ANTI-TUBERCULOSIS WORKERS COMING

Campaign Begins in Washtenaw Next Monday Under Charge of Dr. DeKleine.

Washtenaw is the next county to be visited by the anti-tuberculosis campaigners of the state board of health. The party of "Health First" workers is coming to Washtenaw county next week and will remain here for three weeks. The campaign opens Monday, May 15, and closes on June 3. During that time everything that can be done will be done to discover how widespread tuberculosis is in this county and to tell the people who are afflicted with the disease how to make the best possible fight to regain their health.

The "Health First" party that comes to Washtenaw county consists of Dr. Wm. DeKleine, director, several other doctors, a publicity man, a special lecturer, a housing survey expert, and twelve visiting nurses.

During the week beginning May 22, the second week of the survey here, free examinations for tuberculosis will be held in several of the cities and towns of the county. These free examinations are for all persons who are physically run-down, whether they have tuberculosis or not.

During the closing week of the campaign, beginning May 29, Dr. DeKleine and his assistants will give a series of public addresses in the schools of the county and before civic and municipal bodies. During that week also the corps of nurses will visit the homes of all those who are found at the free examinations to be afflicted with tuberculosis to give them personal instruction on how to fight the disease.

A Fraternal Visit.

The Pythian Sisters of Arbor Temple, Ann Arbor, extended an invitation to the Pythian Sisters of Chelsea Temple to attend a banquet and temple meeting last Friday evening.

Twenty-five of the members accepted the invitation and left on the 5:33 car. They were met by a number of the ladies of Arbor Temple and escorted to the temple where a fine banquet was served to about one hundred and seventy-five. The long table was handsomely decorated with ferns and plants.

After the banquet the Temple was called to order and the initiatory work was taken up, which was very beautifully exemplified. After the meeting was closed, dancing was in order for the social hour.

The members of Chelsea Temple returning on the last car, and each report a fine time and vote Arbor Temple royal entertainers.

Dry to Raise Big Fund.

Determination to carry the wet and dry fight which involves the entire state this fall, to as far a point as possible in Washtenaw county was expressed in exceedingly concrete form last Thursday evening during the course of a banquet and meeting of the Washtenaw county dry campaign committee by raising of $1,020.50 inside of ten minutes of time. In addition to that committee voted to raise $7,000 in Washtenaw county to carry the dry side of the fight forward, $5,000 to be used in the county and $2,000 for the uses of the state central committee's work. May 15, 16 and 17 was set as the date for the three-day's campaign for funds.

As a Woman Thinketh.

The play chosen by the Senior Class of the Chelsea high school has a plot quite out of the ordinary. It is a good clean comedy of the purest type, yet running along with this are the serious efforts of a woman trying to remodel her family by a sub-conscious medium.

How her interest in New Thought ideas is aroused, her determination to try it on her family, the consternation she creates and the results brought about, shape themselves into a real live story which will hold the interest of the audience.

The play will be given at the town hall, at 8 o'clock Friday evening, May 12. Admission 25 and 30 cents.

Near Jail Delivery.

The timely discovery of sawed off bars in the second story of the county jail and the fact that a window sash in the lower section had been cut away ready to push out, averted what might have been a serious jail delivery Saturday night.

The braces of one of the barred windows in the second story section had been cut away, and the removal of it would have been only a matter of a moment or two, providing the men had been allowed to remain in the corridor section until after dark. Discovery of this state of affairs was made early enough so that the prisoners were all placed in their cells. On the first floor the window sash had been fixed so that a push would have sent it out.

TELLS OTHERS ALL ABOUT THIS TANLAC.

Mrs. Peter Wright, of Lapeer, Describes Relief Given Her By Use Of Tanlac.

Mrs. Peter Wright, of 75 Higgins Street, Lapeer, Michigan, is telling a remarkable story of the relief Tanlac has given her from stomach trouble and catarrh. This is what she says: "My suffering has been quite a trial to me but I am glad to say that Tanlac has put an end to it. "My stomach had been in a disordered condition for a long period. In addition I suffered from catarrh with all its disagreeable features. I was nervous also and could not sleep well. My kidneys were weak. I used to have severe pains in my stomach and, after eating, I would be annoyed by gas forming.

"All this made me very run down and I was hardly fit for anything because I lacked energy and vigor. "I have used Tanlac now for a short time but am already much better. I can sleep again, thank goodness. I have no more trouble with my stomach and all the unpleasant catarrh symptoms are gone. I have a good appetite. "I hope that what I have said will prove helpful to those who are suffering."

Tanlac may be obtained here at the store of H. H. Fenn Co.—Adv.

NINETEEN OF STEAMER S. R. KIRBY LOST

Boat After Smashing Into the Rocks Near Sawtooth
Reef Goes Down

MARINE CITY TURNED INTO TOWN OF MOURNING

Coast Guard Crew at Eagle
Harbor Found Pilot House
Near Keweenaw Point

Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.—The west shore of Lake Superior is lined with bedding, provisions, life-preservers and other debris of the ill-fated steamer S. R. Kirby, which went down with the loss of 19 of its crew of 21, after smashing into the rocks near Sawtooth reef. None of the bodies has been found.

The coast guard crew at Eagle Harbor last night found the pilot house floating down from Keweenaw Point and also picked up considerable other wreckage, enough to indicate that the boat was not only wrecked, but was broken to pieces.

The Uley, bound for South Chicago, passed the Kirby and her tow about five miles off Eagle river. The sea was rolling high and the Kirby was laboriously pushing through the storm, towing the barge George E. Hartnell. The Kirby's situation was even very serious then, being almost at the mercy of the sea. Captain C. C. Balfour, of the Uley, signalled to the Kirby in an effort to see if the ship master wanted help. No answer was received.

The Uley proceeded slowly, the members of the crew being ordered to keep a close watch on the Kirby, which was slowly being left behind. When about two miles distant the Kirby was seen to rise high on the crest of a wave, then disappeared from sight.

Captain Balfour ordered his ship about, and after an hour's labor through the gale, reached the scene of the sinking. Nothing was in sight, save splintered, broken wreckage. No life rafts or small boats were afloat.

Among the dead are Captain Gerald, of Detroit. The saved are Otto Lindquist, a fireman, of Pequaming, Mich., and Joseph B. Murda, of Chicago, mate. From Lindquist, who was picked up after seven hours in the water, all the details of the last few hours of the boat's attempt to resist the thundering blows of the waves were obtained.

Marine City—This city was turned into a town of mourning as the result of the sinking of the steamer S. R. Kirby in Lake Superior, five men of this place going to their death when the boat foundered.

Word that the Kirby had sunk was received in this city shortly after and within a few minutes the news had spread to all parts of the city. Residents on almost every street in the town have relatives on boats that ply up and down the lakes, it being said that some one from here or St. Clair is a almost every freight boat on the Great Lakes. Of the five men from this city who went to death, Sylvester Smith, the Kirby's chief engineer, was perhaps best known.

ROAD MONEY OF STATE IS $2,259,750

Michigan's Allotment the First Year
Is $150,650.

Washington—Michigan may receive a total of $2,219,730 from the federal government for construction of good roads in the next five years, under the good roads bill as it passed the senate. From the fact that the state is compelled to spend an equal amount to secure the federal allotment, the total expenditure for roads which the bill makes probable is $4,519,500.

The senate bill is a modification of the house measure, and it is expected to be accepted, at least in its essential features, by a conference committee of the two houses which will now consider it.

The house bill provided for an expenditure of $25,000,000 under the first year of operation of the law, and under this proposal Michigan would have received approximately $700,000 the first year. A special committee of the senate, of which Senator Townsend was a member, decided, however, that for a first venture at federal road construction $25,000,000 the first year was altogether too large an expenditure.

The senate bill cuts the appropriation of the first year to $5,000,000 and increases it $5,000,000 each year for five years, thus making the appropriation in the fifth year of operation $25,000,000. The money is allotted to the states on basis of population, miles of roads and square miles of area in equal proportion. Michigan's allotment the first year is $150,650; second year, $301,300; third year, $451,950; fourth year, $602,600; fifth year, $753,250.

BOTH SIDES REPORT GAINS NEAR VERDUN

Reports Show that the Germans
Are Increasing Their Activity
at All Points

THE FIGHTING COVERS A STRETCH OF 25 MILES

Paris Experts Describe the New Effort of the Germans as the Most Determined Yet Made

London—So intense has become the German artillery attack on the east and southeast of Verdun, coincident with the assault on the north and northwest, that it is evident that the invaders are trying once more to turn both the French wings in one great enveloping movement. Advances reaching London throughout—official and unofficial—show that the Germans are increasing their activity at all points, although they have made little or no progress during the last 24 hours.

The whole Verdun front, from the region of Hill 304, now the center of fighting on the northwest, to the Woivre region, on the extreme southeast, is approximately 25 miles.

Along practically all of this front both sides are now making attacks and counter attacks with their infantry as fast as the artillery prepares the way for the successive assaults. That the Germans are taking the initiative, in most of these attacks is acknowledged—the operations of the French being mainly defensive, with the counter attacks when the time is opportune.

Paris experts describe the new effort of the Germans as the most determined yet made at Verdun and the military observers here are of the same opinion.

As to actual results there was little news to indicate which way the general tide of the battle is flowing. The most significant fact, according to London experts, is a negative one—that the Germans have made no gains since their initial success at Hill 304.

True, Berlin's official statement tells of the taking by storm of several trenches in the Haucourt region, west of the Meuse, but this can only be regarded as part of the original German success, due to the first great effort.

URGES SURVEY OF STATE INSTITUTIONS

Takes Jackson Prison As Model and Believes That All Prisons Could Be Self-Supporting.

Lansing—Michigan's state institutions have been the object of attack for years. Claims have been advanced that such institutions were costing the state thousands of dollars more than necessary and Governor Ferris recently three and one-half years' study believes there is but one remedy, an efficiency survey.

"No one man can remedy the existing evils during a two-year period, of that I am clearly convinced," said the governor in discussing the situation. "A governor can make investigations and can remedy conditions to a certain degree but there is nothing in my opinion that will provide an adequate working system to remedy the faulty conditions except an efficiency survey and I shall recommend that in my exaugural message. A governor after serving two years just begins to discover things and there is not a time that I visit the state institutions, and I have visited all of them, some several times, that I do not find something that could be changed, not only making the institution better but at the same time save money."

"You would be surprised to visit the industrial school for boys here at Lansing and note the extra and absolutely unnecessary expense incurred in heating alone," remarked the governor. "That institution has a separate heating plant for nearly all its buildings."

"The main trouble is that state boards do not know what is going on and I am not sure but what a survey of the institutions would insure a report that the present board system is as antiquated as some of the systems in vogue at the institutions."

"There are men and women hired at some of the institutions."

"There are men and women hired at some of the institutions that do not put in actually three hours of work a day and some of them even less."

"At Adrian I was surprised to find that the girls were kept locked in their rooms at night. I called the attention to the head of the institution to the possibility of a night fire."

"I believe that different methods should be applied to our penal institutions and I take Jackson prison as a model. I do not know of any criticism to make in regards to Jackson prison and I believe all our prisons could be self-supporting."

The war department is anxious to have a third battery of artillery organized in Michigan, Gen. Kirk says, so as to complete a battalion of artillery, but this will depend upon the appropriation given for camp pay, drill pay, etc.

MOTHER'S DAY, MAY 14th

The Governor's Mother's Day proclamation says in part:

The mothers of every country are more important than armies and munitions of war. The mothers are the source of civilization. To our mothers we owe our patriotism, our religion, our holiest aspirations. It is especially fitting in the year nineteen sixteen that we pay tribute to the Mothers of America. Let the boys and girls and the grown-ups, who are away from home on Mothers' Day, write a letter of gratitude to Mother. Let those who are home meet Mother with a smile, a kiss and a handful of flowers. Recite to her the prayer she taught you at the bedside. Therefore, I, Woodbridge N. Ferris, ask that the people of Michigan set apart the second Sunday in May (the 14th) as Mothers' Day. In obedience to a Resolution by the United States Congress, I ask the people of Michigan to display on this day the United States flag on all government and public buildings, at their homes or other suitable places, "as a public expression of their love and reverence for the Mothers of our country." As far as possible let parents in their homes and both young and old in public meetings discuss the theme of Mother with that enthusiasm and sincerity which characterizes all loyal Americans."

IRISH REVOLT COST 521 LIVES

Premier Asquith Gives Out Statement
In the House of Commons.

London—The casualties in Dublin in the recent uprising were 124 killed, 388 wounded and nine missing—a total of 521—among his majesty's troops and the Royal Irish constabulary, Premier Asquith announced in the house of commons.

The casualties were divided as follows:

"Army-officers, 17 killed, 46 wounded; other ranks, 86 killed, 311 wounded; 9 missing."

"Royal Irish constabulary, 12 killed, 23 wounded."

"Dublin Metropolitan police, 3 killed, 3 wounded."

"Royal navy, 1 killed, 2 wounded."

"Royal volunteers, 5 killed, 3 wounded."

Repeating in the house of lords the figures on casualties given by Premier Asquith in the house of commons, Field Marshal Earl Kitchener, secretary for war, indicated that they referred to the whole of Ireland.

FIVE KILLED; POWDER PLANT

And Scores of Others Were Injured;
Shock Felt Throughout Northern Jersey.

Dover, N. J.—Five men were killed and between 30 and 25 injured, many of them seriously, in a triple explosion at the war munitions plant of the Atlas Powder company, near Landing. Windows in Lake Hopatcong summer hotels and in towns for miles around were shattered. The shock was felt throughout northern Jersey. At practically the same instant three dynamite mixing houses were blown to atoms. It is not known which exploded first, but that the shock of the first instantly set off the explosives in the other buildings is certain, though the buildings were a considerable distance apart. Besides the mixing houses, a storage house for nitroglycerin was destroyed.

WILSON SENDS BERLIN NOTE

The Note Is Courteous in Tone, But Firm and Definite.

Washington—President Wilson Monday sent a note to the German government accepting its declaration of abandonment of illegal submarine warfare and rejecting the suggestion that the United States regard this abandonment as conditional upon Great Britain's action with respect to the blockade. The note is courteous in tone, but firm and definite. It is intended to remove all doubt on the part of the imperial government as to the position the United States has taken.

ITEMS OF INTEREST

New York—Fire in the hold of the Italian steamship San Giovanni destroyed 7,000 bags of refined sugar which had been loaded for transportation to Palermo and Naples. Agents for the line expressed belief that fire bombs which exploded prematurely had been placed in the cargo and an investigation was begun.

Toronto, Ont.—Americans who have enlisted for army service in Europe are denied the use of the name "American legion" under instructions received here from the Dominion government authorities at Ottawa.

Ada, Okla.—During an exchange of shots with a pursuing posse, a man who had held up the cashier and robbed the National bank at Francis, Okla., of $4,000 forced the driver of one of the posse's automobiles to take him in and with a revolver held at the driver's head, disappeared in the hills.

FAIL TO REACH AGREEMENT AT BORDER MEETING

General Obregon Again Asked to Have a Definite Time for Withdrawal of Troops

NATIONAL GUARD OF THREE STATES CALLED

There Will Be Nearly Forty-
Five Thousand Soldiers
Along the Border

El Paso, Tex.—Major Generals Scott and Funston, of the United States army, and General Alvaro Obregon, the Carranza minister of war, met in conference in El Paso again, at General Obregon's request, and at the end of a discussion lasting three hours and a half it was announced that the conferees would meet again, probably in what was expected to be the last conference.

It is understood that General Obregon again brought up the subject of a definite date for American troops to withdraw from Mexico, and that he again was informed that the American government is firm in its refusal to make this concession. It was added, also, that in view of the Big Bend raid, the United States could scarcely consider the Carranza government as fully capable yet of coping with the bandits. In the face of this statement, General Obregon asked for more time to consult General Carranza.

The conference, the fifth held, with Generals Scott and Funston and Obregon and Juan Amador, Mexican secretary of foreign affairs, taking part. A. J. McQuatters, a mining man, who has participated in three other conferences, was present at the beginning, but withdrew on complaint of the Mexican representatives that his business connections rendered his presence undesirable.

Before coming to El Paso, General Obregon told several newspapermen he intended to make a counter proposal, he said, was that Mexicans and Americans should unite in policing the border, as many Mexicans to be placed on the American side as Americans on the Mexican side. There was no indication that this proposal would be acceptable to the American conferees, nor was there any information to show that it actually had been presented to Generals Scott and Funston.

All day there was a hint of war in the atmosphere of El Paso. Prior to the conference, the word went out that only one thing could prevent a break between the United States and Mexico—complete reversal by General Obregon of the attitude he took at the meeting with Generals Scott and Funston, when he declined to sign the tentative agreement for Mexican and American troop co-operation unless it was modified to set a date for American withdrawal from Mexico.

National Guard Ordered Out.

Washington—To reinforce the border patrol as the result of the Glenn Springs bandit raid, President Wilson called out the militia of three states—Arizona, New Mexico and Texas—fort duty on the Mexican boundary, and also ordered to this service practically all remaining troops of the mobile army, including 10 companies of coast artillery stationed at Gulf and Atlantic coast points, which will proceed to San Antonio to serve as infantrymen.

By these orders, practically 9,000 men are added to the border forces of Major-General Funston, and it is understood here that, if need be, the entire National Guard of the United States will be similarly called out for duty.

Including the troops ordered out, there will be nearly 45,000 soldiers, perhaps 50,000, along the border or in Mexico, according to the best available figures here.

Lansing, Mich.—Col. John S. Berry, of the M. N. G., said the Michigan troops are ready for a call and can take the field at a strength of from 3,500 to 4,000 men. The three regiments of infantry are up to peace strength and can be placed on war strength in a short time.

For several months preparations have been under way in Michigan military circles in expectations of a call.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

How Speaker Clark Attended a G. O. P. Dinner

WASHINGTON.—Through a comedy of errors, Champ Clark, speaker of the house, recently became one of the guests of honor at a dinner given by Representative B. M. Chipfield of Illinois to his veteran colleague, "Uncle Joe" Cannon. It was intended to be strictly a Republican affair, and the 25 guests, other than Mr. Clark, were all members of that party.

Mr. Clark, an unexpected, but nevertheless welcome, guest, appeared suddenly at the dinner. He had a good time, and so did the others. How he became a part of the gathering, as told by himself, proved to be one of the most amusing after-dinner speeches he ever told.

It appears that Speaker Clark and Mr. Chipfield are members of the same college fraternity—the Phi Kappa Psi—and were to be guests at a dinner given by the members of that organization in Washington. Mr. Clark suddenly recalled the dinner, and having misplaced his engagement book, bethought him that the dinner was that evening. Summoning his chauffeur, he hastily drove to Raucher's, dismissed his car, and walked up to the dining-room floor. The only function he could discover was a ball, at which members of congress were conspicuous by their absence.

Then the speaker hastened to the Willard, supposing that the dinner must be there. But no, it wasn't. Mr. Clark then returned home to renew the search for his engagement book. Here he told his dilemma to Bennett, his son and parliamentary clerk of the house.

"That's easy," said Bennett. "That dinner is wherever Jim Mann is. Why not call up Mrs. Mann. She ought to know where her husband is."

Mrs. Mann did know. Mr. Mann was at dinner at the Army and Navy club, and that, of course, was where the Phi Kappa Psi banquet was then, surely. So down to the club the speaker drove hastily, inquiring as he entered where "the dinner" was being given. The clerk said it was on the fourth floor, and without a doubt the speaker bent his steps thither.

The first sign of misgiving penetrated his mind as Mr. Clark caught a glimpse of the diners through the door, which stood partially open. He began to think he had made some egregious blunder and would have pulled back, when at that moment Mr. Chipfield, catching sight of him, shouted his name and every Republican present joined in bringing in the speaker.

Vice President's Stories Worry Senate Chaplain

VICE PRESIDENT MARSHALL has a habit of telling a funny story at the eleventh hour. In fact, he usually waits until the eleventh hour and about five minutes. The consequence is that when he enters the senate chamber to convene that body of solemn toilers, he is apt to have a half-suppressed little smile on his face, and Rev. Forest J. Prettyman, the senate chaplain, has even more difficulty in maintaining the serious countenance of a man about to lead in prayer.

Here is the way the thing works out: Along about 11:30 Marshall shifts from his office in the senate office building to his room in the capitol. He lights a cigar and smokes as he receives any callers that drop in. A few minutes before the noon hour the callers thin out, and the chaplain comes to be in readiness to accompany the vice president into the senate chamber. Now, for some unaccountable reason, the presence of the chaplain makes Marshall think of a funny story. At about five minutes prior to the hour of opening the senate he starts to tell this story with calm deliberation.

The golden moments speed on their way, and by the time Marshall has the basic part of his story outlined it lacks only two minutes or less until twelve o'clock. All hands begin to grow nervous, and the sergeant at arms comes to the door, watch in hand, to make certain that the vice president is going to reach his seat in due season. It would not do at all to have the senate open a minute late.

Marshall gets up from his desk and proceeds across the corridor, still working toward the point of his story, and by a burst of speed gets out the climax just as he pushes open the door into the senate chamber. Chaplain Prettyman has his choice then of not laughing at the story, which would be impolite on his part, or of laughing and then pulling his face back into shape ready to offer prayer while walking the few steps from the door to the postern.

"I think," said Prettyman one morning after a particularly amusing little yarn by Marshall, "that after this I'll keep out of your way and just study the weather map out in the next room until time to go in."

Mint and Treasury Relics Put on Exhibition

VARIOUS activities of the United States mint and of the office of the treasurer of the United States are illustrated in an exhibit of twelve cases recently set up in the north corridor of the treasury building. The display represents the most interesting part of the exhibit of the Panama-Pacific exposition at San Francisco.

Included in the cases are prehistoric medals struck off by the mint; coins, planchets and bars of gold, indicating stages of the processes of making gold money; keys of the safes and vaults of the treasury used from 1774 to the day of the advent of safe combination and time locks; mutilated currency redeemed, and a number of warrants for big payments made out of the treasury or on treasury order.

The warrant for the largest amount is for $140,000,000 on account of the public debt. Others are for $40,000,000 in payment for the Panama canal, $10,000,000 for the Canal zone, $20,000,000 for the Philippines and $200,000 paying General Lafayette for his military services to the colonies during the Revolutionary war. With the warrants is a transfer order directing the transfer of $60,000,000 from the Denver mint to the treasury in New York city.

Another interesting feature of the display is the mutilated bills that through expert examination have been identified and redeemed.

"Spooning" All Right in Parks of Washington

"SPOONING," while not recognized by that generic term, is permitted in the parks of Washington just as it is in Pittsburgh, where the chief of police confesses he does not know what "spooning" is, and intends fostering it.

Col. W. W. Harris, superintendent of buildings and grounds, when informed that Pittsburgh's chief of police had extended a general invitation to all lovers to "spoon" in the Smoky City parks, said:

"We do not know what 'spooning' is here, but the parks of Washington are open to lovers, sweethearts, beaux, and belles, and others under the spell of the tender emotion."

"There is no regulation prohibiting lovemaking in Washington parks. These parks are for the beautification of the city and the recreation and enjoyment of its inhabitants. Benches laden with lovers cannot but contribute to the beautification plan, and what more human and delightful recreation is there to be found than lovemaking?"

Realizing that "in the spring the young man's fancy lightly turns," Colonel Harris has installed 1,000 additional benches in the parks of Washington. As he is not a General Cupid, he believes he has done his full duty. There are no restrictions on the use of the national capital's parks by lovers, provided, says Colonel Harris, "their recreation and happiness does not interfere with the enjoyment of the parks by others."

Jamaica's Fascinating Markets

IN THE JUBILEE MARKET, KINGSTON

THERE are two great public markets in Kingston, Jamaica, where the natives sell fruit and vegetables and all sorts of local commodities for little more than a song. These are Victoria Market, by the harbor at the foot of King street, where war vessels and colliers sail in to port across the blue waters of the Caribbean almost daily, and Jubilee Market, further uptown, and fronting the public square where are the great banyan trees and all manner of tropical plants.

The daily supplies are brought to market by the natives in large flat baskets borne on their heads or in panniers on the backs of the small burros that are the burden bearers of the island, says a writer in the New York Sun. These little beasts, hardly larger than big dogs, are led or driven, their owners generally walking beside them.

In the open spaces of the market women vendors take up their positions for the day on the bare ground or perhaps seated on low boxes, with their slender stock in trade spread out in little heaps about them. These consist of a few yams, or bread fruit, or naseberries, or whatever they may chance to have, and upon which they make during the long sunny days only a few pennies profit. They pay about a shilling and sixpence per week as license for the space that they and their wares occupy and clear scarcely enough to supply even their simplest necessities. Yet for the most part they are cheerful and happy, and the soft, continuous patter of their voices as they gossip and trade all day suggests the name of the tree, "Women's Tongues," whose dry pods rustle together so musically in the country lanes.

It does one good at any time to make the tour of the market, walking among the women with their strange fruits and vegetables, and buying a penny's worth here and a ha'penny's worth there for the sheer delight of it all. "Buy a ripe banana!" they will call out mellifluously, or "Buy a sweet orange!" or "Ha'penny! Ha'penny! Buy a cake!" And looking down into their engaging brown faces one desires forthwith to buy everything.

A quartee, or "penny-a-penny," as they say quickly with soft elision, is a favorite coin among the small denominations; it is a quarter of sixpence, and for this price one can buy three or four oranges, or perhaps twice as many bananas. A stranger rarely ever cares to pay more than this for star apples or naseberries, which require an educated taste for enjoyment; but pawpaws, resembling our cantaloupes, and cho-chos, similar to our white squashes, are delicious. As for tangerines and guavas, they are joys forever.

Market Women in Scrap.

Picking my way gingerly one day among the scores of seated and stooping vendors, and being very careful not to step into the little piles of peppers and what not that were outspread everywhere, I plunged into the midst of a lively scrap between two colored women. One of them, who had been seated on a box in the sunshine, irascible with her long vigil, had picked up her seat and moved it back plump into the midst of her neighbor and her neighbor's wares, all outspread together on the ground. The result was a scuffle, with much pushing and shuffling, all of which was so funny that my amusement set them laughing also, and the trouble wound up in a good natured romp among them. And, oh, but the sun was hot, and the blinding white light quivered out upon the waters of the harbor.

A row of stalls runs along one side of the market, where sticky sweets are sold, most unappealing to foreign sensibilities. The stuff is ladled out of great dingy cans and sold in penny wads and farthing amounts or more. Near this row of stick ghee are racks and sacks of flimsy cotton goods and ribbons, laces and embroideries, all immaculately fresh and clean, though scarcely three feet removed from the sweets. There are piles also of linen and cotton prints, whose cheapness the vendors loudly proclaim as they stand measuring the goods off by the yard and selling it at ridiculously low prices.

It was near this place that a woman buying embroidery that trailed down into the dust, held in her arms a plump little brown baby. It chuckled and held out its hands to me, playing like a kitten. I found that the only name by which it was known was "Da-da." Later, on the edge of the crowd that overflowed into the street, I discovered little "Murene Cole," black as a coal, hiding behind her mother's skirts and laughing up into my face. The brown babies in Jamaica are irresistible.

There are many coolie women in the markets, who sell fruits and vegetables as well as their odd East Indian trinkets. These women are bedecked with heavy silver ornaments, in which they invest most of their limited means, and the necklaces, bracelets, rings, anklets and bangles with which they are loaded down, display exquisite workmanship and design. The manner in which many of these ornaments are worn indicates caste, and a lot of filigree work disfiguring the nostril proclaims a married woman. These East-Indian women are always picturesque and often beautiful. Wistful and fawn-like, with soft, dusky skins, they are as shy and proud as wild animals.

Tobacco by the Yard.

Over in one corner of the market place colored men sell ropes of strong native tobacco by the yard and suggest that strangers take home a few yards as souvenirs. Into the meat and fish markets, presided over chiefly by men, I could not persuade myself to go, as everything was too ill-smelling and unwholesome; but I poked about unhesitatingly everywhere else. The most delightful of all the stands are where they sell native basket work and beads; the latter being seeds of various colors and sizes, strung in long necklaces, and selling at sixpence each. The vendors of these bead strings, with long bunches of them hanging over arm or shoulder, hawk their wares everywhere, haunting the piers and railway station and victimizing travelers. It seemed to me as if they were always on the lookout for myself, for I found it impossible to refuse and bought dozens of them, red and black, brown and yellow, and dove colored Job's Tears that seem to have been wept all over the island.

The baskets are equally tempting and are of every conceivable shape and size, from tiny ornaments and shapes for ordinary usage to great hamper and suit cases. In suitcase form they cost but a shilling or two, and are extremely light and highly serviceable.

Then there are knickknacks and fancy articles made of bamboo joints and palm leaf, candle shades and mats made of cotton fiber or lace bark; and cocoanuts carved and decorated in endless designs. It is a morning's treat to examine them all, and buy here a bit and there a bit, until an astonishing number of shillings and pence have been transmuted into baskets and beads. And then there is the sweet smelling coe-coe grass, that costs but a penny a bunch and leaves the things in one's trunk perfumed ever after.

Coming away after a morning's stroll through Jubilee Market I helped a big, slatternly dark girl to pin up her skirt, which was slipping loose, and received a grinning "Tanky, Missy, tanky!" in reward. Then passing over to a stall where another dark woman sold oranges I stopped and bought four for a quarter. It was very warm and they were cool and luscious. And then the orange woman wanted to return with me to New York, as the darkies everywhere wanted to do, being willing to work for next to nothing for the opportunity of coming to the States. They are so pitifully poor in their own country!

IMMENSE DAMAGE DONE BY SCALE INSECT

San Jose Scale.—In the left-hand corner is seen the armor which covers the insect with the red blotch in the center, characteristic of insect. The small figure to the right of the apple shows a female insect. Notice the sucking tubes which do the damage. Apple and twigs show the gray, scurfy covering which is present in all cases of San Jose scale.

(By A. H. HOLLINGER, Missouri College of Agriculture.)

Scale insects annually cost the farmers, nurserymen, floriculturists, and city property owners thousands of dollars. Few trees and shrubs are immune from their attack. The best-known example of scales is the San Jose scale, which attacks over a hundred kinds of plants, and the oyster-shell scale is found on nearly as many trees and shrubs. There are many other injurious kinds. A few of the plants attacked are: Ash, elm, maple, dogwood, willow, gum, poplar, oak, sycamore, walnut, box-elder, pine, beech, basswood, hackberry, catalpa, locust, buckeye, all fruit trees and many shrubs.

Scales are about as varied in character as the plants they attack. Some are circular, others resemble very small oyster shells, some are gray or black in color and others are white or reddish, but all are very small, being about the size of a pinhead. Sometimes they occur isolated on the twigs, branches, or leaves, but frequently they are massed by the thousands on the bark of either the trunk or the twigs. They are all injurious to a greater or less extent, though the property owner may not be aware of the danger.

There may be several new kinds which, if not found out and identified, might prove to be very injurious. The circular scale on the trunk and branches of your red maples may be the common maple scale; it may, however, prove to be a scale new to science. The white scale found on your elms, may be the common elm scale, but it might be one which, if not discovered and controlled, may become as dangerous as the San Jose scale.

Satisfy yourself as to the kinds of scales that attack your shrubs and trees, by sending material suspected of being infested by scales to the agricultural experiment station, Columbia, Mo., which will be glad to tell you what scale is doing the damage and what spray or other remedial or control measures should be used.

PROPER PRUNING OF BLACKBERRY BUSHES

Very Important Factor if Choice Fruit Is Expected—Pinch Off the Shoots.

The proper pruning of the blackberry is very important if choice fruit is expected. Very few ever go any further in pruning blackberries than to cut out the dead canes. The proper pruning of it consists of four distinct operations. First, remove some of the superfluous shoots, in order that there may not be too many canes to a hill. Second, during the summer the buds of the remaining shoots should be nipped back in order to induce a stocky growth of the laterals. Third, the laterals should be headed back the following spring. Fourth, all old canes should be cut out after they have produced one crop of berries.

As a general rule, from three to six shoots to the hill is sufficient, according to the variety and fertility of the land. The shoots which are to be removed should be cut out as soon as they have started growth, so that all of the food may go into those shoots to be left to produce canes. As soon as the plants reach a height of 24 to 28 inches, they should be nipped back by pinching off the tip of the shoot or bud. This can be done with the fingers or with a small pair of pruning shears. It is very important that the shoots be pinched off as soon as they reach the proper height, rather than let them grow to a greater height and then cut back. A longer cane is inclined to bend over to the ground unless some support is given.

REMOVING BORDEAUX MIXTURE FROM FRUIT

Dilute Solution of Acetic Acid Will Do the Business Without Any Injury.

When fruits, such as apples, peaches, or plums become smeared with Bordeaux mixture it is often difficult to remove the stains without also injuring the fruits. But this need not be the case. Bordeaux mixture being composed of lime and copper sulphate can be readily dissolved in acetic acid—not pure acid because this might injure the fruit, a dilute solution will do the business just as well, though not quite so quickly, but there would be no injury to the fruit.

All that is necessary is to dip the fruit into the liquid, let it stay a few seconds, raising and lowering the receptacle several times to get rid of bubbles, then to place it in a vat or a spray of clean water. This will wash away all the Bordeaux stains because the lime and the copper sulphate will have been chemically changed to the much more soluble acetates. Drying is all that remains to be done before packing.

Kindness to Cows Pays. Kindness to your cows will pay in dollars and cents. The cow that is made a pet is sure to give more milk than one that isn't. So make it your business to pet all of your cows.

Humus for Celery Seed. Celery seed should be planted in soil having plenty of humus and a rather sandy texture. Barely cover the seed. To hold the moisture, a damp cloth or paper may be put on. Sometimes the flat is covered with a piece of glass and shaded with paper.

CONTROL LEAF CURL AND SAN JOSE SCALE

Lime-Sulphur Spray Is Recommended for Work in Spring—Kill Fungus Spores.

According to observations made by the New Jersey station, peach leaf curl can readily be controlled by a thorough application of concentrated lime-sulphur before the buds swell in the spring. Bordeaux mixture, applied early in the spring before the buds start, also will control leaf-curl, but the lime-and-sulphur mixture is advisable because it will control San Jose scale as well.

In using lime-sulphur it is essential to use a solution that has been properly prepared and diluted with water to a strength of not less than 1.03 specific gravity. The spray material should then be thoroughly applied so that every bud and small twig receives its coating.

Any portion of the tree that is not covered with the spray material is likely to become infected. The object of the early spring application is to kill the spores of the leaf-curl fungus before they germinate. In other words, spraying for leaf-curl must be preventive as no cure is possible after the disease is established.

DAIRY FACTS

PROFITABLE TO SELL CREAM

Burdens of Farm Women Lightened and Income Not Decreased—Separator is Most Essential.

Some farmers are churning butter and selling it for less than they would receive from the sale of the cream, which is used in making the butter. Prof. C. H. Eckles of the Missouri College of Agriculture points out three very good reasons why it is to the advantage of the Missouri farmers to sell cream rather than to make butter to be sold at the local store. (1) Selling cream means less work for the women than making butter. (2) The cream will nearly always bring as much as the butter and often considerably more. (3) The cream buyers offers a market for any quantity of cream at any time.

Any system that will lighten the duties of the women on the farm without decreasing the income should certainly be adopted. When cream is sold all that is necessary is to see that the cream is cooled after being separated and to take it along to town twice a week in winter and three times in summer.

It may be that a few farmers' wives will find special customers that will take the butter at a price equal to that secured for cream, but that does not apply to many. Even then surplus butter will be left on hand at times. Again there may not be enough to supply the customers and dissatisfaction will result. When selling cream these troubles do not come to annoy. Any quantity, much or little, can be sold to the cream buyer at any time and cash received on the spot.

As a rule, unless the homemade butter can be sold at an average price of 25 cents or more the year around, the income will be more if the cream is sold. At an average of 25 cents the income will be about the same, but a large amount of work will be saved by selling the cream. If the farmer does not have a cream separator he should get one if four cows or more are milked. A machine will more than pay for itself within a year when ten cows are kept by the additional butter saved. Four cows with a separator will make as much butter as five of the same grade without a separator. The fifth one represents the loss in butterfat in the skim milk.

fastened to any convenient support. It consists of a piece of wire curved as shown with the ends bent on.—Independent Farmer.

PASTEURIZED MILK IS BEST

Low Temperature Does Not Affect Nutritive Value or Digestibility of the Product.

When milk is held at 145 degrees F. for 30 minutes, all the disease-producing bacteria, so far as can be ascertained, are completely destroyed. At the same time a larger percentage of the bacteria that cause milk to sour and a smaller percentage of those that cause it to rot are left than when a higher temperature is employed. Pasteurized at a low temperature, milk undergoes no change which affects its nutritive value or its digestibility. Subjected to a temperature of 150 degrees F. or more, however, does result in certain chemical changes. The time is coming when virtually all market milk sold at retail in cities will be pasteurized.

PREVENT GROWTH OF HORNS

In Using Caustic Potash the Application Must Be Made Before Calf Is One Week Old.

Caustic potash is the chemical used for preventing the growth of horn on young calves. The application must be made before the calf is one week old, in order to be effective.

The hair is clipped away from the small buttons which may be felt and which are the future horns. A stick of caustic potash is then moistened and rubbed on the spot until the skin bleeds slightly.

The calves must not be permitted to run out in the rain for several days after the application of the caustic, as the water is likely to wash the caustic down into the eye with damaging results.

BREVITIES

JACKSON—A class of 84 will be graduated from the local high school in June.

ANN ARBOR—Four cases of typhoid fever were reported here Saturday. Two of the victims are high school students. Local health officers are trying to discover the cause of the outbreak.

ANN ARBOR—"Swing-out" will take place Tuesday, May 16. According to custom, following the address to the senior classes by the president of university, the prospective graduates will march out of University hall and about the campus, displaying for the first time their caps and gowns in this formal manner.

JACKSON—Nearly 100 students of the high school and most of the signers of the petition recently circulated advocating military training were present at the first meeting of the organization held Monday evening at the school. The organization is civic in its purpose and provides for the military training of its members. All undergraduates are eligible.

JACKSON—Next Sunday will be observed as "County Anti-Tuberculosis Sunday" throughout Jackson county. It has been set aside by the state board of health as day of extra effort in the battle on tuberculosis. Pastors will preach special sermons. Free clinics are being held throughout the county by experts from the office of the state board of health.

BROOKLYN—Five good housewives of this vicinity are lamenting the fact that they were visited by just twenty-eight hoboes one evening last week, and relieved of no small amount of eatables. The twenty-eight are known to have camped in Teachout's woods, where they roasted frankfurts, made campfire cocoa and ate their lunches from tin dinner pails. Town authorities should see this does not happen in a town where everyone works for what he gets.—Exponent.

MANCHESTER—There is a lot in making the best of what one has. This appears to be the plan Will Lindbergs works on. He and his little Brush runabout have caused a good many to smile but Will and his little family get much pleasure from that cheap little machine and let people think what they may. A few days ago he hitched a plow behind his machine and plowed his garden and some who watched the operation declared that he succeeded as well as some of the expensive tractors.—Enterprise.

YPSILANTI—A party of motorists were about to be arrested by the local officials, who have shown much zeal in enforcing speed and license laws, when a collie dog saved them. The machine was stopped between the residence of Justice Curtiss and the village of Denton when an officer noticed there was no license tag on the rear. As the officer was taking the name of the owner the dog caught up to the party. He had in his mouth the tag, Ohio license 5103, which corresponded with the one on the front of the machine and which had just dropped off.

ANN ARBOR—The famous Blackie Daw of fiction was outdone near here last week when a stranger halted at the farm of Martin Ottmer in Superior township and gave out the news that he was looking for a good farm. This listened good to the Ottmers, and after the stranger expressed his interest in the place, he asked for permission to make a thorough inventory of the stock, equipment, supplies, etc. The inventory consumed several days, and all of this time the would-be investor lived on the best the good housewife could cook. After completing the inventory, he left and has not been seen since.

WEEK-END PARTY

By JANE OSBORN.

"There is simply one rule and regulation for this party," Mrs. Torrey told her guests when they arrived for the week-end house party in her ramshackle old country house that was set back several hundred feet from the road in a veritable forest of pine trees. "You simply must lock your doors when you are not in your rooms. Nowadays no one knows absolutely that her servants aren't thieves and pickpockets. But I can't give up enjoying my friends on that account, so I've simply had keys fitted for all the doors and the one thing that I must insist on is that everyone's door is locked."

She had been especially emphatic in stating this requirement when Lida Vinton and her cousin, Abby Stone, arrived late Friday evening.

"I have given you two girls the large room in the left wing. Do, for mercy's sake, remember there are two doors. Now, I've warned you and I shall really be very cross if you don't remember." And then as she left the girls on the threshold of their room she added: "We have dinner in half an hour. Everyone here knows everyone else and we are going to have just a simple country time of it—a little dancing tonight and a picnic at the seashore tomorrow. I have only one car, so the men will have to walk and the girls can ride." And then she hurried off to greet her other guests who were arriving, calling back as she went: "Don't forget to lock your door and bring the key when you come to dinner."

"Wasn't it perfectly dreadful?" wailed Lida after she and her cousin had come back to their room as early as they could properly leave the impromptu little dance downstairs. "Did I show it very much? I'm sure I turned pale and I actually thought I'd faint. I haven't even seen Tom for a month; not since we broke our engagement and had that dreadful quarrel. And of course I didn't know Mrs. Torrey had invited him. How did she dare?"

"She probably didn't know. But you didn't look half so upset as Tom did. Everyone must have noticed the way he behaved. And he hardly ate a mouthful. At least you were well-bred enough not to lose your appetite about it. I must confess, however," Abby said, as she undid the hooks that fastened her pretty cousin's bedowed dancing frock, "that it was rather awkward. I hope you noticed that I almost cut Tom. I was barely polite to him and later when he asked me for a dance I said I couldn't fox-trot, although I'd just been fox-trotting with Jim Hale and I know Tom knew I had. I think my meaning was plain enough."

"There is no reason why you should be exactly nasty to him, Abby. He is a perfectly splendid fellow."

"I'd be horrid to any man that had treated you the way he has," Lida brought the brush down emphatically on the dressing table. "How can you think that he did? It was my fault. I insist that it was and I wouldn't have anyone feel sorry for me for anything in the world. Abby, you don't imagine for a minute that the girls are sorry for me, do you?"

"Oh, dear, no. Didn't I just tell you that you were a trump to go on eating just as if nothing had happened. You couldn't have looked more heartless if you had tried, and you were certainly looking very pretty. That dress is so becoming. I was proud of you, Lida. You were splendid."

Then when the two girls had tucked themselves into their twin beds and had said good night for the tenth time Abby whispered, "Really, Lida, you were perfectly great."

"Did you look both doors, Abby?"

"Yes, and I put chairs against them besides." A minute passed in silence, and then: "Abby, let's push the beds next to each other. I'm not afraid. Still this is a very big room." Ten minutes later the cousins were again on the way to slumber with their twin beds touching. "What are you going to do about tomorrow? You won't want to go to the picnic will you?" Abby asked sleepily.

"Indeed, I won't, and I have thought it all out. You must go, for if you didn't it would rather spoil the whole party and you must say nothing about my not going. I'll just stay here, and when you get started you may say that I have just had word from home to return at once. That's quite simple, isn't it?"

"Tom, in the meantime, had been assigned to a room in the other wing of the house with his old friend, Burton Jackson."

It was not till they had retired that Burton broached the subject. "Devilish pickle you're in," he said laconically.

Tom merely grunted his assent. "Going to the picnic tomorrow?"

"I am not," was Tom's answer. And, manlike, that was the end of the conversation.

Just after breakfast they broached the subject for the second time. "Tell her—Mrs. Torrey—that I had a toothache or something of that sort, Burt. I'll stay in my room."

"All right, old chap, and don't forget to lock that door when you leave. You know she is nuts about having the doors locked. Just leave the key under the rug in the hall in front of the door if you decide to leave. So long and good luck."

Lida was, meantime, in a fever of excitement. She had decided to leave and still she was determined that nothing should be said to the hostess till after the party had started. And Abby had lingered in the big room to add her last touch of encouragement.

"Please be nice to him, Abby," Lida was telling her, and then the subject of the conversation was quickly changed as Mrs. Torrey pounced into the room by the side door.

"Do hurry, girls. The car is waiting for you. I'm going to motor over in the little roadster with the provisions and there'll be just room for you girls in the big car." And then she flounced away, taking the key of the side door with her. She must have called back telling the girls that she had this key, but they did not hear her.

It took at least five minutes more for the cousins to bid each other farewell and then Abby started. "I'll take this key," she said, "and you can leave by the side door. Yes, you had better lock it. Mrs. Torrey was so particular. No, I wouldn't leave the key with the cook, for she might be the very one who steals things. No, you'd better take it and mail it back. I can just use this one door all the time. The other one on the back stairs might just as well be locked, anyway. Mrs. Torrey might have known we wouldn't ever use it." And then Abby left her cousin and for a half hour or more Lida spent her time packing her belongings.

Then she wrote a letter to her hostess explaining her regret that she had hastily been summoned home. She thought for full five minutes of writing a letter to Tom, too. Without the slightest idea of the pretext on which to write it, she wanted him to know that she was leaving for his sake. But she thought better of it, and after spoiling half a dozen sheets of paper gave up the attempt.

It was about eleven o'clock when she decided to make her exit. There was a train at a quarter of noon, and thus she had ample time to walk to the station, buy her ticket and catch that train. But the side door of the room was locked. Of course it was, because Mrs. Torrey had locked it. The front door was locked, too. This Lida knew, for Abby had locked it and had the key with her.

For the first few minutes Lida simply sat down and wept, and then she decided to use her wits. There were no transoms over the doors and there wasn't a sign of a balcony or vine anywhere near the windows. To escape that way, Lida would simply have to leap, and that was out of the question. There was no use trying to attract the attention of the neighbors, for the house was surrounded by pine trees that cut off a view of the road and neighboring houses, and the cook's quarters were in the opposite wing. The man of all work had gone to the picnic, so there would be no chance of summoning him to her aid. The only thing, obviously, to do was to break down the door or pick the lock. What if she did ruin a perfectly good door? It was surely not her fault if her hostess had locked her in her room.

A few minutes after that Tom, nursing his grievance and feigning a toothache in the opposite wing of the house, heard strange rappings, a persistent scraping and scratching that, as he listened intently, he convinced himself could not be caused simply by the wind. He followed the sound to its source and listened at the keyhole whence the sounds came.

"Sugar!" he heard in a very much irritated feminine voice, and then "Ouch!" followed by sobs.

"Who's there?" he asked, and then in Lida Vinton's voice came back distinctly: "Tom, you dear, you angel! How good of you!"

"It's all right, dearie," he was soothing, and then as he heard the sobs again: "Don't worry, dear. I'll get you out somehow if I have to smash the door in. Just slip a hairpin through the crack under the door. Now keep a stiff upper lip, Lida, dear, and I'll get you out all right."

"How dare you call me that?" Lida asked, with an attempt at indignation. "Why shouldn't I if I want to? If you knew that I had come down to this house party especially to see you, that the house party was given just because I asked Mrs. Torrey to give it and if you knew that I had fixed it up with her especially to have the picnic on the beach so that I would have a chance to see you alone—if you knew that I knew that you wouldn't go on that account, and if you knew that I can unlock the door, not with the hairpin, but with the key that Mrs. Torrey took out and gave to me before she went, what would you say? You are really my prisoner, now, and unless you promise to come out and kiss and make up I am not going to let you out at all. I am not traveling under false colors. I am not making you think that I am rescuing you. That was Mrs. Torrey's idea. I like my own method better."

Tom listened eagerly through the keyhole. First there was a low sob and then: "Tom, I can't stay in here any longer. I want to come out and make up. I'm sorry."

And Tom opened the door. (Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

The Concrete Idea.

"Do you believe there are sermons in stones?" asked the thoughtful man. "That depends," replied the eminently practical person.

"On what?"

"On whether or not you get enough stones together to build a church."

A hard light came into Alix's eyes. Gerry felt himself suddenly alone. He went doggedly on. He told of the chase and the capture, of how he and the girl had seen the canoe drift out into the clutch of the eddy and swirl into the river and away. He told her of how they laughed and Alix shrank. Gerry paused, his brow puckered. He wished he could tell in words the battle of his spirit, the utter ruin of his downfall. He could not and instead he sighed.

There was something in that sigh so eloquent of defeated expression that it succeeded where words might have failed. It called to Alix with the strong call of helpless things. It drew back her mind to Gerry. With him and the girl she threaded the path to Fazenda Flores. Its ruin sprang upon her through his eyes. With him she discovered the traces of an ancient ditch, with him and the old darky she dug along that line through long, hot months. She grew to know Lieber as the tale went on and finally to love him because of all things Lieber seemed to need love—somebody else's love—most. She amused herself with Kemp and his drawl. She tried to keep her thoughts away from Margarita and at the coming of Margarita's boy, she winced.

As he finished telling of the coming of the Man, Gerry stopped short. The thought came to him with tremendous force that Alix too had gone through that for him. The impulse to get up and throw himself before her and on his knees to thank her almost tore him from his seat but he fought it down. He hurried on with his story. He told of the coming of Alan and of the revelation he had brought. And then in a choked voice and only because he had set himself to tell the whole truth he pictured the flood, the death of True Blue, and the overwhelming by the waters before his very eyes of Margarita and the Man. Then he arose and with hands braced on the table leaned towards Alix. "I have told you this so that perhaps you may understand what I am going to tell you now. If the flood had not come—if Margarita and the Man had lived—I would not have come back."

Alix sat very still and studied Gerry's face. He had finished the task he had set himself to do and he was suddenly very tired. His eyes dropped as though from their own weight and then he raised them again to her inscrutable face.

"Well," he asked after a long pause. "Well?" replied Alix.

Gerry's stalwart figure drooped. "It is quite just," he said, "after all that, that you should not want me. I have spent the last weeks making myself ready for that. You waited for me; I didn't wait for you. If you do not want me, I will go away."

Alix rose slowly to her feet. She looked very slim and tall in her clinging gown.

"Please, Alix," he begged, "Please Don't Cry."

lag down. To Gerry she looked very cold. "Before you go," she said, "there is just one thing. I wish you would kiss me—once."

Gerry's body straightened and stiffened. He stared at her grave face with wondering eyes. Then he felt a strange tingling ripple through his blood and before he knew what he did he had swept her from her feet, crushed her to him, brushed the crown of her hair back from her brow and kissed her eyes, her mouth, her throat. He was rough with her. He was bruising her body, her lips, but Alix clung to him and laughed. Then suddenly all her slim body relaxed and slipped through his arms to a little white heap on the floor. She began to sob. Gerry stooped down, picked her up tenderly and laid her on the great leather couch. He knelt beside her. On one arm he pillowed her head, with the other hand he sought hers. "Please, Alix," he begged, "please don't cry."

"I'm not crying," sobbed Alix. "I'm laughing."

Gerry smiled and waited. Soon Alix became quiet. Her eyes closed. She drew a long, quivering breath and then she opened her eyes again and her lips broke into the old dear smile, the smile of an opening flower. "I am tired—tired," she said, "but I believe I'm almost hungrier than I am tired."

"I'm glad you said it first," replied Gerry, giving serious thought to the fact that he was faint with hunger himself. "Ever since some funny Johnny wrote, 'Feed the brute,' we men have been shy about echoing our stomachs. It's four o'clock. Hours after lunch time."

"Really?" said Alix, nestling down closer to his arm and letting her smiling eyes wander over him. "How well this suit fits you. There's something about it—it isn't, is it?"

Gerry nodded. "Same old suit. By the way, when I came in John said you told him to telephone to the club and say you wished to see me. What made you think I would go to the club first?"

Alix looked puzzled. "I didn't. I didn't tell John to telephone." She paused, still puzzling, then her face cleared. "Why—poor old John—he's getting very old, you know, Gerry. That was three years ago I told him to telephone—the day you never came back. It must have been the suit. He saw you standing there in the same suit and three years became as one day to the old fellow."

Gerry sighed. "Alix, do you want those three years to become as a day to us?"

Alix shook her head slowly from side to side. "No, dear, I don't. They have given me—given us both—far more than they took away." She put her bare arms around his neck, drew him down and kissed him. "You do not know yet all that they have given you. You think you have come back and found me, a flitting butterfly in a great empty house. But you've found only my abandoned cocoon. I'm not here at all. I've packed myself into the dearest little bundle of pink fat, yellow curls and chubby legs, and left the bundle on Red Hill."

Gerry nodded but he was grave and silent. Not in a day nor a month could he altogether forget the Man.

CHAPTER XXXV

Gerry had always been quiet but during the long drive from the station to The Firs, his silence amounted to a penetrating stillness. Alix felt it but it did not depress her; she knew herself to be in the presence of a communion. Gerry was devoting the hour of his return to the scenes of his boyhood to a silent consecration. These cool valleys and hollows; the Low road, with its purring accompaniment of hidden waters; the embowered still nave of Long lane, were as the ancestral halls of the Lansings. It was right that he should do homage to the memories they evoked.

To his mother Gerry made no explanations. He knew that to her it was enough that her boy had come back. When Mrs. Lansing released him, Alix caught his hand and led him up to the nursery. Together they looked down upon their sleeping child.

Gerry, Jr., was fat to the verge of a split. His curly tow head was tousled and on his brow a slight perspiration testified to the labor of sound sleep. His arms were outstretched. His legs had kinks at the knees, they were so chubby. His perpetual little mouth was half open, disclosing tiny teeth.

"Isn't he a beauty?" asked Alix a little loudly, wishing he would awaken. Gerry nodded. With his eyes still on the child he put his arm around Alix and drew her to him. What Margarita had done for him, Alix had done. As he felt her frail body quivering in his embrace, as he looked back and measured the sacrifice by what the awful night of the coming of the Man had taught him, he was overwhelmed by a new humility. He turned Alix's face up to his. His lips moved in an effort to thank her but words failed him. Alix understood. She lifted her arms around his neck and drew his head down. He held her body very close as he kissed her, softly, adoringly. Alix hid her face against his shoulder for a moment and then threw back her head and shook the tears from her eyelashes. She smiled through wet eyes. "I am afraid he's not quite perfect—inside. Such a temper, Gerry. I'm afraid he'll grow up into a man about town and awfully wild." She turned grave eyes on Gerry, Jr., and her brows puckered. "What do you think?"

Gerry smiled. "From the looks of him I predict he gets his letter in freshman year—center on the football team."

"Yes, perhaps," said Alix thoughtfully. "Everybody calls him Fatty already."

"It was from Alan that Gerry learned that Kemp was still in town closing up his connection with the orchid firm. Gerry wired him, begging him to come to The Firs for a few days before he went West. Alix had told of Kemp's word of comfort."

After the first excitement of getting home was over Gerry found himself restless with the same restlessness that had attacked him during the days at Piranhas. He tried for a solution in the same way. Day after day, long before the rest of the Hill was awake, he was off for a ten-mile walk.

At first it was with head dropped and eyes on the ground that he plowed his way through a dew-soaked world, but there came a time when he walked with head thrown back, full lungs and level eyes.

Then Kemp arrived. Gerry tried to get him to join him in his walks but Kemp shook his head sadly.

"Ef yo' can't let me have a boss, Mr. Lansing," he said, "I'll ride the cow."

Gerry laughed. They saddled the horses themselves and started out. On the top of old Bald Head Gerry dismounted and sat down on a rock. Kemp followed suit.

"Kemp," said Gerry, "I want to thank you for the things you said to my wife—Alix."

Kemp flushed and waved a deprecating hand.

"You saw things straight," went on Gerry, "and I want to thank you, too, for letting me hog-tie myself."

"I ain't curious about that, Mr. Lansing," said Kemp, "so much's about what you're goin' to do when you untie yo'self."

"Well," said Gerry, "I've thought that out too. For a while it used to break my heart to think about Fazenda Flores but it came to me the other day that what there is of me that amounts to anything is just Fazenda Flores."

"When a man learns to eat work just like he does food because he's hungry for it, there's bound to be a place for him anywhere. It has struck me there are a lot of fields around here, some of them mine, that are about ready for resurrection, and resurrection is my job."

"I don't know exactly how I'm going to start but it may be planting potatoes. You can begin a resurrection with any one of a number of simple things. It doesn't matter much which one you pick on as long as you start right down at the bottom and spread yourself in the subsoil of things. Everything that grows starts down deep except your orchids and they are parasites."

"Easy on orchids," interjected Kemp. "Sorry, Kemp. Orchids are ornamental but excepting your favorites they're not even beautiful. Look at a Cyrtopodium Vexillarium."

"Hybrid," grunted Kemp.

"A man in his D. T.'s couldn't beat it for gorgeous horror," finished Gerry. "But that's neither here nor there. What I'm driving at is this. If I had never been tossed over the home fence I would have lived and died an ornamental citizen with the girls of a beer barrel. But now my eyes are a bit open and I can see that the simple things of life are the big things. Growth from the roots is the strength of a man and of his people. I've come home in more senses than one. I'm going to send down my roots right here."

Kemp had been whittling. When Gerry had finished he pocketed his knife and gazed thoughtfully down the valley. "It seems to me, Mr. Lansing, that you 'nd me have been traveling different trails but come together at the same gap. You remember 'The Purple City'?"

Gerry nodded.

"Wal, seems to me that 'cuptin' in a man's own mind the ain't no purple cities. What a man's got to find ain't purple cities but the power to see one when he's got it. You had your right here in this valley an' you side on Red Hill. You grew up in it but you never seen it—not till you learned how. What you been sayin' about the simple things of life—the things that is at the bottom—has he's he's seen parts a powerful lot. I knowed before I come to Red Hill that I was goin' out West to stay but I didn't rightly know why. Now ef you ask me what I know I can tell you I know considerable."

"Out in Noo Mexico they's a ranch in the fork of Big and Little creeks that's the greenest patch in the shadow of White mountain. It's mine and it's got a three-room shack on it that could grow if need was. I know a girl that's been holdin' a four-flush against an orchid's weak pair till she's just about sick of the game, but she's drawn and filled on the last hand though she hasn't had a chance to look at her cards yet."

"For some while the's been a purple light hangin' over Big and Little creek an' I reckon I'll be able to see it plain as a plainer the higher I get to it an'

if the girl will he's me I reckon that in a small way we'll soon be growin' a purple city that will feed from yo' hand. Ef ever you feel the need of some bran' new air, Mr. Lansing, you come out to Big and Little. There won't be much besides air but it'll be fresh made on White mountain an' you can smell it comin' down through the pines an' see it playin' with the leaves on the cottonwoods an' plowin' through the tops of the sorghum."

They sat for some time in silence then Gerry said, "I've been calling you 'Kemp' since I first saw you but you still hang on to the 'mister' when you talk to me. Cut it out, Kemp."

Kemp flushed slightly. "Some things is stittin' an' some ain't," he said, "an' we can't always rightly say why. Some folks is governed by conscience but most by pride. Its goin' to be 'Kemp' and 'Mister Lansing' to the end of the chapter, Mr. Lansing, an' no friendship lost either. Shake."

They shook hands solemnly, mounted and started back to Red Hill. Gerry had found the key to Kemp's strength. It was the key of strength. Kemp belonged on the Hill, and with the people of true blood anywhere, not only because he was himself always but because he defended what he could hold and no more. He was a definition for independence.

CHAPTER XXXVI

It was late afternoon of a day in the gorgeous month. A shower had fallen on Red Hill and after it had come the sun. Wisps of mare's-tail cloud hurried across the clean-washed heavens away, followed into the silence by soft laughter. From The Firs came the last angry wail of the fat young god, choked off in midflight by the soft hand of sleep. Then the scurrying of many feet along the dusty road, silence, and last of all, the trailing whistle of a boy signaling good-night—sound saying good-bye to a happy day.

Hours passed before the moon popped into the sky, hurrying just at first as though she knew she were forty minutes late again. One by one lights went out. Other lights gleamed from upper windows; then they, in turn, went out. Red Hill had gone to bed.

From Maple house Alan slipped out to smoke a last cigar. He hesitated a moment and then strode through the long grass laden with seed and just decking itself with dewy jewels for the night. He crossed to the old church. The door was open. He entered and climbed the crumbling stairs to the belfry. He jumped into one of the arches and sat down, his legs dangling. His eyes wandered slowly over the familiar scene. From behind the trees Maple house, The Firs and Elm house blinked up at him dreamily. Before them ran the ribbon of road, white under moonlight, dipping at each end into the wide world. Up and down the road before The Firs, paced two figures—Gerry and Alix. Gerry's arm was around her. Long black shadows, all pointing to the west, like fallen silhouettes cut the moonlight. Above them, the autumn-painted trees gave out a golden echo of light.

Alan drew a great, quivering breath. "My boy, you have been far, far away," J. Y. had said and he had answered, "yes, but I have come back."

But it was only now, tonight, that he had really come back.

Alan's wandering eyes settled on Maple house. "Even as a hen gathering her chickens under her wings," he whispered.

And then the peace of home descended upon him. On his scarred spirit he felt the touch of the healing hands of home. Its sweetness and its power, its love everlasting demanding love forever, knocked at his waking heart and found the door open. Far, far had he wandered in the world of mind and the world of men, but in the end he had come back like a Wayne to the eternal mother of the Waynes. Tonight he knew that his drifting soul had dropped anchor at last.

KILLED SEEKING TO ESCAPE

How General Morgan, Famous Confederate Raider, Ended His Long Series of Forays.

In December, 1863, Longstreet, who had been conducting an active campaign in Tennessee, returned into Virginia, leaving the noted guerrilla, Col. John H. Morgan, to carry on the struggle in East Tennessee. December 29 there was a fight between General Sturges and Morgan—the latter having an army of about 6,000—near New Market, in which Morgan was defeated. In another fight January 16, 1864, Morgan made the attack and Sturges was driven back to Strawberry Plains. Morgan lingered in East Tennessee until May, and late in the month, with a small band of men, he went over the mountains and raided through eastern Kentucky, plundering the wealthy district as he went through. He captured several small towns, dashed into Lexington, burning the railway station and other property there, and hurried on to Frankfort. But General Burbridge was in pursuit, and came up with Morgan's men near Cynthiana, and in the fight which followed, Morgan lost 200 in killed and wounded, 400 prisoners, and 1,000 horses captured. In September he had his forces at Greenville, and Morgan himself and his staff were at the house of a Mrs. Williams. General Gillem, with troops, surrounded the house, and Morgan was killed while trying to escape. His body was sent through the lines by a flag of truce, and was buried with imposing ceremonies at Abingdon, Va.

as though they were ashamed to be caught in their ragged clothes under a blue sky. Downy-topped masses of cumulus poked drowsy heads over the horizon and watched them run. Out of the dome of heaven filtered a single trill of song.

The Hill was very still but presently from far away on the West Lake road came the whinny of a horse; a little later, a little nearer, a peal of laughter; then the sound of wheels and chattering voices. A wagonette, two spring wagons and a pony cart burst from Long lane and wheeled right and left. They were full of grown-ups turned young for a day and youths that thought they would be young forever.

The wagonette, swinging down the road toward Maple house, suddenly swerved and plowed through the tall grass. Alan and Clem on the end seats were almost thrown out. Alan looked back at the road and stared. A fat donkey had claimed the right of way and held it. Several lengths of legs stuck out from her bulging sides. Behind her hurried a panting nurse.

Alan turned to Clem. "Do donkeys never die?"

"Oh! I hope not," said Clem gravely. "You change them. We changed ours while you were away."

"So she has been changed," said Alan. "Well, that's something."

"Bully," said Clem, "you've been seeing that donkey every day for weeks."

"No," said Alan, "this is the first time I've really seen her."

The sun took a last long look at Red Hill and dropped out of sight. Then, as though he would come back and look again, he sent up a broad afterglow that climbed and climbed till the tip of the very clouds that peeped over East mountain were tinged with the rosy light.

From an open upstairs window came Clem's soft voice. "Yes, dears, pink night-caps. Those big sleepy clouds are putting them on because they are just giddy to go to bed."

"I want pink night-cap."

"Why, darling, night-caps are only for white-headed people and white-headed clouds. Just wait until you're white-headed. Now climb into bed and I'll tell."

Beyond the mountain-ash thicket a love-sick Bob White kept saying "Good-night" to his mate. She answered sleepily.

From Maple house, The Firs, and far down the road, from Elm house warm lights flashed out and settled down into a steady glow. A burst of young voices swept into the night and died

From Maple house, The Firs, and far down the road, from Elm house warm lights flashed out and settled down into a steady glow. A burst of young voices swept into the night and died

THE KITCHEN CABINET

The man who wins is an average man. Not built on any peculiar plan. Not blessed with any peculiar luck. Just steady and earnest and full of pluck.

Things Worth Knowing.

In hanging out clothes that are apt to be lost because small, pin them with small pins to strips of cloth before going out; then they may be hung quickly with no danger of loss or tearing of delicate embroidery.

When going upstairs place the whole foot on the stair and keep the body erect; this manner of climbing stairs will not strain any muscle unduly.

A harmless laxative and one that the children will ask for is the following: Grind a pound each of dates, raisins and figs with a pound of softened prunes and five cents worth of senna leaves. Mix well and knead into a loaf, wrap in waxed paper and keep in a cool place. For a child a piece the size of a pecan is sufficient; adults may take a larger piece. This will keep in a cold place for weeks, is entirely harmless and much less expensive than many drugs sold for the purpose.

Hash Roll.—Take two cupfuls of finely chopped meat, one cupful of seasoned mashed potatoes, one-half cupful of toasted bread or cracker crumbs, one large onion, chopped fine, one-half cupful of milk, a dash of pepper and two eggs; mix all the ingredients. Place in a pan whose bottom is covered with a greased paper. When brown roll out like a jelly roll. The paper will assist in this. Garnish with baked tomatoes, or if one prefers, stuffed peppers.

Roast Ham With Cider Sauce.—Soak the ham over night in cold water and place a kettle with a half cupful each of sliced onions, carrots, two sprigs of parsley, four cloves, one-half a bay leaf, cover with cold water and bring slowly to the simmering point. Cook four hours, or until tender. After two hours, add a quart of cider. Allow the ham to cool in the liquor; skim, sprinkle with sugar and bread crumbs; put in a few dashes of paprika, stick in a few cloves and bake an hour.

Cider Sauce.—Melt three tablespoonfuls of butter, add four of flour and pour on, stirring, two cupfuls of the ham liquor; add a quarter of a cup of cider, pepper and salt to taste. Serve hot with the ham.

MENUS WITHOUT MEAT.

To prepare meals for any length of time without the use of meat takes the ingenuity of the housewife. Breakfast, such as fruit of some sort, a cereal, soft-cooked eggs, toast and coffee. This will provide a good meal, where even heavy labor is performed before the noonday meal.

When milk, cheese and eggs are included in the diet the absence of meat is not felt. Usually the greatest digestive troubles come from too much of the carbohydrates; that is, the starches and sugars which cause fermentation and intestinal indigestion. Indigestion in many cases is simply lack of eating a proper amount of food and properly masticating it. Gladstone's thirty mastications to the mouthful would mean health to many people if they would follow the practice faithfully.

Our nitrogenous vegetables, such as peas, beans and lentils; nuts, such as the peanuts, are tissue-building foods and make a good substitute for meat.

The following menus for dinners will be found very satisfactory: Pea soup with croquettes, creamed celery on toast, mashed potatoes, radishes, rice dumplings with cream, crackers, cheese and coffee.

Salsify soup, macaroni, white sauce and cheese, stuffed potatoes, celery salad, stuffed dates.

Clear tomato soup, cheese croquettes, baked potatoes, celery, baked apples with cream.

Tomato soup, whole wheat bread sticks, baked beans, cold salad, cream puffs, coffee.

Cream of spinach soup, croquettes, radishes, mushrooms on toast, cabbage with rice and cream sauce, baked potatoes, tomatoes with mayonnaise, apple pie and cheese.

For luncheon—cream of tomato soup, bread sticks, cheese soufflé, celery, apple dumplings with cream.

Bean soup, mashed brown potatoes, spinach with eggs, brown bread and fruit.

Corn soup, rice croquettes with cheese sauce, beettop greens, cheese wafers and coffee or cocoa.

Must Have the Goods.

You can be just as nice to customers as you want to be. You can put them under obligations to you. You can advertise till you are "totally broke," and you can talk till you're black in the face, but if you don't have the goods, people are going to go to the store of the man who does have them, and you can't blame them.

Good Definition.

"Home—where each lives for the other and all for God."—Selected.

Never Maxwell

People who don't know about food should never be allowed to feed persons with weak stomachs.

Sometime ago a young woman who lives in Me. had an attack of scarlet fever, and when convalescing was permitted to eat anything she wanted. Indiscriminate feeding soon put her back in bed with severe stomach and kidney trouble.

"There I stayed," she says, "three months, with my stomach in such condition that I could take only a few teaspoonfuls of milk or beef juice at a time. Finally Grape-Nuts was brought to my attention and I asked my doctor if I might eat it. He said, 'yes,' and I commenced at once."

"The food did me good from the start and I was soon out of bed and recovered from the stomach trouble. I have gained ten pounds and am able to do all household duties, some days sitting down only long enough to eat my meals. I can eat anything that one ought to eat, but I still continue to eat Grape-Nuts at breakfast and supper and like it better every day."

Irate Father—Don't think, you man, you can walk into this house and hang up your hat.
Timid Suitor—I know I can't. You're sitting on it.
