CYCLONE SWEEP NORTH OF TOWN

The Northern Portion of Washtenaw County and Southern Portion of Ingham and Livingston Counties Swept by Terrific Windstorm Saturday.

MANY NARROW ESCAPES FROM DEATH

Many Houses and Farm Buildings Ruined—Two Churches, School House, Mill and Several Residences at Unadilla Fall Before Blast—Orchards and Wood Lands Devastated—Crops Swept From Ground—Many Injured, But Few Seriously—Damage Will Reach Neighborhood of One Hundred Thousand Dollars.

A cyclone between five and six o'clock last Saturday evening did thousands of dollars worth of damage in the northern part of Washtenaw and the southern part of Livingston and Ingham counties. Houses, barns, small buildings, orchards, timber, fences and crops in the track of the storm were either blown down or unroofed and the orchards and timber uprooted.

The storm started in Eaton county and a strip 80 rods wide and about and at the Peter Worden farm a barn was blown down.

Unadilla was struck a hard blow. The Presbyterian church, a brick structure, was leveled to the ground, and the hall of the church society, adjoining the church, was wrecked. There was no insurance on the church property. Members of the society are raising a fund and will rebuild the church. The M. E. church was unroofed and the interior of the structure is in ruins and what is left of the building is wrecked. The home of Mr. and Mrs. John Webb was entirely swept away and Mrs. Webb had one of her arms broken and was otherwise injured. The home of Mrs. L. M. Harris was almost entirely destroyed. Mrs. Harris is at the home of her son, J. W. Harris of this place, and is suffering with an injury to her back and one of her legs, but no serious complications are looked for by the family. The Worden residence, unoccupied, one of the finest in the village was entirely five miles in length was leveled to the ground. The dispatches from the district where it started gives one as dead and a number seriously injured. From Eaton Rapids the funnel shaped cloud lifted and landed again near the township lines of Bunker Hill and Stockbridge townships. The storm skipped the village of Stockbridge but starting about three miles west of the village in that township. The large basement barn of Elmer Nutt was blown down; on the farm of M. H. Angell place the barn was blown down. The barn on the farm of Lucius Bowdish, one half mile south of the village was swept away. Sumner Bird's barn near by was unroofed, the Sharp sisters barn was blown down and a horse killed. Arthur Munger was milking in his barn when it began to go down and his horses being in the wreckage, he went to extricate them, when his wife and children almost lost their clothing appeared on the scene, which was the first intimation he had that his residence had been destroyed. When the house went down Mrs. Munger and the children were carried to the orchard when the crash came and their clothing was torn to shreds and Mrs. Munger was without shoes or stockings which had been torn from her by the cyclone.

On the farm of Henry Ackley, about a mile from the Munger farm, the residence and barns were entirely swept away. A daughter of Mr. Ackley had just graduated from the Normal college at Ypsilanti and had brought home a gymnasium suit which constituted their clothing when visited after the storm, the rest of their apparel having been carried away by the twister.

At the farm of Daniel Denton his family took refuge in the cellar and when the house was carried away the hired man was caught under the floor when the walls fell outward and his collar bone broken. He was dragged to safety by the Misses Denton. The house and barn on this farm were destroyed and five horses killed. On the Chas. McClain farm his brick residence and barn were laid level. Hugh Sweet had a new barn totally wrecked and six cows killed. On the McCloy farm all of the buildings except the residence are gone. At the Hugh McIntyre farm the house was unroofed, barns down and fifteen acres of oak timber destroyed. W. W. Bowdish had his barn leveled to the ground badly twisted. About the only visible thing about the site of the brick school house is the organ and a few scattering brick. The grist mill owned and operated by Austin Gorton had the third story blown away. At the home of J. W. Barton his auto garage and corn crib were totally swept away. Mrs. Helen Watson was injured when her home was struck. The Livingstone homestead was destroyed.

Watson Lane had his house, shop and stable badly damaged. Mrs.

CHELSEA RESIDENTS IN D., J. & C. WRECK

Several Chelsea residents were in a wreck on the Detroit, Jackson & Chicago electric line about a mile west of Michigan Center, which resulted in one fatality and prospects of more, about 10:45 Wednesday forenoon when a west bound limited car collided head-on with an eastbound local car and telescoped. There were but few passengers on the local, but the limited was fairly well loaded, having upwards of twenty-five people aboard. It was the passengers on the limited who suffered the most.

How any of the six or eight in the smoking compartment escaped alive seems a miracle. The seats were piled up in a stack, and men were wedged in between them in all shapes. Bones were snapped in two and forced through the flesh in several instances.

It was such a sight as moved strong men to tears while carrying out the injured. A special car running close behind the limited and which bumped into the rear of the limited before it finally came to a stop after being flagged. Men aboard that car lost no time in getting to the injured and giving them such aid as possible. The Johnson ambulance and the police ambulance of Jackson made hurried runs to the scene, and those who were hurt the worst were removed to the city hospital. Fifteen were taken there.

Overlapping of orders caused the wreck. It appears the crews were in no way to blame as they had clear right of way in the vicinity where the accident occurred. The west bound car, the limited, had orders to pass the local at the Page avenue switch, and the eastbound car had orders to pass the limited at Michigan Center. The local had fully a mile yet to go before arriving at the place where it was to take the siding according to the orders given, and as the limited had about the same distance to cover before reaching the switch on Page avenue, the crews of both cars felt safe in running at full speed along where the collision occurred.

Mrs. Andrew S. Sawyer and daughter, Miss Mary, were among the passengers on the west bound limited, and they were on their way to Jackson to attend the funeral of Clifford Maloney, a cousin. Mrs. Sawyer's nose was broken, body bruised and she is in a very nervous condition this morning. Miss Mary Sawyer's nose was broken, face and body badly bruised. They returned to their home here in the afternoon.

Earl Lowry, who was a passenger on the limited was bruised on his face, nose and body. He returned to his home after receiving temporary treatment at the hospital in Jackson.

Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Prout, who are guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. D. H. Wurster, were former residents of this place, were passengers on the limited. Mr. Prout was badly bruised on his body and legs. Mrs. Prout is suffering with numerous bruises.

A. N. Morton was a passenger on the eastbound local. When the crash came he was thrown on the seat in front of him and his upper lip was badly cut.

The Chelsea residents were fortunate to escape with their lives, and at least four of them will be confined to their beds for several days to come.

C. O. Burnham, of Kalamazoo, died from effects of injuries received.

TO TRY GLINNAN IN WAYNE

Supreme Court Reverses Ruling of Judge Pheasant of Detroit.

Lansing, Mich.—The supreme court Tuesday morning reversed Judge Pheasant, of Detroit, in his order that the trial of Ed. Glinnan should be held in Monroe county. The order for a change of venue is vacated and the case must be tried in the Wayne county courts.

Judge Pheasant held that the record of the court had a right to make rules for the proper conduct of its own business, and was not bound by the rules which prevailed in the circuit court. This the supreme court holds was an error and granted the mandate, which means that the order for Monroe county is nullified.

HUMOR OF THE DAY

The "Glorious Fourth" Considered in Lighter Vein.

Looking into the Future of Willie and Johnny—Some Thoughts of the Celebration—Safe and Sound Father.

GRIEF.

"Why are you weeping, my poor boy?"
"By—last! My p-p-paw said I mustn't spend more'n half of my money for fireworks, but—because we might need the rest for the doctor—"
"Hush—"

ALL USED UP

The Torpedo—I feel bang-up! How about you?
The Cracker—Oh, I'd feel better if I wasn't busted.

TOO BAD.

"I'm sorry that it is no longer fashionable to have fireworks on the Fourth of July."
"Why should you care?"
"My wife's old maid sister, who has been living with us for the last 15 years, has just become engaged to a willing widower, and I'd like to celebrate without letting the neighbors know just why."

UNNECESSARY.

"Do you always take off your hat when the flag goes by?"
"Now! I'm not sure for an officer."

EAGLE AS NATIONAL SYMBOL

King of Birds Properly the Proud Emblem of the Greatest Country of the Earth.

On the fourth day of July the symbol of the American Eagle can be heard from coast to coast, from lake to lake, over hills, valleys, plains and mountains, and 'tis the people of the United States, now living in one way or another in the happy land of 1934, who cheerfully King George and the British lion.

AFTER THE BATTLE

WHERE, OH, WHERE?

Willie has his pistol ready. Willie's heart is full of grief.
He has bought a little cannon and its breast from care is free.
Willie counts the passing moments as they slowly drag away.
Where, oh, where, will little Willie be in two weeks from today?
Johnny's little hand is empty, he has squandered every cent.
With a giant cracker Johnny will begin the merriment.
He possesses all the fingers and the toes he should—oh, say!
Where, oh, where, will Johnny's dignity be in two weeks from today?

HIS SAFE AND SOUND FATHER.

"Father, didn't you ever shoot off fireworks when you were a boy?"
"No, I couldn't afford to burn up money in that way."
"And didn't you ever have a toy cannon?"
"Never. I did my celebrating in a safe and sane way."
"How was that?"
"Well, I used to get a piece of gas pipe, plug one end of it, fill it with powder and then touch a match to it. Talk about noise, it beat any toy cannon I've ever heard!"

HIS FATHER A STANDPATTER.

"Well, my little man, I see you are carrying a flag. Do you know why we are celebrating today?"
"Yes, 'Cause Hooters didn't beat the country."

INDEPENDENCE

This is the day on which the average man shows his independence by doing foolish things without having gained his wife's permission.

ROCKETS AND CRACKERS

A wet Fourth makes a lean graveyard.
The find and his rights are soon parted.
The sticks fall silent on the grass and the dust.
A thump on the head a workman in the street.
It is better not to make a show than to get your head cracked.
The boy who doesn't get caught may celebrate another day.
It isn't always the firecracker with the longest fuse that makes the most noise.
Remember that the giant firecracker is always just getting ready to go off when you head over it to see what is in the market.
Let us then be up and snuffing with a heart for our fate. Lightning-flashes and their scolding—learn to stand silent and wait.

SAFETY AND SUNDAY MAKE SENSE.

Little Willie said to his father:
"Daddy, I want to go to the beach. Do you think the sea will drown me?"
"No, son, but you better not go!"

Efforts are being made by his congregation to induce Rev. Frank Sheldon, of the Congregational church at Battle Creek to reconsider his resignation.

The town of Deford, with a population of 120, near Cass City, was struck by a cyclone early Wednesday and all buildings more or less damaged. The loss is estimated at $10,000. No one was hurt.

The biennial convention of the Improved Order of Redmen at Saginaw adjourned Wednesday after the election of Detroit as the meeting place for 1916 and the election of officers.

I stood before him, stunned and bewildered by his obstinacy. "Am I to understand, General St. Clair, that you question the accuracy of my report?" "No, sir!" His cheeks flushed. "Only, my young friend, there is nothing to it. This expedition is not interested in what Hamilton is doing on the Maumee. He doesn't dare attack us with his mongrel savages. If he did we'd give him a belly full, and a fine story to send back to England. Come, gentlemen, let's get to more serious affairs. You may go, sir."

I passed out, dazed, unseeing. So this was the man in whose hands rested the fate of the northwest. This was the end of my toil and suffering; this the reward for Brady's death. He had sneered at me, turned me away with a laugh. For a moment I stood shaking from head to foot; then hot anger seized me, and brought me back to life. By heaven! he would learn yet which of us was the fool.

CHAPTER XXIV.

The Battle on the Wabash.

He had not even assigned me to service; simply turned me adrift to go where I pleased. This implied insult to me to the quick, yet, now that I had taken the measure of the man, I cared little enough for his good opinion. Very well, I would choose my own service then—I would go back to Oldham and his Kentucky militia. He was of fighting blood, if his face spoke truth, and his command was stationed where they would feel the first shock of attack whenever it came.

Oldham received me gladly, and about the fire that night I told of my reception by St. Clair.

"Well, I warned you, Hayward," the colonel commented, chuckling. "I know the bullet-headed old fool. I reckon he'll know more about injuries this day or two. Told you he had his wounds out, did he? Why, man, there isn't one of 'em been ten miles from the column since we began this march; isn't that so, captain? The old cock doesn't know tonight what's gone on two hundred yards ahead of his outposts." He got up, and stretched out his arms. "And so, gentlemen, we march for the Miami towns in the morning. Old Cock-a-doodle-doo says we'll wage a year's pay we never get there. What no takers? Well, I'm going to bed."

Why should I attempt to describe that drear battle on the east fork of the Wabash? Many another has done it already, yet few tell the story as I remember it.

We were up at dawn, but for no purpose, so far as I could see, unless it was to idle through a leisurely breakfast. I had finished mine, and was smoking, cuddled close to the fire, when the storm broke. Our outposts could not have been a hundred yards in advance, or else they ran without firing a shot, for the red devils burst on us without slightest warning. I heard a hoarse shout of alarm, then whoops and yells, such as would strike terror to the bravest. I was on my feet, gripping my gun in an instant. I saw Oldham leap forward, roaring out an order—then they came, pouring out of the woods into the open, a mass of shrieking demons, half obscured in smoke, their rifles spitting fire. The men beside me went down in a heap; Oldham flung up his arms and toppled over; I saw men stare, then turn and run, peering back over their shoulders with eyes full of horror. I threw up my rifle and fired; sprang back, racing for a tree, loading as I ran. Men were everywhere, a frightened, screaming mob. I saw officers strike them with their swords, cursing them as they fled. But nothing could stop the enemy; they fought to get away, they battled with clinched fists, they battered a path for themselves with clenched mallets; they became fends of terror, every semblance of manhood gone. God! may I never see such a brance of Rene. Was she also crushed in that mob, fleeing for life, or was she still in the cook tent, trembling as she stared out helplessly on the stricken field? I turned and ran, heedless of all else, plunging through the stream of fugitives, plowing a passage with my bulk. I had done my duty—now I must save her!

CHAPTER XXV.

The Retreat.

I had no faith I should find her there, but I fought my way through to the tent. It had been knocked half over, the camp stove overturned, the long bench smashed into kindling wood. With sinking heart I flung back the sagging canvas, and cast one glance within. As heaven witnesses, she stood there, the blanket still wrapped about her, her hands grasping a rifle, her face turned toward me. Unconsciously her lips gave utterance to a cry of relief, and her expression changed. I sprang forward, eager, glad.

"Rene, you are here!" I cried out. "Why did you stay?" "It was the word of 'monsieur,' she answered simply. 'Monsieur said stay till he come.'"

"Yes, yes, I know; but I never thought of this; never dreamed of such a defeat. But there is no time to waste in talk. There is nothing to do but run for it now. Come, lass!"

Before she realized what I was going to do, I had flung away my rifle and seized her in my arms. She was a light, slender thing, and I held her tight in the folds of the blanket, scarcely feeling her weight. She made no effort to resist, yet her eyes—bewildered, half-frightened—looked into my face. I gave them no heed, my whole purpose concentrated on the one effort to save her, to fight a passage through that mob of frightened men. The spirit of panic had gripped me also—not for myself, but for her! Here was my duty now; not back upon where those regulars stood grimly in line, and died with their shoulders touching; not where I had fought all day in the powder-cloud facing those forest demons—but in the mob of fugitives, battling and cursing for their lives. The road was littered with guns thrown away, with discarded blankets and powder horns. I dared not look back, straining every muscle, staggering forward over the ruts. The roar of guns behind grew faint in the distance; the spit of rifles from the thickets ceased. Exhausted, breathless, reeling from fatigue, I put her down, and with arm about her, stood an instant looking back.

They were coming, a dark mass bearing down upon us, but ahead of them, wild with terror, his harness flapping at his heels, his head flung from side to side, charged an artillery horse full tilt. In his mad terror he saw and knew nothing. He came straight at us, running as it crashed. I flung the girl into the side of the road and leaped recklessly for his head. My hand gripped the mane, then the leather rein; I was flung from my feet, jerked into the air, but hung; my moccasins touched ground again. I was dragged forward, rendered half unconscious by a blow, but weight told. I got fingers on his nostrils, and he stood still, panting and trembling. Clinging to him, warned by shouts to hurry, I stripped the harness and hoisted her onto the bare back. Even as this was accomplished the head of that shrieking mob was on us; one brute grabbed her by the arm seeking to pull her down, and I struck him with all the force I had. Then I ran forward, clasping the horse by the bit, crunching our way, heedless of who opposed or blocked our passage. And they made way for us; even in their blind terror, they swept aside to escape being trampled under the animal's hoofs, and left before us a clear path.

I looked eagerly for some place in which to turn aside, saw the faint trace of an Indian trail, seemingly leading down the bank of the stream, and, with instant decision, turned into it. I walked the horse now, and Rene sat up straight, and fastened her disarranged hair. The narrow trail led through dense thickets and about a slight hill; in five minutes we were out of sight of the road, alone in the wilderness. To the right through trees was the glimmer of the river. The horse panted heavily, and the way was rough. There was blood I noticed now, on his flank, and he limped slightly as he walked. I staggered and reeled from weariness, feeling relief from excitement, yet kept grimly on until we must have covered two miles, wandering in and out among the low hills. No sounds reached us, and as we came into a narrow ravine, promising concealment, I released my grasp on the bit and staggered back against the bank. Mademoiselle slipped from her seat and hastened to me.

"You are worn out, monsieur, wounded?" "Worn out, yet, but nothing has touched me save a blow or two. I—I think we can rest now."

Then it occurred to me, a thought that had swept into my mind once before—we had no provisions, no chance to get away and we dare not shoot, nor build a fire.

"What is it, monsieur?" "Why, we have nothing to eat, Rene," I admitted reluctantly. "It is a long journey to the Ohio, and how are we to keep from starving? Faith! but I am near that now."

She stood before me, slender, erect, the blanket draped about her, her eyes lowered.

"It was mine to remember, monsieur," she said simply, as if it was all the most ordinary thing in the world. "I knew not what would happen, and there was food there. When the women ran away, and I would not go, because you told me not, I knew it would be best that I take some. You do not blame me, monsieur?" "Blame! you are a jewel; but I see nothing of it! Where?"

"Tis here, monsieur; I am glad if I please you." She flung aside the blanket, dropping it to the ground, revealing a black ammunition bag strapped across her shoulder. I remembered now feeling it when I held her in my arms, vaguely wondering what it was. She unclasped and opened it.

"Monsieur must eat," she said gravely, "and sleep. Then he will be strong again."

I tried to do as she said, munching a few mouthfuls. Her actions, her words, her manner toward me, both bewildered and angered. She had assumed the part of a servant—chosen it, as if she would thus teach me my own place. In every possible way she showed me she was not there from choice, but necessity. I lay back, toying with the food, my appetite gone. The wounded horse had been down to the river and drank; now he was pawing the snow in an effort to discover feed. Over in the east, but some distance off, a rifle cracked ominously in the silence. My head fell back against the bank, and I was sound asleep.

It was two days later when we toiled up a long hill, and came out upon the summit. I no longer needed to lead the horse, and was plodding along wearily behind. Much of the snow had melted, leaving the soil soft, and the trees appeared bare, phantom-like, against the sky. Rene rode silently, wrapped in her blanket, for the air was chill and damp, her head bent, her eyes straight ahead. I have no remembrance that we had spoken for an hour. Beyond the hill summit there was an escarpment of rock, giving an open view ahead. As I gazed off, over the trees below, my heart gave a great bound—there, scarce a mile away, flowing between leagues of forest, was the broad Ohio, its waters silvery in the sun. I turned to her and pointed.

"At last, Rene," I cried, forgetting. "We are safe now; see! There is the river." She lifted her eyes and looked. "Yes, monsieur." "Why do you ever speak to me in that tone? You answer me always as if you were my servant."

"Your servant!" She was looking at me now. "Am I not, monsieur?" "Of course you are not. You are free; whatever put that in your head? I haven't known what to think, what to do since we have been together. Back on the Maumee I—I thought you loved me."

"I do love you, monsieur." "You—you love me?" I stammered. "And yet bear yourself as you do?" "Yes, monsieur; how else could I do? You are white; I am an Indian." "Is that all? You think that makes it different? Rene, I love you; out yonder is my home; I would take you there; I would say to those who know me—here is my wife."

"Your—your wife!" There was doubt, questioning in her eyes. "Yes, of course; how could you think otherwise?"

"Oh, monsieur, how could I know? How could I believe? I was an Indian girl, a Wyandot. It is not so the white men come to our villages. I have seen them—the red-coats, the traders of France. They take with the strong hand, and then laugh, and go away. Then you came and grasped me, and said get into the canoe. I tried to not go, but you said yes, I must. You did not ask me, monsieur—you spoke stern, angry. I was frightened. I dare not say so, so I did as you said—I was your prisoner; you had taken me as the warriors of the Wyandots take the maidens of the Ojibwas."

"Then if that was so, why did you not leave me—that night the Indians passed us in camp?"

"Her cheeks flamed.

"I could not, monsieur—I loved you."

"And now?—now you will go with me down there—a prisoner no longer, but my own?"

"Always and forever."

"Always and forever," I answered gravely.

There was something new, wonderful in the depths of the dark eyes that looked into mine. I saw her hands clasp the white cross at her throat, then they were held out to me.

"I am so glad, monsieur," she said softly, "so glad!"

THE END.

BIG DANGER OF THE APPLE-TREE MINER

Apples That Have Been Cared for and Sprayed Regularly are Not Subjects for the Apple Miner.

Many fruit growers have observed small brownish patches on the leaves of apple trees. These patches are caused by the apple-tree miner, a minute insect which feeds on the internal tissue of the leaf.

The insect has been known a long time and has become well distributed over the United States and Canada, but has never been a serious pest until last year.

When once familiar with the work of this insect it is an easy matter to recognize its presence. Yellowish or brownish blotches are observed on the upper surface of the leaf.

Early in June the tiny eggs are deposited singly on the surface of the leaf, adjacent to one of the larger veins. Each egg is protected by a drop of wax, which appears in the sunlight as a glistening spot.

The eggs hatch in about six days and the young caterpillars without exposing themselves to the outside world immediately enter the leaf. At first they make a narrow channel, but with the increase in size of the insect and its appetite the channel becomes wider, and the trumpet-shaped mine in the fabric of the leaf is the result.

The caterpillars moult, or change their coat five times. The coats are alike in color and structure but vary in size to accommodate the growing insects.

As the old clothes are shed they are judiciously pushed out, through a small opening in the lower surface of the mine. The insects further display their cleanly habits, unlike many other leaf-miners, by depositing their excrement without the mine through this same opening.

The caterpillars reach their full growth about the middle of July when they transform to pupae. This resting state lasts only from eight to ten days. At the expiration of this time the pupae push themselves partly through the upper surface of the mine, break through their pupal skins and appear as fully developed moths, leaving the pupal skins partly projecting through the slit in the leaf.

These tiny moths are very inconspicuous, but on close observation may be seen resting on the apple leaves. Like some other members of this family of insects the moths assume a peculiar attitude while at rest. The fore legs are extended while the others are partly folded under the body. In this way the insects rest on the fore legs and the end of the abdomen.

The female moths soon after emerging gets the egg-laying habit. The production of eggs seems to be their sole object in life, for after continuing the operation for two or three days, without awaiting the result they die.

The eggs soon hatch and produce the second brood of caterpillars which possess similar habits to those of the first brood. They grow more slowly than those of the first brood, not reaching maturity until about September 1, or possibly later.

About this time they cease eating, and proceed to make their quarters comfortable for the winter. Unlike the mines of the spring brood those of the second brood are densely lined with fine white silk. In these comfortable quarters the larvae spend the winter.

The gathering up and destroying of the leaves in the fall readily suggests itself, and is recommended where tillage is not practised. There are, however, so many insects of various species which spend part of their existence in the ground and which are destroyed by breaking up their quarters that aside from the generally recognized benefits, orchard tillage is, in most cases, recommended.

STUDY THE INSECTS AND THEIR HABITS

Especially Favorite Remedy for Cutworm Is Early Plowing—Fire Is Sure Destroyer.

(By L. M. BENNINGTON.)

All insects pass the winter in some stage of their existence. The question is, where and how? Certainly not on the wing, and often in a way that they can be easily destroyed.

Watch the fences and weather-boardings of unpainted buildings for the chrysalis of the cabbage worm, neatly suspended by a couple of silken threads. Some of these times the mischief-making butterfly will emerge, and it will prove many times more difficult to destroy.

Many insects pass the winter in egg or larval form in the rubbish about the farm, old weed stalks, clumps of dead grass, and the remains of last year's crop being common lurking places. Fire is a sure destroyer, and cleans the ground nicely for plowing.

Early plowing in spring is hard on insects, the freshly exposed soil being cleared of them by frost. This is especially a favorite remedy for cutworm, though the finely pulverized soil which is a resultant invites the ants freely.

The pupa of the tomato-worm is often plowed up in the garden and is distinguished by an appendage like the handle of a pitcher. While in this stage most insect life is dormant, the tomato or potato worm pupa expresses its disapproval of being disturbed by a couple of flops. If placed in a sunny window it will develop into a magnificent butterfly, but every one knows the horrid green larva that follows.

Every one is familiar with the snapping bugs or click-beetles which creep into our windows and amuse us by falling on their back and feigning death. Presently they make a clicking noise and flip up several inches. If they fall on the back the performance is repeated until they light on their feet, when they scamper off.

Their larvae live near the surface of the ground, and from their long, scarcely tapering form and hard covering are known as wire worms. These

DAIRY

DAIRY CATTLE PERFORMANCE

High Records Are Found Among All Prominent Breeds and They Are Increasing in Number.

When a cow will produce twenty times her own weight in milk in a year, she may certainly be regarded as a valuable piece of property. When a cow will produce 800 to 1,000 pounds of butter fat in a year, she is a prize.

Such records as these are found among all the prominent dairy breeds and they are increasing in number in each breed at a most satisfactory rate. Just now there is a competition for the championship in milk and butter production in the Guernsey breed. The championship of that breed is held by Spotswood Daisy Pearl and her owners are using every means to improve her record, while a Pennsylvania cow, May Rima, is contesting her championship with vigor. This Pennsylvania cow has produced 811 pounds of butter fat in nine months, and both she and the present champion are being fed under the most improved methods, which include a variety of grain and forage and the addition of a succulent ration, such as beet pulp or something of that kind, to increase the appetite and make the ration more effective.

TEMPERATURE FOR CHURNING

Expert of Idaho Experiment Station Gives Three Important Factors in Art of Making Butter.

(By G. E. FREVORT, Dairyman, Idaho Experiment Station.)

The temperature at which cream should be churned should be determined by a trial churning at about 54 degrees F. If the butter comes quickly and is soft, churn at a lower temperature next time. If it comes firm and requires a long time to churn a higher temperature should be used next time.

The churning temperature will be affected by the following factors:

1. The hardness or softness of the butter fat. Feed, breed, and individuality determine hardness or softness of butter fat.
2. Amount of ripening. Sour cream may be churned at a higher temperature than sweet cream.
3. Temperature cream was held at previous to churning. High temperature in ripening and holding requires lower temperature in churning.

Dairy Improvements.

Remarkable records have been made by dairy cows during the past few years. Not only have breeders developed wonderful cows but they have raised the average standard of the various breeds and added to their beauty and adaptability.

Many additions have been made each year to the already long lists of advanced registry dairy cows, and in the case of the Holstein, Jersey and Guernsey breeds many cows have been developed which show the way to future progress.

While the leading breeders of dairy cattle are working hard to raise the average of their animals, the dairy-men should work still harder to raise the average yields of their herds, for they are the ones who should ultimately derive the most benefit from this improved blood.

Profit From Scrub Animal.

A scrub animal may yield a profit, but if it does it must be fed very cheap feed and given very little care. The animal that yields the real profit is bred for that particular purpose.

Never Use Grade Sire.

There is a big place for the right kind of grade cows, especially in the hands of beginners, but the grade sire—never.

Loss in Two Cows.

Two cows that are kept in order to do the work one would ordinarily do inevitably mean a loss.

CYCLONE SWEEP NORTH OF TOWN

 Eliza Huder's house was unroofed and otherwise damaged.
 Some of the monuments in the Unadilla cemetery were overturned and a number of trees uprooted.

At the Gilbert farm on the eastern edge of the village the house and barn was swept away. Just north of the village the residence of G. A. Pyper was destroyed. Wirt Barnum on the south edge of the village was perhaps as hard hit as anyone in the track of the storm. His large farm residence which cost about $5,000 to erect is partially destroyed, his large barns swept away, a fine orchard laid level and his crops are practically ruined. Mr. Barnum had an insurance of $3,000 which will be but a small fraction in covering his entire loss.

In this county the damage will reach many thousands of dollars and while some of the farmers carried cyclone insurance the majority are without any. Mr. Marshall on the farm known as the H. G. Ives place blown down. Frank Marshall also lost his farm barn. Frank Hopkins lost a barn, windmill and his residence was damaged. I. J. Pickell had the doors blown from his barn and the cupola carried away. Stephen Hadley, across the way from Mr. Pickell's, had a barn blown down, and at the home of W. I. Pickell ten acres of young timber was ruined. S. E. Nelson, who owned a number of cottages at his resort on the shores of Bruin lake, had them all destroyed. Otis Webb had his residence unroofed, barn blown down and one horse killed. Ralph Gorton who owns what is Doody cottage which adjoins the club house is gone and the fine tract of timber owned by Mr. Doody at the site of the camp grounds is destroyed.

In Dexter township Wm. Hudson had his residence partly moved from the foundation. On the farm of P. E. Noah the residence which was occupied, was carried to Pickering lake where it found a resting place. Mr. and Mrs. O. P. Noah had a barn, shop and ten acres of young timber destroyed and many of the windows in their home blown in. John Hinchey had his barn moved from its foundation. R. S. Whalan lost fifty apple trees. At Silver Lake all the cottages owned by the resorters were carried away. The residences of Wm. Clark and John Crum went down before the destructive gale.

Wm. Ryan had all of the buildings on his farm carried away and one of his farm horses found a lodging place in a tree. The residence of Wm. Eisele was badly injured. The home of Mrs. John Meyer was swept away and she and her 11 year old son were badly injured by the falling walls. Mrs. Meyers is a widow. At Silver Lake Patrick Walsh lost his farm residence and barn. Sidney Thurston a resident in the Silver Lake district lost his house and barn.

All along the track of the twister the telephone wires are down, more or less orchards uprooted and crops and fences laid level. A heavy fall of rain and in some places considerable hail accompanied the gale. Chelsea felt the effects of the storm but escaped without any damage.

Since early Sunday morning the stricken districts have been visited by many of the residents of the surrounding county and from all accounts it was without a single doubt the worst storm that ever struck this section of the state. Many of the stricken residents of the storm-stricken district will probably be unable to replace their destroyed buildings for years to come and their loss in many cases swept away a life time savings.

According to reports the stock and tools were strewn along the path of the storm and the loss of farm machinery and stock will be hard to estimate. The storm seems to have spent its force at the township line of Dexter and Webster.

building and the fire started in some of his bales of hay and about a dozen of them was spoiled. The Messrs. McLaren have several tons of hay and a quantity of beans stored in the building, and unless damaged by the smoke, their stock escaped with slight damage. The loss will reach about $100 which is fully covered by insurance. The timely discovery of the blaze averted a serious fire.

Wild West Show Coming.

Wyoming Bill's Wild West will exhibit at Ahnemann park in Chelsea, Tuesday, July 7. There is probably no greater educational institution or amusement enterprise in the entire world today than the Wyoming Bill's Wild West Show. With this immense aggregation are the most noted, celebrated and renowned scouts, cowboys, Indians, trappers and guides identified with early frontier life. They have each and every one experienced the hardships of early days, and are this season portraying to the American in a decidedly realistic manner the trials and tribulations that it was necessary to experience in the far West during the time Red Man reigned supreme. This portion of Wyoming Bill's Wild West performance is an educator for old and young alike, as well as entertaining and amusing, and furnishes only a part of the elegant performance. In addition will be found Cossacks from Russia, Gauchos from South America, Arabs from the desert, and an abundance of brightly-eyed Senoritas and dashing, daring, rosy-cheeked Western beauties, led by the famous Queen of the Saddle, Mabelle Deer, the most expert horsewoman the world has ever known. It is truly a pictured, brilliant and historical portrayal of life on the great western plains—shooting, lassoing, bull-dogging, riding wild and untamable horses, bucking bronchos, mimicking Indian warfare, Indian dances, the sports and pastimes of the cowboys and cowgirls—attack of the stage coach, rescue of wagon train, and a true to life representation of the famous Mountain Meadow Massacre.

A grand free street parade is announced for the day of the exhibition, starting from the grounds promptly at 10 o'clock, with numerous free outside attractions upon the show grounds immediately after the return of the parade.

Two exhibitions are given daily, rain or shine, afternoon at 2 and night at 8. Newly constructed storm proof tents have been secured, which protect the audiences at all times from the elements.—adv.

Lemuel Was Wrong—He Came Back Next Day

WASHINGTON—Lemuel, unable into the marriage license office the other day wearing his workaday clothes.

"Does I get my license here?" Lemuel wanted to know.

"You do," responded the clerk.

"And you," said Lemuel with dignity, "you make it out for me."

He subsequently gave answers to the various form questions presented to him. And when this was concluded he reached for the paper which he had signed.

"Not yet," said the clerk gently, "not yet. You must take the oath and pay the dollar."

"Take the oath?" said Lemuel.

"Man, what kind of oath is that?"

"And you," said Lemuel in a pained voice, "after I take that oath I gotta pay a dollar besides?"

"It is the law," said the clerk.

Lemuel turned toward the door.

"I reckon I'll wait till next year," he stated. "I didn't reckon when I came to get married you white folks would make me do all that work."

But Lemuel was wrong. He didn't wait until next year. He came next day. And at the outside door of the courthouse the voice of his future bride could be heard as she dragged him toward the office. And these were her soft sentiments:

"Now, you triflin' no-account, you all gimme dat dollah or I'll pay for de license. And if you don't tak' dat oath right I'll bar' you when I get outside sho' I live!"

So the reporter drifted into the marriage license office and saw Lemuel obediently take the oath—after his future spouse had elaborately laid down the dollar.

HIS GOOD ADVISER

By MILDRED CAROLINE GOODRIDGE

"Blunderhead!" angrily exclaimed the bookkeeper of Ransom & Co.

"Look before you leap, Danny," in sweet coaxing contrast followed the tones of the office stenographer, Nellie Deane.

"With I could. Guess I'll go stambling through life just this same old way," growled Danny Stiles.

"You was my sister. I'd get out of here if it wasn't for you—yes, I would."

The electric button on the desk of the stenographer, sounded an appeal just then. It was from Mr. Ransom's office. Hastily Nellie swept into a drawer—or rather fished the swept into it—several pages of a letter she had been writing to her sister. One of the sheets, however, had slipped unnoticed over the edge of the desk and had fallen among a vast litter on the floor beside it.

Danny had precipitated the overflow of the waste paper basket only a few seconds previously. He had stumbled over it in the exercise of that extraordinary ability of his to deserve the common nickname of "Blunderhead."

Danny was simply chronically irretrievably clumsy. When he raised a window he generally smashed it. When he moved a chair he usually tipped it over. When he ran to attend to some urgent office call he stumbled over a rug or the linoleum.

"That that bookkeeper!" muttered Danny with a daggers look at crusty old Collins. "As to Sweetie—that's what I call her and that's just what she is—if I ever amount to anything it will be her kind ways to me that did it. She's pretty as a picture and good as gold. Yes, and I'll bet the boss knows it!" chuckled Danny wisely.

If "the boss," young Alden Ransom, knew it, however, he had spoken no word to convey the impression to his really competent stenographer. It was true that many times, even as just now, when Nellie sat in his private office taking dictation, it had been a relief from business cares and a positive pleasure to look at the delicate expressive face of the young girl and appreciate her buoyant accommodating ways and quick intelligence. If there was the dawning of love in the companionship, however, it was on the part of Nellie herself. In fact, she had just written the fact to her sister. And because she felt a growing fondness for her kindly indulgent employer she had decided to sever a tie that it might be difficult to break, later on by leaving the pleasant employ of Ransom & Co.

Meanwhile Danny had gathered up the letter on the floor of the main office and was cogitating over the great precept of wisdom that Miss Deane had sought to inculcate.

"Look before you leap," Danny repeated the axiom. "That fits me. Sweetie is a good adviser and I'm going to adopt that as my motto."

Danny picked a sheet of paper from the waste paper basket, folded it, took a stub of a pencil from his pocket and proceeded to diligently and laboriously place the appealing axiom upon its surface. He stowed the folded paper in his pocket as if it were some valued talisman and an unfailing remedy against blundering.

More than once during the rest of the day Danny consulted his creed. Then that night when he went to bed, he found he had learned his motto by heart and took out the sheet of paper to place it in a bureau drawer when he chanced to open it.

"Whew!" he ejaculated as he peered the inside of the sheet. "Why, it's part of a letter Sweetie has written to some relative or friend and—whillikens! she's in love with the boss!"

Yes, that was certain. Miss Deane had written to her sister that Mr. Ransom had attracted her as never any man before. But she realized that gulf between them, showed due humility in not construing his little acts of kindness into any marked attentions and was going to seek another position.

"Why, if she leaves Ransom & Co. Jim—lost!" wailed Danny. "Why, if she leaves Ransom & Co. Jim—lost!" wailed Danny. "Why, if she leaves Ransom & Co. Jim—lost!" wailed Danny.

35 BUSHELS PER ACRE
was the yield of WHEAT

160 ACRES
WESTERN CANADA
FREE

On many farms in Western Canada in 1913, some yields being reported as high as 30 bushels per acre. As high as 100 bushels were recorded in some districts for oats, and from 10 to 20 bus. for flax.

J. Keys arrived in the country 8 years ago from Denmark with very little means. He homesteaded, worked hard, and now the owner of 160 acres of land, in 1913 had a crop of 30 bushels of wheat, which will realize him about $4,000. His wheat weighed 56 lbs. to the bushel and averaged over 35 bushels to the acre.

Thousands of similar instances might be related of the homesteaders in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

The crop of 1913 was an abundant one everywhere in Western Canada.

Hats Backgrounds for Gay Flowers

THE milliner may go forth and gather what she will, for Fashion has supplied her garden with all sorts of flowers and ribbons and inconsequential but alluring fabrics. Her path is strewn with roses and other things which may be most agreeably united into such expressions of youth and pleasant weather as the pretty hats shown here bespeak.

It happens that black maline makes a background for gay flowers which allows those who dream out our hats to put many sorts and colors together. Black tempers the color-riot and proves an inspiration to the dreamer. One such inspiration accounts for the excellence of the hat of black hemp with facing of knife-plaited maline in which a bouquet of roses and jasmine find a resting place.

The shape is flat, an almost crownless model set on a wide bandeau. There is a wreath of small half-blown roses laid about the juncture of the brim and crown, or what may pass for a crown. A little to the left of the front the brim lifts in a sharp point, and where it droops at the right it is weighted with a rosette of black ribbon with the ends fastened to the band.

The shape is not worn at the extreme angle which many wearers like for similar shapes. But the sharp droop of the brim serves the same purpose as such an angle; it makes the right underbrim a background against which at least a part of the profile is silhouetted. And at the left side there is an opportunity to study the pretty dressing of the hair.

An extreme of the mode, but a pleasing example of it, rivals the black hat. It is made of maline and lace trimmed with forget-me-nots. The big rosette of narrow velvet ribbon mounted at the right supports two blossoms of the cape jasmine flower. One of them overhangs the brim, drooping to the shoulder.

This hat is managed in its curious pose by the way in which the brim is placed on the crown. In reality the crown sets almost squarely on the head. But the impression one gets of this bit of fancy headwear is that it is about to slide off at the left side. It is a rakish little affair for a frivolous mood such as belongs to those who go a-peasuring in the good old summer-time.

Her Own Sweet Will in Auto Hats

MORE independence in the matter of headwear than is evident in any other of their diversions and occupations is shown by women who spend much time in the auto. Silk bonnets and chiffon veils for the long tour made a good start in the race for popular favor in the spring, but no one style or material actually achieved a lead.

Silk braids sewed row on row to foundations of crinoline or net, and stayed with one, or at most two, small wires, make it possible to develop a hat in any color. Besides these "made" hats the soft hemp and similar shapes that come in such immense variety ready made, present many shapes designed for the autoist.

Those auto hats showing a combination of braid brim and silk crown may be depended upon for comfort and durability, and they are as becoming as any of the all-braid hats. Two designs of this kind are shown in the picture given here.

One of these has a moderately close-fitting crown of silk. A group of plaits extends across it from front to back. The brim of hemp braid turns back and is finished with a side plaiting of narrow ribbon matching the silk in color. At each side and toward the back straps of silk hold the long chif-fon veil in place when it is adjusted to the bonnet.

The other hat, of silk and braid, has a small puffed crown of silk with a broad band of hemp braid extending about it. The brim is like that in the hat just described. There is a little flat bow of braid, used in the manner of ribbon, at the front. These flat bows of straw or heavy silk braid or of folded ribbons are most appropriate on auto hats.

Two of the remaining hats are made of silk-ber millinery braids, and the remaining one is a pressed shape of hemp. A glance at them shows the extreme simplicity of trimming which is allowed the auto hat.

The most satisfactory veil is a large square of hemstitched chiffon. Smoke color and green are about the most satisfactory in point of color, but the veil of washable crepe chiffon, in deep cream color, has many loyal adherents, who find its washable qualities the best of charms. One can wash and dry it over night and it is ready for use next morning as good as new.

Lisle thread gloves have the same advantageous qualities for the autoist. There is an inspiration in their freshness and the knowledge that they are clean.

HAD THE PICTURE'S MEANING

Spectator at Least Formed Some Idea What Famous Painting Represented.

Two men stood before a painting in a store the other day gazing wonderingly at a picture of an equestrian statue of General Lafayette. The famous Frenchman was represented on a prancing steed. Over his arm he carried a robe. At his feet stood an allegorical figure of Victory extending a sword toward him as a mark of homage. "I wonder what that picture means," said one of the men. "I don't know," replied the other. "I was just trying to make out what season of the year it was when a woman could go around with so little clothing while a man was dressed up in a heavy suit like that. 'Oh, I see what it is now,' cried the first man. 'You see the soldier stole the woman's cloak and when he took it from her he dropped his sword and now the woman is trying to trade him back the sword for her clothes.'"

ECZEMA ITCHED AND BURNED

R. F. D. No. 2, Seymour, Mo.—"My scalp broke out with fine pimples at the start. They itched and burned so much that I was compelled to scratch them and they would fester and come to a head and break out again. The trouble was attended by such burning and itching I could not sleep, also when I sweat it burned the same. My hair fell out gradually and the scalp kept rough and dry with itching and burning. After about two years the pimples broke out between my shoulders. My clothing irritated them. I was troubled with that eczema five or six years.

The Noblest Arms.
We may talk what we please of lilies, and lions rampant, and spread eagles in fields d'or or d'argent; but, if heraldry were guided by reason, a plow in a field or arable would be the most noble and ancient arms.—Abraham Cowley.

New Modern Dancing.
The leading expert and instructor in New York City, writes: "Dear Sir:—I have used ALLEN'S FOOT-PAINTER, the antiseptic powder to be shaken into the shoes, for the past ten years. It is a blessing to all who are compelled to be on their feet. I dance eight or ten hours daily, and find that ALLEN'S FOOT-PAINTER keeps my feet cool, takes the friction from the shoes, prevents corns and blisters. I recommend it to all my pupils." (Signed) R. WESTERN CANADA'S NATURAL RESOURCES

PETROLEUM, NATURAL GAS, COAL AND FARM LANDS.

The developments that have taken place recently in the oil and gas fields of Western Canada have but added another to the many previous evidences that have been produced, showing the great wealth that has been an unknown asset for so many generations.

The latest reports from the oil fields at Calgary show that there is a production there that would appear to equal the best paying fields on the continent. Experts have been on the ground for some time. It is said that one of the wells is able to produce 2,000 gallons an hour. If this is so there are but about a dozen wells in the world of greater production. During the past week discoveries of surface indications have been made which show that oil exists over a considerable portion of Alberta and Saskatchewan, while in Manitoba there have also been showings. At Battleford, Saskatchewan, a few days ago discoveries were made which led to the filing for leases on twenty thousand acres of land, all having strong surface indications. Companies were formed to carry on immediate work, and in a couple of months, or probably less, the story will be told whether oil exists in paying quantities.

But there are also the coal deposits and the natural gas deposits that are helping to make of Western Canada one of the wealthiest portions of the continent.

With the grain fields covering these hidden riches it is no wonder that a continued range of optimism is to be seen everywhere. Early reports of seeding of all grains being successfully completed all over the country are followed by reports of excellent and strong growth everywhere. During the first week in June most of the wheat had reached a growth of from twelve to twenty inches, with the most even appearance, almost universally, that has been seen for years. Oats appeared equally well, and covered the ground in a way that brought the broadest kind of a grin to overspread the farmer's countenance.

Barley, a favorite with the hog raisers, had taken good root, and was crowding oats for a first place, as to length of shoot. Cultivated fodder grasses are getting great attention, as a consequence of the inclination to go more largely into mixed farming, and the raising of hogs, cattle and horses. The weather is reported fine, just what is needed, and it presents favorable conditions continue, the grain crop of Western Canada for 1914 will be the largest average in the history of the country.—Advertisement.

WOMEN CAN HARDLY BELIEVE

How Mrs. Hurley Was Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Eldon, Mo.—"I was troubled with displacement, inflammation and female weakness. For two years I could not stand on my feet long at a time and I could not walk two blocks without enduring cutting and drawing pains down my right side which increased every month. I have been at that time purple in the face and would walk the floor. I could not lie down or sit still sometimes for a day and a night at a time. I was nervous, and had very little appetite, no ambition, melancholy, and often felt as though I had not a friend in the world. After I had tried most every female remedy without success, my mother-in-law advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did so and gained in strength every day. I have now no trouble in any way and highly praise your medicine. It advertises itself."—Mrs. S. T. HURLEY, Eldon, Missouri.
