Commencement Exercises.

The graduating exercises of the class of 1915 of the Chelsea high school were held in the M. E. church Wednesday evening. The church was handsomely decorated with the class colors and flowers. The members of the class of 1916 acted as ushers and the church was filled to its capacity by the relatives and friends of the

The musical numbers of the program were rendered by the Gibson Orchestra, of Jackson. The invocation was given by Rev. A. A. Schoen. The salutatory was given by Miss Lettie Kaercher. The class prophecy by Miss Ruth Whitney and Mr. Geo. Naeckel. The class will was by Messrs. Leon Shutes and Evert Benton and the valedictory by Miss Frances Holden. The address was by Dr. W. D. Henderson, of Ann Arbor, who used as his theme "Kings and Common People." Supt. Hendry presented pronounced by Rev. C. J. Dole.

Every number on the program was well rendered and the parts taken by the members of the class were meritorious and highly appreciated by their friends. The address of Dr. istened to with rapt attention.

The class this year contained fifteen young ladies and eleven young men. Some of them will teach school the coming year, and others will attend the university and colleges and some have secured other employment.

School Buildings.

The Superintendent of Public Instruction is preparing plans and specifications for one and two-room school buildings ranging in price from one thousand to five thousand dollars. These will be ready to be turnished to school board and building committees in June. There will be plans for any frontage, north, south, east or west. Provision will be made for both basement furnaces and room furnaces. Proper lighting, heating and ventilation will be incorporated in all these plans and general health conditions and practical utility for school purposes will be secured. Economy of construction will be kept steadily in nind and at the same time all plans will adhere closely to the well established standards for safety, healthful- factory into one for the manufacture ness, comfort and convenience.

Baccalaureate Address

The baccalaureate address to the senior class of the Chelsea High school was delivered at the Methodist church Sunday evening by Rev. G. H. Whitney. Mr. Whitney's theme was on the attainment of wisdom, and he endeavored to show the members of the class that the attainment of knowledge did not necessarily mean the attainment of wisdom. His text was from First Kings, 3:9.

The music by the choir was well rendered, the vocal solo by Miss Bernice Prudden and a violin and organ number by Mrs. P. M. Broesamle and Miss Esther Rièmenschneider deserving special mention.

The church was beautifully decorated with the class colors and flowers. and was filled to its capacity by the friends of the seniors.

Survivors and Relatives Express Die appointment That Admiralty's Instructions Are Not Made Public.

London-Fifty survivors of the Lusitania disaster, with relatives of passengers who lost their lives, and privately-retained lawyers, attended the opening session Tuesday of the board of trade inquiry into the destruction of the liner by a German submarine, May 7, with a loss of more than 1,100 lives.

The survivors and relatives of the dead expressed disappointment at the fact the testimony relating to the admiralty's wireless instructions to the Lusitania was given in private.

Captain Turner was principal witness. He appeared to be in good prime steers, $8.75@9.25; fair to good, physical condition, and in full control of his nerves. His voice was hearty 8.25; choice to prime handy steers. and firm, his manner brisk and his $8.25@8.75; fair to good, $7.75@8; answers prompt.

ASHINGTON.—The readiness of the government to make use of the most modern methods in spreading the useful information which its most most most writer is constantly accumulating, and in missionary effort for the adoption of its discoveries by the "ultimate citizen." is strikingly shown by experiments in the production of motion pictures being carried on by the department of agriculture.

furnish films to outside organizations or commercial theaters, or even to supply any considerable part of the demand made by its own field agents, the department is carrying on promising work in both experimentation and production. Through its force of tion picture experts, many of whom have had extensive experience in commercial fields, it has already turned out in a little more than a year eximately 50,000 feet of excellent negative and has printed from this shout half as many feet of positive film suitable for public projection. Before this phase of Uncle's Sam's "movie" activities is reached new larislation will be required. If legislation can be secured authorizing the emenditure of receipts from film sales and leases to pay the expenses of production, it is believed that the motion picture enterprise can be put on practically a self-supporting basis, at the same time that pictures of the greatest educational value are given wide distribution.

While officials in charge of the motion picture activities of the agriculteral department have this wide use of their developing plant in the backs of their minds, they are going about the business of filming interesting and instructive activities of the department and adding to their stock of positive ilms. Subjects already on their shelves represent such varied activities as testing cows in Vermont, raising pigs in the South, grafting trees, canning segetables, building roads and fighting forest fires.

National Museum Gets Jawbone of Prehistoric Cat

NAMES W. GIDLEY, assistant curator of paleontology in the National museum, is back from an excavating expedition in the ancient deposits in the railroad cut near Cumberland, Md., bringing with him as an interesting find a piece of the broken jawbone of a prehistoric cat, whose species is now extinct, and whose age is about 150,000 years.

This deposit was opened about three years ago by workmen digging in a cut of the Western Maryland milroad. It is about 125 feet from the surface, which is a ridge composed at the bottom of limestone probably 15,000,000 years old. From the top of the ground there was a kind of tun-nel, ending at the cave, which is now. on a level with the roadbed. Workmen in ballasting the ties used many valuable prehistoric bones, never dreaming that they were shoveling fossils which existed here before the advent of man.

Mr. Gidley, in this last trip, found this jawbone of an ancient cat, which is a rare bit of good luck. According to the scientific men, the cavern itself h which this antique cat's bones were imbedded was only about 1,000,000 years old, though the rock itself was fifteen times more ancient.

Time has gradually filled up this cavern and the tunnel with soil, but Mr. Gidley carefully excavated the dirt and obtained this specimen, from which science can reconstruct a cat which was in its palmy days as large as a jaguar is at present. When this kitty wandered about there were no back fences to lure him to nocturnal serenades, nor had ancient man yet appeared on this continent to interrupt his jawlings with a prehistoric bootjack or beer

His only companions were the saber-toothed tigers, the immense mastodons grazing about in the plains, the mammoths, the great sloths, tapirs, the prototype of the present horse and an extinct bison species But this cat was not lonely, there being a large family connection. It closely resembled the mountain lion, though much similar in some respects to the tiger. Standing about two feet high, ferocious and with powerful sharp teeth, it was every bit as formidable a foe as any tiger today pacing his cage in the zoo.

Washington Discovers a Large New Department

ASHINGTON has just waked up to discover that it has a large new department of the government which it has little suspected of being in existence, but which has in its own judgment attained proportions justifying it in renting and moving into the large eight-story Willard building, on Fourteenth street. This building was the long-time home of the department of commerce and later of the department of labor, which found the structure too large for its needs. It has borne the sign "For rent as a whole." But suddenly the sign came down and van after van arrived with furniture of that substantial kind which only the government buys, and so it was known that the government was moving back into an old haunt, but there was curiosity to see what branch of the government was substantial enough to claim such large space. Gold lettering over the doorway gave token that the "Office of Public Roads and Rural Engisering, United States Department of Agriculture," was the new tenant, and Washington rubbed its eyes and said: "Didn't know there was such a big thing as that in the capital."

The roads bureau in its expanding splendor expresses a growing idea about which the people of the United States seem destined to hear much in the future. The government has in fact launched out on a great good roads program, which seemingly will make rivers and harbors improvements, which have already cost hundreds of millions of dollars, look tame. It has not generally been known that the good roads idea had attained such substantial proportions as the new tenant of the Willard building indicates.

Smithsonian's Nature Wonder Room for Children

N the Smithsonian Institution there is a room especially arranged for the children. It is not fitted up with swings, slides and seesaws, but with some of the wonders of nature; curious animals, birds, fishes, insects, plants and rocks, all grouped so as to appeal to the youthful mind. This exhibit, while planned especially for the child, s entertaining to the adult as well.

The room was designed and prepared under the personal direction of the late secretary, Dr. Samuel Pierpont Langley, whose interests were human and broad that he took time from his other studies to direct the arrangement of this room for his little clients," as he called them. He even went so far as to appoint himself honorary curator, and chose to accept this appointment with great serideness, devoting nearly two years to the work. In the center is an aquarium of brightly colored fishes and tiny turtles.

the wall cases, which are all low, so as to be within range of a child's vision, Contain the different groups. The first, the "Largest and Smallest Birds of Prey," includes several birds ranging in size from the condor of the Andes to the tiny pygmy hawk. Next are the eagle and elf owls, followed by "Some Curious Birds". Carious Birds," all of which live up to their general label; they comprise the ducan, with his absurdly overgrown bill, another bird whose bill seems to be upside down, a queer paradise bird with two very long head plumes, which sleep upside down, suspended by one foot, and an umbrella bird with a chrysanthe upside down, suspended by one foot, and an umbrella bird with a chrysanthe ungagement. Other Peoples Business

By John P. Sarient

(Copyright, 1915, by W. G. Chapman.)

"Why do you wish to break our engagement?" asked May Earle of Ned Ward, as he stood before her in the garden of her father's house.

It had been a hard request for him to make, but he had nerved himself Although not yet in a position to to do so. At first the girl had made no rejoinder; she was too astonished to speak. Then she turned and faced

"I have ceased to love you," he answered quietly.

"You are free, then," said Miss Earle, and went on clipping the lilac boughs. And Ned Ward walked away, sick at heart, and yet with a curious sense of happiness at the conclusion of the inevitable.

Eight months before Ned Ward had come to Bentham, to enter the local bank as assistant manager. John Earle had been his predecessor, but he had died suddenly. Ned found himself thrown into contact with his daughter May: friendship developed and apparently ripened into love. He proposed and was accepted. He lived in ecstasy for weeks.

He knew that John Earl had left no money except a thousand dollars of I dying?" insurance, and that May was totally unused to work. He was glad that he was in a position to care for her. Pretty soon he would be made manager, when Smith stepped out, which would mean an income of two thousand-luxury in Bentham.

So they had been happy in their enfew days with her. Ned had never been told that May was acquainted with her. He himself had met her only once in their home town-but she was a cousin of Myra.

Ned had told May that he had been engaged once, years before, Myra had broken the engagement when she learned that Ned's expectations were smaller than she had believed. But she had contrived to have it appear that Ned had treated her badly. Ned had said nothing, but Bessie, boiling over with indignation, had vowed to get even with Ned some day, for Myra's sake.

Ned knew nothing of this when May introduced him to Bessie. That same evening, after Ned was gone, Bessie told May of the engagement. Great was her disappointment to learn that May had been told of the matter. There was no chance of making mischief there.

She went to Ned. "I think I ought to tell you something, Mr. Ward," she said. "Miss Earle is marrying you for your money. She does not care for you at all. In fact, she has thrown over a man whom she does love very dearly, for your sake."

"I don't believe you," stormed Ned. "Will you believe me if I show you proof?" asked Bessie.

Ned nodded and Bessie handed him a letter. It was written to May and was signed with the name of Philip Whiting. "You say you love me, May," it ran, "and cannot marry me because I that any reason why you should you one day-" throw yourself away on a man for whom you care nothing? May, we love each other, and have learned to care more truly for each other since told her only this morning. Ned, she your unhappy engagement. Pluck up courage to tell Mr. Ward: he will release you. Adoringly yours forever. Bessie looked into Ned's haggard face as he finished reading the letter and handed it back to her.

"I thought this was my duty, as a mutual friend, Mr. Ward," she said.
"I thank you, Miss Reid," answered week later he had resigned his posttion and gone West.

Three years passed. It would be absurd to say that no other woman entered the young man's life. He had love affairs-but with each successive disillusionment he returned to May Earle in his heart's fealty. He had known that she would never tell him her love had changed; he had done the only thing possible, in his opinion He thrust the recurring image away and strove to forget in the wild frontier life he led.

Ned was one of a posse that had set out to capture a band of notorious outlaws which had terrorized the region for several months. A general battle ensued after the gang was sighted in the hills. Ned found himself in a tionist to have cancer of the stomduel with one of the outlaws, He ach." emptied his revolver. While he was hastily recharging it the fellow, with triumphant shout, raised his Winchester at a distance of fifty paces, and covered him. An instant later later the weapon fell from his hand; he spun round and fell.

know his face. And the dying man in real money." knew his.

"You're Ned Ward!" he exclaimed. Of the bank back in what was that little town?"

"Yes," said Ned. "Often I thought of holding up that place. Wish I'd done so now and made a haul. Don't you know me?" "Not by name," answered Ned.

"My name's Whiting-Phil Whiting," mumbled the outlaw. "Say! Am Ned bowed his head. The bitter shame overcame him and robbed him of all power of speech; added to this was the horror that May's lover should be such a man as this one.

"If my time's come I can stand for it." mumbled the bandit philosophical ly, after a coughing spell which racked gagement until the day when May's him. "But you don't bear no malice? friend Bessie Reid came to spend a You'll send a message for me to the only girl I've ever thought much of?" "Your wife?" Ned burst out impetu-

> "Lord, no! I never married-never had the coin, worse luck. But she was a dandy girl, back in-what was our little burg's name?-and I want her to know I-I hadn't forgotten her. You see, I've been living on her for months past-years, now I come to think."

"Living off her?" "Yes. She thought I was going to marry her when I got a job. She didn't know the life I was leading. She kept sending me money. And honest, I did mean to marry her just as soon as I could pull off another trick and go East. But I guess I'm done for now." "Her name?" asked Ned, kneeling over the man, and shuddering at the thought of hearing May's name pronounced by him. "You'll tell her I was killed in an accident, friend," he whispered. "You'll never let her know the truth. Promise? Then write her name. Miss Bessie Reid. . . ." The man had grown delirious. He was muttering now, and Ned kneeled beside him, waiting, while darkness fell. The rest of the band had long since surrendered and were being conveyed in the sheriff's charge to the county seat. Ned and the dying man, hidden in the sage brush, had escaped notice. "She was a stunner, a real dandy," muttered Whiting. "There wasn't a girl as smart as her anywhere. I remember how we laughed over a trick she played on somebody-odd I can't remember his name now. She got me to write a letter to a friend of hers, to break up a match with a young fool Bess hated. I wish you could have seen the way Bess laughed when she told me." "Yes, it must have been amusing," muttered Ned, wiping the froth from the lips of the dying man,

He buried him in the sand at dawn. Then, returning to the settlement, Ned realized his holdings and, with twelve thousand dollars in his pockets, returned East. He hardly hoped that May was still unmarried, but he meant to see her and ask her forgiveness.

When he approached the garden in the little town he saw a woman clipping the hedge. But it was not May. It was Bessie Reid. She was dressed in deep mourning, and, seeing Ned, she recognized him at once and ran to him with a startling cry.

"I got your letter. It was so good of you," she murmured, her eyes filling with tears. "Poor Phil-such a dreadful end in that mine disaster, and how strange you being there and recognizing him."

"Yes," answered Ned. "Where is Miss Earle?"

SOLDIERS WHO WEAR VEILS

British Troops in Southwest Africa Have to Conduct Campaign Under Difficulties, Water and and

One of the hottest places where the British are fighting is in German Southwest Africa, where General Botha is in command of an expedition against the enemy. The habitable part of German Southwest Africa lies in the center of a sun-scorched, waterless, shadeless desert of shifting sand, and General Botha's men have to carry everything they need, for nothing whatever can be obtained from the country, not even fodder for the ani-

The sand penetrates everywhere, and the heat of the sun is so terrific that all the troops fighting with General Botha have been served out with veils and "goggles." Without them. indeed, it would be impossible to get along at all, and, as it is, hundreds of the Boer burghers, though hardened campaigners, have been so blistered by the sun that they are in hospital.

The heat at midday is 122 degrees in the shade and the "shade" is a sweltering tent. Many of the troops pass that time of the day with nothing on but a sun helmet and a pair of boots.

The Look in French Faces. Almost all the faces about these crowded tables (in the cafe at Chalons)-young or old, plain or handsome, distinguished or average—have the same look of quiet authority; it is as though all "nervosity," fussiness, little personal oddities, meanness and vulgarities, had been burned away in great flame of self-dedication. It is a wonderful example of the rapidity with which purpose models the human countenance.-Edith Wharton in

> SHE QUIT But It Was a Hard Pull.

It is hard to believe that coffee will put a person in such a condition as it did an Ohio woman. She tells her own story: "I did not believe coffee caused my trouble, and frequently said I liked it so well I would not, and could not, quit drinking it, but I was a miserable sufferer from heart trouble and nervous prostration for four years. "I was scarcely able to be around, had no energy and did not care for anything. Was emaciated and had a constant pain around my heart until I thought I could not endure it.

"Frequently I had nervous chills and the least excitement would drive sleep away, and any little noise would upset me terribly. I was gradually getting worse until finally I asked my self what's the use of being sick a the time and buying medicine so that I could indulge myself in coffee?

"So I got some Postum to help me quit. I made it strictly according to directions and I want to tell you that change was the greatest step in my life. It was easy to quit coffee because I now like Postum better than the coffee. "One by one the old troubles left until now I am in splendid health, nerves steady, heart all right and the ain all gone. Never have any more nervous chills, don't take any medicine, can do all my house work and have done a great deal besides."

FIRST INSTALLMENT

"SANFORD QUEST, CRIMINOLO-GIST."

The young man from the West had arrived in New York only that aftermoon, and his cousin, town born and bred, had already embarked upon the task of showing him the great city. They occupied a table in a somewhat denificant corner of one of New York's most famous roof garden restaurants. The place was crowded with diners. There were many notaflities to be pointed out. The town young man was very busy.

"Tell me," the country cousin inquired, "who is the man at a table by nself? The waiters speak to him as though he were a little god. Is he a millionaire, or a judge, or what?"

"You're in luck, Alfred," the New Yorker declared. "That's the most interesting man in New York-one of the most interesting in the world. That's Sanford Quest." Who's he?"

"Sanford Quest is the greatest master in criminology the world has ever known. He is a magician, a scientist, the Pierpont Morgan of his profes-

"Say, do you mean that he is a detective?"

"Yes," he said simply, "you can call him that-just in the same way that you could call Napoleon a soldier or Lincoln a statesman. He is a detective, if you like to call him that, the master detective in the world."

When Sanford Quest entered his house an hour later he glanced into two of the rooms on the ground floor, in which telegraph and telephone operators sat at their instruments. Then, by means of a small lift, he ascended to the top story and entered a large apartment wrapped in gloom until, as he crossed the threshold, he touched the switches of the electric Mghts. One realized then that this was a man of taste. Quest drew up an easy chair to the wide-flung window, touching a bell as he crossed the room. In a few moments the door was ned and closed noisele young woman entered with a bundle of papers.

The criminologist glanced through the papers quickly. "No further inquiries, Laura?" She left the room almost noiselessly.

"I shall now," Lord Ashleigh said, Teave you to talk over and discuss this matter for the rest of the day. At dinner time tonight you can tell me your decision, or rather we will discuss it together."

Ella glanced over her shoulder at the two servants who were standing discreetly in the background. Her eyes rested upon the pale, expressionless face of the man who during the last few years had enjoyed her father's confidence. For a moment a queer sense of appro' ension troubled her. Was it true, she wondered, that she did not like the man? She banished the thought almost as soon as it was conceived. "You are spoiling me, daddy," Ella sighed. "If you think so now," he remarked, "I do not know what you will say to me presently." He laid upon the table a very familiar morocco case, stamped with a coronet. "Our diamonds!" Ella exclaimed. "The Ashleigh diamonds!"

The necklace lay exposed to view, the wonderful stones flashing in the subdued light.

"In New York," Lord Ashleigh continued, "it is the custom to wear jewelry in public more, even, than in this country. Allow me!" He leaned forward. With long, capable fingers he fastened the necklace around his daughter's neck.

"It is our farewell present to you." Lord Ashleigh declared. Ella, impelled by some curious impulse which she could not quite un-

Then she returned to the lift and descended once more to the floor upon which her mistress' apartments were situated. She opened the door turned at once to the sitting room.

"I am sorry, my lady-" she began. Then she stopped short. The lift boy, who had had a little trouble with his starting apparatus and had not as yet descended, heard the scream which broke from her lips, and a fireman in an adjacent corridor came running up almost at the same moment. Lenora was on her knees by her mistress' side. Ella was still lying in the easy-chair in which she had been seated, but her head was thrown back in an unnatural fashion. There was a red mark just across her throat. Lenora shrieked, "She's fainted!

And the diamonds—the diamonds have gone!" A doctor, hurriedly summoned, had just completed a hasty examination when a police inspector, followed by a detective, entered. "This is your affair, gentlemen, not mine," the doctor said gravely. "The young lady is dead. She has been cruelly strangled within the last five or ten minutes." The inspector made a careful examination of the room.

"Tell me," he inquired, "is this the Ashleigh diamonds?" "They've gone!" Lenora shricked.

"They've been stolen! She was wearing them when I left the room!" The inspector turned to the tele-

"Mr. Marsham," he said, "I am afraid this will be a difficult affair. I am going to take the liberty of calling in an expert. That you, exchange? I want number one, New York city-Mr. Sanford Quest."

CHAPTER IV.

There seemed to be nothing original in the methods pursued by the great criminologist when confronted with this tableau of death and robbery. His remarks to the inspector were few and perfunctory. He asked only a few languid questions of Macdougal and Lenora, who were summoned to his presence.

Macdougal then turned to leave the room. Lenora was about to follow, but Quest signed to her to remain. "I should like to have a little conversation with you about your mistress," he said to her pleasantly. "If you don't mind, I will ask you to accompany me in my car. I will send the man back with you."

It must be the house we failed to find which Bill Taylor used to keep before he was shot. Smooth brick walls, smooth brick floor, only exit twelve feet above one's head. He gripped it in his fingers, stood as nearly as possible underneath the spot from which he had been projected, coolly swung his arm back, and flung the black pebble against the sliding door. The explosion which followed shook the very ground under his feet. For minutes afterwards everything around him seemed to rock. Then Sanford Quest emerged, dusty but unhurt, and touched a constable on his arm. "Arrest me," he ordered. "I am San-

He left the room. For a few moments there was a profound silence. Then a white face was pressed against the window. There was a crash of glass. A man covered with snow sprang into the apartment. He moved swiftly to the sofa, and something, black and ugly swayed in his hand.

"So you've deceived me, have you?" he panted. "Handed over the jewels, chucked me, and given me the double cross! Anything to say?"

Macdougal leaned forward, his white face distorted with passion. The life-preserver bent and quivered behind him, cut the air with a swish and crashed full upon the head.

The man staggered back. The weapon fell from his fingers. For a moment he was paralyzed. There was no blood upon his hand, no crysilence inhuman, unnatural! He looked again. Then the lights flashed out all around him. There were two detectives in the doorway, their revolvers covering him-Sanford Quest, with Lenora in the background. American Soldier Properly Resented Filipino's Insult to a Spanish Officer.

The story is told by an English naval officer who witnessed the occurrence in Manila: "As I was crossing one of the numerous bridges across the Pasig river, I saw a native Filipino spit in the face of a Spanish officer, and then run for protection to the American sentinel, who was pacing the bridge. It was some time before the Filipino could make himself understood, but when the sentry comprehended his action was very prompt indeed. He handed his gun to the Spanish officer, caught the native by the nape of the neck and the seat of his trousers, and pitched him off the bridge into the Pasig river. Then he calmly took his gun from the officer, and began pacing his beat, as if nothing had happened."-Unidentified.

BULL MAKES DANGEROUS PET

Should Never Be Trusted So Far as to Get Advantage of Attendant-Exercise is Essential.

The practice of permitting a bull to run with the dairy cows cannot possibly be commended, especially is this true during the breeding season; and with the dairyman who is milking a large number of cows and has a constant demand for milk, this means practically the entire time. A bull kept in a small paddock where he gets plenty of exercise, pure water and food rich in bone and muscle-forming material such as alfalfa, outs and wheat bran, will be more vigorous and give better service than a bull permitted to run with the cows. It is very essential that the bull should have plenty of exercise, which he cannot get if confined to a stall. Where it is impossible for the owner to fence securely about one acre for the bull, he can very easily provide the necessary exercise by stretching a strong wire between two substantial posts and fastening the bull by chain from the ring in his nose to a ring which slips loosely over the wire. This makes a secure fastening and one which experience has proved practi-

When kept in this way the bull is also more easily managed. A dairy bull makes a dangerous pet, and should never be so far trusted as to be in a position where he can get the advantage of his attendant. Those unfortunate accidents which have sometimes occurred have usually been due to overconfidence on the part of the attendant.

The bull should always be handled kindly and firmly, and should understand that his attendant is his master. It is always advisable to train the bull calf to lead, and a ring should be placed in his nose at an early date.

TEST OUT PROFITABLE COWS

Important That Farmer Should Know Quantity and Quality He Is Receiving From Animals.

(By W. A. M'KERROW, Minnesota Experiment Station.)

Feed is going to be higher than usual this season unless all signs fail. It is, therefore, doubly important that the farmer keeping dairy cows should be sure that his cows are giving him more than value received for what they eat. The way to be sure of this is to have scales and a Babcock tester. This is only one of the reasons why farmers should test their cows for quantity and quality of product. Other reasons for cow-testing are: It enables the farmer to eliminate cows that do not pay for their board. It saves many a good cow from the

and good care.

It gives the farmer an opportunity to build up a good producing herd. It increases one's interest in dairying as a business rather than as a means of labor merely.

In short, it is plain common sense.

BEWARE OF THE QUIET BULL

SAVE WILLIAM PENN'S CHAIRS HOW WOMEN

lational Heirlooms, About to Fall Apart, Have Been Repaired by Blind Women.

Two quaint and graceful chairs that once belonged to William Penn have just been repaired by two women who have never seen the chairs, says the Philadelphia Ledger. The two women are inmates of the Pennsylvania In-dustrial Home for Blind Women. The chairs are preserved in the east room of Independence hall, on the second floor. Year by year the cane bottoms of the famous old relics have been gradually cracking and falling out. The committee in charge decided that unless the cane was replaced the woodwork might soon collapse. But they did not dare to let the chairs be taken out of Congress hall.

So they sent for Miss Ira Frost, mistress of handicraft at the Industrial Home for Blind Women, and she brought with her to the room two of the blind women who understood chair repairing. The work was peculiarly difficult, for it was impossible to erect in Congress hall the caning table needed to hold the chairs firmly in place, and, moreover, their woodwork was soft with age. But the deft "seeing fingers" of the bling women did the work in spite of all the difficulties, and now the precious William Penn chairs are safe.

Two women—Queen Maud of Norway and Queen Alexandra of England the new south polar region so lately aced upon the map. Like he were accorded several women in the far north many years ago. Lady Franklin bay, named after the heroic wife of Sir John Franklin, is well known through its association with the tragic story of the "Lady Franklin Bay Expedition," under General Greely, thirty years ago.

Another distinguished woman, Lady Franklin's friend, Mary Somerville, the cian, gave her name to a tiny, frozen, desolate dot in the Arctic seas. The daughter of a fine old fighting admiral, Mrs. Somerville was always keenly interested in ships, sailors and explorations. So when her friend, Sir Edward Parry, was preparing for his third JACKSON-Inmates of Jackson arctic voyage, she laid in a large supply of oranges, betook herself to her kitchen, and made an amazing number of jars of delicious orange marmalade, which she sent to him as her contribution to the ship's stores.

Three years later, when the expedition returned. Sir Edward informed her that an island had been named in her honor.

"Because of fame and friendship, he says," she wrote, merrily. "But I believe in my heart because of some thing quite different-less sweet than woman's achievement, preferred by -no! my marmalade!"

If she did not so far outrank the rest of her sex in marmalade as in mathematics, Mary Somerville was none the less a very capable housewife. She was an economical manager, an exquisite needle-woman, and Somerville's family, who shared the contemporary prejudice against learned ladies, by making, under the grave YPSILANTI-Prof. Edwin Strong difficulties presented by an ill-equip-

Boy Sets New Page in Tragedy. A boy killed seven persons in a farmhouse near Nantes, France, one night recently. The crime, which is one of the most terrible recorded for years was committed by a boy of fifteen, Marcel Redureau who murdered bed. Redureau was employed by were working in the wine vat at ten o'clock at night, when Mabit made an observation to the boy which he resented. Redureau, who had in his hand one of the short sharp curved diately stabbed the farmer in the neck. This is the boy's own description of what happened, as the police took it down from his lips when they had saved him from being lynched by the villagers: "I did not deserve what Mabit said to me. He had his back straight into the farmhouse and cut old Madame Mabit's throat. She screamed, her daughter-in-law and the servant came running. I killed them both. Then I went into the children's room and cut the throats of all three (the children were eight, seven and ANN ARBOR-Arthur H. Rowe of two years). I did not see the other

During his stay in Ireland the duke was the guest of Colonel John Leslie, veteran baronet who belongs to the house of which the Earl of Rothes is the head. Colonel Leslie, who was formerly in the Grenadier Guards, served in the Egyptian Expedition and in South Africa. He is a prominent man in County Monaghan, which his father formerly represented in the house of commons. There is an interesting legend-not accepted by the family-concerning the motto which Sir John Leslie and the Earl of Rothes have adopted-"Grip Fast." The story runs that as Queen Margaret of Scotland was crossing a swollen river she was thrown from her horse. A Leslie caught hold of bag by speaking of it."

"Oh, yes," murmured the frien "his mother and his wife don't get along together, and Blank is between the devil and the deep sea. Say— when do you think this weather will

"Dunno," replied the lean man But say-I don't see why there's got to be so much mother-in-law trouble. Now you take my family. Mother is dependent on me and she lives with us. According to most people, that would spell sure trouble. But in our case it hasn't worked out that way." "Your mother and your wife are both fine women," commented the

"I guess that's it," agreed the lean man. "You see, I didn't marry till middle age, and mother and I lived together alone up to that time.

"Then I met Florence. She was a successful business woman. It takes a lot of good hard sense to be that. and she had it. Well, we married, and she came right into my home, with mother welcoming her as a daughter.

"Now, what did my mother do? Did she sit back and sulk, or did she get up and assert her supremacy

"She did not. She held a business session with my wife, made a statement of assets and liabilities, as you might say, turned the business over to my wife, declared she was willing to be a consulting partner if necessary, but that it was her intention and earnest desire to be relieved of responsibilities and take a rest.

"It's working out beautifully. My wife is the manager of the household. I believe that she and mother have a sort of directors' meeting once in awhile, but mother has refrained from giving any advice that wasn't asked. and has never insisted upon the carrying out of the advice she has given. She is a pleasant and honored member of our family. In times of need she has thrown herself into the work without saving herself, and we owe at least one of our children's lives to her care."-Edna K. Wooley in the Chicago News.

Reason Enough for Tears. The telephone bell rang sharply. Dobbs recognized his wife's voice at the other end.

"No," he said. "I won't forget it But what on earth is the matter with your voice? Have you taken cold already this fall?"

"No-n-no-no-but I've been crying horribly. So has your mother." Dobbs puckered up his brows and whistled softly to himself, "Well," he ventured, "ah-that is Great Violinist's Kind Act. An impressive example of kindness is given by Paganini, the great musician. One cold Christmas day he was going along the streets of London when he saw a poor blind man playing on a violin trying to earn a mite with which to buy food to satisfy his hunger. But his tunes lacked power to move the hearts of people and he received no response. The poor blind man stood hungry in the cold. As Paganini approached him, he kindly patted him on the back and said, "Won't the people give you any money?" "No,' was the reply; "they won't open their window; it is too cold." "Well, lend me your violin." said the great musician, "and I will see if they will open them for me." Paganini played as never before. The windows opened as if by magic. The people listened, and money thrown plentifully to the beggar. The sweet violinist picked it up, gave it to the blind man, and told him to go home out of the cold.

Lives That Help. Certainly, in our own little sphere it is not the most active people to whom we owe the most. Among the common people whom we know, it is not necessarily those who are busiest, not those who, meteorlike, are ever on the rush after some visible change and work-it is the lives, like the stars, which simply pour down on us the calm light of their bright and faithful being, up to which we look and out of which we gather the deepest calm and courage. It seems to me that there is reassurance here for many of us who seem to have no chance for active usefulness. We can do nothing for our fellow men. But still it is good to know that we can be some-thing for them; to know (and this we may know surely), that no man or woman of the humblest sort can really be strong, gentle, pure and good, without somebody being helped and
