BACCALAUREATE ADDRESS.

The Baccalaureate sermon for the senior class of '14 of the Chelsea high school was delivered by Rev. A. A. Schoen in the M. E. church last Sunday evening. The auditorium was filled to its capacity. The address was masterly, and was both instructive and interesting. The invocation was given by Rev. C. J. Dole, the scripture lesson and benediction were by Rev. A. W. Fuller and Rev. J. W. Campbell introduced the speaker. A special musical program was rendered.

JUNIOR RECEPTION.

The Juniors gave the Senior class a rousing reception at the Welfare building on Tuesday evening. The room was handsomely decorated with American flags, the senior class colors, flowers and ferns. Scenes from "The Tempest" by Shakespeare, were given by five members of the junior class, being the first number on the program. The characters were portrayed by Leon Mohrlock, Esther Chandler, Evert Benton, Leon Shutes, George Naekel and Mark Hendry. The next and probably the most interesting feature was the menu, which occupied the steadfast attention of all in attendance. Miss Leona M. Belsler acted as toastmistress. The address of welcome was delivered by Miss Mildred Greening. "The Future" was the subject handled by Supt. Hendry, and "The Juniors" was discussed by Donald Bacon. A fine musical program was carried out. Following the feast and speech-making a dance was given.

THE GRADUATING EXERCISES.

The annual graduating exercises of the class of '14 of the Chelsea high school were held in the M. E. church Wednesday evening. The edifice was filled to its utmost capacity by the friends, relatives and schoolmates of the twenty young ladies and gentlemen who received their diplomas as a reward for their faithful school work.

Some of the members of the class will attend college and others will become teachers in the rural schools. The class consisted of eleven young ladies and nine young men.

The church was fittingly decorated for the occasion and members of the Junior class acted as ushers. The young ladies were all handsomely gowned.

The Pioneer Meeting.

The Washtenaw Pioneer Association held their annual meeting in Saline last Wednesday which was well attended. A number of interesting incidents of pioneer days were related by members of the association. It was decided to hold the meeting next year in Ann Arbor.

The following officers were elected for the coming year:
President—W. K. Childs.
Secretary—Robert Campbell.
Treasurer—O. C. Burkhardt.
Necrologist—Mrs. Nellie Darling.

Miss Cella Weber.

Word was received here Wednesday morning announcing the death of Miss Cella Weber, which occurred at the home of a relative at Rochester, New York, Tuesday evening, June 16, 1914.

Miss Weber went to Rochester last fall and has been making her home with Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hempel. A short time ago she was taken to the hospital suffering with an attack of pneumonia, and her brother, Otto J. Weber, who was called there about two weeks ago, had but recently returned to his home in Sylvan. Miss Weber expected to return to her home in Sylvan as soon as she had recovered sufficiently to stand the journey.

The deceased was the eldest daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. John Weber, and was born in Sylvan 25 years ago this month. She is survived by two brothers, two sisters and a number of other relatives.

The remains arrived here this forenoon and were taken to the home of her aunt, Mrs. Jacob Hummel. The funeral will be held from the Church of Our Lady of the Sacred Heart at 9:30 o'clock Friday morning. Rev. Father Considine officiating. Interment at Mt. Olivet cemetery.

Water Main Extensions.

The water works system of Chelsea is to be extended and new fire hydrants will be added on the new lines. The proposed extension will be south on Congdon street from Summit street west to Lincoln. A line of water mains will be laid on Lincoln street which will supply all of the residences on that street. On Taylor street the extension will be carried south so that all of the residences on that street will be accommodated with water.

The contract for the extensions has been awarded to Geo. P. Staffan at 73 and 47-100 cents per foot. Mr. Staffan is to furnish all material and do all of the work at this price, which is considerable less than similar work that has ever been done in Chelsea.

The light and water commission who received the bids which were accompanied with a sufficient bond recommended that the contract be awarded to Mr. Staffan which was done by the village council at their meeting Monday evening of this week.

Merker-Werner Marriage.

The marriage of Miss Anna Mary Bernidine, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Merker, and Mr. Henry W. Werner, of Ann Arbor, took place in the Church of Our Lady of the Sacred Heart at 7:30 Tuesday morning, June 16, 1914. The wedding mass was celebrated by Rev. Father Merker of Dearborn, a relative of the bride. The couple were attended by Miss Josephine Heselenschwerdt, a cousin of the bride, and Mr. Edward J. Vandawarker both of Ann Arbor.

Following the church ceremony a wedding breakfast was served to a number of guests at the home of the brides' parents. The couple after a short eastern trip will return to Ann Arbor where they will make their home.

The Chelsea band will give an open air concert on the corner of Main and Middle streets Tuesday evening, June 23. FORTY YEARS AGO

Happenings in Chelsea Forty Years Ago This Week.

The Grangers of Chelsea and surrounding country will hold a picnic at North Lake on June 20.

About 7,000 pounds of wool were purchased the past week at the price of 40 cents per pound.

The editor was busy trying to get Chelsea to have an old fashioned Fourth of July celebration.

Wheat was quoted at $1.30 per bushel; corn, 35c; oats, 50c; beans, $1.50; butter, 16c; chickens, 10c; eggs, 10c; beef, 83c; hogs, 83.25.

Among the advertisers of forty years ago this week we find only the following who are living in Chelsea today: J. L. Gilbert, Chas. Tichenor, A. Burkhart, C. Steinbach, C. H. Kempf, Frank Staffan and Geo. H. Foster.

Hangs Himself in Jail Cell.

Albert Jones, colored, a resident of Ypsilanti, who had been adjudged insane and was waiting to be taken to Pontiac or Traverse City, fastened one end of a blanket about his neck and strangled himself to death in his cell in the county jail at Ann Arbor Sunday morning. John Lamber, who is serving a short term for intoxication, found the lifeless, but still warm form of Jones dangling from the blanket. He called a deputy sheriff who running into the cell block, saw that the Negro was beyond human aid. Coronor Clark was called and after viewing the body, gave permission for its removal to an undertaking establishment.

Jones, who was 62 years old, was picked up a few weeks ago in Dexter by Deputy Sheriff Wyman and taken to the county jail. He had been prowling about some residences in Dexter and had given a fictitious name, when questioned. At the jail his identity was learned. He leaves a widow who resides in Ypsilanti.

Remove the Rye.

According to all available statistics, the wheat crop of the United States is going to break all records in 1914. The figures gathered by the officials at Washington indicate a crop of nearly one billion bushels. A crop of this size is pretty certain to be a low priced crop. The very quality of it is likely to effect prices to some extent. It, therefore, behooves farmers to gather their crop in the best possible condition, in order that they may receive the top price which is being offered. A good farmer should be unwilling to take any discount from this, due to inferiority of grain which can be prevented. The thing which can be prevented in large measure is the mixture of rye with the wheat. With good wheat as abundant as it will be, it is very certain that an unusual discount will be demanded at the markets like Detroit and Toledo for wheat mixed with rye. An unusual amount of rye is growing in the wheat. It ought to be cut out. The owners of all such fields should make an extra effort this year to cut out the rye. It will be the only way to get full price for your wheat crop. The rye is now visible everywhere and it ought to be cut out at once.

His Money Accounted For.

There has been considerable speculation advanced during the past week as to the whereabouts of the money that the late Jacob J. Koch, of Lima, who was accidentally killed at Byron, N. Y., the first of last week, was known to have had in his possession. A few weeks before he sailed for home he had forwarded to him in Germany a draft for $4,300 for money that he had on deposit in one of the Chelsea banks.

After his death $175 was found on his person and on Monday of this week a draft calling for $3,910.00 was received through the mails, and delivered at his former home in Lima. The theory that has been advanced by many that Mr. Koch was robbed does not hold good as the figures show that he had $4,085.00 of the $4,300 that had been forwarded to him in Germany.

N. Y. ENGINEERS ADVISE DETROIT

SUBWAY PLANS FOR METROPOLIS SUBMITTED TO NOTED EXPERTS.

FAVOR A COMPLETE SYSTEM

William Barclay Parsons, One of the Builders of New York Under-Ground Railway Is Looking Over Ground.

Detroit—William Barclay Parsons and H. M. Brinckerhoff, of New York city, recognized as two of the foremost subway engineers in the world, are conferring with members of the street railway commission regarding the proposed subway system in Detroit. They were brought here by President John F. Dodge, and in company with him, Commissioner James Wilkie and Mayor Marx, went over the streets under which the tubes are proposed.

Both men are members of the firm of Barclay Parsons & Klapp, 60 Wall street, consulting engineers. Mr. Parsons was one of the builders of the New York subway system. He was chief engineer of the Rapid Transit commission from 1894 to 1905, during which time the plans for the present subway system were formulated.

In 1904 he was appointed as a member of the Isthmian canal commission and in the same year was made advisory engineer for the Royal commission, London traffic. He was later a member of the board of consulting engineers for the Panama canal. He is a graduate of Columbia university and has been trustee of that institution since 1897.

Mr. Brinckerhoff was general manager and chief engineer for the Interborough-Metropolitan Street railway in New York, and resigned that position to become associated with Mr. Parsons as a consulting engineer. Mr. Parsons is now engaged by the United States government in the construction of the Cape Cod canal.

Mr. Parsons told the commissioners he considered their plan for a complete subway system instead of the construction of a single line far more preferable. He said the entire traffic situation should be considered before a determination is made regarding the details of the tube system.

CONFERENCE WITH CARRANZA AGENTS IS VAIN EFFORT

Rebels Will Not Consent to Armistice and Want to Name President

ARE CONFIDENT THAT THEY CAN PACIFY MEXICO SOON

Report That Villa and Carranza Have Broken Seems Confirmed By Seizure of Offices By the Former.

Niagara Falls, Ont.—Justice Lamar and Frederick W. Lehmann, the American delegates to the mediation conference, went to Buffalo Tuesday and talked for four hours with Rafael Buberan and Luis Cabrera, personal representatives of General Carranza. Their purpose was to find some way to bring the constitutionalists in harmony with the scope of mediation. The mission was a failure.

The constitutionalist representatives, who had come from Washington especially to see the American delegates, told them why they could not agree to an armistice; why only a man prominent in the constitutionalist ranks will be accepted by them for the provisional presidency and finally they said they believed the constitutionalist army would settle the Mexican problem soon if left unhampered by foreign complications.

The Americans returned to Niagara Falls feeling that so far as the political pacification of Mexico is concerned, mediation had accomplished nothing and probably the end of the conference was very near.

Villa Seizes Carranza Offices.

El Paso, Texas.—Reports that General Villa had resigned as commander of the northern military zone were confirmed partially here Tuesday night. Carranza's offices at Juarez were confiscated by Villa supporters Tuesday night. Similar confiscations are authentically reported to have taken place at Chihuahua city and at Torreon, where Villa remained.

The seizure of the offices in Juarez was taken here as conclusive evidence of the long predicted split between Carranza, leader of the constitutionalist revolution, and Villa, his most successful chieftain.

Private advices received here at a late hour told of similar action in taking over Carranza offices at Chihuahua city and Torreon, evidently placing the entire northern part of Mexico in the power of Villa's military leaders.

In addition to the information bureau and telegraph, it later was learned that the customs house and the treasury department at Juarez had been confiscated by Villa's officers.

HARD WORK SAVES OXFORD

Fire in Lumber Yard Threatens to Wipe Out Entire Village.

Oxford, Mich.—Fire which broke out in Montgomery's lumber yard, from unknown causes Monday afternoon, and destroyed it at a loss of $5,000, threatened for a time the entire village. Sparks were carried by a heavy wind about the town and at one time there were 22 buildings on fire.

A bucket brigade of citizens, which was quickly organized to assist the regular department, prevented the small blazes from gaining any headway and the total loss outside the lumber yard will not exceed $2,000, partly covered by insurance. The destruction of two barns with nominal loss figures in the total.

After two hours of hard fighting, the department at Orion, three miles away, was sent for, but when aid came the fire was under control.

ECONOMICAL FEED

Home Grain Foods, as Form Main Reliance—Some Good L...

(By M. K. WOODWORTH) Economical feeding of a subject which cannot be explained in a short paper is a few points which I further investigate for I could say something to cause dairymen to look into it for it is easy for a man to after he is willing to learn.

As a rule home-grown food form the main reliance, merial feeds and purchase will necessarily occupy a more prominent place in dairy rations to come. How much feeds we can use at a profit upon their cost and the quality of cows we are feeding. Speaking, the man who is the city milk can afford to feed grain that the man who is in products that can be held in storage for longer periods of time. Viewed from another standpoint and those fed more than they eat and turn to a profit, can be losing money for their own sake somewhere between these extremes that the successful dairymen must set his standard. It is his business to find out and no dairy authority on earth can inform him intelligently. It is one of the many lessons we must work out by associating with stock.

Durability of the Silo.

The durability of the silo should be well considered before building. Most of the cheapest silos have proven to be the most expensive, owing to the fact that they have maintained the efficiency for a few years only. Silos as well as all other buildings will be found most economical build good ones.

The materials used should consist of wood, tile, brick, stone, concrete blocks or solid concrete. Consider the durability and the cost, the reinforced concrete silo is to be recommended.

Increases Dairy Profits.

One way to increase profits on the dairy farm is to get rid of the poor cows.

Whitewash is Cheap.

Whitewash is so cheap that its use does not excuse having plenty of it in the hen houses and cow barns.

No Profit Expected.

The dairy cow cannot be expected to make large profits from improper care and improper feed.

Millet is Fair Hay.

Millet is only a fair hay for dairy cows. Stimulating Flow of Milk. Ordinary care will not stimulate large flow of milk.

Rome Infested With Mendicants

PROBABLY the police know how many beggars there are in Rome, in round numbers, but I doubt if any accurate census of these parasitic members of the community has ever been or can be taken. For they are everywhere, in every conceivable guise, they swarm about the places chiefly frequented by tourists. Every ruin, at least one human wreck in attendance near the "Ingresso," while a wretched without one beggar on the curb, another at the door and perhaps still another just within the portal, seems strangely incomplete. The one who can get "pitch" at the door itself, for he can make a pretense of rendering a service by moving aside a heavy, padded shield, which hangs before the entrance of practically every Roman religious edifice, and naturally, having early discovered that a paper is expected in return for every act of gratuitous aid, the manager gets recognition denied the others, writes G. A. Lyon, Jr., in the Washington Star.

It is inexpedient to go through Italy in a spirit of practical commiseration for the maimed, the blind, the lame, who beseech alms at every step, to yield to the impulse to give to these unfortunates, is for within five minutes an apparently just as worthy, to claim relief. And to give alms is to invite bankruptcy. The only safe rule is to deny them comfort in the reflection that they are organized here to care for the absolutely homeless.

Many tourists give these alms, else they would soon mean of maintenance. Take comfort in the reflection that they are organized here to care for the absolutely homeless. Many tourists give these alms, else they would soon mean of maintenance. Take comfort in the reflection that they are organized here to care for the absolutely homeless.

St. Sebastiana, just before the Baths of Caracalla are reached. Here is a smooth stretch of road and an almost endless string of tourist-laden carriages. It is a rich field for an active cartwheel maker, and the champion has several rivals, one not more than six years of age, who gives promise of being an expert himself some day.

This particular boy has reduced his costume to lowest terms suitable for cartwheel turning on a warm spring day. He has no shirt. His trousers are rolled up to his thighs and of course he has no shoes or stockings. But he wears a hat. That is apparently the badge of the union. When in action this chap is a mere whirl of bare legs and arms and flashing body.

"Gladiator!" said our driver over his shoulder the other morning, as, when on our way to the catacombs of St. Callisto, beyond the Caracalla Baths, this gleaming spectacle rolled along. The boy, seeing perfectly well, although whirling, checked to get beyond the range of the whip, the pointing of which he mistook to be a menace. Then he renewed his attentions until, from the fear of adding another case of hopeless invalidism to the already long list of Rome's dependents, through a stroke of athletic apoplexy, we contributed a quieting coin.

Next in order of virtual mendicancy, and highest in respect of unabashed persistence, is the post card vendor. He exists throughout touristdom, but not until we reached Bloom did we meet him in such full bloom of goodnatured effrontery. In Paris he offers his wares and, after perhaps a second time, he drops back to tackle the next foreign-looking pedestrian. But here one has almost to fight for freedom drive our hearts would be heavier and probably our purses much lighter. The cases of disfigurement and maiming disease, however, speak for themselves, and the best way, after adopting the policy of not giving, is to close the eyes when driving and to turn the head when walking.

Beggars pick their places with skill. They know just where the carriages must check speed, so that they have a chance to step quickly out from the curb and run or walk alongside and show their deformities. As a rule, when the driver sees that his passengers are not disposed to give he stems the flow of pleadings with a sharp word, which is always heeded.

Leading Industry. One of the leading industries of Rome is the making of cartwheels. These, however, are not used for transportation beyond the shifting of coins from one series of pockets to another.

Suddenly alongside the carriage appears a whirling maze of arms and legs spinning upon a human body as a hub. Then again as suddenly the strange phenomenon resolves itself into a perfectly normal boy, trotting alongside and doffing his cap, which has by a miracle adhered to his head throughout the process. There is, perhaps, no response from the carriage, and then the making of cartwheels begins anew, and this continues until a coin is thrown or the driver cracks his whip at the youngster.

GATHERED SMILES

Those Opera Dresses.
Myles—You say you like to have your wife go to the opera?
Styler—Sure.
"Why so?"
"Because I don't have to button up her dress in the back."
"You don't?"
"No; you see, the dresses she wears to the opera have no backs."

Honeymooners.
"I see a tunnel in England is said to be four miles 642 yards in length. How would you like to kiss for four miles, dear?" said the man.
"Why not kiss for the additional 642 yards?" asked the girl.
"Oh, you would need the 642 yards to get your mouth back in proper shape, dear."

He Was for it.
"Do you believe in this back to the farm movement?"
"You bet I do! I'm for it."
"Think it's the right thing, eh?"
"You bet! Back to the farm for mine! If I had a farm you'd find me on every pleasant day with my back to it, either fast asleep or looking up through the branches at the sky."

In England.
"Just criticism is one thing, and improves art, but it hurts an artist's feelings to have his masterpieces criticised with—"
"What? With malicious acerbity?"
"No; with ax."

His Only Feat.
"That amateur wrestler is boasting of the professional man he can throw."
"That fellow? Why, the only thing anybody has ever seen him throw is his shadow on the pavement."

HIS CHANCE.

Mrs. Henpeck—Next summer at the seashore I'm going to learn diving.
Mr. Henpeck—You'll never succeed. You've got to keep your mouth shut to dive.

Early Example.
While Caesar fought, he'd also write
And send stuff on in batches,
Convinced no doubt that half the fight
Was in the news dispatches.

The Star Attraction.
Hostess—I am glad your children decided to come for dinner.
Little Josie.—We didn't tum for dinner; we tum to hear Willie's grandpa eat his soup.—Judge.

The Drawback.
"In your automobile, are you running under your first estimate of expenses?"
"I would be, if I could only keep from running over people."

Absent-Minded Man.
He rushed into a laundry office in a good deal of a hurry.
"How long does it take you," he asked, "to do up a white waistcoat."
"Generally about two washings, sir," said the attendant, before he thought. He was discharged shortly after making that break.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Query.
"Pop, tell me something."
"What is it, my boy?"
"Do the cowboys use the sand of the western deserts when they scour the plains?"

Time Files.
Wife—John, what has become of the alarm clock? It's gone.
Husband—I put it on the mantel last night and I heard it go off this morning.

Cryptic.
"You used to say that you could never live without me."
"Yes, my dear, but then I didn't realize what good shape I was in."

Indians Wore Feathers.
Mr. Flatte—It is believed that previous to civilization baldness was unknown among American Indians.
Mrs. Flatte—Well, I can't understand why you object to my putting some money into feathers.

His Guess.
Mrs. Flatte—I see that discarding the queues in Canton, China, have glutted the market for human hair.
Mr. Flatte—Which accounts for the pink, blue and green wigs on the market, I suppose.

NO LEGAL WAY TO STOP HIM.
However brave the policemen are, they are careful about not breaking the laws and ordinances. A patrolman was kicking his feet down on one of the docks on the river front the other morning, when an excited citizen ran up to him and cried: "Say, hurry up! A man has just jumped off the pier!"
"With his clothes on?" asked the officer.
"Yes—fully dressed. Hurry!"
"What do you want me to do? There ain't no ordinance against a man swimmin' as long as he's properly dressed."—Philadelphia Times.

GOOD PARTNERSHIP.

Cholly—Well, I hear that you and Grace are to become life partners.
George—Yes, she puts in the capital and I put in the experience.

A Beauty Spot.
I kissed her on the spot,
Of nectar I did sip;
But when I'd finished kissing
That spot stuck to my lip.

Disappointed.
"I should like to be excused, your lordship," said a man who had been summoned on a jury.
"What for?"
"I owe a man $5 and I want to hunt him up and pay it."
"Do you mean to tell this court you would hunt up a man to pay a bill instead of waiting for him to hunt you up?"
"Yes, your lordship."
"You are excused. I don't want any man on the jury who will lie like that."—London Chronicle.

A Rare Work.
Fogg reports that he overheard this in the book department of one of our big stores:
Customer—Have you Arnold's poems?
Saleslady (turning to head of department)—Miss Simpson, have we Benedict Arnold's poems?—Boston Transcript.

What She Preferred.
"What's this entente cordiale I hear so much about?"
"Oh, it's a French drink of some kind. Look out for them foreign cordials, my boy."—New York Sun.

Subtle Distinction.
"Why are you down on Senator Wombat?"
"I think he upholds the trusts."
"Don't be too hasty. I suspect he merely holds 'em up."

So, Naturally.
"No, she wouldn't promise to support me in the same style in which she had supported her first husband."

TRUTH MAKES ENEMIES.

She—Does she always tell the truth?
He—She should hardly do that and be the most popular woman in society.

Its Song.
"Ah, ha!" sang our banner,
"I gloriously fly
With my stripes proudly waving,
To the star-spangled sky."

Gloomy Alternative.
"Will you make a speech at that banquet?"
"I don't know whether to do so or not," replied the eminent personage.
"When you make a speech nowadays, it either attracts so little attention that you're disappointed or so much that you're embarrassed."

Doesn't Play Golf Either.
Mrs. Goodleigh (after feeding tramp)—Are you a Christian?
Tramp—Well, mum, nobody can accuse me or workin' on Sundays, the bar.

New Elaborate Sashes of Ribbon

THREE very unusual and beautiful sashes, made of messaline ribbon, are pictured here. Considering the prominence of girdles and sashes and the great amount of attention given to the management of the waistline these will interest every woman who knows how much accessories add to the toilette. Quite a plain white dress of simple design, and even of ordinary material, is lifted into the sphere of elegance by the pretty ribbon garnitures designed by those who manipulate ribbons.

From five to eight or ten yards of ribbon are needed for any one of the sashes shown in the group pictured here.

In the first figure a new rosette is made by grouping seven short-looped bows together. The girdle about the waistline is plain and slightly crushed. The group of loops is finished with a long loop and two pointed ends. This sash can be worn with the bow or rosette at the back.

The design showing roses of the ribbon as a finish in the ends at the back, has fringed ends that are very new and pretty. The ends are raveled out to the depth of eight or ten inches. The ends are slipped through small silk-covered rings, making a tassel at the end with about three inches of the raveled silk above the rings.

The sash with long ends, of superposed points and double standing loops, takes an extravagant amount of ribbon and is prettier with two instead of four hanging ends.

Besides adding the bright luster of silk to the costume the ribbon ends, finished as pictured in these sashes, provide a weight for light gowns. Narrower ribbons have been effectively used for weighting the fragile fabrics of which light summer gowns are made.

All at a Garden Party

THE flowery and diaphanous hats pictured here have counterparts in equally flowery but more substantial headwear in Leghorn and hemp, and in similar airy creations of hair braid and Tuscan lace braid. Then, for the warmest weather, there are pure white hats, net and chiffon or lace. In the same coterie are some lingerie hats. But hats of black maline or lace and Leghorn appear to make the strongest appeal as the midsummer's loveliest creations.

These fragile-looking, but really quite durable pieces of millinery, are made of the finest of materials, maline net, which has been waterproofed, and thereby has conquered its old enemy, the moisture in the air. Even rain does not cause it to wither and shrivel, as in days of old. It is to be hoped that flowers which do not collapse when the dew of evening fall or the sea breathes on them will bloom in millinery gardens before another spring rolls round. Many of them now are dyed to withstand the sun, and sold as "fadeless."

The hats shown here of maline and lace, and those similar to them of hair or Tuscan braid, have the peculiarity of suiting themselves to either young or older women. But they appear to best advantage on the matron. When youth assumes the dignity of a black dress hat, big, picturesque shapes provide an element these smaller hats lack. But they are helped out this season by the masses of flowers that adorn them and by the youthful brides of velvet ribbon that are brought from one side to the other, under the chin or under the hair.

The chin-strap is a bit of frivolity one should try out before wearing. For some faces it is quite impossible, and for others it is a charm. Both it and the velvet bride under the hair are shown in the picture. The latter is featured on hats designed for young wearers.

There is any number of shapes in which these lace and net hats are developed. The fabric is shirred to a frame of fine wire and they require the careful work and experience of a professional milliner. Such hats are pretty with afternoon costumes in any color or white, and if one is to have but one hat for dress, no other style is more commendable.

JULIA BOTTOMLEY.

Colored Damask in Vogue.
Damask cloths in pale colors with napkins to correspond are again coming into vogue for the luncheon table, and while colored linen is impossible for the dinner table, it is very attractive for less formal occasions and pretty sets in pale yellow, green, blue or pink are appearing in the dowdy chests of brides-to-be.

Colored embroideries as well as colored damasks are being exploited for table use in the most up-to-date outfits and for these Japanese designs are particularly appropriate.

Silk and Bead Tassels.
Tassels are made of silk and beads, and they are used in many ways. They catch up the draperies of skirts and finish sash ends; small tassels ornament the ends of the neckerchiefs of boys and appear on jackets and frocks in lieu of buttons.

Mer Explanation.
"Uncle Hank," Barnhart, member of congress from Indiana, tells of a young man from out his way who met a young woman he had not seen for many years.
"I thought you were dead," was the young man's greeting.
"No," insisted the girl, "but I'm married."
"To whom?"
"Oh, some Englishman."

Useful Knowledge.
The very young lady was showing her school friend from another city about her native town. Presently the pair came to a little square adorned with a statue of the local Civil war hero.
"It isn't very much to boast of as art," said the sophisticated young chit, "but it's important to know about it because one usually asks one to meet one here."

As History is Written.

"This is the place, sir, and I can show you the very dog. Here, Towser!"

Patriotic Idea.
"John, why are you not eating your breakfast? What are you looking so queerly at those biscuits for?"
"I was wondering, Maria, if it would not be a patriotic thing to offer them to the government for its stock of ammunition."

Contrary Discipline.
"Whew, that was a roast you got this morning from the boss!"
"Yes, what I call a raw deal."

If your stock of generosity will not go around, better begin on your family.

Cleveland, Ohio—"My left side pained me so for several years that I expected to have to undergo an operation, but the first bottle I took of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound relieved me of the pains in my side and I continued its use until I became regular and free from pains. I had asked several doctors if there was anything I could take to help me and they said there was nothing that they knew of. I am thankful for such a good medicine and will always give it the highest praise."

The MAD of the FOREST

It was all over with so quickly I could scarcely realize what had actually occurred. Then I laughed and swore, my nerves dancing like so many demons. They were gone—gone! Those merciless red devils, those accursed murderers, those fiends in human guise. Nor was it likely they would stop in their mad flight until they dropped from sheer exhaustion, or the dawn of another day brought with it fresh courage.

And those others, who were yet there—Brady, tied still to the stake, the flames already licking the fringes at his feet, and mademoiselle praying to the Virgin—what would they think? Would they know, understand, what had really occurred, or had the terrible spectacle left them also in benumbed terror? The thought awoke me as from a stupor, and I turned about. The ground was a jumble of things, as if I looked upon a battle field, yet this was not what I really saw in that first swift glance. A man—a white man—ran leaping across the flame-lit opening, kicking aside the blazing fagots of wood already scorching Brady, hurling them to right and left in frantic haste, until he made passage through. I caught the glimmer of a knife in his hand; and then, by main strength, he dragged the weakened prisoner clear of the burning wood, and dropped him exhausted on the ground. As the fellow stood erect, staring about him, at the helpless huddle at his feet, at the white face of the girl, at the debris on every side, I recognized Simon Girty.

"Saints alive! What does all this mean?" he cried, grabbing up the gun dropped in his first swift effort at rescue. "You 'Running Water,' ay! and this is the Kentuckian who would have killed me. What's happened here? It looks like a shambles. Never before did I see a man burning himself. Who killed these—merciful God! What is that?"

His voice rose into a shriek as he stared at me, while I advanced toward him. With one terrified leap he sprang back, throwing up his rifle, but with hands shaking so, that I laughed outright. The sound coming unexpectedly from such ghastly lips must have been more horrible than a groan, for the frightened man dashed his weapon to the ground, and turned to run. His foot struck Brady's body and he went down, scrambling to his knees. I saw the old scout's head uplifted, the trembling girl bury her face in her hands, as if to shut out the sight.

"Don't run; there is nothing to be afraid of!" I cried hastily, stopping still in my tracks to better reassure them. "I am no ghost, but a friend. Hear me, mademoiselle!"

CHAPTER XXI.
Through the Black Night.
She dropped her hands from before her eyes, and, holding out the white cross gleaming in the firelight, came slowly forward. A yard from me she stopped, hesitating, not even yet thoroughly convinced of my identity.

"Is it really you, Joseph Hayward?" her lips faltered. "Tell me, I beg you, for—I was never so frightened in my life."
"There is nothing for you to fear, mademoiselle," I said quickly, regretful enough to have startled her so. "I am Joseph Hayward, the American. 'T was but to save you I played this part."

She buried her face in her hands, sobbing hysterically, her slender form trembling.
"Oh, I am glad—glad!" she managed to whisper. "I am not superstitious, not weak; but this was so real, so dreadful, that all thought left me. Oh, how could you, how could you do that?"

"It was all that was left for me to do," I explained, my heart throbbing, as I drew her hands from before her face, and looked into her eyes. "You must not blame me, mademoiselle. I could not fight alone against them all. I was crazed with despair when I first thought of this. It was as though God inspired me to the attempt."
My eyes looking beyond her saw Girty on his knees, reaching for his rifle in the dirt. Then he arose to his feet, his face showing hard and ugly in the firelight.

the man shrink back, half startled still at my weird decoration, and dropped a hand heavily on his shoulder.
"Does that feel like the grip of a phantom, you fool?" I asked sharply. "If it does I'll shut down tighter still for your benefit. My tale can wait its telling until we be well out of here. There will be time enough then to satisfy your curiosity. Those fellows may get over their fright and come back."
"What fellows?"

"A mixed band of Miamis, Ojibwas and Shawnees—mostly Shawnees with a chief named Sis-e-te-wah!"
"Huh! So it was those devils? The same gang I left at the foot of the island. But there were no Shawnees with them then. Sis-e-te-wah, did you say? I know the rascal, but never be fore did I hear of him being bold enough for such a deed. What stirred him to it?"

"There was a white man with them."
"Ah! Now we have the truth—a red-coat?" and his eyes were on my jacket.
"He wore one—stolen no doubt—but he was no soldier. Mademoiselle knew the man, a ruffian called Jules Lapin."

He gazed into my face a minute and laughed, slapping his knee in sudden merriment.
"Lord! But that's a good one, boy! By the Lord Harry! 't was a fine joke. But maybe we better move, friend, for he would not be in good humor if he did come, and I am scarcely in better grace with him than you."
"Go where?"

"To join my party. Did yer think I likely I was here alone? I'll tell yer the whole of it in a word: I found the warriors of the Wyandots marching south, an' joined them. Have you heard it was war? Ay! There's no stopping now; the tribes have taken the trail, the tomahawks are bloody. 'T is said St. Clair has left Harmar already, and there will be fighting on the Wabash. Pish! It is easy to guess how it will end."

"Where are your Indians?"
"At the foot of the lake. I scouted up the shore as far as the ford; saw the blaze of fire over here and crept up through the woods to investigate. Then somebody fired a gun, and I ran forward. This is what I found." He waved his hand about the open space.
"Now you understand. I reckon the best thing for us to do is to get out."
I looked down at Brady doubtfully; then stepped over beside him.
"How is he, mademoiselle?" I asked, "can he talk at all?"

"If you bend close to his lips you can hear his words," she answered glancing up at my face. The hunter's eyes were bright; he seemed to be trying to speak, and I dropped on my knees beside her.
"What is it, Brady?"
"Right here; you want to speak to him—oh, Girty!"
The renegade came toward us, and the eyes of the two borderers met. For a long moment they looked at each other, many a memory, no doubt, floating between them. Then Brady held out a blackened hand.

"Yer saved my life, Simon Girty," he said with an effort. "I—I never thought to—shake hands with you—but I'm a goin' to."
Girty's ugly face broke into a smile. "No more did I," he admitted grudgingly. "We ain't generally been in no shakin' hands mood when we're met heretofore. Still, I reckon, we're about even up an' kin afford ter shake if we want. Think yer kin travel a bit, Brady?"
"How far?"
"To the foot of the lake; to a Wyandot camp."

The hunter's eyes wandered from his face to mine.
"I—I reckon I can," he mumbled at last. "I—ain't hurt so much, only bruised up." His glance fell upon his feet. "Maybe if—I had some whole moccasins I'd get along better."

"We'll fix that," and Girty dashed in. "I reckon that's what them dead Indians is lying there for."
He stepped across to the nearest body, fumbled a moment, and came back, dropping on his knees. Deftly and quickly he cut the burned leather from the wounded man's feet, touching the blackened flesh gingerly with his fingers, and slipped on the new moccasins.

"You're not scorched much, friend. Hurts some, I reckon, but a couple 'o darts will put you all right again."
As I pen these adventures of youth I seem to retain but dim recollection of what occurred following our arrival at the camp at the foot of the lake. I recall the struggle we had with Brady, which taxed Girty's strength as well as my own. The man suffered greatly, and for much of the distance we bore him in our arms in spite of his protests. Yet we reached the spot at last, and stumbled into the circle of light cast by a small fire, the Indians aroused from sleep by Girty's shout, and clustering about us in eager curiosity. At first view I deemed them hostile, but a word from the girl made them friendly enough.

It was the fourth day, on the banks of the Maumee, that we came straggling into the Indian encampment, and passed through howling hordes, who struck at us in spite of the guard. The word passed that one of the white prisoners was Stephen Brady caused them to press about us so close that we were fairly hemmed into the mass, infuriated faces on every side, the wild shrieking making an indescribable din. The situation was becoming serious, for the guards cared little what befell us, when Girty, accompanied by three Wyandot chiefs and a white man in British uniform, fought passage through the crowd, and by threats and blows, won way for us through the village. The extent of this surprised me, and gave me a new conception of the power of those northwest Indian tribes. There were hundreds, perhaps thousands, gathered there, for we only traversed one end of the encampment, the warriors of tribes whose homes were as far away as the great lakes and the big rivers. There were few wigwags erected, not more than two or three standing in the shadow of trees close beside the river. Big as the encampment was, it was no permanent village, but a mere rendezvous for the various tribes allied for war. To one of these, covered with deerskin and rendered hideous by tribal totems, we were taken, and thrust within. At last we were alone, Brady and I, although we could still hear the yelling without. He lay extended on his litter, and I dropped to the ground, thoroughly exhausted from the rough buffeting through which I had passed.

"Yes; that is clear, but I must ask a question—where is St. Clair?"
"I do not know exactly, but he is marching toward the little Wabash; he seeks to destroy the Miami towns."
"With what force?"
"Less than two thousand, the scouts say. He only expects to meet the Indians of the Wabash."
A head was thrust through the flap, and a gruff voice spoke in a strange language. The girl's fingers pressed mine firmly, and then she turned and went out in silence. As she passed out of the opening her hand dropped the skin, leaving the interior in darkness. I stood motionless, listening to the many sounds without, hardly conscious yet that she had gone. The hot blood was throbbing in my veins, but it was caused by no thought of the dangers confronting me. At that moment she alone occupied my mind. Then slowly her message recurred, forcing its way in upon my consciousness with insistence. Tonight—our escape must be made within two short hours. I stepped forward to awaken Brady, but now, with my brain cleared, a sudden suspicion came. Was this honest planning? Was the desire back of it actually our escape? Or was it born of treachery? Not for an instant did I question her—the purity and truth of her purpose—but Simon Girty. Why should he scheme to help us? Never before had I heard his name spoken as any harbinger of mercy to the frontier. I recalled his ugly face, his narrow, furtive eyes, and my doubt of him increased. The plan was too easy, too well oiled, to be altogether natural.

I shook Brady awake, told him all that had occurred, so far as related to our effort, but without voicing my suspicion.
Twice we started at the distant hoot of an owl, but it was not repeated. Then, at last, the signal came, sounding near at hand, from somewhere down the stream. Brady went first, worming his way silently beneath the flap, and the instant he disappeared, I followed. There was a slight gully to our left, and we crept into it, keeping down out of the gleam of fire. Lying side by side at the edge of the water he put his lips close to my ear.
"On your back, lad, with only the nose out; stroke easy, and let the current carry you down."

CHAPTER XXII.
Rene Comes.
The afternoon passed slowly. We discussed the chances of escape, yet knew so little of our surroundings as to gain slight satisfaction. If we could be certain that there were no Indians on the opposite bank of the river we might venture an attempt. But we were far from sure.
Thus far all had been failure, our mission useless, our sufferings vain; Schultz had given up his life, Brady was wounded and suffering, and I, as well as he, a helpless prisoner. Yet even this could be borne with patience if only I could perceive some way to become of service, some means by which I could warn St. Clair of this tornado of savagery about to sweep down upon him.

Slowly, insensibly, the vision of mademoiselle came. What a life had been hers from childhood, and yet how the true, sweet womanhood had conquered all savage environment.
She was in my mind still, a soft, tender memory, when the skin concealing the entrance was lifted and she stood in the narrow opening looking in. I could see her slender, lightly poised form outlined against the fire, but seemingly her eyes could not penetrate the darkness within. An instant she hesitated, leaning slightly forward.
"Monseur!"

"Yes," I said eagerly, already on my feet. "I was longing for you to come."
She came forward cautiously, guided by the sound of my voice, leaving the entrance open, permitting me to glimpse the guard without, facing the opening.
"You have come to help us, mademoiselle?" I whispered, bending so close her hair brushed my lips. "You feel that our need is that desperate?"
"I must do right," she answered, yet without lifting her eyes to mine, "as God tells me. I pray to him for guidance. You are white men and Christians; you came to the Wyandots on a mission of peace. What is my duty, monseur? I also am Christian, and only a drop of Indian blood flows in my veins. Yet all my life have I been Indian. How can I turn against my own people?"

"I cannot think that you do," I urged as she paused, breathing heavily. "The Wyandots have been falsely led, deceived. They have been driven into this war by the lies of white men. Would we be in danger now if our fate was left to a council of Wyandot chiefs?"
"No," they would listen to me, and believe. It is Hamilton and his white aides who refuse to hear the story. I went to his tepee twice, and was turned away—the last time with insults, as though I were an unknown squaw."
"How, then, did you gain permission to come here?"
"I waited until he left the camp. There are but two white men here tonight, and one of them is Girty. I like not the man, but he seems friendly to you, and so I trust him. He suggested that I come, and told me something which gave me courage. He had heard a word dropped by Hamilton which made him suspect your lives were at stake. He dare not act openly, but he sent me to tell you this, and to whisper to you his plan. It was easy for me to come here with Hamilton away. The guards are Wyandots, and I had only to ask the chief to let me dress Monsieur Brady's wounds. He had not been warned against me, and suspected nothing. The Englishman who was left in command was led by Girty to the other end of the village. When the chief sought him, he was not to be found, and so I was given permission."

She stepped silently back to the entrance, and glanced out into the firelight, returning as swiftly to clasp my sleeve.
"Listen, monseur; I must speak fast, for I know not who may suspicion us. Now mark every word, for 't is a desperate chance. Two hours from now be ready. We must work tonight, while Hamilton is away. I will somehow draw the guard away from this side—here, next to river, monseur. When you hear an owl hoot three times creep beneath the skins and down the bank to the water's edge. You must move like foxes, for there will be sleeping warriors to pass. Go down stream."

"And then?" I asked breathlessly, as she stopped to glance behind.
"A quarter of a mile below, at the end of the village, around a sharp bend, Girty will have a canoe tied to a tree that overhangs the water. It will be in shadow, and concealed by brush. He has promised to put into it food, paddles and one gun. You must hide during daylight—are you sure you understand all?"

"Yes; that is clear, but I must ask a question—where is St. Clair?"
"I do not know exactly, but he is marching toward the little Wabash; he seeks to destroy the Miami towns."
"With what force?"
"Less than two thousand, the scouts say. He only expects to meet the Indians of the Wabash."

Improved on Old Superstition.
The first time pigs cross your threshold make them jump over your pants' belt, or your wife's garter, or the maid's apron; then they will come home regularly. A plan now in use among up-to-date American farmers is to keep the pigs in regular pens and feed them twice a day. It is regarded as a scheme more popular with the wife and the maid. The other way is recorded as being a German one.

When it shall be said in any country in the world, "My poor are happy; neither ignorance nor distress is to be found among them; my jails are empty of prisoners, my streets of beggars; the aged are not in want, the taxes are not oppressive; the rational world is my friend, because I am a friend of its happiness"—when these things can be said, then may that country boast of its constitution and its government.—Thomas Paine.

SEASONABLE DISHES.
The spring vegetables are always palatable, but a change is most agreeable. Try some of these:
Green Peas and Curried Rice.—Pour over a little water on a pint of green peas, simmer gently until tender, add a teaspoonful of salt, two tablespoonfuls of butter and a dash of pepper. Before the peas are put to cool, place a peeled and halved onion in three tablespoonfuls of butter, add a half cup of rice, one tablespoonful of curry powder, and stir these until the butter has been absorbed. Add three and a half cupfuls of broth, a teaspoonful each of sugar and salt, a tablespoonful of lemon juice and cook the rice until tender. Place the rice in a ring and put the peas in the center to serve.

Spanish Salad.—To a cupful of chopped celery add a half cupful of flaked salmon, one tomato, one green pepper and a bit of onion all chopped fine, season well with any dressing, and serve on lettuce leaves.
Sirup for Summer Use.—Strawberry Sirup—Crush ripe berries and strain the juice until clear, boil a pound of sugar with a cupful of water until it spins a thread, but do not stir, into this add two cupfuls of strawberry juice. Cook for 15 minutes, covered, then seal hot.
Raspberry Juice.—Boil together two cupfuls each of sugar and water, 15 minutes, then add two cupfuls of raspberry juice and simmer 20 minutes. Seal while hot.
Cherry Sirup.—Stone very ripe cherries and pound half the stones in a bag till all are crushed, mix these with the fruit and squeeze well in a bag until all the juice is extracted. To every quart add two cupfuls of sugar, boil ten minutes, skimming well, when cool bottle and seal.

He that falls in love with himself will have no rivals.
Most people return small favors, acknowledge middling ones, and repay great ones by ingratitude.—Benjamin Franklin.
GOOD THINGS TO EAT.
Take two pounds of veal for stew, cut into about nine pieces. Roil in flour and put into a kettle to fry in hot fat with one chopped onion.
When a golden brown add water to nearly cover, salt as desired, add a third of a cupful of vinegar, one bay leaf, four cloves, and let stew for an hour, adding water if necessary. When nearly done add four tablespoonfuls of apple jelly, a teaspoonful of sugar and a tablespoonful of catsup. Strain the gravy over the meat when serving.
Duchess Loaf.—Boil a pint of cherry juice with the juice of half a lemon and a half pint of sugar. Cook ten minutes and pour into a mold. Whip together until stiff one pint of cream, half a cupful of sugar and a half teaspoonful of vanilla. Sprinkle into the cream half a cupful of minced, candied cherries, place oiled paper over the top and cover securely. Paax in ice and salt four hours.
Asparagus Rabbit.—Lightly toast and butter thin slices of whole wheat bread, cover each with a layer of cooked asparagus cut in bits, sprinkle with salt, pepper and a few drops of Worcestershire sauce and a thick coating of grated cheese. Cook in the oven long enough to melt the cheese. Serve at once with a poached egg on the top of each slice.
Golden Fleece.—Break in pieces a half pound of good, rich cheese, melt in a cupful of cream, add a pinch of cayenne and when smooth and well-blended add five eggs without beating, cover until the whites are set, then beat briskly. It will rise in yellow foam, tender and delicious if not overcooked. Serve hot on buttered crackers.
Chantilly Sauce.—Cook by steaming five medium-sized, good-flavored apples, pass through a sieve and add to the pulp two tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar and a fourth of a cupful of fresh grated horseradish. When well mixed fold in an equal bulk of whipped cream. Fine to serve with pork roast or duck.

Asparagus Rabbit.—Lightly toast and butter thin slices of whole wheat bread, cover each with a layer of cooked asparagus cut in bits, sprinkle with salt, pepper and a few drops of Worcestershire sauce and a thick coating of grated cheese. Cook in the oven long enough to melt the cheese. Serve at once with a poached egg on the top of each slice.
Golden Fleece.—Break in pieces a half pound of good, rich cheese, melt in a cupful of cream, add a pinch of cayenne and when smooth and well-blended add five eggs without beating, cover until the whites are set, then beat briskly. It will rise in yellow foam, tender and delicious if not overcooked. Serve hot on buttered crackers.
Chantilly Sauce.—Cook by steaming five medium-sized, good-flavored apples, pass through a sieve and add to the pulp two tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar and a fourth of a cupful of fresh grated horseradish. When well mixed fold in an equal bulk of whipped cream. Fine to serve with pork roast or duck.

NATIONAL CAPITAL AFFAIRS

Washington Explorer Finds Strange Cave Men

WASHINGTON.—Caves hewn in the solid rocks of sugarloaf mountains, sometimes to the depth of 150 feet, large enough to hold from 1,500 to 2,000 people. Men who think nothing of running 40 and 50 miles a day without taking a drink of water.

People who never set eyes on fruits or vegetables. Towns of 5,000 to 6,000 inhabitants, in which there is not a building, the people living in holes in the earth. A land of no shadows between 8 a. m. and 5 p. m. A nation in which women are never seen.

These are some of the wonders described by Frank Edward Johnson, the explorer and lecturer and contributing editor of the National Geographic Magazine, who arrived in Washington after an absence of almost two years, spent among the troglodyte tribes of southern Tunisia. Mr. Johnson gave out his first interview since his return to the United States, after reporting to the National Geographic society in Washington.

While in Tunisia Mr. Johnson conducted extensive researches among the buried Roman cities, and traced the old Roman highways, which have been hidden for centuries by the shifting sands of the Sahara. He succeeded in following for 300 miles the route of the road that was built from Carthage to Leptis Magna and to Alexandria nearly two thousand years ago.

"On the trip just concluded," said Mr. Johnson, "I came into a more intimate contact with the innermost lives of the peoples of the extreme southern Tunisia than ever before, and I had an unequalled opportunity to study them at closer range than any foreigner has ever enjoyed. There are probably more than one hundred thousand of these people in a section hitherto supposed to be almost uninhabitable. They are pursuing an exceedingly primitive life.

All the troglodyte strongholds are difficult of approach. Their warriors could see the enemy approaching for many miles, unless they came by night, and then the zigzag path that led up to the great walls, worn smooth by centuries of hard use, with a surface like polished marble, was too dangerous, for a stumble meant sudden death on the rocks hundreds of feet below. It is difficult even for the mountain goats born and bred there."

Capital Folk Scramble for Rent-Free Houses

THERE'S a scramble on among several hundred Washingtonians for rent-free houses during the summer months in the city's most exclusive residential districts. Few people outside the capital realize that there are in this city scores of beautiful and costly homes which are turned over to caretakers, sometimes without rent, and with coal, gas and electric light bills paid. On some occasions, even, caretakers are paid a nominal sum to live in the houses.

Now is the season when these caretakers are the busiest. Those who have had these positions in the past are the most active and they besiege almost daily the various real estate offices in the city. For this business is one of the hardest for real estate men to look after. In the first place they must be able to judge character "on the jump" and be able to pick men and women who would be capable and honest. Then after selecting the names of applicants the agents have to investigate their standing and trustworthiness. In the selection of the tenants widows almost always have first choice. A good widow with children is always regarded as the best caretaker.

While the occupation of caretaker grew up originally when Washingtonians left the city for the summer it has extended to another branch now that of furnished houses for sale or rent. For instance, if a public official who has lived here several years suddenly becomes a "lame duck" and moves back to the farm" his Washington home is for sale. Often it is difficult to find a place immediately or even to rent it. As a result a caretaker is selected. This party is given possession of the house, but is required to keep it in tip-top condition and to show it to prospective buyers.

Sam Needs Rifle Ranges for Civilians

THE probability that citizen soldiery may be called to national service has caused the national board for promotion of rifle practice of the war department to issue a statement explaining the need of rifle ranges for practice, which has been made possible by the present congress in providing for the free distribution of rifles and ammunition to civilian rifle clubs and school cadets.

"Again we are faced with the possibility of sending untrained youths from their homes to the battlefield," the statement says. "Recruits can be taught to march, drill, and take care of themselves in the field in a comparatively short period, but such is not the case with the care and effect of the rifle. The rifle was taken by the present congress when it enacted a law, through a paragraph in the army appropriation bill, authority for the war department to issue rifles and ammunition free to certain civilians.

"It is a fundamental principle of national defense that citizens should be trained in the use of the service arm. Rifle instruction is the keynote of national defense of Switzerland. If we were to train our citizens in the same proportion as that small republic, we would have about 3,000,000 trained civilian expert riflemen.

"A serious handicap to the proper development of this movement is the lack of rifle ranges. With the growth of cities and the increasing value of land generally rifle ranges have been swept away. Therefore, unless the issue of rifles and ammunition is followed by the construction of ranges where civilians can practice such issue will not accomplish the results desired by the government."

Varied Lot of Plants Grown by the Government

IN CONNECTION with its investigations, the Smithsonian Institution undertook some years ago the collecting of a series of cactuses. Not only herbarium specimens, but many examples of living plants were secured.

The problem of the care of these living plants while under observation was solved through the co-operation of the department of agriculture, which assigned special greenhouse No. 7, at Fourteenth and B streets northwest, for housing them. Today a veritable desert flourishes in it, filled with all kinds of strange desert plants, especially cactuses from North and South America, of which there are perhaps in the neighborhood of five thousand specimens.

The collection has much to attract the ordinary visitor. No such collection in Europe has so many unique and rare species. Each pot contains a label which gives the key number to record books giving the history of each plant. The collection contains about twenty-five species of the night-blooming cereus, several plants of the so-called bishop's cap, and some striking specimens of Turk's head cactus. The photographer of the National museum makes photographs of the flowering plants when any special features are to be noted, thousands of these cuttings being distributed by the department to the various botanical institutions throughout the world.

HENRY HOWLAND
THE FRIENDLY FAN

No snow-capped mountains may be seen. From where I sit and work away; No meadows that are wide and green. Delight my soul from day to day; I walk beneath no spreading trees. Nor sit beside a sparkling pool. But there is a delightful breeze. That serves to keep me calm and cool.

All day I hear the city's roar. The room I occupy is small. And when I let my fancy soar. It bumps against a lofty wall; Instead of scents of new-mown hay, I sniff the fumes of gasoline. But cooling breezes all the day. Assist me to remain serene.

I may not sit upon a fence. While watching busy harvest hands; Each morning early I commence. The work necessary demands. But while I strive with all my might. To do my part as best I can, I hear with undisturbed delight. The hum of my electric fan.

Let others hurry far away. In search of scenes that may be fair, Or in the harvest fields all day. Attempt to rid their souls of care. My brow is kept from burning by. Cool breezes wafted from a shelf— By soothing, friendly zephyrs. I can regulate to suit myself.

How Nice. "And so," said Mrs. Honeywell, "your husband is going to California to stay three months!—Dear me, how can you ever stand it to be parted from him so long? Why, my husband has never been away from me even for a day since we have been married. Whenever he has to go out of town he always takes me with him."

"Indeed," replied Mrs. Oldson, "that's very nice of him. How long have you been married?" "Nearly three months," the happy young woman said, with a delicious sigh.

THE "OLD BATCH" AGAIN. "Ah, yes! He was disappointed in love, poor boy." "You must have a grudge against him."

"Why?" "You seem to be sorry that he wasn't married before bumping against his disappointment."

Difference 'Twixt Great and Small. The difference 'twixt great and small is very little, after all; The man who labors by the day Or by the month for meager pay Is, when he falls to satisfy His master, merely told to go. The one whom fortune raises high Receives, when he neglects to show His fitness, a polite, benign Request to graciously resign. And this, observe, is, after all, The difference 'twixt great and small.

The Glorious Prince. "Yes," he said "I once saw a prince." "Oh," she said, clasping her hands and looking with awe into the eyes that had gazed upon royalty, "what was he doing?" "Trying to balance a feather duster on his nose for the amusement of a chorus girl."

His Dangerous Altruism. "Oh why, why," asked her weeping mother, "did you consent to be his wife?" "Hush, ma," the fair girl answered. "I think I hear him in the hall. He's so kind-hearted I'm afraid he might give me up, terribly as he would have to suffer, if he knew it would make you happier."

Rescued From a Horrible Fate. "Say, dusty, I'm goin' to apply for a slice of dat Carnegie hero fund." "Wot you been doin'?" I ain't heard about you rescuin' anybody."

"I carried Saunterin' Sim nearly three miles yesterday when he fainted because six men had him surrounded and was goin' to put him to work."

The Difference. "I was greatly interested last night in watching your daughter and my son dance together." "Oh, I suppose you were. If it had been my son and your daughter I might have been interested instead of horrified."

His Favorite Subject. "Doesn't your father ever talk to you about his Maker?" asked the Sunday school teacher. "I guess he does," replied little Albert. "Pa claims he's a self-made mist."

Worth Remembering. If you're good you may be lonesome. But if you're fair to say That if you refrain from standing You'll not have to be beginning With a headache the next day.

400,000 Settlers a Year

Immigration figures show that the population of Canada increased during 1913, by the addition of 400,000 new settlers from the United States and Europe. Most of these have gone on farms in provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Lord William Percy, an English Noblemen, says: "The possibilities and opportunities offered by the Canadian West are so infinitely greater than those which exist in England, that it seems absurd to think that people should be impeded from coming to the country where they can most easily and certainly improve their position."

New districts are being opened up, which will make accessible a great number of homesteads in districts especially adapted to mixed farming and grain raising.

WILLING TO GIVE AWAY PAPA Youthful Logician Met Appeal to His Generosity With a Crushing Answer.

A mother was urging her little son to be generous, specifically in the case of a small comrade not well endowed with worldly goods.

"I wish you'd give your little wagon to Melville," she suggested. "He has so few toys and you have so many." "I don't want to, mama. I like my little wagon. Why doesn't his papa buy toys for him?"

"He has no papa, dear. That is the reason why I want you to be so particularly nice to him. It would be no virtue in you to give him what you don't want anyway. We should always be careful to share what we really prize. Now, as I say, Melville has no papa and—"

"Well, why don't you give him papa, then?" was the youthful logician's reply.

A Rare, Rare Man. William H. Hamby, short story writer and novelist, is a great lover of folks and makes friends with all sorts and conditions of men. One day while on an outing in the Ozarks he got a hill billy who was something of a character to accompany him on a fishing excursion in order to study the type. The two men spent the day in the woods together and returned to camp old friends, and then Mr. Hamby learned that he was not the only one on the expedition who had been studying his companion. As they shook hands in parting the hill billy said:

"I taken a likin' to yuh, but yuh shore be the queerest man I ever see. I've noticed you all day, an' yuh ain't took a drink, yuh ain't took a smoke and yuh ain't cussed onc!"—Kansas City Star.

CUPID HAD HIT HIM HARD

Surely Day of Romance is Not Ended When Lovesick Swain Can Feel Like This.

"Come, come, old man; don't let it knock you out. There are plenty of other girls in the world. In six months from now you will have forgotten her."

"Yes, I suppose it is as you say; but it isn't six months from now. Everything I see reminds me of her. When I look at other women I can't help thinking how much more beautiful she is than any of them. When the wind blows I am reminded that it is probably adding to the color of her cheeks. Whenever I pass a corner where she and I have stood together I have a strange empty feeling as if something had gone out of my life.

"When I look up at the sky, I cannot keep from remembering that it is above her. If I could forget her for only a day, for only an hour, I think I might learn to hope again; but I can't get her out of my mind. It seems to me that the whole world is changed since she told me that I was never to see her again. I can't understand how anybody manages to keep on being happy. I would give almost anything to forget her."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Skimpy. A contributor to the American Magazine tells the following story: "A clerk in one of the great jewelry stores on Fifth avenue in New York city exhibited to a rich and weary customer a lady's handbag, five inches square, made of platinum and fairly well covered on one side only with diamonds. The price was $9,000. The fact that one side only was covered with diamonds troubled the customer. Turning the handbag around and around, and looking at it from all sides over and over, he finally said, 'Very pretty—really. But I don't like one side without diamonds. Honestly the thing looks skimpy—rather skimpy.' At an additional expense of $7,000 this difficulty was removed."

Libby's Luncheon Delicacies

Dried Beef, sliced wafer thin, Hickory Smoked and with a choice flavor that you will remember.

Vienna Sausage—just right for Red Hots, or to serve cold. We suggest you try them served like this: Cut rye bread in thin slices, spread with creamed butter and remove crusts. Cut a Libby's Vienna Sausage in half, lengthwise, and lay on the bread. Place on the top of the sausage a few thin slices of Libby's Midget Pickles. Cover with the other slice of bread and press lightly together. Arrange on plate and serve garnished with a few parsley sprays.

CIDER MAKING

A Frenchman named Delamoy has invented an apparatus whereby you can wind your clock by opening and shutting a door, the winding machine doing its work by the action of the door.

What is really needed, however, is an invention that, attached to a door, will get rid of people inside of the room. No known method has yet been invented to accomplish this purpose. Yet is there anything which would promote greater efficiency and comfort and give more lasting satisfaction?—Life.

Fair Words or None. "George," said the wife of her generally unappreciative husband, "how do you like my new hat?" "Well, my dear," said George, with great candor, "to tell you the truth—"

"Stop right there, George! If you're going to talk that way about it I don't want to know."—Ladies' Home Journal.

Motorcycle Displacing Horse. In less than a year the horse is likely to disappear from the British postal delivery business, his place in the country being taken up by motorcycles with side car attachments.

A spinster grinds her teeth every time she encounters a widow who has planted three husbands and is seeking a fourth.

Pets and Broken Hearts. The dog of Mistral, the Provencal poet, died the day after Mistral's recent death. It is a fairly common thing for dogs, cats, canaries and other pets to die a few days or even hours after their masters. But do they die of grief? It is not likely.

A Manynuk physician examined the corpse of a canary that had succumbed with its little mistress. The canary's death, the examination showed, was due not to a broken heart, but to scarlet fever, the malady to which its little mistress had herself succumbed.

From this and from kindred post-mortems it is surmised that pets, when they die simultaneously with their owners, have become infected with the disease that carried their owners off—measles, diphtheria, typhoid. The death-from-grief story is pretty, but alas, it won't wash.

Why Not Armor for Every Bullet? An ingenious New York doctor has invented a bichloride of mercury tablet in which the antidote is combined with the poison, so that a person may swallow corrosive sublimate, intentionally or accidentally, with impunity. It is a capital idea, and ought to be applied to poisons generally, and possibly Maxim might find some way of applying the principle to firearms. An automatic, self-resisting bullet, or something of that sort, would be of much greater utility than his silencer.

PRINCESS THEATRE

COMING ATTRACTIONS

Manager McLaren is making plans to handle his biggest crowd on Saturday evening when he presents a big feature picture "The Man from the Golden West" featuring that well known ex-champion of the prize ring, James J. Corbett.
Everyone has heard of "Gentleman Jim," the ex-champion heavy-weight fighter; how many know that he is also a wonderful actor? In this recent production Corbett (himself) does some magnificent dramatic work, and the result is a feature of clean-cut snappy action. Although this is Corbett's first appearance in motion pictures, he has achieved marked success on the American and English stage in several different plays.
Thrill follows thrill in this great Warner's Feature, woven into a story that can be readily followed. Here is a production that will certainly be appreciated by young and old. Corbett's personality is irresistible; to miss seeing him in this big Warner's Feature is to miss a real treat.
The management has sent out over 500 personal letters to patrons calling their attention to this big feature and undoubtedly one of the biggest crowds of the season will be at the Princess Saturday evening.

Another big sensational feature that the Princess will offer shortly is a twelve part picture "Zingo." This feature will be shown on four nights, three reels each night and each part a complete story in itself. The first part "Zingo" "The Son of the Sea" will be shown on Tuesday, June 23rd, and the other three parts on each succeeding Tuesday for three weeks.
"Zingo," the Son of the Sea, might be termed a modern Arabian Nights story. It has been produced at a tremendous expense for the sole purpose of creating humorous entertainment. As you watch the antics of "Zingo," and his funny crew of sailors you must realize that the extraordinary impossible situations, from which they escape so easily, are never meant to be taken seriously. Throughout this extravagant production you will find numerous scenes so fantastic and original as to bewilder and amaze you.—Adv.

PILOT LIGHTING PLANTS
HOME MADE ACETYLENE
For LIGHTING and COOKING

Fine for Dairy Farms
We sell a great many Pilot Lighting Plants to dairy farmers. Because dairy farmers can get even more out of an Acetylene installation than anybody else.
Our Dairy farmer patrons make these Acetylene plants do double work. They run an extra line of pipe to each barn—and sometimes to other outbuildings. In these buildings they fasten the great balls of Acetylene light to timbers or rafters. They also equip these lights with ignition devices — to make them light with the pull of a chain without matches.
Two of these Acetylene barn lights will make a big dairy barn as light as day. They will give more light than a dozen lanterns—and unlike lanterns, they cannot be tipped over.
The same is true of Acetylene house lights. They burn in handsome stationary bronze or brass fixtures securely fastened to ceilings or walls.
