NEW INDUSTRY

Detroit Wagner Auto Spring Wheel Co. Purchase Plant Factory Building.

The factory building of the National Heat Fuel Co. has been purchased by the Detroit Wagner Auto Spring Wheel Co. and a new industry will be established in Chelsea as soon as the necessary machinery can be installed.

The Detroit Wagner Auto Spring Wheel Co. have sold to H. Rosenthal all of the machinery, boilers and brick work in the interior of the building and he has a force of men at work removing the material. Mr. Rosenthal has sold 11,000 of the bricks to Wm. Wheeler who will use them in a new garage which he will build at his home the coming summer.

The Spring Wheel Co. retained all of the line shafting, engine and steam pumps. A new boiler is to be installed and the factory will be operated by electricity when it is put into operation. It is reported that the wheel which the company will manufacture has proved a success and that there is a good demand for the wheel by the manufacturers of autos.

The new factory will undoubtedly furnish employment for quite a force of men when it is ready to commence operations.

Taught Same Class Thirty Years

Miss Mary Smith, of east Middle street, has made a record as a Sunday school teacher that is not attained by many. On Sunday, January 31, 1915, she will have completed thirty years as a teacher in the Congregational Sunday school.

Miss Smith will entertain her class, which numbers about 60, at her home on east Middle street, Friday evening of this week. The names of the members of the original class are as follows:

Mrs. D. H. Wurster, Mrs. Frank Storms, Mrs. S. A. Mapes, Mrs. J. W. VanRiper, Miss Nen Wilkinson, Miss Edith Spaulding (deceased), of Chelsea; Mrs. Ellsworth Fletcher, of Mason; Mrs. C. J. Chandler, Mrs. M. J. Emmett, of Detroit; Mrs. John O. Thompson, of Dexter; Mrs. Helen Cady, of Jackson; Mrs. John Williams, of Payallup Valley, Washington.

The reunion of teacher and pupils will be a very interesting event. A program will be rendered, the roll will be called and a luncheon to be served. It is expected that most of members of the class will be present at this anniversary gathering.

A Strenuous Experience

An auto party had a rather strenuous experience last Saturday night. The party consisted of two ladies and two gentlemen, and they left Jackson early in the evening for Detroit and arrived in Chelsea about six o'clock Sunday morning. They were detained in a snow drift near the home of Mrs. S. Tyndal, of Sylvan, for three hours, and previous to that they had had all kinds of trouble with the chains on the tires of the machine.

When the party reached the intersection of Main and Middle streets a tire on one of the rear wheels blew out and the driver had to replace it while the thermometer stood at about eight below zero.

This car has been making a daily endurance run from Detroit to Jackson for the past few weeks and recently the drivers of the machine had a similar experience near the same point where they were caught Saturday night.

Miss Eleanor J. Cowell

Miss Eleanor J. Cowell, of Castalia, Ohio, died at the home of Rev. and Mrs. C. J. Dole, Friday evening, January 22, 1915, aged 77 years, 10 months and 8 days.

Miss Cowell who was an aunt of Mrs. Dole was brought here about the first of this month from her home in Castalia following a serious illness. She has been in poor health but her death came as a shock to the entire family. The remains were taken to her former home for burial Monday.

The Liver Regulates The Body, a Stagnant Liver Needs Care.

Someone has said that people with chronic liver complaints should be shut away from humanity, for they are pessimists and see through a "yellow darkness." Why? Because mental states depend upon physical states. Biliousness, headaches, dizziness and constipation disappear after using Dr. King's New Life Pills. 25c at your druggist. Adv.

FORTY YEARS AGO

Happenings in Chelsea Forty Years Ago This Week.

J. B. Billings and his hardware business to Godfrey & McAllister, of Parma.

Mrs. Edward Savage, aged 22 years, died at her home in Sylvan Monday, January 23, 1875.

Tichenor & Burgher opened a new grocery store in the building formerly occupied by Chas. Tichenor as a feed store.

Sheriff Fleming appointed W. W. Sommer turkey at the jail in Ann Arbor and O. N. Allen deputy sheriff, both of Chelsea.

Ordered Out of Town

Deputy Sheriff Brooks and Marshal Cooper took J. Lee Raddon, a solicitor for funds for The United Volunteers, located at 150 Huron street, Detroit, before Justice E. D. Withersell, for an examination, Wednesday afternoon.

Raddon landed in Chelsea early in the morning and during the day he collected $15.50 in cash which he secured from a house to house canvass. Some of those who had contributed to the fund complained to the officers when they saw Raddon making calls at the saloons. The United Volunteers is a charitable institution which uses the funds for the care of children, working girls and women. After an interview with the managers of the institution Raddon admitted that he had taken as few glasses of liquor. He was given a sound talk and warned to get out of town as soon as possible.

Well Attended Meeting

The Washtenaw County Association of the L. O. T. M. M. held a meeting in Dexter last Thursday. There were over two hundred present at the morning session from the Hives of this county. Dr. Isabella Holdom, the great medical examiner of the order was present.

During the regular routine of business it was decided to hold a basket picnic at Whitmore Lake July 4th, plans for which will be made at the next meeting of the Association which will be in Milan in May, the Mooreville and Milan Hives entertaining.

The ladies of Columbian Hive, of Chelsea, exemplified the regular initiatory work in an impressive manner which was instructive to all. A dinner was served at noon in the Macabees hall. The afternoon session opened at 1:30 with over 400 present.

Mrs. Fannie Blake, chairman of the committee, reported that Whitmore Lake, having 32 per cent of its membership present, was entitled to the honor banner. This report was enthusiastically received by all as the ladies from that Hive had driven 12 miles with the thermometer near zero to reach Dexter.

The members of Columbian Hive of this place, who have had the honor banner of the Association for the last three months surrendered it in a very graceful manner to the Whitmore Lake Hive. A number of exhibition drills were put on. A good sized class from the Hives of the county were given a public initiation.

Celebrated Ninetieth Birthday

A very pleasant surprise party took place at the home of Robert Foster and his daughter, Miss Lillian, on west Middle street, Monday afternoon of this week. The occasion was in honor of the 90th anniversary of his birth.

Mr. Foster was born in England and has been a well known resident of this vicinity for the last seventy-one years. He is active as a man of fifty years of age and enjoys excellent health.

Twenty-seven of his relatives and friends met at his home and a bounteous dinner was served. Mr. Foster received a number of gifts as a remembrance of the event. The affair was a very enjoyable one.

The Methodist Sunday school gave Mr. Foster a beautiful bouquet at the services Sunday.

The out-of-town guests were Miss Munson and Albert Rosington, of Howell, and Mrs. G. I. Hammond, of Bannister.

Colds Are Often Most Serious—Stop Possible Complications.

The disregard of a cold has often brought many a regret. The fact of sneezing, coughing, or a fever should be warning enough that your system needs immediate attention. Certainly loss of sleep is most serious. It is a warning given by nature. It is man's duty to himself to assist by doing his part. Resolutions

Whereas, the silent reaper, death, having entered our Grange and taken from our midst our worthy and beloved sister, Mrs. E. H. Keyes, we feel that we have lost a dear friend and that she will be missed by many for her kindness, good cheer and counsel. Therefore, be it resolved that we extend our heartfelt sympathy to her family and other near relatives, be leaving our esteemed sister has gone to her better home. We bow in humble submission to God's will, for his ways are above comprehension and what we lose is her eternal gain.

Resolved, that our Grange has lost a faithful member, a friend to all, one who will be missed not only by our Grange members, but by the community.

Resolved, that a copy of these resolutions be sent to her bereaved family, along with the local papers for publication and be spread upon the Lafayette Grange records.

Coughs of Children

Especially night coughs. Nature needs a little help to quiet the irritation, control the inflammation, check the progress of the disease. Our advice is—give the children Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Ask your doctor if this is his advice also. He knows best. Do as he says.

We publish our formulas. We banish alcohol from our medicines. We urge you to consult your doctor.

If you think constipation is of trifling consequence, just ask your doctor. He will dissuade you of that notion in short order. "Correct it, at once!" he will say. Then ask him about Ayer's Pills. A mild liver pill, all vegetable.

TWO YEARS' WAR, DECLARES EDISON

Days of Thirty Years' Contest
Passed, Says Wizard.

SUBMARINES ARE EFFECTIVE

Their Exploits Teach Lessons In Building of Battleships—Boom In Business Here to Be Tremendous After the War—Worry? Think of the Kaiser!

"The year 1914 dealt a staggering blow to civilization, the arts and the sciences," said Thomas A. Edison at his laboratory in West Orange. "But civilization will recover from the blow very soon after the war ends."

"And that will be?" asked a correspondent of the New York World.

"Not for two years, I fear," said the great inventor. "This war has taught the world that the killing of men in war is a scientific proposition now. With all the implements of destruction and plans for offensive and defensive operations so carefully mapped out and with the great number of men that can be drawn into the fray by both sides, the conflict will be long drawn out."

"There have been wars that have lasted thirty years, but those days are past. Killing men is a different proposition today, but I believe the present struggle will not end for at least two years, although I pray it will end sooner than any of us expects."

Mr. Edison added that the submarine has been the greatest offensive instrument in the world conflict and said:

"While the submarine has not obviated the necessity of the Dreadnought, it surely has lessened its value. But you can bet the ships England is constructing now are so built that they will be protected against submarine torpedoes. The effect of a primary explosion can be greatly minimized by the interior construction of a Dreadnought, and this, in all likelihood, is being done by the allies now."

The hearty old gentleman, from whose pockets the destruction of his plant by fire took $3,000,000 a short time ago, seemed entirely happy.

"Did your loss persuade you to make any New Year's resolutions?" he was asked.

"Worry? Think of the Kaiser! 'Resolutions?' he repeated. 'Non sense! Years ago I formed my rules of life and I have adhered to them. The chief of them all is 'Work.' No, the loss of the money does not worry me. Nothing was burned that cannot be replaced. I was up against a harder proposition when we built the first electric lighting plant in New York. It was something new—electric lighting—then, a fortune had been invested and the whole world was awaiting the outcome. Everything depended upon the success of that plant, but as a result of it the world has become electrically illuminated at night, as it was."

"When any one talks about worry he might apply my new standard of worry. Just think of the Kaiser, now on the defensive, with nearly 900 miles of battlefield, all told, on the east and west. Why, the average man's worries sink into insignificance compared to this. Another standard of disaster is Belgium—little, gritty Belgium!"

"It has surprised me to see how Americans have become weakened over this war. They seem to be stricken with a sort of commercial paralysis. They want to get out and do something; now is the opportune time. Why, you can put a building up cheaper today than you could before the war, and yet many of our supposed good business men will wait until the war is over as a sign of prosperity and pay more for the building. The wise man will prepare now for the boom in trade that we will soon experience and which will be tremendous after the war."

A Belgian War Romance

By LOUISE B. CUMMINGS

One quiet evening in the summer of 1913 a pair of young lovers stood on a bridge that crossed the river Lys in Belgium. They were there for a parting. The young man was to leave for the coast early the next morning and thence for America. Nothing could be more peaceful than the scene about them. A young moon stood in the west. If an occasional breeze stirred the leaves on the trees they were stirred lightly. As for sound, there was only a slight gurgle beneath them as the current passed the abutment of the bridge.

"Mina," said the young man, "cheer up. It will not be long before in America I shall have saved enough money to send for you. That we may have a definite time to be reunited I promise you that one year from today, if not before, you shall receive the passage money to bring you to me."

"And I, Hans, will work and save so that if you do not succeed in gaining enough to send for me I may have enough for the journey."

When the year had passed a great change had come over Belgium. The Germans were pouring into the country from the east, the French from the south. Wilhelm had received letters from her lover in New York that money would be sent her for her passage.

sage, but before it was dispatched the war had stopped the mails.

On the anniversary of their parting, at evening, Wilhelmina went to the bridge on which they had stood a year before. It was now a ruin, more than half of it having been destroyed. Here and there across the fields were flashes followed by a distant roar of guns. While searchlights sent their columns of light across the sky like the tails of comets.

What should she do? Her home had been that day in the line of fire and was a ruin. Before leaving it she had snatched up her savings, and these she had with her. Standing there in the identical spot where she had stood in quiet with her lover, she resolved to go to him if possible.

There was no way of announcing her coming beforehand. She had neither writing materials nor a way to send a letter. Indeed, it was doubtful if even she could break through the line of war to reach the coast. And if she arrived at a port would she find a vessel? Nevertheless she turned her face toward Holland and set off in the dark night.

Her adventures are a long story by itself. Fortune favoring, she reached Rotterdam in safety and there found that she had the means to buy a steerage ticket on an outgoing steamer to New York.

On the arrival of the vessel the emigrants were landed at Ellis island, and Wilhelmina among others was brought before the emigration commissioners. There she was asked how she would be provided for in America, and when she said that she had no money she was told that she would be sent back to Holland.

Her modesty, the consciousness that she was coming to marry a man without a special bidding, had caused her to conceal what she expected. Besides, suppose Hans had changed! But the prospect of being sent back to a land running in blood, where even the little home in which she had been born and always lived had been leveled, overcame her reticence, and she told a love story that no pen, however inspired, could put on paper.

"Hans must be found!"

Such were the instructions given to a messenger, who departed on his errand.

There is a committee of Belgians in New York whose purpose it is to look after their incoming fellow countrymen. The head of the committee was found, and he in turn started a hunt for Hans.

Ever since the war had broken out Hans had been anxious about his Wilhelmina. He had not dared to send her his savings for fear they would be lost. Indeed, one of the troubles brought on by the war was the inability to send funds to Europe. He had written her, but without expectation that she would receive his letters. As to receiving letters from her, he had no faith in that either.

Hans was at work one afternoon when a fellow workman came to him and told him that the boss wished to see him in the office. Hans laid down his tools and reported as directed. He found beside the boss a man, who asked him:

"Are you Hans Wichtel?"

"I am."

"There is a girl on Ellis island who came over from Belgium. She says you will marry her."

"Mina?"

"She says her name is Wilhelmina."

"Marry her? Of course I will marry her. Where can I find her?"

Hans wished to go at once to Ellis island, but suddenly remembering that a man in overalls was not in wedding costume fitted himself up, then set off to join his sweetheart.

If the authorities had any doubt about Wilhelmina's story it was dispelled by the fervent embrace of the lovers. But Uncle Sam's emigrant officials take no man's promise of marriage, and there are no breaches of promise in his large family. A man went with the couple to the city hall in New York, where a license was procured. Then the pair went to the office of the Belgian committee, where the marriage ceremony was performed.

LIVE SNAKE IN HER STOMACH

X Ray Reveals Reptile—Removed Without Operation.

Madison, Wis.—One of the most unusual cases in the history of local medicine was revealed at a local hospital, when physicians, submitting a woman from Waukegan, Dane county, to an X ray examination, discovered that her stomach contained a live snake six inches long.

The woman had not suffered any pain up to the time of the discovery, but was greatly distressed when told of the result of the examination. The snake was removed without operating. It proved to be a reptile commonly known as the grass snake, nearly pure white. The hospital authorities refused to make any statement regarding the case.

Cheap Vegetable Dye.

Country housekeepers may dye beautiful shades of brown by drying and using the green and brown moss and lichens that in some sections grow almost everywhere on rocks, fallen trees and fences. Boil the moss in enough water to rather more than cover it. Strain the liquid and put it on the goods. For light shades only a short time is required. For darker shades leave longer in the dye. If left in a very long time the color will deepen until it is almost black. This vegetable dye is fast. It will not fade as do so many brown dyes. Try on small pieces of goods first.

The Smart Sash.

The new sash is made of chiffon or messaline. It is draped very high in front and plaited in fan effect. In the back it is very simply knotted, and the ends, which are cut diagonally, hang exactly the same length on both sides.

HOW TO FRAME PICTURES.

Water color pictures usually look well in narrow gilt frames. A narrow mat of cream, white or gilt usually brings out the colors. Often, however, a silver gray or green frame, sometimes one of light brown, flat and not heavy in appearance, is fitted to good advantage.

The tendency now is to frame most pictures with little or no mats. The color and quality of prints, either colored, brown or black, are best brought out with the frame set close against the print. When a mat must be used have it in a color that harmonizes with the tone of the picture.

A photograph printed in sepia tones or any of the sepia prints is best framed in brown wood. Usually, according to present day standards, a flat simple frame looks best, although one of carved wood or turned wood can be used. Sometimes the Florentine wood frames that travelers to Florence buy and bring home by the yard can be effectively used on brown prints. They are especially in keeping on a copy of some old Italian picture in brown. But usually a simple, unornamented frame is more effective.

GAMBLERS HAVE NO MONEY.

Opening on a Small Scale Is Planned, and Few Americans Are Expected to Be Present—Interest in War Overshadows Excitement of Games, but a Few Visitors Are Now Expected.

London.—The Times prints the following interesting article from its correspondent at Monte Carlo describing war conditions in the gaming capital: "According to established precedent the gambling season should open at Monte Carlo in the fall. Then all the officials of the casino, from the guards of the outer courts to the least of the detectives that stand behind the croupiers, begin to take note of the first gathering of worshippers at the shrine of the tickle goddess. But Monte Carlo has suffered the common fate.

MILITARY AIRPLANE FLYING OVER DEEP SEA MUSEUM AT MONTE CARLO.

For the moment its accustomed business and pleasures have sunk to trivial insignificance, all forgotten in humanity's urgent issues of life and death.

"On Nov. 15 of last year, at the hour when in normal times the world of frivolous sport and fashion would be moving toward its palace of golden dreams, I sat outside the Cafe de Paris reflecting on the whirligig of times and the pitiful destinies of man which had made this for once an appropriate and comfortable place for meditation. No jarring note, disturbed the bourgeois peace of that enchanting garden between the Alps and the sea which all Europe in its idle moments associates with riotous living.

"No noise or smell of motorcar marred the Sabbath serenity of the scene. The monotonous plaint of M. Blanc's well fed doves was distinctly audible right across the place. A group of earnest citizens was gathered about the bulletin boards absorbing the latest news from the seat of war. Nowhere was there any sign of Petrograd or Chicago, London or Paris in pursuit of excitement.

"Making my way through the solemn place where magisterial clerks are wont to scrutinize the apparel and social standing of applicants for cards of admission to the casino, I observed that a large portion of its space was occupied by a very excellent map of Europe, all neatly decked with many colored flags, while above it hung several striking specimens of the French cartoonist's conceptions of the personality and proceedings of his majesty the Emperor William, from which I gathered that, despite all previous experience to the contrary, the croupier, too, is human and that even in this independent principality of Monaco the flowing tide of war on the fields of Flanders is a matter more absorbing than the fortunes of chance.

"Nor is this surprising when one learns that out of the 800 employees of the casino nearly 300 are now serving France with the colors. The rest have been retained in the service of the company at temporarily reduced rates. Until a month ago there seemed to be little prospect of the casino's opening for play this season, but it has now been decided to make a beginning at the Sporting club.

"M. Blanc fully realizes that whatever business the establishment may do will be nominal, at least until the Germans are driven out of France. Nevertheless he believes in opening the casino not only in the interests of his shareholders, but because the prosperity of the Riviera depends to a considerable extent on the money spent there by the habitual frequenters of Monte Carlo. By nature optimistic and a firm believer in the force of habit in human nature, the president of the Conseil d'Administration expects that, notwithstanding the war, some of the casino's usual clientele will come from Russia, South America, the United States and England.

"The consensus of opinion on the subject at Nice and Mentone appears to be that the class of visitors who will be attracted to the Riviera this winter in search of rest and sunshine will not contribute many subscribers to the salons drives of the casino."

"BEAUTY ON BUSINESS BASIS"

New Slogan For Making National Parks Self Supporting.

Washington.—Development of the economic, as well as the aesthetic value of the national parks of the country, is the policy of Mark Daniels, newly appointed superintendent of national parks in the department of the interior.

Through the operation of a carefully worked out plan Mr. Daniels believes that not only can the national reservations eventually become self supporting, but that the picturesque value will be enhanced rather than destroyed by the placing of "beauty on a business basis." Briefly, the plan of the new superintendent contemplates the establishment of a "model village" in each of the large parks or in so many of them as the patronage will justify. In discussing his plan Mr. Daniels said:

"There is no doubt in my mind but that the national parks should be placed on a self supporting basis. The people will in time refuse to support the parks, and we should therefore take advantage of the revenue producing elements of the national reservations.

"My plan is simply to broaden the field for concession and to lay down simple building regulations to be followed by the concessionaries, which will preclude the possibility of the erection of buildings not harmonious with the scenic beauty of the parks."

The Claimant

By EUNICE BLAKE

On the estate of Lucien Marivaud, in France, lived a poor man named Soube and his wife, Marie, the couple having a little son, Francois. M. Marivaud had extensive vineyards, from the product of which he manufactured wine. Soube had charge of the grape growing, and Marivaud not only valued his services highly, but was very fond of him. Soube's wife died, and he soon followed her, leaving little Francois without a home.

M. Marivaud had a son, Victor, about Francois' age. When the latter was left an orphan he was taken to the chateau and became a playmate of Victor. There was a brother of Victor, Louis, much younger than either of these two boys.

When Victor was eighteen he entered the military school and became an army officer. Upon graduating he was ordered to join his regiment in Tonkin. Francois was anxious to see service and, enlisting in the same regiment, went out with Victor, who agreed to interest himself in his promotion that he might become an officer.

A year later after a fight Lieutenant Marivaud was reported missing. This meant that he had fallen into the hands of the Chinese, in which case it was quite likely that he had been murdered. When nothing was heard from him for several years he was given up by his family, and when his brother, Louis, came of age he inherited the family patrimony, his father having died without a will. M. Marivaud had purposely omitted to make one because he never ceased to hope that his son would one day turn out to be among the living.

Ten years after the departure of Victor Marivaud, when there was no member of the family living, Louis, who had for some time possessed and managed the wine business, became engaged to Hortense Villaret, the daughter of a neighbor. Mlle. Villaret belonged to an aristocratic family, but the estate had been confiscated during one of the many changes in the sovereignty of France, and she was very poor. She and Louis were much in love with each other, and her father favored the match because Louis was wealthy and could enable Hortense to return to the style of living to which the family had formerly been accustomed.

All went happily for the lovers till a few weeks before the day set for the wedding. Then one day a man appeared at the chateau claiming to be Victor Marivaud. Louis was but twelve years old when his brother left home and, granting that this man was Victor, he would not have remembered him. There was no other person at hand who had been familiar with Victor to identify him.

But the claimant was able to tell of many incidents that had happened on the estate, which went far to prove that he was what he claimed to be. He explained his long absence in this wise: During the fight in which he was reported missing he was knocked on the head by the butt of a musket in the hands of a Chinaman and stunned. When he came to himself he remembered nothing of the past, not even his name. The dead were lying about him; the wounded had been removed. He arose and walked till he came to a city, where he eventually entered the service of a French merchant. After passing through various vicissitudes he was taken suddenly ill and was removed to a hospital. After having been delirious on returning to his former condition he had exclaimed, "You rascally Chinaman, take that for yours!" But seeing a nurse before him instead of a Chinaman he appeared much surprised. He had returned to a normal state, remembering that he was Victor Marivaud.

His appearance was a terrible blow to the lovers, for, according to the French law of inheritance, Victor Marivaud was the owner of the estate, including the wine business. He told Louis so many things that had occurred during the latter's childhood that Louis became convinced that the stranger was his brother. Nevertheless it was not to be expected that he would be pleased to see a brother of whom he had no remembrance and who would dispossess him of his property. But the severest blow was that M. Villaret immediately withdrew his consent to his daughter's marriage unless it could be proved that the claimant was an impostor.

There was an old blind woman living on the place, who, on hearing of the claimant, desired that he be brought to her. She asked him a few questions, which seemed to trouble him, though he answered them correctly. Then the old woman directed that he be uncovered to the waist. This was done, and her hand was guided to his chest. She slid her hand around to his side under his right arm, and it rested on a small lump the size of a pea.

"This is Francois Soube," she said. "I lived with his mother when he was a little boy and often dressed and undressed him. I know him by this lump."

That ended the pretense. Louis Marivaud after this attempt to impose on him went to Tonkin and made a search for his brother, Victor. But, although he spent much time on the matter, he failed to obtain any information whatever. Victor never returned.

METALLIC TRIMMINGS.

Pearls are being used a great deal for embroideries again.

Beaded and metallic trimmings are favored for evening gowns.

Tassels and separate ornaments and draps of bright spangles are frequently used on dancing frocks and dressy blouses.

Beaded fringes in crystal and silver and also in colors of blue, green and brown in width up to eight inches are used for edging tunics and dancing dresses.

Dainty and light are the opalescent or radium spangles appearing in almost all trimmings, but especially in flouncings. They are used alone or in combination with crystals or pearls. Passementerie motifs in triangular and wedge shaped effects in smart color combinations are used on semi-fitted blouses. Fancy buttons with loops are also used for basque decoration.

Beard fringe is very much in vogue and is used to border the tunics of dance frocks of sheer materials. Wide scarf sashes worn low over the hips have the ends finished with bead fringe to match the tunics or large tassels fashioned of the beads.

MODISH BLOUSES.

The jumper blouse is a much favored design.

Blouses show decided tailored tendencies.

The beaded blouse is fashion's latest offering.

The new blouses have closer fitting set in sleeves.

Many of the new blouses are trimmed with fluted lace.

The very cool cut blouse is going out of fashion for street wear.

White crepe de chine blouses are trimmed with striped pique.

The correct morning or afternoon blouse at present is of striped material.

Paris has designed a new blouse in cape effect. It is a combination of blouse and bolero.

Very smart is the lace blouse with roman striped silk bodice that covers all but the sleeves and the décolletage.

HINTS WORTH REMEMBERING.

To clean iron shake some borax over a square of sandpaper. Rub your iron on it and you will find it cleans and waxes at the same time.

To economize on stove polish and save labor in polishing the stove, mix the polishing paste with dry soap powder. Any sort of soap powder answers the purpose, and the shine obtained is far better than when the polish alone is used.

To remove chocolate stains from white dresses or table linen sprinkle the stain thickly with borax, place a saucer beneath it and pour on just enough water to moisten. Leave for several hours and then wash.

DUSTING A ROOM.

There's No Necessity to Make This Work Unpleasant Drudgery.

The invention of the dustless duster has helped to solve the problem of how to get the dust out of the house without raising more than dusting is worth.

But the dustless duster must be watched and washed and renewed often to afford the satisfaction it ought, and even then a good going over of the house in the old fashioned way is still necessary.

When you begin to dust raise the windows. Then wash washable bric-a-brac in tepid water and a little white soap and dry on soft cheesecloth. Have a place, say the sofa, already dusted and in order, where you may put the pieces and cover them over.

Have sheets made of two lengths of gingham or calico—anything that is cheap and washable—to cover the furniture, and, after washing the small bric-a-brac or dusting it off and covering it up, go after the other pieces of furniture. Large squares of outing flannel for this purpose serve well if you haven't dustless dusters.

It isn't necessary to use furniture polish every week on good furniture, or once a month even.

A quick washing off with slightly soapy water and cheesecloth sometimes is beneficial for furniture in the grimy city. Follow with furniture polish, after which rub hard with fresh cheesecloth.

The last thing to do in a room is to wipe up the floors. When this is done it is time to begin to put the cleaned and dusted articles back in their places.

Fancy Door Porters.

Door porters are useful in keeping doors open. The most convenient kind for the bedroom door is the little modern maid—a doll's head fastened to a body filled with sand and dressed in black with white cap and apron. She is fastened to a long loop of ribbon, which is hung over the doorknob, so that she can be conveniently lifted and moved.

ACCORDION PLAID GOWN

SEERGE AND SATIN DRESS.

Accordion plaiting is used extensively in the designing of many new gowns, even those for street wear. It is very effectively utilized in the making of the pictured gown of navy blue serge which is combined with black satin. The long tunic of accordion plaited serge falls over a plain skirt of satin. The bolero bodice has a pointed satin vest. Worn with it are collars and cuffs of white handkerchief linen adorned with tiny pearl buttons.

Cheesecloth Duster.

Don't think any old rag good enough for a duster. Have a cheesecloth duster, and keep it for that purpose until it is worn out.

The oftener it is washed the softer it gets. Have two separate cloths for dishes and pots. Keep the dish cloth for that purpose. Use the pot cloth for wiping shelves, etc. Scold both out once a day. When you need a new dish cloth take the old one for a pot cloth.

THE COLOR SCHEME.

All colors for day wear are subdued. Rose is a favorite color.

A lovely bronze green is among the favorite shades.

Burnt green is one of the fashionable tones.

Dark green is firmly established among staple colors.

The all white frock continues its popularity for evening.

Dark blue and seal brown is a modish combination.

The all black frock with an artistic dash of color is fashionable.

Navy blue and brown and green are in great favor. Among light colors sand and putty are chosen.

Black and white combinations and soft rich colors are in favor for afternoon costumes.

Brown is fashionable, but to be correct the brown must be dull. Dark brown shoes and gossamer hose of brown silk are worn with frocks of almost any color.

Ring a Ting, Ting.

A ringing good game to play at your birthday party is the ring game. After your guests are seated distribute papers and pencils. Then seat yourself in the center of the circle and ask the following questions, stating that each answer ends in a "ring."

The butcher's ring?
The doctor's ring?
The lawyer's ring?
The ring that is often lost in old age?
The ring that baby should take daily?
The ring of the traveler?
What ring pleases the actor?
The ring of the rule man?
The marriage ring?
The ring that pleases the orator?
The ring found in the sea?
The cat's ring?
The mocker's ring?

Answers—Slaughterer, curing, inquiring, hearing, ailing, touring, encoring, starting, nailing, cheering, herring, purring, jeering.

Parlor Stunts.

Prepare a large circular cardboard target and to this affix as many dark red or blue bullseyes as there are guests, having back of each bullseye a tiny slip of paper on which is written directions for some stunt, such as whistling a tune, singing a song, standing with the face in the corner or any trick which suggests itself to the hostess as likely to amuse the company. Provide a bow and arrow and ask each guest in turn to shoot at the target until an arrow pierces some one of the bullseyes. The player then takes the slip of paper which his arrow has pierced and stands in readiness to perform the "stunt" written upon it, although he must not tell what it is until his turn comes for amusing the company.

"Robin Adair."

At one of Whittier's birthday celebrations one of the guests was a noted singer, who, when she was asked to sing, sang "Robin Adair." While she was singing Whittier's pet dog came into the room and sat down beside the piano, listening very carefully. When she had finished the dog shook hands with her and licked her face. Mr. Whittier told her that the dog's name was Robin Adair. From this time on the dog scarcely left her. He followed her everywhere, and when she went away he seemed to feel very bad.

A Young Musician.

Men seem to become musicians because of the inspiration born within them, and the force is developed at an early age. Handel, who was the greatest musical composer of his age, was so devoted to music in childhood that his father forbade his musical studies. At the age of eleven he greatly delighted and surprised Frederick I. of Prussia by his inspiring playing. In his youth he was made organist at Halle.

Mashed Sweet Potatoes.

To prepare this dish take a few hot baked sweet potatoes, scoop out the potato and rub it through a colander. For each cupful of potatoes add one tablespoonful of cream or milk and one teaspoonful of melted butter. Beat well until very light and creamy, adding more milk if necessary. Season with salt, pepper and a little ground mace and serve at once.

The Trey O' Hearts

A Novelized Version of the Motion Picture Drama of the Same Name
Produced by the Universal Film Co.

By LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

Author of "The Fighting Heart," "The Blood Road," "The Black Dog," etc.

Illustrated with Photographs from the Picture Production

SYNOPSIS

The Trey O' Hearts is the "death-stain" employed by Seneca, Trine in the private war of vengeance which, through the agency of his daughter Judith, he wages against Alan, son of the man, now dead, who was innocently responsible for the accident which rendered Trine a helpless cripple. Alan loves and is loved by Rose, Judith's twin and double. Judith vows to compass his death, but under dramatic circumstances Alan saves her life and so unwillingly wins her love. Thereafter Judith is by turns animated by the new love, the old hatred, and jealousy of her sister. In escaping her persecution, Alan and Rose and their friend Barcus take refuge in the Painted Hills—a range of arid mountains bordering the Arizona desert. Judith, while pursuing, suffers a change of heart and warns them in time to avert an attempt upon their lives. In return for this she is seized by an outlaw, a desperado and bound helpless to the back of a horse. Alan shoots the accomplice and the horse away, following a perilous, unending trail.

CHAPTER XI.

The Man in the Shadow.
Two hundred feet, if one, Hopi Jim fell from the tip of the cliff. Then suddenly the thing that had been Hopi Jim Slade was checked in its headlong descent by the outstanding trunk of a tree, over which it remained, doubled up, limp, horrible.

The miniature landscape that had been caused by his fall went on, settling gradually as the slope became less sheer. Only part of it, a double handful of pebbles, gained the bottom of the canyon.

Impacted impact on the ground round his feet roused the man who had compassed the bandit's death from the pose he had unconsciously assumed on the instant of firing.

He stepped back, and snatched up a case containing binoculars.

Not before the glasses were adjusted to his vision did he find time to respond absently to the alarmed and insistent inquiries of his two companions, a man of his own age and a girl of some years less, who had been awakened from their sleep by the report of the rifle.

Now the latter plucked his sleeve, momentarily deflecting the glasses from the object which they were following so sedulously as it moved along the heights; a wildly running horse with a woman bound helpless upon its back, both sharply in silhouette against the burning blue.

"Alan!" the girl demanded, "what is it? Why did you fire? Why won't you answer me? What is it?"

"Judith," Alan replied tersely, again picking up with the glasses the runaway horse that fled so madly along the perilous and narrow track of the hill trail.

The name was echoed from two throats as Alan swung sharply and thrust the glasses into the hands of the girl.

"Judith," he affirmed with a look of poignant solicitude. "She's roped to the back of that crazy broncho—helpless! See for yourself; one false step—suppose a stone turns beneath its hoof—she'll be killed!"

While the girl focused her glasses upon that speck that flew against the sky Alan turned to the two horses hobbled near by and seizing a saddle threw it over the back of one.

At this the other man turned to his side and dropping a detaining hand upon his arm asked:

"What are you going to do?"

Alan shook the hand off and went on with his self-appointed task.

"Go after her, Tom, of course," he replied. "What else? That animal is crazy, I tell you."

"Even so," Tom Barcus argued, "you can't climb that hillside on horseback—and if you could, you'd be too late to catch up, much less prevent an accident."

"I know it. But suppose it doesn't fall. You know what's beyond these hills—deserts! And the girl is helpless, I tell you, bound hand and foot. Think of her being carried that way—all day, perhaps—face up to this brutal sun! She'll go mad if something isn't done."

"You've gone mad yourself already, Mr. Barcus," Alan retorted. "What's it to you if she does? Suppose you do succeed in rescuing her: what then? As Alan as she gets on her pine shift-try to stick a knife into you—like as not. What's she been chasing you for, all over this land of the brave and home of the free, but to take your fool life? And now you want to sacrifice yourself to her, out of sheer, downright foolishness in the head! I suppose you'll like me to call it chivalry: I'll tell you what I call it—lunacy!"

"Don't be an ass!" Alan responded temperately, gathering the reins together and instinctively lifting a foot to the stirrup. "Who warned us yesterday in time to prevent our being crushed by that rock? Judith! Why was she separated from Marrophat and the others—alone up there when that beast sneaked up behind her—O, I say, him—I saw it all—and grabbed her and roped her to that broncho—if it wasn't because she had broken with them for good and all and started to fight on our side?"

"You're raving," Barcus commented in a hopeless tone. "He looked to the girl. 'Rose—Miss Trine—reason with this madman—'"

Dropping the glasses, the girl came swiftly and confidently to her lover's side, lifting her lips to his.

"Go, sweetheart!" she told him. "Save her if you can!"

"Did you dream for an instant Rose would see her own sister carried to her death if anything could be done to avert it—no matter what we may have suffered at Judith's hands?"

"With an indulgent grunt, but considerate none the less, Mr. Barcus caught up the glasses and turned his back."

"Go on!" he grumbled, pretending to ignore the hand Alan offered him from the saddle. "I've got no patience with you. But go!" he insisted, of a sudden seizing the hand and pressing it fervently. "And God go with you, my friend!"

Then hoofbeats drumming on the hard-packed earth of the canyon trail struck a hundred echoes from its rugged, rocky walls.

Mr. Barcus showed Rose Trine a face almost ludicrous with its anguished smile that was intended to seem reassuring.

"Let's look sharp and follow him as quick as may be," he urged. "Lightning will never strike us so long as we stick to Mr. Law of the charmed life—but I don't mind telling you, once out of his company, I'm just naturally afraid of the dark!"

CHAPTER XII.

The Trail of Flying Hoof-Prints.
In the still air of that young day the chill of night lingered stubbornly—and would until the shadow of the eastern rampart had crept slowly down the canyon's western wall, telescoped upon itself and vanished, letting in the sun to make the place a pit of torment and of burning.

Refreshed from rest and exhilarated by this grateful coolness, his horse responded willingly to the first light touch of Alan's spur. In a twinkling the overnight camp dropped from view behind the rounded shoulder of a hillside, mesquite-cloaked.

Then from its first spirited flight the horse settled down to steady going, lengthened its stride, and ran for leagues with the long, apparently effortless and tireless lope of the plains-bred broncho, ventre-a-terre.

Alan's departure from camp had anticipated by a round quarter-hour the appearance on the upper trail of friends of the slain bandit, to the number of four or five, who had both discovered and recovered his body, called his death murder and pledged themselves to its avengement—laying responsibility for the putative crime at the door of the man and woman to be seen in the canyon, immediately below the scene of Hopi Jim's fall.

Between the moment when discovery of the men on the ridge trail interrupted their simple and hurried breakfast and that which found Rose and Barcus mounted on the back of their own horse and making the best of their way down the canyon in pursuit of Alan, but little time had elapsed.

And even with its double burden, their horse made better time upon the broad lower level than those who followed the ridge trail. By mid-morning, when they approached the foothills that ran down to the desert, the pursuit was more than a mile in the rear and shut off to boot by a monolithic hill, while Alan was many a weary mile in advance.

He set upon his horse, just then, at standstill upon the summit of a rounded knoll, the Painted hills lifting up behind him, the desert before unfolding like a map—but like a map all blurred.

Was Judith out there, somewhere, defenseless, forlorn, impotent to lift a hand to shield her face from the blast of that savage sun?

No rest for Alan till he knew . . . Descending the knoll he reined his lagging mount back into the trail, following its winding course through the foothills and round the base of that monolithic mountain toward the junction with the ridge trail, miles away.

It approached the hour of noon before he gained the point where the two trails joined and struck out across the desert. And here he discovered what he thought indisputable indication that the flight of Judith's horse had persisted.

Abandoning immediately all notion of returning through the hills by the ridge-trail, he turned and swung away at the best pace he could spur from his broncho, delivering himself into the pitiless embrace of that implacable wilderness of sun and sand.

At long intervals he would check the broncho and, reeling in his saddle, endeavor to sweep the desert with his binoculars.

And toward the middle of the afternoon he fancied that something rewarded one such effort; something for an instant swam athwart the field of the glasses: something that seemed to move like a weary horse with a human figure bound to its back.

But now the phenomena were discernible which, had he been more desperate, would have made him pause and think before he ventured farther from those hills, already beyond reach as they were.

His first appreciated warning came when the surface of the desert seemed to lift and shake like the top of a canvas tent in a gale. At the same time a mighty gust of wind swept athwart the waste, hot as a furnace-blast. In a trice dust enveloped man and horse, a stifling cloud of superheated particles that stung the flesh like a myriad needles. And then darkness fell, the twilight of hades, a copper-colored pall. Nothing remained visible beyond arm's length.

Blinded, half suffocated, unspcakably dismayed and bewildered, the broncho swung round, back to the blast, and refused to budge another inch.

Himself more than half-dazed, but still haunted by his nightmare vision of Judith, Alan dismounted to escape being torn bodily from the saddle by that hellish sand-blast, and seizing the bridle sought to draw the horse on with him.

He wasted his strength in that endeavor: the animal balked, planted its hoofs deep in the sand, stiffened its legs and resisted with the stubbornness of a rock; then, of a sudden, jerked his head smartly, snapped the bridle from his grasp and flung away, scudding before the storm.

Pursuit was out of the question: indeed, the bridle was barely torn from his hand before Alan lost sight of the broncho.

For a moment he stood rooted in consternation as in a bog—with an arm upthrown across his face.

Then the thought of Judith recurred. . . .

Head bended and shoulders rounded, he began to forge a way into the teeth of the sandstorm.

How long he fought on, pitting his strength against the elements, cannot be reckoned.

In the end he stumbled blindly down a slight decline and was abruptly conscious that he had in some way found shelter from the full force of the wind.

He staggered on another yard or two, breathing more freely, and blundered into a rough-ribbed wall of rock—some sporadic outcrop, he understood, whose bulk stood between him and the storm.

He thought to rest for a time, until the storm had spent its greatest strength; but as he laid his shoulder gratefully against the rock and scrubbed the dust from his smarting eyes he saw what he at first conceived to be a hallucination: Judith Trine standing within a yard of him, alive, strong, free.

He stared incredulously, saw her recognize him, open her mouth to utter a wondering cry that was inaudible, and come quickly nearer.

"Alan! You came for me! You followed me, through all this!"

He threw off her hand with a bitter laugh—that was like the croaking of a raven as it issued from his bone-dry throat—and in momentary possession of hysterical madness, reeled away from the woman and the shelter of the rock and delivered himself anew to the mercy of the dust-storm.

"Rose—Miss Trine—Reason With the Madman—"

an arm bent under him in a pose frightfully suggestive of dislocation. Yet when she turned him on his back and released the arm, he made no sign to indicate that the movement had caused him the slightest pain.

There was a slight cut upon his brow, a bruise about his left temple. She tore linen from her bosom, beneath her coarse flannel shirt, and with sparing aid from the canteen, washed the cut clean and bandaged it.

Then, seeing that the storm held with fury unabated, she rose, reconnoitered and returned to exert all her strength and drag the unconscious man across the dry bed of that ancient water-course and under the lee of its farther bank.

There, sitting, she pillowed his head upon her lap, and bending over him made her body an additional shelter to him from the swirling clouds of dust.

And for hours on end Judith nursed him there, scarce daring to move save to minister to his needs, bathing his fevered brow and moistening his parched lips and throat.

In the course of the first hour she was once startled by the spectral vision through the driving sheets of dust of a horse that plodded up the arroyo, bearing two riders on its back.

Wary with the weight of its double burden, it went slowly and passed so near to Judith that she was able to recognize the features of her sister and Tom Barcus.

Be sure she made never a sign to catch their attention.

Within the next succeeding hour the coppery light lost something of its hot brilliance, took on a darker shade, and then one darker still. Twilight stole athwart the desert, turning its heat to chill, its light to violet.

Growing more intense, the cold eventually roused the sleeping man.

And hardly had his eyes unclosed and looked up into the eyes of Judith bending over him than he started up and out of her embrace, got unsteadily upon his feet and after a moment of pause, watching her rise in turn, strode away—or, rather, staggered—with the gesture of exorcism.

Uncomplaining, hugging her new-born humility to her with the ecstasy of the anchorite his horse-hair shirt, Judith followed him patiently, at a little distance.

Not far from where he had rested there was a break in the overhanging wall of the arroyo. Through this the desert, for signs of assistance: it offered none, other than what they might accomplish through their own exertions. For leagues in any quarter it stretched without a break other than the black cleft of the arroyo, gleaming a bleached and deathly white in the moonshine—like the face of a frozen world.

With tacit consent both turned that way, Alan leading, Judith his pertinaacious shadow, with never a word or sign between them to prove that either was aware of the other's company.

"Rose—Miss Trine—Reason With the Madman—"

But this was a state of affairs that could not long endure. Judith had the price to pay for her own trials, suffering and privation: the strain began to tell sorely upon her. She reeled slightly as she walked, weaving a winding trail across and across the straighter line of footprints that marked Alan's course through the ordered pattern of the powdered sagebrush.

And of a sudden she collapsed. Instinct alone made Alan glance over-shoulder: for she had made no sound whatever.

He turned and came directly back to her, knelt beside her, lifted her head, pillowed it gently on his arm and plied her in turn with the dregs of the canteen.

With a sigh, a stifled moan and a little shiver, she revived.

He helped her gently to regain her feet, passed an arm round her.

In this fashion they struggled on in strange, dumb companionship of misery and wonder.

Thus an hour passed; and for all their desperate struggles neither could see that the light on the mountainside was a yard the nearer.

Behind them other lights appeared, two staring yellow eyes that peered up over the horizon, seemed to pause a time in search of the two, then leaped out directly toward them.

Of this they were altogether ignorant; and when a deep, droning sound disturbed the desert silence, like the purring of some gigantic cat, both ascribed it to the drumming of their laboring pulses.

The two lights were not a mile behind them when, silently, without a sign to warn the girl, Alan released her, took a step apart and dropped as if shot.

Instantly she was kneeling by his side. But in the act of bending over him she drew back and remained for several moments motionless, staring at those twin glaring eyes, sweeping down upon them with all the speed attainable by a six-cylinder touring car negotiating a trackless desert.

When Judith did move it was not to comfort Alan. On the contrary, her first act was to draw from her pocket a heavy, blunt-nosed revolver, break it at the breech and blow its barrel clear of dust. Her hand went next to the holster on Alan's hip. From this she extracted his Colt's .45, treating it as she had the other. Then she crouched low above the man she loved, as if thinking perhaps to escape notice from the occupants of the motorcar.

If that were her thought, it was bred of an idle hope. Alan had chosen to fall in the middle of a wide space so arid that not even sagebrush had ventured to take root there. When the glare of the headlights fell upon them it was inevitable that discovery should follow. The motor car stopped within twenty feet. Three men jumped out and ran toward the pair, leaving two in the car—the chauffeur and one who occupied a corner of the rear seat: an aged man with the face of a damned soul, doomed for a little time to live upon this earth in the certain knowledge of his damnation.

As this happened, Judith Trine leaped to her feet and stood over the body of Alan, a revolver poised in either hand.

"Halt!" she ordered imperatively. "Hands up!"

The three who had alighted obeyed without a moment's hesitation; her father's creatures, they knew the daughter's temper far too well to dream of opposing her will.

In the six hands that were silhouetted against the headlights' radiance, three revolvers glimmered; but at her command all three dropped harmlessly to the earth.

Then, sharply, "Stand back two paces!" she required.

They humored her unanimously.

Darting forward, she picked up and pocketed the three weapons, then with one of her own singled out the one she named.

"Now, Marrophat—and you, Hicks—pick Mr. Law up and carry him into the car. And treat him gently, mind! If one of you lifts a finger to harm him, that one shall answer to me."

Still none ventured to dispute her. The two men designated, without a sign of disinclination, stepped forward. One lifted Alan Law by the shoulders; the other took the legs. Between them they bore him with every care toward the motor car.

But now a second will manifested itself. The man in the rear seat lifted up a weirdly sonorous voice:

"Stop!" he cried. "Stop this nonsense! Drop that man! Judith, I command you—"

"Be silent!" the girl cut in sharply. "I command here—if it's necessary to tell you."

There was a pause of astonishment. Then the old man broke out in exasperation that threatened to wax into fury: "Judith! What do you mean by this? Has it indeed come to this that my own daughter defies me to my face?"

"Apparently!" she shot back, with a short laugh. "Judge for yourself!"

"Have you forgotten your vow to me?"

"No. But I take it back and cancel it: that is my privilege, I believe. . . . Silence!" she stormed, as he strove to gainsay her. "Silence—do you hear?—or it will be the worse for you!"

As well command the sea to still its voice: her father raged like a madman that he was, for the time being divested of his habitual mask of frigid heartlessness.

And seeing that there was no other way of quieting him, the girl turned to the third man.

"Now Jimmy!" she said crisply. "Into that car—and be quick about it—and gag him!"

But this was a state of affairs that could not long endure. Judith had the price to pay for her own trials, suffering and privation: the strain began to tell sorely upon her. She reeled slightly as she walked, weaving a winding trail across and across the straighter line of footprints that marked Alan's course through the ordered pattern of the powdered sagebrush.

When Judith did move it was not to comfort Alan. On the contrary, her first act was to draw from her pocket a heavy, blunt-nosed revolver, break it at the breech and blow its barrel clear of dust. Her hand went next to the holster on Alan's hip. From this she extracted his Colt's .45, treating it as she had the other. Then she crouched low above the man she loved, as if thinking perhaps to escape notice from the occupants of the motorcar.

If that were her thought, it was bred of an idle hope. Alan had chosen to fall in the middle of a wide space so arid that not even sagebrush had ventured to take root there. When the glare of the headlights fell upon them it was inevitable that discovery should follow. The motor car stopped within twenty feet. Three men jumped out and ran toward the pair, leaving two in the car—the chauffeur and one who occupied a corner of the rear seat: an aged man with the face of a damned soul, doomed for a little time to live upon this earth in the certain knowledge of his damnation.

As this happened, Judith Trine leaped to her feet and stood over the body of Alan, a revolver poised in either hand.

"Halt!" she ordered imperatively. "Hands up!"

The three who had alighted obeyed without a moment's hesitation; her father's creatures, they knew the daughter's temper far too well to dream of opposing her will.

In the six hands that were silhouetted against the headlights' radiance, three revolvers glimmered; but at her command all three dropped harmlessly to the earth.

Then, sharply, "Stand back two paces!" she required.

They humored her unanimously.

Darting forward, she picked up and pocketed the three weapons, then with one of her own singled out the one she named.

"Now, Marrophat—and you, Hicks—pick Mr. Law up and carry him into the car. And treat him gently, mind! If one of you lifts a finger to harm him, that one shall answer to me."

Still none ventured to dispute her. The two men designated, without a sign of disinclination, stepped forward. One lifted Alan Law by the shoulders; the other took the legs. Between them they bore him with every care toward the motor car.

But now a second will manifested itself. The man in the rear seat lifted up a weirdly sonorous voice:

"Stop!" he cried. "Stop this nonsense! Drop that man! Judith, I command you—"

"Be silent!" the girl cut in sharply. "I command here—if it's necessary to tell you."

There was a pause of astonishment. Then the old man broke out in exasperation that threatened to wax into fury: "Judith! What do you mean by this? Has it indeed come to this that my own daughter defies me to my face?"

"Apparently!" she shot back, with a short laugh. "Judge for yourself!"

"Have you forgotten your vow to me?"

"No. But I take it back and cancel it: that is my privilege, I believe. . . . Silence!" she stormed, as he strove to gainsay her. "Silence—do you hear?—or it will be the worse for you!"

As well command the sea to still its voice: her father raged like a madman that he was, for the time being divested of his habitual mask of frigid heartlessness.

And seeing that there was no other way of quieting him, the girl turned to the third man.

"Now Jimmy!" she said crisply. "Into that car—and be quick about it—and gag him!"

"If you do," her father flamed, "I'll have your life—"

A flourish of her weapons gained instant obedience.

She stepped up on the running board and shot a quick, searching glance at the face of the chauffeur.

"Straight ahead, my man!" she said. "Make for the nearest pass through those hills yonder, and don't delay unless you are anxious for trouble. Off you go!"

The car began to move. She swept the three men in the desert a mocking bow, jumped into the body of the car and slammed the door.

They made no effort to plead their cause and secure passage even as far as the edge of the desert; doubtless they knew too well the futility of that, chuckling with the memory of those three masks of dismay unmitigated.

It was not until five minutes later, when she straightened up from making Alan comfortable that she realized what had made them so content to abide by her will.

Then she heard their voices lifted together in a long, shrill howl that was quickly answered by fainter yells from a distant quarter of the desert, then by pistols popping and flashing some two miles away, then by a growing rumble of galloping hoofs.

The night glasses in the car afforded her flashes of a body of several horsemen—some six or seven, she judged—making at top speed toward the spot where Marrophat, Hicks and Jimmy waited beside a beacon which they had built and lighted.

A sardonic chuckle from within Trine's gag goaded the girl into a sullen fury.

Exact his utmost speed from the chauffeur, under penalty of her displeasure, she set herself to revive Alan.

With the aid of such stores of food and drink as the car carried, this was quickly enough accomplished.

Strangling with an overdose of brandy too little diluted with water, Alan sat up, grasped the conditions in a flash, and gained further information as he devoured sandwiches and emptied a canteen.

The mountain pass was now, he judged, a mile distant. The light on the hillside, according to the chauffeur, was that of a prospector who had camped there temporarily. There was nothing, then, to be feared from that quarter, but solely from the rear—where the horsemen, having picked up Marrophat and his companions, had instituted hot pursuit,

NEW AUTO TAX LAW IS INTRODUCED

GRATIOT LEGISLATURE OFFERS MEASURE FOR GOOD ROADS FUND.

TAX FOR POWER AND WEIGHT

Proposed Law Has Approval of State Highway Commission and O. K. of Attorney General As to Legal Form.

Lansing—Representative Newell Smith, of Gratiot county, Monday night introduced a bill for a specific tax on automobiles and motorcycles to take the place of the law enacted two years ago for a like purpose, and which was declared invalid by the supreme court because of a technical defect.

The 1913 act imposed a tax of 50 cents per horse power on all motor vehicles and this was to be in lieu of local and all other taxes. The bill which Representative Smith now introduces contemplates a tax of 25 cents for each 100 pounds weight of a vehicle. The reason for this tax by weight, Representative Smith says, is that many high-power cars are light and many low power cars that wear roads much more than light cars are several times heavier. All revenues from the tax would have to be used for building and maintaining roads, not to exceed five per cent for salaries and expenses of the state highway department.

The bill is approved by the state highway commissioner and also by the attorney-general as to its legal form. Had the old law stood it would have provided between $800,000 and $900,000 annually for good roads work. It is estimated the new bill would produce about the same amount.

AGED MAN IS FOUND DEAD

Apparently Murdered With Axe in Manger of Stable.

Saginaw—The body of Joseph Glover, 71 years old, former resident of Saginaw, was found in the manger of a small stable, one of the three buildings of a lumber camp, near the Bliss coal mine, in Swan Creek township, Monday, by Ray Haney, son of the camp foreman.

The right side of his face was crushed in and his right leg was nearly severed at the knee.

An axe, similar to those used in a lumber camp, was found a few feet away, partly covered with hay. The blade was smeared with blood. The floor of the stable and the side walls were spattered with blood and on one wall was a large piece of flesh, probably knocked there by a blow from the axe.

Madrya Tyurchin, known in the camp as Andy George, was arrested by Sheriff Sutherland, pending an investigation. Glover is said to have had considerable money Sunday, but when his clothes were examined Monday his pockets were empty.

GERMAN CRUISER SUNK BY BRITISH IN SUNDAY FIGHT

English Report Claims Victory in North Sea Battle

BLUECHER GOES DOWN AND TWO OTHERS ARE DAMAGED

Vessel Lost Carried 885 Officers and Men and Cost Six and One-Half Million Dollars, and Had Speed of 26 Knots.

London—The German armored cruiser Bluecher was sunk and two German battle cruisers were seriously damaged in a running fight in the North sea Sunday with British battle cruisers and a destroyer flotilla, pitted against a similar fleet of German warships, believed to have been attempting a second raid on English coast towns. No British ships were lost.

The British fleet of cruisers, under Vice-Admiral Sir David Beatty, and flotilla, under Commodore Tyrwhitt, were on patrol duty when the German fleet was sighted early in the morning, steaming westward, presumably in the neighborhood of Helgoland, although the statement of the admiralty dismisses the location by saying the German ships were "apparently making for the English coast."

The German warships, on sighting the enemy, turned homeward at high speed, and the British started in pursuit. The engagement began at 9:30 o'clock, and the Bluecher capsized and went down shortly after 1 o'clock. The pursuit was abandoned on reaching waters where there was danger to the Britons from German mines and submarines.

A battle also occurred between the light cruisers and destroyers accompanying the bigger ships, but the result of this engagement has not yet reached the admiralty. The British were superior in ships engaged, weight of armament and speed, and the flight of the German ships into the mine and submarine infested field possibly saved them from further losses.

So far as is known here, 123 men of the Bluecher's 885 have been rescued.

All the vessels named by the British official press bureau as having taken part in the naval engagement, except the Bluecher, are battle cruisers, all heavily armed and capable of great speed.

The Bluecher, which was sunk, was an armored cruiser 489 feet long, with a displacement of 15,550 tons. Her complement was 885 officers and men. She was built at Kiel in 1908, at a cost of $6,500,000. Her speed was a little more than 26 knots an hour.

The Bluecher carried 12 8.2 inch, eight 6-inch guns and 16 24-pounders. She also was equipped with three torpedo tubes.

The Derfflinger is a 23,000-ton ship which was completed July 14, of last year. She is armed with eight 12-inch and 12 6-inch guns, and 12 24-pounders, and has in addition five torpedo tubes. There is no record available of her speed.

MILLIONAIRE APPROVES OF LABOR UNIONISM

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, JR.

New York—John D. Rockefeller, Jr., testified Monday before the federal commission on industrial relations in the inquiry which the commission had conducted here into the management of philanthropic foundations and the causes of industrial unrest.

"With reference to my attitude toward labor unions: I believe it to be just as proper and advantageous for labor to associate itself into organized groups for the advancement of its legitimate interests as for capital to combine for the same object. Sometimes they (labor unions) provide benefit features, sometimes they seek to increase wages, but whatever their specific purpose, so long as it is to promote the well-being of the employees, having always due regard for the just interests of the employer and the public, leaving every worker free to associate himself with such groups or to work independently, as he may choose—I favor them most heartily."

NEW PRIMARY BILL IS INTRODUCED

SENATOR KELLEY HAS MEASURE TO REPEAL PRESENT LAW.

RESTORES THE ENROLLMENT

Only Change From Present Law Is Designed to Prevent Voters of One Party Casting Ballots in Primary of Another.

Lansing—Senator Louis L. Kelley, of Farwell, put in a bill Friday morning to repeal the present primary law and place upon the statute books a primary law similar to the one in use two years ago, restoring the party enrollment and requiring voters to declare their political affiliation before participating in any primary election.

The 15 per cent clause which was a part of the former primary bill until declared unconstitutional by the supreme court, is not made a part of Senator Kelley's new bill, but in other respects the new measure follows the lines of the old primary law.

Voters may enroll with the county or city clerk by affidavit at any time, the same as under the provisions of the old law. In reality the only radical change from the present primary law is the restoration of the enrollment.

Senator Kelley says that the enrollment is necessary to insure the success of the primary, as he points out that in the last primary election, many democrats voted for republican candidates and in some instances republicans deserted the ticket at the time of making nominations in order to vote for democratic candidates.

"There can be no objection if a man wants to vote for a candidate of another party in the election, but the primary is distinctly a party matter, and the nominations on the G. O. P. ticket should be made by members of the republican party," said Senator Kelley.

DAIRY FACTS

THICK CREAM GAINS FAVOR

Colorado State Dairy Inspector Answers One of Most Common Questions Bothering Dairymen.

(By R. McCANN, State Dairy Inspector, Colorado Agricultural College.) One of the most common questions arising among cream producers and handlers of cream is that of how thick cream should be skimmed, when the same is to be used in butter-making. Cream skimmed so as to test between 35 per cent and 40 per cent is of the most desirable thickness. Thick cream keeps better than thin cream, there is also not the waste in handling a smaller bulk of cream than there is of larger amounts in the way of hauling and express charges, moreover the skim milk is kept on the farm for feeding calves and pigs. If it is too thick, there is a loss in some of the cream going over into the skim milk and also a considerable waste from the amount of cream that will adhere to cans and utensils.

A uniform richness of cream may be obtained at each separation.

1. By using the same amount of waste or skim milk when flushing the bowl.

2. By keeping the cream screw the same.

3. By running the separator at the same and at a uniform speed.

4. By having the temperature of the milk the same each time.

5. By keeping a uniform inflow to the bowl.

6. By washing the separator thoroughly after using.

Exactly the same butterfat test cannot be expected every time from the observation of the above, as there are other factors entering affecting results, but a close following of the six named checks on variation will work wonders toward getting a uniform thickness of cream throughout the season.

PREVENT COW FROM KICKING

Device Arranged Around Hind Quarters Acts as Simple Means of Educating Animal to Be Good.

With this new arrangement hooked up to her hind quarters, "bossy" will kick nobody but herself when she undertakes to show her resentment by a rear thrust at the milk pail or the dairy maid. Reflex Kicking Strap for the Cow.

Kicking cow is an aggravation about the dairy and the device referred to has been recently patented and is a simple means of educating her to be good. It will be quickly seen how the device is applied to the hind leg of the bovine and also how any pressure exerted upon the device, as in an effort to kick, the energy thus expended will give her a sharp reminder that she is not to have it all her own way.

BEST FEEDING FOR PROTEIN

Necessity for Giving More Than One Grain—Wheat Bran, Corn and Stover Make Good Ration.

Dairymen who are on a short allowance in the matter of grain naturally wish to keep down the expense bill, and make the mistake of feeding one grain only. For example, a correspondent asks which would give him the best results, corn or wheat bran, when, as a matter of fact, he should feed both to get anywhere near a balanced ration, and they should be fed in the proportion of one part of the wheat bran to six parts of the corn. This, with corn stover as roughage and with an occasional feed of oil meal or a change to some of the concentrated feeds like gluten meal, will supply a fairly balanced ration and not a costly one. Those who have to do with farm affairs are coming more and more to figure out these problems instead of guessing at what they should do or working on the same plans they followed years ago, when conditions were, perhaps, much different. This is going in the right direction and the ultimate results will not fail to be satisfactory.

The Latest Fancy in Veils

The latest fad which has seized upon the feminine fancy and is to run its course is the wearing of a full, straight-hanging veil. It is all of net bordered with narrow, but, before long, veils of champagne and other laces may outnumber the plain net. In spite of the popularity of figured lace in the smaller veils the fact remains that they are less becoming than plain or dotted veils.

The smartest of the new veils are those that flare and ripple about the face, after the manner of the new hats. Those in taupe color, twine and black hold first place and are especially well with the new demit-season hats which are early in the field as harbingers of the coming of spring.

A new design in veils of figured net is shown in the picture, having pendant fern leaves as a pattern on a net ground. It is interesting as a novelty, but the more irregular floral designs are more attractive.

An illustration of the two most popular nets is given also, showing one with a square and one with a hexagonal mesh. Veils of this kind are bordered with velvet dots, some of them square and others round, and in size varying from a sixteenth to a half inch in diameter.

Hats for Southern Journeyings

These fortunate ones who escape winter by journeying South are worried by misgivings as to what they wear, they may set their minds to. Gowns for southern tourists, enchanting as those in seasons and millinery as exquisite as has been worn, are all at hand, but they are not the inspirations of styles in Paris or in America is not the important matter.

It is here and they are lovely, those who wear them or those who see them are not to be dissatisfied.

Hats for southern wear the panorama playing the leading role. There may be shapes to choose from in beautiful weaves. Among them are large hats on the sailor style, with either straight or rolling brims, and others that droop back and contrive to be becoming to all wearers.

Many people must confine their travels to America this year, and a great wrong that ever will see and be in the fashion parade grounds of the South. What is worn there will be later in the North. Styles that we and for which a demand is being made will become our fashions for summer season. It is pleasant to anticipate, therefore, the survival of attractive headwear as the two shown here.

A dressy Panama, in shepherdess style and edged with a narrow border and trimmed with a band and loops and ends of velvet ribbon, with either straight or rolling brims, and others that droop back and contrive to be becoming to all wearers.

A piece of velvet is a fine cleanser for the brass and for polishing silverware it is better than ammonia. It quickly removes the dust from woodwork, and if used to rub the stove after it has been blacked it will produce a high polish. There is nothing better to dust a felt hat, and silk dresses and other silk articles should always be dusted with it, for it cleans perfectly without cutting or otherwise injuring the material.

READING THE WILL

By ALVAN JORDAN GARTH.

"And to each of my four loving and devoted nieces, a framed portrait of myself, to be enlarged from my cabinet photograph, for which and other purposes a fund has been given by me to my executor. I hope they will treasure the portrait in their possession and memories in remembrance of me."

"The cheap old hunk!" viciously hissed Mary Winsted to her sister, Nettie.

"It's shameful!" was the angry response.

"After leaving all that money to the theological seminary!" almost sobbed Esther Dalton to her cousin, Alice Rowe, who sat by her side.

"Dear old uncle!" spoke Alice softly. "He was good to all of us when he was alive. He gave me my piano, you know, and there hasn't been a Christmas for five years past that he hasn't made us all handsome and expensive gifts of jewelry and the like."

Esther shrugged her shoulders under the $200 sealskin coat that Uncle Robert had given her only a few weeks before his death. Then she smiled sweetly at Mary and Nettie. She was glad to see the owners of those angry faces disappointed in their lofty hopes of a rich legacy.

The reading of the will of old Robert ert Burr ended, all interest of most of the relatives present died out, for he had favored few of them, and those with no marked liberality. There was a great confab at the Dalton home that evening. Alice was an orphan and lived with the Daltons. The Winsteds lived only next door, and Mary and Nettie came over to discuss the great event of the day and abuse their dead relative.

The Reading of the Will of Old Robert Burr Ended.

"Humph! his old portrait can go to the barn loft, for all I'll hinder," declared Mary, spitefully.

"In loving remembrance!" quoted Nettie, sneeringly. "I hope some one smashes a stepladder in it when they go to hang it in my room."

"I shall retire my precious legacy as soon as the decent period of mourning has passed," observed Esther, leily, as though she were punishing the relative who had failed to cater to her extravagant tastes.

Alice said nothing. She had always had a warm spot in her loyal little heart for Uncle Robert. She was in a measure dependent upon the Daltons, but well earned her way. Especially, since the gift of the piano she had been able to pay a fair cash price for her board, besides helping in many little household duties which the haughty Esther disdained.

A month later the really prized portrait hung in a cherished wall in the poorest room in the house, which of course was the one to which complaining Alice was assigned. Esther had placed her legacy in her brother's neglected den. The Winsteds girls openly boasted that their had found storage in an unoccupied servant's room. Then there came along one Worth Davenal, and the complexion of the four young girls' lives was vitally affected by the occurrence.

He was a bright, manly young fellow. What pleased the Winsteds girls was that he was reputed rich. He was the favored nephew of a prosperous city stockbroker. Esther set her cap for him at once. This caused a bitter break in her relation with Mary and Nettie, and the harmony of the little coterie of cousins was broken in upon.

Esther was pretty, but bold as well. She simply started out to appropriate the distinguished visitor to the town all to herself. Young Davenal was, however, no more attentive to her than to the others. Alice greatly admired the manly, free-hearted fellow, and from the first he seemed to enjoy her company. Twice, however, once because of necessary attention to some pupils, and again when Mrs. Dalton fell ill and wished some one to keep her company, Alice disappointed Mr. Davenal in engagements, and this seemed to irritate him. It was possible that Esther created some false impression in his mind as to the true facts of the case. At all events, he became quite a regular escort to Esther, and the Winsteds gave up the contest.

Not so Alice. She felt that she had stood aside too often to please Esther and the others. She had time and again sacrificed her pleasure for their benefit. She had been more or less a drudge in their service. Now jealousy and petty scheming, she was certain, was discrediting her with a man whose friendship she valued. She wished to stand well in his eyes. The opportunity to vindicate herself came one evening when, at a lawn party, she found herself alone on a rustic garden bench with Mr. Davenal.

She felt it her duty to tell him the truth regarding the reasons why she had broken her engagements with him. She was surprised to see the deep shadows that crossed his face as she spoke.

"I was informed wrongly," he said, his voice unsteady with some deep emotion suddenly revealed. "I—I was played, at your indifference. I—and now it is too late!"

They were interrupted at that moment. "Too late"—for what? The words rang in Alice's ears for hours. Could it be possible that he had cared for her, that he had been enfolded into embracing himself to Esther, that now his eyes were opened to the truth?

Before Alice could fathom the depths of the complication there came strange and disturbing news. The rich relative of Worth Davenal had plunged too deeply in his stock exchange speculations, had lost his entire fortune and both he and his prospective heirs were beggars.

Then came the climax. Esther turned against Worth in disdain. One day he met Alice. He found her the loyal friend she had proved to be. She advised him, she encouraged him when he sought work like the man he was. Then true love shone forth. They became engaged. At the end of the year, in a modest but happy home they set up housekeeping amid the sneers of Alice's three cousins concerning "those paupers!"

One day there came to the humble cottage the executor of Uncle Robert's estate.

"Mrs. Davenal," he said, pleasantly, with a glance at the portrait of her dead relative occupying a prominent place on the wall and well cared for, "I see you still remember your uncle."

"I shall never forget him," declared Alice. "He was very good to me, and I loved him dearly."

"You are not like your cousins, then," said the lawyer. "Those three other portraits have gone to the rubbish heap. So I have a special mission in coming here today."

Alice looked inquisitive and her husband interested.

"By a private arrangement made with myself," explained the lawyer, "I was to watch the manner in which his portrait was cherished by his nieces. To the one who showed a genuine interest in his gift, I was to give, at the end of two years, the sum of $20,000. That legacy you have worthily won, and it is now at your command."

And "those paupers" were no longer pitied and looked down upon by the ill-fated trio, who had lost a fortune by showing up their real petty natures in true colors.

Folk's Good Opinion.

Few persons do not value the good opinion of others. Pulling down the character of someone is not the way to build up your own; the ruin of another does not mean your building up. There are some who appear to think another's possessions something taken from themselves. This is a mistake. To point out an error in another's character is not to prove a corresponding virtue in one's own. If we decry another for being miserly, of disagreeable disposition, extravagant or stupid, and expect the hearer to see the corresponding virtue in ourselves, we need to learn that this is not what the hearer usually sees. Rather he thinks how unkind such talk is and attention is called to failings in the speaker which would probably otherwise not have been noticed. Let your chief aim be to make yourself worthy of the good opinion of others. Belittling them is a plain acknowledgment of a conscious fault of your own. The way to win the good opinion of others is to be worthy of it. If you are you will not need to call attention to it.—Milwaukee Journal.

Habit of Judging.

The habit of judging is so nearly incurable, and its cure is such an almost impenetrable process, that we must concentrate ourselves for a long while on keeping it in check, and this check is to be found in kind interpretations. We must come to esteem very lightly our sharp eye for evil, on which perhaps we once prided ourselves as cleverness. We must look at our talent for analysis of character as a dreadful possibility of huge uncharitableness. We are sure to continue to say clever things, so long as we continue to indulge in this analysis; and clever things are equally sure to be sharp and acid. We must grow to something higher and something truer than quickness in detecting evil.

Running the Gantlet.

The word "gantlet" in "to run the gantlet" is improperly used. The word should be "gantelepe." Phillips, in his "World of Words," tells that "to run the gantelepe" is a punishment among soldiers, the offender having to run, with his back naked, through the whole regiment, and to receive a lash from a switch from every soldier. It is derived from Gant (Ghant), a town of Flanders, where the punishment was invented, and the Dutch word lop, running.

WINTER MULCH FOR THE STRAWBERRY BED

Getting the Land Ready During Cold Weather.

(By M. N. EDGERTON.)

In a sense the strawberry plant is an evergreen. Unlike the bush or tree fruits, it has no wood growth to ripen. Its leaves do not shrivel in the fall, and at the touch of frost drop from the plant, hence it is but reasonable to suppose that the plant will have further need of them at some future time.

Observing closely, the student of nature will note that in place of ripening, as is the case with bush and tree fruits, the leaves of the strawberry plant take on a deeper shade of green with the advent of autumn, finally assuming a recumbent position.

This is nature's method of preparing this plant for the necessary period of dormancy.

During this period the forces in the plant remain inactive. With the coming of spring, the warm breezes, sunshine and showers, there is an awakening—a springing up of new life.

With the bush and tree fruits this awakening of pent-up energy first manifests itself by the swelling of buds. From these, tiny leaves push forth, to be followed by the unfolding and development of blossoms.

In embryonic form leaf and blossoms have been tucked away and protected in a sheath of well ripened woody growth.

These stored-up forces are protected against injury from low temperature up to a certain point, depending somewhat on atmospheric conditions prevailing at the time and conditions under which the growth and ripening of these buds took place.

However, with strawberry plants there is no swelling and unfolding of leaf buds, for each leaf and cluster of blossoms appear separately and at different periods of time.

In place of well-ripened, woody tissue, the embryonic leaves and fruit stems of this plant are protected by the crown of the plant, which consists of a succulent growth of plant tissue only.

With such a protection, these embryonic leaves and fruit buds are not fully prepared to undergo the rigors of winter, hence additional protection is required if the plants are to retain their strength and vigor unimpaired. By looking into the matter closely, the reason for this may be very plainly seen.

I have said that the leaves of the strawberry plant go into winter in a green, succulent state, and for this reason their purpose has not yet been fully accomplished.

With the advent of spring, and the awakening of nature, these leaves resume activities.

The root feeders gather in the elements of plant food from the soil. The circulatory system carries this food to leaf tissues, where, under the action of sunshine, a chemical change takes place, by which it is made available for assimilation.

Some of this perfect plant food is used by these same leaf tissues, but by far the larger portion is carried to the crown, there to be used in the growth and development of a new and larger leaf system.

This being true it will readily be seen that if the leaves of the present season's growth do not pass through the winter with vitality unimpaired, an abnormal condition in plant life will result.

With its tissues wholly or partly dead, the leaves of the plant are unable to resume the functional activities properly, as would otherwise be the case.

New leaves may push out from the crown of such plants, to be sure; but such growth never possesses that vigorous, healthy appearance so characteristic of normally constituted plants.

Nor are the leaves the only part of the plant that sustains injury through exposure to winter frosts and sunshine, for the tissues that compose the crown are injured more or less by the same thawing and freezing process.

In addition to the injury to the leaf and crown, as noted, there is, on some soils, injury done to the root system through the lifting, heaving action of frosts.

Grown on a class of soils that honeycomb readily, these surface feeding plants are often left stranded, so to speak, their crowns projecting more or less above the surface of the ground, many of the fine feeding roots having been broken in the process.

The contest with the elements over the plants in the unprotected strawberry bed will present every degree of vitality except that of a plant in perfect health.

The plants of an unprotected strawberry bed will make as brave a showing as their unimpaired vitality will permit, but results as measured by the harvest will be very disappointing when compared with those secured from a bed of plants that have been given the proper protection.

The remedy, then, or preventive, rather, is the winter mulch.

What shall we use, and when best applied?

In our own work any material that is convenient is made to serve the purpose; and the mulching operations are begun as soon as freezing weather sets in—in our latitude about 43 degrees, that is about November 1.

Whether the material used is straw, marsh hay, corn stalks, or forest leaves, good results will be secured if properly applied.

The quantity that should be applied varies somewhat. In one article that I read not long since, a writer recommended eight inches of settled straw.

There are conditions under which a mulch of that depth would mean disastrous results.

In my opinion one inch of the settled straw will afford ample protection in most instances. If the ground is frozen hard at the time, a thick mulch may be applied with safety, but the placing of several inches of straw or other material over plants when the ground is in an unfrozen condition, is almost sure to result disastrously.

The finer the material, the closer it will settle, and consequently the greater the harm likely to be done. The coarser the material used the better; for there is sufficient circulation of air to supply the needs of the plant, yet the sunlight is excluded.

I have received reports from growers in which it was claimed that a much had proved ruinous to strawberry plants. However, if the entire circumstances relating to such instances were fully known, I am confident it would be found that either improper material had been used or improperly applied, perhaps both.

The straw or chaff should be used sparingly, in amount sufficient to preclude the direct rays of light only.

A blanket of snow makes the very best sort of protection, as it permits a free circulation of air, even when it packs in a hard drift several inches in thickness.

This being true, it is a wise plan, whenever possible, to establish the strawberry bed where it will have the benefit of a windbreak of some sort.

In latitudes where there are large snowfalls, it will even pay to build an artificial windbreak of some sort, if needed, to prevent the winds sweeping the ground bare of snow.

In our latitude a light covering of straw answers every purpose required for the winter mulch, as this is always supplemented by a snow blanket, making an ideal combination.

It is not generally thought that excessive freezing of the ground is injurious to the plants, yet we have always had the best results when the ground has been held unfrozen throughout the entire period of plant dormancy.

It seems strange to me now, that so many strawberry growers have their beds without protection, thereby discounting largely the results due at harvest.

Yet it is not so very strange, after all. Many of us go through life with the mind's eye half closed to the things about us. It took several years of costly experience to convince the writer that the winter mulch is an important factor in strawberry growing and that the work must on no account be neglected if the most highly satisfactory results are to be obtained.

SYRUP OF FIGS FOR A CHILD'S BOWELS

It is cruel to force nauseating, harsh physic into a sick child.

Look back at your childhood days. Remember the "dose" mother insisted on—castor oil, calomel, cathartics. How you hated them; how you fought against taking them.

With our children it's different. Mothers who cling to the old form of physic simply don't realize what they do. The children's revolt is well-founded. Their tender little "insides" are injured by them.

If your child's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing, give only delicate "California Syrup of Figs." Its action is positive, but gentle. Millions of mothers keep this harmless "fruit laxative" handy; they know children love to take it; that it never fails to clean the liver and bowels and sweeten the stomach, and that a teaspoonful given today saves a sick child tomorrow.

Ask at the store for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on each bottle. Adv.

Their Pastors' Faults.

Warden—So you got rid of your pastor?

Elder—Yes; he was a good man, but he was too dry in his preaching—always giving us a history of the Jews. But we don't like our new pastor much, either.

Warden—What's the matter with him?

Elder—Well, he preaches with tears in his voice all the time.

Warden—I see. The old pastor was too historical, and the new one too hysterical.

SLAP AT MODERN TEACHING

Most People Will Understand Just What Moral This Anecdote is Intended to Point.

"Now, teachers," said the bright pupil, "attention, please. Remember that we have only six weeks to skim through this text-book besides getting a smattering of a dozen other subjects. I will now proceed to write a sentence on the blackboard."

One of the teachers held up his hand. "Please, pupil, let me write that sentence. I want the practice."

The bright pupil frowned. "My dear sir, that is dead against our rules. We give you as little actual drill as possible, trusting upon our own lengthy explanations and the superb quality of our text-books to burnish your minds."

"But, dear pupil," said another thoughtful-looking teacher, "I have been looking over these text-books and they are not at all good. They bear the dog-eared marks of commercialism and monopoly in the making. Every author who writes one has only the most superficial knowledge of his subject. Why not use some of the old, tested books?"

"Tut, tut! If you persist you'll be sent to the office, where the superintendent will talk to you kindly about your moral nature for at least five minutes. Remember, you must all love your school!"

At this moment the gong rang, and the bright pupil said:

"Period is now over. Now you can go out and play, according to the latest schedule prepared by the National Pupils' Association for the Advancement of the Group Tendencies in All Teachers."—Life.

ESKIMOS NOT KEEN TRADERS

Will Give Anything, No Matter the Value, for What Takes Their Fancy at the Moment.

Among the Eskimos of the Bering sea region, there is no fixed value for whalebone, furs or anything they may have to trade. If one of them has anything of value, he will keep it until some white man appears with something that appeals to his eye. And the money value of what may take him does not make any difference to him. If he has a trinket that may be worth a dollar, and some one offers to give him for it something that is worth a thousand dollars but of which he has no need he will refuse to trade. But he will give anything he possesses for what he really wants.

An Eskimo of St. Lawrence island, in Bering sea, made a catch one season of a big bowhead whale. The head of baleen was worth between ten and fifteen thousand dollars. He knew the approximate value of the head, but he held on to it with no apparent desire to trade. One day a trader appeared with a small gasoline launch, valued at perhaps two or three hundred dollars. The sight of that so took the Eskimo that he straightway traded his head of bone for it.

Far out in the straits one day he ran out of gasoline. He abandoned the launch for the canoe he was towing, and paddled back to the island. But he did not regret his trade. He was satisfied, and ready to try for another whale.—Youth's Companion.

Inspiring Battle Pictures.

The Crimean war inspired many wonderful battle pictures, one of the most pathetic, perhaps, being "The Return from the Crimea," painted by Sir Noel Paton, showing the return to his cottage of a corporal of Fusiliers guards with an empty sleeve, head bandaged and a twelve-month's beard. He sits with closed eyes, while his wife kneels at his feet and clasps his waist. Prints of this picture are to be seen in thousands of homes throughout England.

Of naval battle pictures, perhaps the most notable is that which illustrates the famous incident of the battle of Copenhagen, when Nelson refuses to see the signal of recall, painted by Thomas M. Hemy, the famous marine artist. The painting is one of the most inspiring sea pictures which have ever been exhibited.

Masculine Loyalty.

The family consists of two small children and their devoted parents, and of the latter papa usually helps the small boy to bed, mamma taking care of the small girl. Occasionally, however, something takes papa away from home in the evening and mamma does double duty. After one such experience young Philip confided to his father the true and deep-seated reason why he preferred masculine assistance in regard to saying his prayers.

"Mamma's all right, of course, for a lady," he generously conceded, "but you see, father, God's a man, and you're a man, and I'm going to be a man, so I suppose it's natural for us to stick together."

What's in a Name?
 Apropos of names, the all-British musicians who are now to make their fortunes might now and then be more euphonically or splendidly entitled. To the cognomen "Butt" we have become happily accustomed, and Clara Butt is a household word. In the same way perhaps we shall some day be equally familiar with Carrie Tubb—which seems to suggest the sincerest flattery—but that lady might have been gun with more consideration. Nor is Marie Yelland—another Queen's hall soloist—too fortunate a name.—The Sphero.

MILLIONS OF SHOES FOR ALLIES' HORSES.

Factories Pressed to Fill Single Order Worth $25,000,000.

American manufacturers of horse shoes are not lying awake nights in worry about the duration of the war in Europe. Instead they are employing both their nights and days turning out their wares to keep up with the foreign and home demand.

One of their welcome burdens is the filling of an order from the warrentations for 6,000,000 kegs of shoes. The factories at Providence, Poughkeepsie, Pittsburgh and Troy are going at high pressure to make the output fit the order.

The normal yearly exports of horse shoes, a maker told me, amount to about 10,000,000 kegs. There are no factories in Europe comparable with those in the United States, he said, and hence no particular reason why the manufacturers of this particular product in this country should stamp their shoes with the "Made in U. S. A." trade mark.

When demand is well distributed throughout the year, he said, there is little difficulty in meeting it, but a single order for 6,000,000 kegs necessitates abnormal activity by the makers.

Some of the shoes have been delivered, others are on the way, and the rest are being turned out with the greatest possible speed. It is understood that the big order came from a single firm in London and that the shoes are consigned to Holland as the distributing country.

Most, if not all, the shoes are for use by the armies of the allied nations. The order is said to represent a cash investment of at least $25,000,000 by the purchaser, and the profit to the manufacturers is described as unusually attractive.

While the makers are not worried about the length of hostilities, they are reading carefully the opinions of all experts on this phase of war discussions and relying on them somewhat as trade barometers for the months to come. The foreign war business is enticing because it is on a cash basis and is even more profitable than the domestic trade.

PLAN A LAWYERLESS COURT.

Chicago Has Scheme to Reduce the Cost of Suing.

A court of convenience, where the people may plead their own cases, has been established in Chicago as a branch of the municipal court. Chief Justice Harry Olson announced. Its aim will be to simplify justice and reduce the cost of "going to law."

"No lawyers will be needed to obtain justice," Judge Olson said. "The complainant will present his own case, and the defendant will voice his own defense."

"Technicalities will be eliminated from decisions, and much injustice may be averted."

The court will at first consider cases in which amounts less than $50 are involved. Later its scope will be broadened.

STYLES MAKE FOR IDLENESS.

Capricious Women Blamed In Part For Unemployment Problem.

Speakers at the sessions of the national conference on the unemployed in Philadelphia made these among other suggestions as to ways by which workers could have steady employment:

American women should help to provide steady employment for thousands of workers by being less insistent in demanding ever changing styles. Miss Juliet Stuart Poynter of Boston, the speaker, said that caprice on the part of women who refused to wear last year's dresses and hats made it impossible for manufacturers to provide steady employment for their workers because they never knew what to make until the last minute.

Report of Probation Officer read as follows:

Ann Arbor, Michigan, Oct. 14, 1914.

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors:

Dear Sirs—I herewith submit for your consideration an account of my stewardship for the last twelve months.

Oct. 16, 1913—Your Probation Officer was called to the home of John and Grace Drake on Huron St., to investigate the conditions of Orpha Drake, 10 years old, the home condition was dreadful, the mother an epileptic; the child not in school, on the streets most of the time. The Court thought it best to have the child committed to the State Public School at Coldwater, before something more dreadful would happen to her. Your Probation Officer took her in her own home, cleaned her all up and the following day took her to Coldwater; see her each time when at the State Public School, is getting along fine, in good health and in school every day.

Dec. 18, 1913—Judge Murray asked your Probation Officer to go to Whitmore Lake and investigate the home of Richard Brown, whose home a little four year old grand-child was staying; found both Mr. and Mrs. Brown so drunk that Mrs. Brown could not get in bed, but was lying on the floor. The house looked more like a pig pen, than anything I ever saw. The mother of said child was living in Ann Arbor; working in one of the laundries, having married again, a Mr. Wallace. Your Probation officer filed a complaint with the Judge of Probate to have them all brought into Court; the hearing was set for January 14, 1914. The mother promised to take care of the child; she was also requested not to allow Albert to go back to Whitmore Lake, so mother and child were placed on probation and have seen them nearly every week. They are getting along fine. The home is clean and the mother told your Probation Officer, that while at first she was so mad at us all but now could see it was the best thing that could have happened to them all.

November 20, 1913—Your Probation Officer was called to see about two children, whom the father and step mother had turned away from home, the mother claiming that the boy had tried to poison her. The little three year old sister having seen him put something in a bottle, so the father had him taken to the Detention room, the next morning your Probation Officer spent all forenoon at the home with the father and mother; at night had both children back home. The boy working for a grocery firm earning $6.00 per week; paying the father $3.00 a week for board; the girl working in a laundry at $7.00 per week; paying the $3.00 for her board. Your Probation Officer calling occasionally to help them in any way she could.

Garnet Martin—

Dec. 10, 1913—At the time my attention was called to this boy; 11 years old, by one of our teachers, who was stealing from his foster mother, Garnet being a ward of the State, they asked your Probation Officer to take him back to Coldwater. Your Probation Officer asked to have the boy placed on probation to her, which the foster father and mother were most glad to do, for six months. We have had a great many heart to heart talks; is in school all the time doing good work.

Harry Hartell—

January 6, 1914—Your Probation Officer was called by Mrs. Ladd on Lincoln Ave., that Harry had stolen a sled; went to see the mother, had a long talk with her, we decided that if she sled could be found and returned, we would ask no further questions. Thinking this the better plan for both parties.

January 17, 1914—Was called to 1213 Prospect Street by a mother, Mrs. Pfrommer, to have a talk with her son, Albert, whom she claimed she could not manage; do not think I ever heard a child talk to a parent as this boy did; had a long talk with him and asked him and his younger sister to come and see me every Saturday, found work for him, conditions are much better.

January 9, 1914—Your Probation Officer was called to 204 Ohs. St., by a neighbor to investigate a home, this home of a father, mother and two small children. Never in all my life did I see such filth, as in this home. The father had gone. Found the little 19 year old mother out in the yard splitting wood to start a fire; the two children in the house crying of hunger and cold; went in and helped her start a fire; got something to eat for the children. The bedding was just as filthy as could be; and only one bed for the four to sleep in; told her unless she and her husband would clean up and take better care of the children, would have to take them away from them, but gave her a day to do it in; next day went again and quite an improvement in the house. She is only another one of those poor neglected girl mothers, whose husbands drink, and do not provide for the family. Your Probation Officer still looks after the home.

January 29, 1914—Clesta Huntley came to the Homeopathic Hospital, Dec. 31, 1913, her child was born January 6, 1914. Your Probation Officer tried very hard to have her keep her baby, but she at last told us she would take it and go home to Ypsilanti, but instead left it on the door steps on West Ann Street, this City. While in jail, your Probation Officer went to see her every day, also went with her to the County House, but she absolutely refused to keep her baby, and requested me to commit to the State Public School at Coldwater, which your Probation Officer did. The mother signing on all claims to the child.

Kathryn Cobb—Ypsilanti—

January 28, 1914—Your Probation Officer was called by Judge Murray to take this girl to Adrian, Industrial Home for Girls, it was the same old story, "a motherless girl," father a bar tender in Ypsilanti, she was out of school; out at night, but thought if she could live with your Probation Officer she would be a good girl; was in my home until taken away.

February 21, 1914—Your Probation Officer received a letter from Mrs. Rowena Chapman asking me to come over to the Homeopathic Hospital, she came to the hospital Dec. 14, 1913, her child was born, January 19, 1914. The mother was 32 years of age, her husband had deserted her, with two other children, his whereabouts unknown. She was more than willing to sign all claims upon the child, and have your Probation Officer take it to the State Public School, so it was just four weeks old when taken away. The mother is colored.

March 5, 1914—Your Probation Officer was asked by Judge Murray to go to Chelsea, to investigate some boys, who had gotten into trouble. There were four of them. They admitted to have stolen chickens, money also, broken into houses and smoked. They were brought into the Juvenile Court, March 14, 1914, and were made wards of the court, after a good talk given them. We hear very good reports from them all.

Joseph Casterline and wife, 538 North Ashley Street—

May 8, 1914—Called by Judge Murray to investigate this home; found the poor mother and two small children, father drinks and out of employment most of the time. Nothing in the house but the bed and stove. The children were just eating; all they had was tea and bread; mother not well; had them brought into the Juvenile Court. They are now wards of the court; your Probation Officer looks after them, conditions some better.

May 10, 1914—Miss Reed, head nurse at the Homeopathic Hospital, asked me to take away three babies whose mothers did not want them, but could not take them to State Public School, as they were in quarantine with measles, the hospital being unable to care for them, we had to find some way to care for them, so we put an advertisement in the Daily Times News, at night your Probation Officer was besieged with prospective mothers wishing to adopt children. Their hearts just running over with mother love—did not care what it was a boy or girl—just so it was a baby. Your Probation Officer told she would be glad to let them have one of her babies, but would have to investigate their homes, and know all about them, as it meant a great deal to me, placing the children in good homes. On investigation found two of my anxious fathers and mothers, were women who had been at one time in the houses of prostitution here in Ann Arbor, both couple had been married about eleven months, but later we succeeded in finding good homes for them all.

Moved by Supervisor Holmes, that the report be accepted and referred to Salary Committee. Carried.

Nominations for School Examiner.
