashes, charred plaster and shattered bricks, a half dozen tottering dwellings cling. Some are tenanted, but others are too near collapse for even this faint distinction.

The "surrender house," the home of William McLean—in the parlor of which Grant and Lee met, is no more

Gen. Robert E. Lee.

Gen. Robert E. Lee.

The site and garden of this house are heaped with piles of brick and rotting lumber, which once were the house. About 1892 the McLean house was taken down for the purpose of removal to and reconstruction at the Columbian exposition at Chicago, but the execution of this plan was carried no further than the demolition of the house.

There were two Appomattox towns in 1865. It was at Appomattox Station on the line of railway between Petersburg and Lynchburg that Sheridan's cavalry captured a train of supplies from Lynchburg intended for Lee's army. These supplies stood between Lee's men and starvation. Appomattox Court House—the county seat of Appomattox today—was three miles northward. Today Appomattox Court House occupies the site of Appomattox Station and is a brick village. Old Appomattox Court House—the Appomattox of history, the Appomattox where the expiring hopes of the South were crushed—this is the hopeless village told of.

Much of the ground occupied by the armies is now covered with tall, thick pines. In a particularly dark stretch of pines the traveler comes upon the North Carolina monument, the most—in fact, the only—imposing marker on the fields of Appomattox. The inscription on this monument, which gives glorious praise to the soldiers of North Carolina, has caused tense discussion. The accuracy of the statements cut on the stone has been denied.

CORRESPONDENCE.

YPSILANTI—Prof. S. B. Laird will deliver the Decoration day address in Ypsilanti next Saturday.GRASS LAKE—Considerable loss was sustained Sunday evening at Wolf lake in a fire which destroyed barns and a chicken coop containing a number of fowl. The blaze was at the Millens, and was discovered about 8:30.JACKSON—Mrs. George M. Doty left her ten-months-old son in front of a store here, and returning soon after found the child's clothing in flames. Prompt work saved him, although the fire reached the flesh. A lighted cigarette had been tossed into the child's cab.GRASS LAKE—The Michigan Central has discontinued the telegraph service at the station here. Arthur Collins, for fourteen years a most efficient and capable operator, by this step loses his job unless the company places him elsewhere. This community now is deprived of telegraph conveniences.BRIGHTON—The affairs of the National Food Products Company are now in the hands of a receiver and a settlement will have to be made with its creditors as soon as the law will allow. While many who have claims against the company, are criticizing this move, it is sanctioned by the heaviest creditors.—Argus.ADDISON—Dogs did considerable damage to the flock of sheep owned by John Sales east of Round Lake last week. Mr. Sales discovered Saturday that havoc had been raised, ten of the ewes being badly bitten and torn. Further investigation revealed nine dead sheep and two dead lambs, some were found in ponds where they had been pursued by the vicious dogs.—Courier.MANCHESTER—So much poor butter has been marketed that our merchants find it difficult to find a place to dispose of any dairy butter, however good it may be. Creamery butter, because of its uniformity, is in demand. Jackson has been our best market for dairy butter but is becoming difficult to dispose of it there even at a lower price than our merchants pay for it, is what we are told by our merchants.—Enterprise.JACKSON—A man giving the name of Robert Schmitt, who was arrested here Sunday night charged with carrying concealed weapons, has confessed to robbing a hotel on Woodward avenue, Detroit, February 21, last of jewelry, and another residence at Algonac more recently. On his person was found several pieces of jewelry, including a gold ring set with 16 pearls and bearing the inscription, "Thomas Saltmarsh, died February 4, 1923." Schmitt threw away a watch and a ring when arrested. The police later recovered the watch but not the ring. Schmitt carried a 44-caliber revolver.JACKSON—Any poor man who walks into the German Evangelical church next Sunday morning with overalls on will be given $1, provided he is the first poor man to make his appearance in such attire. The second poor man dressed after this manner will receive 50 cents from the pastor, Rev. A. Siegenthaler. Some time ago Mr. Siegenthaler was riding on a street car in Minneapolis. A street car man said as the car passed a fashionable church, "We poor devils are not wanted in there." Mr.
Siegenthaler says: "The poor people are welcome in our church and I am making this offer to prove it. The man who has nothing to wear but overalls and similarly poor clothes is just as welcome at our church as anyone else. If no one else will sit with the overall-clad visitor, I will."—

REACHING THE SPOT

It Has Been Done, So Scores of Chelsea Citizens Say.To get rid of an aching back,
The tired-out feelings,
You must reach the spot—get at the cause.In many cases 'tis the kidneys.
Doan's Kidney Pills are for weak kidneys.Chelsea citizens testify.
John Kelly, W. Middle St., Chelsea, Mich., says: "Hard work started my kidney trouble. The kidney secretions became irregular and two frequent in passage. I also suffered from rheumatic pains in my back and was stiff and sore. Mornings I felt all tired out, and I was dizzy and nervous. I tried different remedies but was not helped until I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills. They relieved me of the trouble from my back and kidneys. I am glad to confirm the public statement I gave praising them some time ago."Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't

For the New Home

A Modern Gas Lighting and Cooking System

A modern gas lighting and cooking system in country homes, new or old, contributes more than any other one thing to the joy, happiness, comfort and safety of the entire family.The Pilot Lighting Plant brings this service to country homes everywhere.The beautiful, bright, clean light of acetylene fills the evening hours with comfort and cheer—Decorative, modern, city-like gas fixtures, in copper or brass, ornament the entire home.Acetylene lights eliminate forever the Daily Grind of filling, cleaning and carrying oil lamps about the house.Cooking with Acetylene gives mother the comfort of a cool kitchen in summer. It cuts the kitchen work in half—the disagreeable work of fussing over a broiling hot stove—and cleaning up the dirt and ashes afterward.Permanent iron pipes remove the hazard of many individual kerosene lamps—easily tipped over or upset.Instantaneous ignitors remove the hazard of matches—
For father, big bright barn lights, securely fastened to iron pipes and enclosed in strong, durable globes, make his work easier, quicker and pleasanter. They do away entirely with lamps, lanterns and matches in the barns and outbuildings.All these advantages and conveniences are today available for any home, old or new, in the country, by the simple installation of a Pilot Lighting Plant.

Acetylene—Made a New Way

The Pilot is a simple, compact, perfectly constructed gas machine. Its record for efficiency, safety and satisfactory service is unsurpassed by any other lighting device in the world.Thousands are in use today. One or more in nearly every community. And wherever the Pilot is known andused it is acknowledged to be the one perfect lighting plant for country homes.Insurance authorities permit its installation in insured property without increase in insurance rates.The United States Government uses the Pilot for lighting many of its Indian Schools and other public buildings.With a Pilot Lighting Plant, house and barns piped, fixtures hung, and the cooking appliance in place, you are ready to enjoy the comfort and convenience that the city home has enjoyed for upwards of 80 years.This entire installation work can be done in a couple of days without disturbance or inconvenience.And when it is completed you have a permanent improvement to your property.

A Permanent Improvement

So the installation of a Pilot Lighting Plant is not an expense but an investment, paying daily dividends in added comfort, happiness and safety to your entire family.If you lived in the City—if you could take your house just as it stands today and transport it bodily to any large town—you'd immediately make provision for the greatest of City conveniences—good light and gas cooking. This is a convenience everybody wants. This would be your first thought.Today these conveniences are brought right out to the farm home.
Within the reach of everyone who installs the Pilot Lighting Plant which supplies a better light than City home enjoys and at lower cost.
This service has been installed in more than 250,000 country homes and thousands more are taking advantage of it every year.
