Will of Late C. H. Kempf.

The last will and testament of C. H. Kempf, made July 11, 1912, was admitted to probate Tuesday and provides the following:

He bequeathed the sum of $10,000 to each of his five grandchildren.

To the Congregational church of Chelsea the sum of $5,000, the income to be used towards paying the pastor's salary.

The residue of the estate he divided as follows: One third to his daughter, Mrs. Myrta K. Chandler; one-sixth to his son, Wilbur G. Kempf; one-sixth to his son, Geo. H. Kempf; to John Kalmbach, as trustee, the remaining one-third, to be invested and the income therefrom to be paid in semi-annual installments, in equal parts, to Kate Kempf, wife of Wilbur G. Kempf, and Linna Kempf, wife of Geo. H. Kempf, during the term of their lives. Providing that at the death of Kate Kempf her children who survive her shall receive one-half of the trust fund, and at the death of Linna Kempf one-half of the trust fund shall be given to Geo. H. Kempf and the children of Myrta K. Chandler, provided that if Linna Kempf outlives Geo. H. Kempf, the entire remainder of the half of the trust fund is to go to the children of Myrta K. Chandler.

Clarence J. Chandler was named executor, and in a codicil added later Mr. Chandler was named joint trustee with Mr. Kalmbach.

Thomas Wilkinson.

Thomas Wilkinson, son of Thomas and Jane (Clarey) Wilkinson, was born in Sylvan township, October 14, 1837, and died at his home on South Main street, Sunday afternoon, October 29, 1916.

Mr. Wilkinson was engaged in mercantile business in Chelsea from 1861 until 1882, when he moved to his farm at the south edge of the village, remaining there until 1898, when he returned to Chelsea.

Mr. Wilkinson was united in marriage with Roxie M. Winans in 1864, who passed away in 1911, and is survived by three children, Archie W., Nettie J., and Thomas M., all residents of Chelsea, two half sisters, Misses Mary and Gertrude Judson of Kalamazoo, and a half brother, B. F. Judson of St. Louis, Mich.

Mr. Wilkinson was always an active man, taking an interest in everything tending for the betterment of affairs in the village, and has held various village and school offices.

The funeral was held at the family home at 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon. Rev. G. H. Whitney officiating. Interment at Oak Grove cemetery.

Koch-Niehaus Wedding.

A very pretty home wedding took place at high noon, Wednesday, November 1, 1916, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. John Koch, on Adams street, when their daughter, Miss Mary Johanna, was united in marriage to Mr. Julius H. Niehaus of Lima.

The couple were attended by Miss Clara Koch, sister of the bride, and Mr. Paul Niehaus, brother of the groom. The ceremony was performed by Rev. A. A. Schoen, pastor of St. Paul's church, and was witnessed by about thirty of the immediate relatives of the young couple.

The bride is a graduate of the Chelsea high school and for the past two years taught one of the grades in the Chelsea schools. She has been the guest of honor at several social functions during the past few days. The groom is a well known resident of Lima.

A wedding dinner was served after the ceremony.

The couple are spending a few days with friends in Traverse City. For the present they will reside on the Niehaus farm in Lima, and expect later in the season to move to Ann Arbor where they have purchased a residence.

Boil Milk for Children.

The following written by Dr. Victor C. Vaughan, of Ann Arbor, to Chelsea physician is the latest word in regard to infantile paralysis:

The weight of opinion just now is that infantile paralysis is due to a germ which finds its way into the body with food and drink, especially milk. This may be wrong, but it is the best we can say at this time. Certainly all milk fed to children should be sterilized or pasturized for the present time.

ELECTING A PRESIDENT 18

Party Split Helped Wilson in 1912.

THE Democrats with Woodrow Wilson came back to power in the election of 1912. The Republican convention in Chicago nominated Taft, who was now opposed bitterly by Roosevelt. There were many contested delegates, and those in authority seated a majority of delegates with Taft proclivities.

Roosevelt had many warm supporters and was an avowed candidate. When Taft was nominated Roosevelt formed the Progressive party and ran on the third ticket.

The vote in 1912 was: Wilson, 6,293,019; Roosevelt, 4,119,507; Taft, 3,484,956. Wilson received 435 votes in the electoral college. Roosevelt 88 and Taft 8. Thomas R. Marshall of Indiana was elected vice president.

Find out who "Polly" is at the senior play, "All on Account of Polly," to be given at the town hall Friday evening. Synopsis: Ralph Beverly, a once wealthy and popular citizen is upon the brink of financial ruin. If matters do not change for the better Mr. and Mrs. Beverly and their three extravagant children will be forced to live in a flat. The crises comes when Mr. Beverly takes an orphan and distant relative whose money tides over the financial crises for Mr. Beverly. By her kind and gentle disposition, she reforms the family.

The High School Literary Society held a very successful party in the school last Thursday evening. The hall was very prettily decorated with cornstalks, jack o' lanterns and crepe paper. A great deal of amusement and also fright was afforded the guests as they descended the east stairs to the basement which was infested with the brooms of witches who made known to everyone their past, present and future. Some were made wiser by the study of astronomy, and some more silly. About 9:30 the luncheon was announced. Here everyone's spirits were heightened by the friedcakes, apples, sweet cider and homemade candies. At 10:18 the ghosts and witches had vanished, merriment had ended and the school was ready for another day's work.

Runaway Boy Found.

Jackson Patriot: "I am looking for my boy who ran away from home last Monday," said Bert Compton as he walked into the police station about 2 o'clock Friday afternoon. "It may be he is out in Napoleon. A man out there wanted to hire him a while ago, and I am going there to see if that is where he is at. I thought that I would stop in here first."

Being informed by Sergeant Fall that no wandering boy had been picked up by the police of late, Mr. Compton turned to leave the building. As he opened the door to go out, the boy was just coming in. He had secured a job delivering a Detroit afternoon paper, and was leaving a copy at police headquarters.

"Here he is now," said the father, grabbing the lad by the shoulder.

The boy was so surprised that he knew not what to say, and began to cry. He was taken into the chief's office and there explained the reason he left home was because he became discouraged at school. It was but a short time ago Mr. Compton moved his family to Chelsea from Jackson.

From the Mexican Border.

El Paso, Texas.
18 Oct., 1916.

I do not have much opportunity to write during the day time and quite often at night it is so cold that we have to go to bed to keep warm, as we do not have any way as yet of heating our tents, and we are not spending any money fixing things up until we find out how long we will be here. We are camped within the city limits and only two blocks from a street car line. I can walk down to the main business section of the city in fifteen minutes. From my tent door I can see several 8 and 10-story buildings. El Paso is a fine city of about 150,000 inhabitants over one-half of whom are Mexicans. There is lots of wealth here and very fine residences and the most and finest paved streets of any city I ever have been in. I was very much surprised to find such a nice place here. It is from 600 to a 1000 miles from here to any place of importance. And that whole distance is sage, cactus, mesquite and sand, almost desert. Our camp is near the Mexican quarter of the town which corresponds to the Pollock settlements of our large cities. We are about a mile from the international bridge to Juarez and we can see across the river into the city very plainly. Where we are camped the river makes quite a bend so that on the east side of our camp we are only about 500 yards from the border. The river is the boundary except where it has changed its course and there markers are placed about 100 yards apart and a barbed wire fence is strung between the markers. A short time ago I was on top of a mountain near here where there was a marker that was the corner boundary of New Mexico, Texas and Old Mexico. The view from the top of this mountain was magnificent and we could see for miles up and down the valley of the Rio Grande. Except for a strip of land next the river from a mile to two miles wide not a green thing could be seen. Everywhere else was sage brush, cactus and sand. Only a few trees along the river bank, and around the water holes. It seems like home to go down town and see some grass on a lawn that is kept alive by much exertion, and a few scraggly shrubs and stunted trees. Everything that is grown here has to be irrigated from a mustache to a sweet potato. We had water melons and musk melons from the time we arrived the 11th of July until the present. The fruits, peaches, grapes, etc., look fine and if you would let it go at that fine and dandy, but when you taste of some of them the illusion is dispelled immediately. This is not true of every fruit or vegetable, but quite often it is the rule rather than the exception. I don't think we noticed the heat here one-half as much as you did in Michigan this last summer.

Of course it gets pretty hot here around the noon hour. A person will sweat a lot with only a little exertion but you don't seem to be so very warm. In fact we seemed to get along just as well as the natives and quite often better. We have had good food and cooked in a more palatable form than at any time before that I have been in service. We are within 15 minutes' walk of many downtown restaurants and hotels, where you can get a meal from 25c to $10, and I have eaten three meals out of camp since we have been here. Of course there have been days when meals were few and far between due to the exigencies of the service but that is to be expected. We did not come down here for a picnic.

The worst thing we have to contend with here are the dust storms or "Texas rains," as they are called some times. The wind will blow the dust around for a week at a time, at other times for a half a day, some days not at all. The dust is very fine and it will get into everything you have. It will even penetrate into a trunk or suit case. It gets in your hair, up your sleeve and it is almost impossible to keep clean.

Lots of times I have waked up in the night and drew my hand across my face and it would feel as gritty as sand paper. When it was very hot almost every day a spiral twister would go through camp. Sometimes all they would do would be to stir up clouds of dust and some of them are stout enough to blow down a tent. We had a week of very rainy weather in August and then we were almost flooded out of our homes. So you see that on the whole life here is about the same as it is in Michigan. Just one darned thing after another.

THE TUBERCULOSIS SURVEY IN STATE

THIRTY-EIGHT COUNTIES OUT OF EIGHTY-THREE EXAMINED REPORT 2,914 CASES.

KENT COUNTY HEADS LIST

Marquette County Was Next With 319 Positive and Suspected Cases.

Lansing.—Twelve months of the tuberculosis survey ordered and authorized by the 1915 legislature have been finished. Thirty-eight counties out of the 83 in the state have been visited by the doctors and nurses working in behalf of the state. The experts have found the following:

Positive cases of tuberculosis, 2,914.

Suspicious cases of tuberculosis—ones who needed the care of physicians but who are not yet in the actual stages of the disease—2,231.

Entirely free from the disease, 5,624 out of 11,528 cases examined.

While the figures given out by Dr. William De Kleine indicate that almost one-half of the people in the state have tuberculosis, such is by no means the case. Those examined were persons whom the local doctors suspected of having the disease. In each of the counties the inmates of the jails and the county infirmaries also were examined, but according to the experts such institutions are fertile fields for tuberculosis.

Kent county heads the list in the number of positive and suspected cases. Out of a total of 677 persons examined in Kent, 583 were found to be either troubled unquestionably with the disease or were classed as "suspects." Marquette county was next with a total of 319 positive and suspected cases.

Wayne county has not been visited and is not included in the figures. The examination in Wayne will be left to local authorities.

MICHIGAN BEATS SYRACUSE

Last Few Minutes of Play Drives Huge Crowd Frantic. M. A. C. Also Winners.

Ann Arbor.—Apparently hopelessly beaten, almost outclassed, Michigan's football team staged the most hysterical finish ever seen on Ferry field and defeated Syracuse 14 to 13. Scoring every point in the final quarter, actually in the last minutes of the last period, the Wolverines drove a huge crowd frantic and twice shot Zeiger over the Orange goal for touchdowns.

M. A. C. Also Wins.

East Lansing.—M. A. C. came back strongly and defeated the North Dakota Aggies; a team of true western huskies, by a score of 30 to 0. The Michigan Farmers looked even stronger than last Saturday when they held Michigan to a nine-point margin. With the exception of Butler, every player came through the game without injury. Butler sprained his ankle and may be out of the game for at least a week.

ITEMS OF STATE INTEREST

Commission men show no hesitancy in admitting the price of produce in Detroit is higher than in any other large city in the United States. Comparative price lists show that many vegetable products have been advanced in price from 100 to 600 per cent since last year. Local conditions are held mostly responsible, although the war and poor crops are contributing factors.

The board of control of Jackson prison after meeting with Gov. Ferris at Lansing is no nearer the selection of a successor to Warden Nathan Simpson, whose resignation becomes effective Jan. 1, than it was before the meeting was held.

Construction work for which permits were taken out in Detroit during the past week represents an aggregate of $1,022,985 in estimated expenditure, which compares with a total of $1,662,350 for the preceding week and with $823,520 for the similar week of last year.

SUBMARINE ISSUE AT STAKE

THE SINKING OF A BRITISH FREIGHTER BY SUBMARINE WITH AMERICANS ABOARD.

Washington.—A cablegram from U. S. Consul Frost, at Queens-town, received by the state department, has brought this country face to face with a possibility of a reopening of the whole submarine issue with Germany. Consul Frost reported there were seven Americans aboard the British freighter Rowanmore, sunk after trying to escape from a German submarine 140 miles off Cape Clear, Ireland. Open boats in which the refugees were leaving the ship were shelled by the submarine, according to the consul's preliminary report.

The state department is awaiting a more complete report. It is stated that if it should prove true that Americans were shelled in the boats in which they were leaving the Rowanmore the incident might become very serious in spite of the fact, apparently, that there were no casualties. A parallel case is that of the Ancona, which was shelled under similar circumstances by an Austrian submarine. Austria was denounced in the severest terms for this act and immediate apologies, and the punishment of the submarine commander were demanded by the United States government. Austria apologized and promised to punish the commander.

State department officials say the Rowanmore case may become a test of the sincerity of the assurances of Germany after the Sussex incident that she would conduct her submarine warfare in accordance with the rules laid down by the United States.

A case of lesser importance than that of the Rowanmore was also reported by Consul Frost. He informed the department that a German submarine had sunk without warning the British horse transport Marina, with a mixed crew of British and Americans. The case of the Marina is less serious because if she were a government transport, as the report indicates, she would be classed as a warship and Americans go aboard such vessels at their own risk.

ASSAILED U. S. OFFICIALS

Chairman of the Mexican-American Joint Commission Deplores Laxity at Border.

Washington.—In a statement issued here, Luis Cabrera, chairman of the Mexican-American joint commission, assailed American officials for alleged laxity in dealing with anti-Carranza propagandists along the border. Officials pronounced it "extraordinary" and gave some indications that it might be the subject of action by the state department.

The statement which caused officials much surprise as coming from the head of a Mexican delegation now attempting to adjust border troubles, was issued by the Mexican news bureau, which acts for the Mexican embassy. It follows:

"A broad interpretation of the federal laws of the United States dealing with neutrality and regulating immigration with a strict, consistent and efficient administration of these laws by the executives to whom their administration is delegated, would go a long way toward correcting the border disturbances and allay much of the unrest which at present pervades that region."

MICHIGAN GUARD NOTES

An order was issued by Major Smith to all island guards to pick up all persons attempting to cross into Mexico, either with or without passes.

Through Lieutenant Phillips, Major Gilchrist, division United States surgeon, has complimented General Kirk on the improved sanitary condition in camp since his arrival.

Majors Dumas and Roehl, of the Thirty-first, spent four hours burning $20,000 worth of used exchange checks. The exchange is now in the best condition of its existence. More than $500 remains in the treasury to be divided among the companies.

Ohio cavalry was also hurried out for border duty near Yslet. The Thirty-third Michigan is expected orders to go out and it is possible, if the tightening process continues, the other Michigan regiments may get more outside duty.

Colonel Charles McKee, of the Pennsylvania troops, has reported to General Kirk on the case of Private Fairburn, of Company A, Michigan Signal corps, who said he lost $60 while confined in the Pennsylvania guardhouse. Fairburn was picked up by Pennsylvania guards in an intoxicated condition, and confined. There was no evidence adduced that Fairburn lost his money while in custody.

Citizens of Clarkston have formed themselves into an unofficial vigilance committee to protect the game preserve in that vicinity from the unwise marksmanship of city "pothunters."

Capt. John Mattison, commander of the barge Flier, which sank, claiming six lives, Capt. Mattison being the sole survivor, is a resident of Dalton. Because of the distance of this town from the nearest telegraph office, it was nearly three days before Capt. Mattison's wife knew of his narrow escape from death.

THE DEUTSCHLAND AGAIN REACHES U.S.

CAPTAIN PAUL KOENIG BRINGS MERCHANT SUBMARINE SAFELY ACROSS OCEAN.

The Craft Entered the Harbor Under Her Own Power and Only Few Were Aware.

New London, Conn.—The German merchant submarine Deutschland arrived in the harbor here early Wednesday morning.

Captain Paul Koenig said the Deutschland left Bremen, Germany, October 10, and made the trip here without special incident. The entire crew comprises 25 men.

The Deutschland appeared in the outer harbor shortly after midnight and proceeded to the dock of the Eastern Forwarding company.

Capt. F. Hirsch, of the Forwarding company, accompanied by Dr. R. E. Black, the health officer, and other officials, met the submersible on a tug.

The usual quarantine regulations were waived and the Deutschland tied up near the North German Lloyd steamer Willehad.

The Deutschland was said to have a large cargo of chemicals.

The submersible, under her own power, shot into a "pocket" that had been prepared for her at the wharf at 2:35 o'clock. The craft's entry into the harbor was so silent that only a few persons were aware that she was there.

Captain Koenig said the boat originally was supposed to leave October 1, but was injured in a collision and put back to port, delaying her sailing 10 days. The clearance papers were made out for "Baltimore or any other Atlantic port."

Until the last three days extremely rough water was encountered, Captain Koenig said.

Attracted World-Wide Attention.

Captain Koenig's feat in bringing the unique vessel across the Atlantic in safety attracted world-wide interest last July. After discharging her cargo at Baltimore, the Deutschland took on board a return cargo of commodities most needed in Germany—nickel and rubber—and started home August 1. No secret was made of her time of departure. Secrecy would have been practically impossible. She left Baltimore in daylight at an hour that enabled her to reach the dangerous proximity of the three-mile limit at the approach of dusk.

Twenty-two days later she dropped anchor at the mouth of the Weser, her home port, where she had been anxiously expected for many days. That her return voyage occupied six days more than the outward trip was due to the fact that she followed a longer course, avoiding the dangerous English channel by which she had sailed to this country.

Her safe return home was the cause of tremendous rejoicing in Germany. Captain Koenig became a popular hero and received many marks of favor from the Kaiser.

Since that time not much has been heard of the Deutschland. The fate of her sister submarine, the Bremen, which was supposed to have started across the Atlantic after the Deutschland's arrival at Baltimore, excited much speculation and many rumors.

U-Boat 53 Reaches Home.

Berlin, via London.—The German submarine U-53 has returned safely to a German port according to the official announcement.

The German submarine U-53, in command of Lieutenant-Captain Hans Rose, arrived at Newport, R. I., from Wilhelmshaven, October 7, and departed after a stay of three hours. The next day the U-53 sank five ships off the American coast.

Various reports have been current regarding the submarine, and it was uncertain whether she was returning to Germany or had remained on this side of the Atlantic. There were various rumors also that she had been sunk.

Two new cases of infantile paralysis brought the number in Battle Creek to 20. The new victims are Mabel Cross, 7 years old, and Clyde Stein, 2 1/2 years old. Schools will remain closed indefinitely, and other rigid precautions will be continued.

Gen. John P. Kirk, commanding the Michigan brigade, and his staff, escaped without injury when the general's automobile was wrecked in a collision. The party was returning from Ysleta where they had observed the military maneuvers. The machine was struck by another motor car at a crossing. The front end of Gen. Kirk's machine was wrecked.

Every ford, bridge and trail along the international border in this patrol district is being guarded by additional United States troops in compliance with Secretary of War Baker's warning to border commanders to be prepared for another Mexican bandit raid on the border.

At the White Pine Extension copper mining property, in Keeweenaw county, the drift at the 200-foot level has gone in about 50 feet in each direction, north and south, and very good copper bearing ground has been exposed.

EMINENT surgeons tell Hugh Whitaker that six months is his life limit. Peter Stark, intimate friend, finds him stunned by the news and arranges to take Whitaker on a long South sea yacht trip. The sick man sneaks off to a country hotel, intending to kill himself, but surprises a young girl in the act of drinking poison. She is Mary Ladlala, love-starved daughter of a New York plutocrat, deserted by the man with whom she planned clandestine marriage. To save her good name, Whitaker marries the girl (knowing that six months is his limit), gives her money and puts her on a train for home. He runs plump into Stark, hunting him. Months later, the yacht burns at sea. All hands die but Whitaker, who is reported lost. A delicate operation restores his health, and after five prosperous years in Australia, he returns to New York—one back from the dead! We find him in this installment—talking with his old law partner, Drummond, about the prospects of finding that little girl wife. A beautiful actress enters the story.

"Would you know her if you saw her?"
 "I don't know," Whitaker frowned with annoyance. "She's six years older—"

"Well, but what was she like?" Drummond pursued curiously.

Whitaker shook his head. "It's not easy to remember. Matter of fact, I don't believe I ever got one good square look at her. It was twilight in the hotel, when I found her; we sat talking in absolute darkness, toward the end; even in the minister's study there was only a green-shaded lamp on the table; and on the train—well, we were both too much worked up, I fancy, to pay much attention to details."

"Blonde or brune?"
 "I swear I don't know. She wore one of those funny knitted caps, tight down over her hair; all the time."

Drummond laughed quietly. "I don't feel in a joking humor," Whitaker said roughly. "It's a serious matter and wants serious treatment. . . . What else have we got to mull over?"

Drummond shrugged suavely. "There's enough to keep us busy for several hours," he said. "For instance, there's my stewardship."

"Your which?"
 "My care of your property. You left a good deal of money and securities lying round loose, you know; naturally I felt obliged to look after 'em. There was no telling when Widow Whitaker might walk in and demand an accounting. I presume we might as well run over the account—though it is getting late."

"Half-past four," Whitaker informed him, consulting his watch. "Take too long for to-day. Some other time."

Drummond's reply was postponed by the office boy, who popped in on the heels of a light knock.

"Mr. Max's outside," he announced. "O the deuce!" The exclamation seemed to escape Drummond's lips involuntarily. He tightened them angrily, as though regretting the lapse of self-control, and glanced hurriedly at the clock. "I'm busy," he added, a trace sullenly. "Tell him I've gone out."

"But he's got 'nappointment,'" the boy protested. "And besides, I told him you was in."

"You needn't fob him off on my account," Whitaker interposed. "We can finish our confab later—Monday—any time. It's time for me to be getting up-town, anyway."

"It isn't that," Drummond explained doggedly. "Only—the man's a bore, and—"

"It isn't Jules Max?" Whitaker excitedly. "Not little Jules Max, who used to stage manage our amateur shows?"

"That's the man," Drummond admitted with plain reluctance. "Then have him in, by all means. I want to say howdy to him, if nothing more. And then I'll clear out and leave you to his troubles."

Drummond laughed a trifle sourly. "Max has developed into a heavy-weight entrepreneur, you know."

"Meaning theatrical manager? Then why not say so? But I might've guessed he'd drift into something of the sort."

A moment later Whitaker was vigorously shaking the unresisting—indeed the apparently boneless—hand of Jules Max. The hat that had made Hammerstein famous Max had appropriated—straight—broadly, beneath its immaculate gloss—bodily. Beneath it his face was small of feature, and fat. A pince-nez sheltered his near-sighted eyes. His short, round body was invariably by day dressed in a dark waistcoat, white shirt, and white tie, and at night in a black tuxedo, and patent-leather shoes with white spats. He had a passion for lemon-colored gloves of thinnest kid and slender mace walking-sticks. His dignity was an awful thing, as ingrained as his strut.

He reasserted the dignity now with a jerk of his maltreated hand, read-justed his glasses, and resumed his stare.

"Either," he observed, "you're Hugh Whitaker come to life or a deuced outrage."

"Both if you like."

"You sound like both," complained the little man. "Anyway, you were drowned in the Philippines or somewhere long ago, and I never waste time on a dead one. . . . Drummond—"

"He turned to the lawyer with a vastly business-like air."

"No, you don't!" Whitaker insisted, putting himself between the two men. "I admit that you're a great man; you might at least admit that I'm a live one."

A modified smile moderated the small man's manner. "That's a bargain," he said, extending a pale yellow paw; "I'm glad to see you again, Hugh. When did you recede?"

"An hour ago," Drummond answered for him; "blew in here as large as life and twice as important. He's been running a gold farm-out in New Guinea. What do you know about that?"

"It's very interesting," Max conceded. "You've asked him, of course?" he demanded of Drummond, nodding toward Whitaker.

Drummond flushed slightly. "No chance," he said. "I was on the point of doing it when you butted in."

"What's this?" inquired Whitaker. Max delivered himself of a startling bit of information: "He's going to get married."

Whitaker stared. "Drummond? Not really?"

Drummond acknowledged his guilt brazenly: "Next week, in fact."

"But why didn't you say anything about it?"

"You didn't give me an opening. Besides, to welcome a deserter from the great beyond is enough to drive all other thoughts from a man's mind."

"There's to be a supper in honor of the circumstances, at the Beaux Arts tonight," supplemented Max. "You'll come, of course."

"I'll be there—and furthermore, I'll be waiting at the church a week hence—or whenever it's to come off. And now I want to congratulate you," Whitaker held Drummond's hand in one of those long, hard grips that mean much between men. "But mostly I want to congratulate her. Who is she?"

"Sara Law," said Drummond, with pride in his quick color and the lift of his chin.

"The greatest living actress on the English-speaking stage," Max announced, preening himself importantly. "My own discovery."

"Of course I've heard—but I have been out of touch with such things," Whitaker apologized. "When shall I see her?"

"In honor of her retirement," Max answered, fussing with a garbula on his lapel. "She retires from the stage finally, and forever—she says—when the curtain falls tonight."

"Then I've got to be in the theater tonight—if that's the case," said Whitaker.

"Fraid you won't get in, though," Drummond doubted darkly. "Every thing in the house for this final week was sold out a month ago. Even the speculators are cleaned out."

"But the manager reproved him loftily, 'Hugh is going to see Sara Law for the last time from my personal box—aren't you, Hugh?'"

"You bet I am!" Whitaker asserted with conviction.

"Then come along," Max caught him by the arm and started for the door. "So long, Drummond."

CHAPTER V.

Curtain.

Nothing would satisfy Max but that Whitaker should dine with him. He consented to drop him at the Ritz-Carlton, in order that he might dress, only on the condition that Whitaker would meet him at seven, in the white room at the Knickerbocker.

"Just mention my name to the head waiter," he said with magnificence; "or I'll be there first, you can't help seeing me. Everybody knows my table—" the little one in the southeast corner.

Shoot, James!"

The latter phrase was Max's way of ordering the driver to move on. The car snorted resentfully, then pulled smoothly and swiftly away. Max waved a jaunty farewell with a lemon-colored hand, over the back of the tonneau.

Whitaker went up to his room in a reflective mood in which the theatrical man had little place. Since his arrival in New York he had fallen into the habit of seeking the view from his window when in meditative humor. A view of ten thousand roofs, inexpressibly enchanting. . . . Somewhere—perhaps—in that welter of steel and stone, as eternal and as restless as the sea, was the woman Whitaker had married, working out her lonely destiny. A haphazard biscuit tossed from his window might fall upon the very roof that sheltered her; he might search for a hundred years and never cross her path.

He wondered. . . . The possibility that she might have married a second time did not disturb his pulse by the least fraction of a beat. He even contemplated the chance that she might be dead with normal equanimity. Fortunately, that he didn't love her. More fortunate still, that he loved no one else.

Inconsciously he wrote and dispatched a long, extravagant cablegram to Mrs. Pettit in care of the American embassy, little doubting that she would immediately answer.

When eventually he strode into the white room, Max was already established at the famous little table in the southeast corner. Whitaker was conscious of turning heads and guarded comment as he took his place opposite the little fat man.

"Make you famous in a night," Max assured him importantly. "Don't happen to need any notoriety, do you?"

"No, thanks."

"Dine with me here three nights hand-running and they'll let you into the Syndicate by the back door without even asking your name. P. T. A.'s one grand little motto, my boy."

"P. T. A.?"

"Pays to advertise. Paste that in your hat. Look me over," he requested abruptly, leaning back. "I guess I'm some giddy young buck, what?"

Whitaker reviewed the striking effect Max had created by encasing his brief neck and double chin in an old-fashioned high collar and black silk stock, beneath which his important grading can be done much more rapidly and accurately than when done entirely by hand.

view of the sizer. The fruit is poured onto the padded slats at the top and rolls down over the padded portions at A and B. A man or a woman stands at either side opposite the second opening X and with one hand picks out the diseased and wormy fruit and with the other keeps the fruit from rolling down too rapidly and guides it over the different openings. As the fruit passes slowly over the openings the smallest, which is too small for barreling, falls through the first hole and goes in with the culls. The next larger falls through the next hole and is carried away by a canvas trough into suitable bins. The next falls through the largest hole to make the second grade, while the largest rolls over the end and makes the third and largest grade.

No exact dimensions are given as they may be varied to suit the requirements of the user. A convenient size is about 3 feet wide by 5 or 6 feet long. It should be made as light as possible so that it may be easily moved about and should not have too much slope or slant as the efficiency is greater when the fruit does not crowd down upon the operators too rapidly. The holes should be at least six inches apart in order that the canvas troughs may be easily adjusted to carry away the different grades.

After a little practice surprisingly quick and accurate work may be done with this simple device.—National Stockman and Farmer.

PRUNE FRUIT TREES AFTER LEAVES FALL

More Severely Work Is Done More Likelihood of Sprouts—Some Essentials.

By LEONARD G. HERRON, Department of Horticulture, Oklahoma A. and M. College, Stillwater.

When all the leaves have fallen from the trees and the wood has ripened up in the fall is the time for pruning. There is no way of absolutely controlling sprouting after pruning. The more severely you prune the more likely you will be to have sprouts, for the trees have stored up a quantity of food and are going to make use of it some place. If a large part of the old wood has been cut off, the part that remains will probably make a stronger growth than it would had all the old wood remained. Still there is always a tendency for a pruned tree to have sprouts. Some varieties are much worse than others in this respect. If very desirous of having the trunks of the trees smooth and without branches, the only thing to do is to rub the young sprouts off continually while they are young.

After an orchard is established, several things are necessary in order to keep it in good shape and to keep it bearing profitably. Thorough and persistent cultivation, regular pruning and spraying and thinning of the fruit in case of large crops are all essential. The cultivation should start just as early in the spring as possible and continue until the last of September. The disk harrow and the acme harrow are the two best orchard cultivators. If these are used carefully it will not be necessary to turn the ground with a plow very often.

WHY SWEET CLOVER IS VALUABLE PLANT

Makes Excellent Pasture for All Kinds of Live Stock—Rarely Causes Bloat.

Sweet clover, or white Bokhara clover, is a perennial leguminous plant of tall shrublike growth. Kansas Experimental Circular No. 44 says:

"Sweet clover makes excellent pasture for cattle, sheep, horses and hogs. It very rarely causes bloat, and for this reason is preferable to alfalfa for pasturing stock. Because of its vigorous growing habits sweet clover will pasture, especially on the poorer type of soil, more stock per acre than most other pasture grasses or legumes. Sweet clover is about equal to alfalfa and red clover in feeding value, and stock pastured on it make gains that compare favorably with those secured on the latter crops."

"Sweet clover can be used to a good advantage in supplementing other pasture. It produces early and late grazing, survives the midsummer droughts, often furnishing succulent pasture during the time regular pasture grasses are dormant, and will produce fairly well on soils that would otherwise be practically barren."

"You never can tell," the little man contended darkly; "I wouldn't bet thirty cents my next production would turn out a hit. I've had several close calls with Sara—she's threatened to chuck the stage often before this; but every time something happened to make her change her mind. I've got a hunch maybe something will happen this time, too. If it does, I won't want any partners."

"Nonsense," Whitaker contended warmly. "If I'm not mistaken, you were telling me this afternoon that you stand next to Belasco as a producing manager. The loss of one star isn't going to rob you of that prestige, is it?"

"You bet I am!" Whitaker asserted with conviction.

"Then come along," Max caught him by the arm and started for the door. "So long, Drummond."

I've had several close calls with Sara—she's threatened to chuck the stage often before this; but every time something happened to make her change her mind. I've got a hunch maybe something will happen this time, too. If it does, I won't want any partners."

"Nonsense," Whitaker contended warmly. "If I'm not mistaken, you were telling me this afternoon that you stand next to Belasco as a producing manager. The loss of one star isn't going to rob you of that prestige, is it?"

"You bet I am!" Whitaker asserted with conviction.

"Then come along," Max caught him by the arm and started for the door. "So long, Drummond."

DAIRY FACTS

BETTER QUALITY OF BUTTER

Article Sells on Its Merits as to Flavor, Taste and Color—Control Flavors and Odors.

Butter is used primarily to improve the palatability of foods for human consumption. It sells on its merits as to taste, flavor and color, though some are influenced by its texture. Color may be produced artificially in a way to please the most particular person and it therefore becomes of secondary importance to the producer; it does not imply quality, but oftentimes a rich color will compensate for a lack of other qualities.

Flavors and odors in butter may be controlled to a certain extent by care in feeding and handling cows. The volatile fats in milk are quick to absorb odors, either from feeds during the process of digestion and assimilation in the cow or from strong odors coming in contact with the milk after it has been drawn. The latter may be obviated by keeping the stable and utensils sweet and clean, free from dust and all objectionable odors. When disinfectants are used about the stables care must be exercised to air the stables thoroughly, for the milk will absorb the odor of disinfectants in a remarkably brief time. The most effective plan is to disinfect as soon as the cows are turned out, then air the stables well for at least three or four hours.

AGE OF USEFULNESS OF COWS

Twenty-Two-Year-Old Jersey in Wisconsin Produced Forty Pounds of Butterfat in Month.

Wisconsin has a twenty-two-year-old Jersey cow in one of her cow-testing associations that recently made 40 pounds of butterfat in one month. Sweet Briar, a Guernsey cow, did profitable work at the Minnesota experiment station up to her seventeenth year, and Cylene, a Holstein cow in the same institution and at the same age, will this year produce over 400 pounds of butterfat. The age of usefulness of the majority of dairy cows that meet with no accident, is probably between twelve and fourteen years, but frequently dairy cows give splendid profit beyond these years, as the above cases illustrate.

From the Mexican Border.

Last Friday night we came back to El Paso after making a 100 mile hike up the valley of the Rio Grande to Las Cruces, New Mexico. There were about 18,000 men in the division of all arms of the service—infantry, artillery, cavalry, engineers and signal corps and hospital corps. When on the march we occupied about 12 miles of road space. We average about 8 miles a day going up and about 12 miles per day coming back. This may not seem very far but when you consider that we marched on a single road and sometimes the head of the column would be going into camp before the rear was leaving the camp of the previous night. Each regiment was followed by the wagon train of 20, four-mile wagons. There were over 350 wagons in the entire division so it would take the wagon train about two hours to pass any given point. The larger the body of troops the slower they can move. The troops that lead the march one day would be in the river the next when our brigade was in the lead we would start out about 7:10 in the morning and when we were in the rear it would be 10 or 11 o'clock before we would get started. This was the largest body of troops that has been moved in this way since the days of the civil war. The different states who had troops represented were Massachusetts, Ohio, Kentucky, Tennessee, South Carolina and Michigan. We would camp nights among the mesquite bushes and sand beside the road. Sometimes the mesquite was so thick we could hardly get into it, as every shrub or plant of any kind has thorns on it without exceptions. Sometimes it would be very rough and I have seen dozens of men helping the mules with a wagon through a dry stream bed or up a steep bank. The men slept in little pup tents that could be carried upon their backs together with a blanket, extra clothing, poncho, besides carry a rifle and haversack, canteen and either a small shovel, pick axe, or wire cutters. I carried all my stuff in my saddle bags and in a roll on the back of my saddle. We had just a tent fly open at both ends of a shelter. All the water we used for cooking and drinking had to be hauled in large tank wagons sometimes quite a distance and sometimes it was pretty scarce. Except early in the morning about all you could say for it was that it was wet. It tasted quite a little like epsom salts. They had large galvanized iron horse tanks that they placed beside the road and these were filled from the water wagons of course. The dust, which was terrific at times, and dirt, blew into them, but we did not note that. It sounds queer to talk about soldiers getting on the water wagon and yet I have seen them almost fighting with their fists to get a little to go in their canteens.

The water wagons were drawn by four mules and they look like the large street sprinkling wagons in the cities. I took a picture of one of them with men all over it trying to get a little water. They were a little top heavy and I saw ten of them tipped over in the bad places. We rested one day, Sunday, at Las Cruces, held one big field maneuver, and then started back. On the way back it rained twice to three times a day and always in the morning when we were breaking camp and at evening or afternoon when we were pitching camp. As we were on the march things did not have much opportunity to dry out. Our bedding and blankets got pretty damp from laying on the wet ground. Our tent fly leaked like a sieve and lots of times I had to pull my raincoat over my head to keep the water from dripping in my face so I could sleep. Going up it was so dusty we looked like a gang of threshers all the time and coming back even after a good rain during the night with the sun and wind and so many men and vehicles passing over the road it would be dusty at noon. We had to water our animals in the Rio Grande or else on the irrigation ditches and sometimes we had to take them as far as three miles to water. The only opportunity we had to bathe was in the Rio Grande and that always looks a dirty yellow like a mud puddle after a rain, and with a bad odor so that when you went in bathing it was necessary to hold your nose the same as in eating limburger cheese.

After being out roughing it for 13 days El Paso and Camp Cotton looked mighty good to us. We were allowed only two days to clean our equipment when we were started at drilling again. Well I will have to come to an end as it is getting late and cold. I don't know whether you can read this or not as I don't have much time to spend on composition or the sequence of tenses. I will enclose a few snap shots that I have taken and also some Villa money worth about one-sixth of a cent.

Yours,
FAYE PALMER,

Do You Know

That by voting YES on "The Amendment Providing for Local Option by City, Township or Village"—otherwise spoken of as "Home Rule" bill—that it is possible for our Village to be wet while all the Country and Villages around us are dry?

Do you know what it did to Chelsea when Jackson County was dry and our town was wet?

If this "Home Rule" is voted "yes" any Township can be "wet" and you can easily see what this would do to a near-by Dry City or Village.

Regardless of how you vote on the State Wide Prohibition question YOU CANNOT AFFORD TO VOTE "YES" ON "THE AMENDMENT PROVIDING FOR LOCAL OPTION BY CITY, VILLAGE OR TOWNSHIP."

TWELFTH EPISODE

The Haunted Canvas.

The daughter of Dan O'Mara was a very happy girl. So happy, in fact, was the freckled-nosed Peggy that there were times when the sheer novelty of her good fortune somewhat frightened her. For the tide had turned. The O'Mara family, as Peggy put it, was at last in clover. That mysterious righter of wrongs known as the Laughing Mask had interested himself in getting honest work for Dan O'Mara. And that gracious-eyed lady known as Margery Golden, once she had realized the true position of the family, had become equally interested in doing what she could for the spindle-legged Peggy.

It is true, none the less, that this last-mentioned young lady's benefactress had been momentarily nonplused by Peggy's choice of a vocation, when this choice was placed before her.

"What would you like to do most?" Margery had asked at the end of her second trip to the O'Mara cottage with a bundle of clothes for the all but breathless Peggy.

"Be an artist's model!" promptly announced the rapt-eyed factory girl.

"But why a model?" asked the amazed Miss Golden.

"To doll up in glad rags and get myself painted!" explained the dreamer of the dye vats. And odd as that choice seemed to her, Margery Golden did not depart from her promise. She sought out her artist friend, Frank Almick, and inveigled him to experiment with a new and somewhat untried model.

Frank Almick, however, soon found the ardent-eyed young Peggy more of a help to him than he had anticipated. Some of her unctuous yet uncouth attitudinizing, in fact, brought a smile to the face of the busy artist.

But that smile was never broader than when he noticed her standing wide-eyed before the large canvas above the fireplace at the end of his studio. For this painting, which bore the title of "The Vigilante," was a remarkable piece of work, in more ways than one. It showed the life-size figure of a frontiersman staring out into the room, with a leveled carbine at his buckskinned shoulder. But the arresting feature of the painting lay in the fact that both the eyes of the figure and the barrel of the leveled rifle seemed always to be directed at the spectator, no matter what position the spectator might take.

"That guy gives me the willies!" Peggy protested as she made her way back to the model throne.

"Why?" asked the smiling man at the easel.

"He keeps such a bead on you, no matter where you get in this room!" was the girl's reply.

But destiny, in the form of one Jules Legar, had secretly ordained that Peggy's happiness should not be a lasting one. For Peggy O'Mara was no longer a trivial factor in the activities of the Iron Claw. This slip of a girl had brought defeat to his plans when success seemed well within his hand. And for these humiliations Legar decided that the girl should pay, and pay to the full.

The modest home of the O'Maras, however, had no inkling of this decision until Dan O'Mara himself, wandering about his combined kitchen and living room in search of his pipe, was somewhat startled to see a square of paper pinned to the faded door panel. Peggy herself, joining her father, was equally mystified by this slip of paper, for its surface showed nothing but a round blot or two of black ink on a square of white. Neither Dan O'Mara nor his daughter had any reason to know the meaning of the spotted warning, any more than they knew that one Mauki, the stealthy emissary of the Iron Claw, stood hidden behind the walls of one of the three cottages commanding a clear view of the O'Mara home.

There had no way of knowing that this same Mauki lurked there behind a shuttered window, patiently watching, hour after hour, the house across the way. Close beside him as he watched stood a magazine rifle to which a Maxim silencer had been adjusted. And on the floor beside the rifle lay yet another weapon. This, however, was a weapon of defense, for it consisted of a craftily constructed cape which, for purposes of disguise, could be promptly converted into a woman's skirt.

So sure was Mauki of his defensive arrangements that when he caught sight of Peggy O'Mara and her father at the window he promptly reached for his rifle, adjusted the barrel between the shutter slats, and took aim. Then he pulled the trigger.

The next moment a bullet went crashing through the window of the O'Mara home.

Instinctively the two startled figures leaped away from the window. As they did so they realized that a third person had entered the room. And a second glance showed them that it was the Laughing Mask himself.

He stood for a moment or two, staring down at the spotted warning that lay face upward on the floor. Then he stared at the shattered window.

The next moment he was pushing Peggy and Dan O'Mara bodily back from that square of light.

"But what's the meanin' of all this, anyway?" demanded the astonished householder.

"It means that a bullet came through that window," the Laughing Mask explained. "And I know that bullet was intended for your daughter here."

The next moment the Laughing Mask had caught a broom from the corner and about it was draping one of Peggy O'Mara's well-worn waists. Above this he placed the girl's hat, tying it in place with a scarf. Then dropping to his knees well out of sight on one side of the window, he slowly advanced his improvised dummy into the square of light.

That rough outline of a human figure was scarcely in position at the window before a second pane crashed in and the broom was knocked from the hand of the masked man holding it.

"That shot could have come only from one of those three houses across the way. And it's ten to one it's from that empty house on the right!"

He drew away from the window and stood for a moment deep in thought. "O'Mara, I want you to slip out by your back door and get help. Call on any neighbors you can trust in a case like this. Then hurry back here, for I don't want that scoundrel to suspect his plans haven't worked out exactly as he imagines!"

"We'll get the devil!" announced O'Mara as he slipped away. And while waiting for his return the Laughing Mask sent Peggy for a cupful of flour. With this he powdered her hands and blanched her thin young face. Dan O'Mara had stepped back into the house before the masked visitor had completed his task.

"Now, I want that sniper to think he's done his work. I don't want him to break from cover until your friends have surrounded that house. So take your daughter and carry her out, just as though she were a dead girl!"

Dan O'Mara, doing as he was directed, stepped from the doorway with his own white-faced daughter hanging limp in his arms. He acted his part with a sincerity that was not without conviction. For, two minutes after he had staggered into the open with that apparently sad burden, the sniper from the shuttered house was detected slipping out of a cellar window and scurrying along a broken fence.

That escape, however, came before Dan O'Mara's friends could completely take up their position about the suspected house. But one of those friends caught sight of the fugitive in the strange-looking cape, the alarm was given, and the pursuit began.

It was not a long chase, but it was a stern one. Determined as those indignant factory-tollers were to run down the mysterious gunman so wantonly threatening their homes, the feeble Mauki proved himself startlingly fleet of foot. He gained sufficiently on his pursuers to round a corner, dodge into an empty coalshed, and emerge a moment later as a stooped old woman in amber-colored spectacles and a rusty gray wig. Being obviously hard of hearing, this same old woman could not give much information to the group of excited men suddenly accosting her as she hobbled across the street.

Five minutes later a swarthy-skinned man with wiry black hair was hurrying across country to one of the well-concealed dens of Jules Legar, where he duly reported to the Iron Claw the news of his enemy's ruse and his own narrow escape.

Before the second day had passed Legar had evolved yet another plan for the subjugation of his enemies. This took the form of a decoy message delivered to the unsuspecting Peggy O'Mara, purporting to be a hasty request from Frank Almick to come to his studio at nine o'clock that night, to the end that he might hurry her to completion one of his unfinished canvases for which the girl was acting as a costume model. Legar and two of his followers, in the meantime, entered Almick's studio on the pretense of being a fire marshall's inspectors, caught the artist off his guard, and carried him bound and gagged and helpless, to one of the small back rooms of the studio building.

Peggy herself, before starting out in answer to that summons, was still somewhat uneasy in mind over recent events. So she left word with her father to call for her not later than eleven o'clock.

But more than Dan O'Mara called for his daughter that night, for ten minutes after her departure from the cottage Margery Golden's limousine drew up at the door. Margery's eyes widened when O'Mara explained the reason of his daughter's absence from home.

"But an artist like Frank Almick would never be able to work at night," she argued, with growing alarm. "He must have daylight for working in color."

Dan O'Mara turned to the table at his side.

"Here's his message, plain as day, written in his own handwriting," was the puzzled workman's only explanation.

Margery took the message in her hand and studied it. Then her color faded a little.

"That is not Frank Almick's writing!" she suddenly announced.

"We must get to that studio as fast as my car can carry us."

Peggy O'Mara, in the meantime, was being confronted by more than one surprise. The first came with her arrival at the Almick studio, when the stranger who opened the door in response to her knock informed her that the artist was out, but would return in a minute or two. The second came with the quiet movement of yet another man who sidled up to the studio door and promptly locked and barred it. But the greatest surprise of all awaited her as she turned from the door, and saw Legar himself standing before her.

"It Means That a Bullet Came Through That Window!"

She stood there, white lipped, staring from one evil face to the other as Legar's companions closed in about her.

"You're a fine bunch o' cradle-snatchers!" she finally and wrathfully burst out at them, with the ultimate and reckless anger of desperation in her eyes. "You're a grand army o' heroes, you are, to come five strong agin' a girl like me!"

"Stop that brag!" commanded the irate Legar. And there was a general movement in the direction of the blazing-eyed girl.

There was one man in that group, however, who did not join in that movement. The reason for this lay in the fact that at that moment he happened to be looking up at the painting of "The Vigilante."

He was about to reach for a heavy easel-peg, to fling at the canvas, when he suddenly straightened up, clapped a hand to his shoulder, and turned about. There was a look of mingled wonder and incredulity on his face. Then he slowly drew from the fleshy part of his upper arm a small steel dart, little bigger than a knitting needle.

The next moment a second man, moving across the room to catch up a curtain cord with which to tie the captured girl, felt a sudden sting in his hip, stopped abruptly and pointed with a shout of anger toward the canvas above the mantel.

Still another of Legar's followers, not realizing the meaning of that cry, stepped forward and stared at the painting. Out of the barrel-end of the painted rifle, as he did so, shot still another dart which buried itself in his neck.

"Th' darts!" he mumbled, as thickly as a drunken man might. "Th' darts re drugged!"

But even before those mumbled words were spoken the swarthy-skinned Mauki, trying to hold the still struggling Peggy O'Mara down on a divan, felt a sharp pain above his shoulderblade, turned about, and saw Legar run across the room and catch up the heavy brass fire tongs from beside the mantel end.

"The painting!" squeaked Mauki, staggering out against the model.

Legar, however, was no longer in need of that warning. Standing to one side of the mantel, close beside the wall, he attacked the huge canvas with his fire-tongs, beating in the center of the picture at the same time that Peggy O'Mara, realizing that she was no longer being held a prisoner, caught up a teakwood tabouret and with it precipitated herself on the preoccupied Legar.

He ignored that flank attack, however, for the Iron Claw suddenly found himself confronted by a figure of more importance than either the spindle-legged girl or a painted gunman.

Out from behind that tattered canvas had emerged a man wearing a yellow mask, tossing to one side a slender blowpipe as he came. Before he could regain his feet after that hurried leap from the mantel shelf, Legar himself had dropped the fire-tongs and whipped a revolver from his pocket. This he leveled directly at the body of the Laughing Mask. But before he could pull the trigger, Peggy's tabouret struck against his outstretched arm, knocking the weapon up in the air.

By this time the Laughing Mask was up on his feet, and face to face with his enemy. Before the revolver could again be brought into play the two had clenched. Then the Iron Claw went down before a clean-cut blow from his opponent. He recovered himself sufficiently, however, to roll to where his fallen revolver lay. But before he could level that firearm at his adversary the Laughing Mask, remembering that even the officers of the law were no longer his friends, dived out through the small door at the rear of the studio and disappeared from sight, for already the sound of O'Mara and his rescuing party could be heard as they swarmed up the stairs.

The Iron Claw himself heard those sounds, drew himself together, and stared helplessly about the dismantled studio. Then the instinct of self-preservation reassured itself. He ran to the back of the room, dived into a kitchenette, found a small door in its wall, swung it open, discovered a dumb-water shaft in front of him, and escaped to the street.

The Corridors of Dread.

Margery Golden, as she sat in the taxicab which carried her homeward, was comforted by the thought that she had at least saved the life of a factory girl to whom she stood indebted for her own escape from death. The further thought that she had sent Dan O'Mara and his exhausted daughter safely home in her own luxurious limousine even reconciled her to the somewhat stuffy public conveyance in which she found herself. She blinked meditatively out at the back of the heavy faced driver so sullenly and yet so adroitly piloting her through the tangle of traffic. Then the abstraction suddenly went from her eyes and the listlessness from her pose. For, from the back window of the red-wheeled taxicab immediately in front of her she caught sight of a peering face. And it took no second glance to tell her that it was the deep-seated face of the Iron Claw himself.

The next moment Margery was shouting to her sullen-faced driver.

"Follow that red-wheeled taxi," she told him, pointing down the side street. "Keep within sight of it, whatever happens!"

Soon they had left the city well behind them and were in that twilight zone which is neither quite rural nor quite urban. But Margery, the moment she saw the red-wheeled taxicab come to a stop, commanded her driver to draw in under the shadow of a dense row of catalpa trees. There, from the running board of her car, she beheld Legar step out on the road, pay his chauffeur, and stand looking after the departing taxicab until it disappeared from sight. Then he turned about, pushed his way in through a tangle of shrubbery, and left the lonely roadside as empty as a desert trail.

Then the resolute browed young woman turned to her chauffeur.

"I'm going to follow that man. If I fail to return here inside of ten minutes, I want you to get any help you can, and come after me."

Margery stole along the shadowy roadside to the spot where she had seen Legar creep in through the bushes. She followed as best she could, found herself face to face with a tunnel-opening that showed itself dimly in the moonlight, and after a moment's hesitation stooped low and crept into this tunnel, feeling her way cautiously along the smooth brickwork of its walls. She came to a turn, but dressed with heavier masonry, and padded along this wall until her groping fingers came in contact with a light switch. This, after a moment's thought, she turned on. The next moment a number of bulbs along the corridor roof above her flowered into light.

Staring ahead of her, she saw that the corridor ended in nothing but a blank wall. But as she stared intently at the wall she detected in one side of it a partially concealed electric button. She moved toward this cautiously, for she had learned of old to be wary of approach to any of Legar's fastenings. Then, as she advanced, she came to a sudden stop. For she saw on the flagstone upon which she was about to step a small cross. There was also a minute crevice, unnoticeable in its companions, about this quadrangle so suspiciously marked by its cross. So she stepped carefully over the suspected area, crept forward to the button, and touched it with a tentative fingertip.

The next moment a remarkable thing happened. A section of the heavy masonry shutting off the end of the corridor, at that touch, swung silently about on its axis, leaving an aperture wide enough for a human body to pass through. The girl, holding her breath, stepped through the ponderous masonry.

This chamber, she saw, was empty, except for two mysterious strands of iron chain that ran from ceiling to floor, close against the wall, while against the other stood a deal table and a camp couch across which lay a couple of very dirty blankets. But along the floor at the far end of the room her quick eye detected a thin pencil of light. So she tiptoed quietly forward until she stood close to the door above this illuminated crevice. Then she stooped lower, listening intently, for the sound of muffled voices came to her from the room within.

"I tell you we can't afford to fall in this move," she heard the voice of Legar himself announce. "The thing's got to be settled, and settled before morning!"

"But how?" asked one of his followers.

"With two pounds of gun-cotton and a time fuse," was Legar's reply.

"In the O'Mara cottage?" asked another voice.

"Yes; I want that cottage wiped off the face of the earth, and the family with it! And I want it done before morning!"

Margery listened, oblivious of the passing of time, as the conspirators behind the closed door continued to debate on their plan of action. Then she started, even as much as they did, when the sudden buzzing of an electric annunciator warned that intent group of an intruder's approach.

It was then and only then that the girl remembered her parting message to the taxicab driver. All that was left her to do was to dart over to the camp cot, and drop down on the stone floor beside it.

The next moment Legar and his men were in the outer chamber. While one of the men crept to a secret outlook crevice in the farther wall Legar himself stepped to one of the control chains which ran from floor to ceiling on the other side of the room, and by pulling one of these started into action some mysterious mechanism which the watching girl could not quite comprehend. She saw them run back to the inner room and stand waiting while Legar manipulated still another secret spring which threw open a hidden door in the back wall of that room. And that door, she surmised, led by some unknown passage to the outer world.

But Margery did not give much thought to this, for there came to her as she regained her feet the repeated cry of a human being, a cry husky with terror. She ran to the pivot door in the masonry, swung it back, and there beheld a sight which made her blood run cold. It took her, in fact, a ponderable space of time to understand the scene confronting her. But as she stared out she saw where her unsuspecting chauffeur had stepped on the cross-marked flagstone, for it was now several inches lower than the rest of the floor. And this, obviously, had released a steel arm which had swung suddenly forward and swept the startled intruder flat against the stone wall, holding him there as in a vise. And as he stood pinioned there a great block of machinery, released by some hidden mechanism, was slowly descending from the roof of the corridor. Margery quickly manipulated the chains and released the chauffeur.

"Let me at 'em!" he shouted, brandishing the automobile wrench which he still carried in his hand. "Just let me at 'em!"

"It's no use," cried Margery, holding him back. "They have gone, the lot of them. And we've got to follow quickly, or there'll be a whole family meet a worse fate than yours might have been tonight!"

She had taken the wrench from his hand and was leading him out of the tunnel mouth by this time, explaining that he would have to bring his taxicab from its hiding place and at once start in pursuit of the Iron Claw.

But these explanations came to a sudden and an unexpected ending, for Legar and his followers, skulking in the bushes, caught that betraying sound of voices and saw a chance that was too good to be missed. They closed in on the girl and the taxi-driver. Yet that sullen-spirited driver, when cornered, fought with an energy so explosive that the entire circle became involved in the struggle. It was Legar himself, and only Legar, who had the presence of mind to direct the attention towards the girl. He swung suddenly about and started for her. She saw him coming, raised the heavy wrench she still carried and sent it flat against his bony temple and took to her heels. She jumped into the empty taxicab and headed for the O'Mara cottage.

No colorless was her face as the bewildered Dan O'Mara opened the door that he started back in alarm. And her words were even more disturbing.

"Come away!" she called out. "Come quick, or it will be too late!"

"And what's wrong now?" asked the astounded householder.

"Get Peggy!" gasped the girl as she stared frantically about the little room. "Get her away from here, quick! The house has been mined! There's been a bomb left here, and any moment—"

She stopped speaking, for the pungent smell of powder smoke had assailed her nostrils. Then from the open window, in which a somewhat neglected flower-box stood, came a faint sputter of sound.

She ran to the window. Lying in the flower-box she saw a heavy cylinder of metal. Even before she caught sight of the time-fuse which quietly hissed and burned at one end of the cylinder, she knew what it was. It was the infernal machine which Legar's agent had placed there to destroy the house. And at any moment the explosion might take place.

Margery caught the heavy cylinder up in her hands. She even tried to blow out the fuse. But this was useless. Then she tried to tear it away. But this second effort was equally fruitless. And sheer panic took possession of her at the thought of her helplessness. The bomb dropped from her fingers to the floor. She made one instinctive effort to warn poor young Peggy O'Mara away, as the girl ran to her side. But instead of repeating that warning she let her arms close about the slender body as though in mute acknowledgment that she knew it was already too late. For the fuse, she could see, was burning down into the end of the cylinder itself. She even closed her eyes, awaiting the inevitable.

She opened them again, at the sound of a sudden step. She opened them to see a masked figure dart into the room, catch up the smoking metal cylinder, and with one and the same movement hurl it out through the open window.

The next moment a great detonation shook the walls of that house. The bomb had exploded. But the house of O'Mara still stood. And Peggy and her father stared open-mouthed at the newcomer, who, instead of staring back at them, stood intently regarding Margery Golden.

"The Laughing Mask!" said that somewhat shaken young lady, in little more than a whisper.

"At your service!" replied the man in the yellow mask, with a half-bow and half-mocking bow as he stood for one fleeting moment, in the narrow doorway.

He turned to follow that man. If I fail to return here inside of ten minutes, I want you to get any help you can, and come after me."

Margery stole along the shadowy roadside to the spot where she had seen Legar creep in through the bushes. SPORTING MAN'S REMARK SOMETHING OF A REFLECTION ON HIGH PRICES OF CANNFIELD'S RESTAURANT.

Cannfield's restaurant adjoining the famous gambling house in Saratoga, and in its prime the reputation of being the highest-priced restaurant in the world. Its patrons included sporting men and gamblers. If they won they could afford to pay the prices; if they lost, there were other eatinghouses.

Cannfield was parading the veranda one Sunday morning after his gambling house had suffered one of the biggest losses of its history.

While he was parading, Tex Grenet, a San Antonio sporting man, came up the walk.

"Well, boss," he said with mock solicitude, "they tell me the boys trimmed the faro bank last night."

"They did," answered Cannfield. "The house closed forty-three thousand dollars loser."

"Oh, that'll be all right," Grenet flashed. "I'm going in now to buy half a cantaloupe!"—New York World.

POPULAR GAME BIRDS.

Game is too choice and too expensive for experiments so when one is fortunate enough to have a brace of birds to serve to one's friends it is wise to be sure that they are properly cooked and served.

Broiled Squab.—Split the birds down the back and wipe them with a damp cloth, no birds should be washed unless the wild fishy taste is too strong, then they may be parboiled with a little onion in the water. This applies to wild birds like ducks, not to squabs. Soda and charcoal are sometimes used in the parboiling water to remove objectionable flavors. Broil twelve minutes, having the breast side toward the fire in the first ten minutes. Spread with butter, dust with salt and pepper and serve each on a triangle of fried hominy.

For roast squab lay lardoons of salt pork upon the breasts of the birds, dust with pepper and salt and put them in a hot oven. If there are but few birds a little water will be needed, but if a dozen or so, the birds will supply their own juice. After 30 minutes pour a tablespoonful of fruit juice over each bird, basting often with the liquor in the pan. Serve with bread sauce.

Quail Stuffed With Pate de Foie Gras.—Prepare the birds as for roasting. Mince a little cold veal, season with minced celery, parsley and chives; add a little pate de foie gras and a few slices of truffle, season with salt and pepper. Stuff the birds and put them in a baking pan, cover with thin slices of salt pork, add stock or water, cover the pan and steam the birds for an hour and three-quarters. When the birds are about half done sprinkle them with fine bread crumbs and dust with pepper and salt. Baste them often after they are taken from the oven until they are cold. Split them at the breastbone and serve surrounded with cubes of aspic jelly. A green salad with French dressing is best served with this dish.

Bread Sauce.—Simmer an onion in one and one-half cups of milk, strain and add a half a cupful of soft bread crumbs; season with salt and pepper; add a little celery salt and a few drops of Worcestershire sauce. Put a spoonful of this at the side of each spoonful of the bird. In serving a squab for an invalid cover the breast with butter, season and serve on toast.

Though we eat little flesh and drink no wine, Yet let's be merry; we'll have tea and toast, Custards for supper, and an endless host Of syllabubs and jellies and mince pies, And other such ladylike luxuries.

—Shelley.

TASTY DISHES OF CALF'S LIVER.

As the liver of calves is deficient in fat, it is wise when serving it to have it accompanied with bacon or suet pork.

Broiled Liver.—Cut the liver into half-inch slices, cover with boiling water, let stand five minutes, then drain and wipe. Sprinkle with seasoning and broil on a well-greased broiler for five minutes. Serve with dots of butter on hot platter.

Liver Hot Pot.—Cut the liver into slices a half-inch thick, soak in cold water a few moments, then dry them thoroughly; lay them in a saucepan and dredge with seasoned flour. Cover with thin slices of bacon and sprinkle with chopped onion or shallot and a tablespoonful of chopped parsley. Cook below the simmering point, well-covered for an hour and a half. Serve with rolls of fried bacon.

Liver Rolls.—Cut half-pound of liver in slices and parboil five minutes, wipe each piece dry, lay a thin slice of bacon on each slice of liver; season with salt, pepper and nutmeg, roll up and fasten with a toothpick; dredge flour and fry until tender in hot bacon fat. When done thicken the gravy, add a teaspoonful of mushroom catchup or a little lemon juice.

Liver Dumplings.—Chop half a pound of calf's liver, add a chopped onion, one tablespoonful of chopped parsley, salt, pepper and a dash of nutmeg. Mix with two well-beaten eggs and one tablespoonful of melted butter. Add enough fine bread crumbs to form into balls and boil in soup stock. Serve with soup.

Liver Force-meat.—Take half a pound of calf's liver, a quarter of a pound of bacon, one carrot, one turnip, one stalk of celery, a bunch of herbs and a dust of red pepper. Cut the bacon and fry until brown; slice and fry the liver after parboiling it five minutes in water, chop the vegetables, add the herbs and seasoning and stir all together until cooked. Remove the herbs and pound the rest in a mortar, when it is ready for stuffing fowl.

VOGUES AND VANITIES

By JULIA BOTTOMLEY

Visiting Toilette in Silk Velours.

Before the opening of the present season, when styles for it were in preparation, some of the famous authorities in Paris promised that the slim silhouette would become the fashion. Whereupon the slender woman congratulated herself because draperies were to return to graceful lines and her slenderness was to be emphasized instead of being concealed. The plump woman approved also because she might hope to convey an appearance of slenderness in draperies less ample and outstanding than those of the summer season.

The transition from bouffant to straight lines has been rather gradual and much more apparent in street suits and afternoon gowns than in evening clothes. But the slim silhouette is gaining ground. Skirts are full but straight hanging, and they are somewhat longer, which adds to the appearance of height. But women did not take kindly to much added length in suits, and skirts now are not much below the shoe-tops.

The handsome suit shown in the picture is a fine exponent of good style in the richest of materials. It is plain silk velours, or it might be made in Japanese velvet. The skirt hangs straight, but is full and is laid in plaits about the waist. It is finished with a three-inch hem and the weight and suppleness of the material make it cling to the figure.

The coat is an unusual and original design and is trimmed with plain velvet in a dark color. The back is long and shaped into the figure at the waistline with small plaits. There is a plaited fan of velvet set over the long panel. There is a full double ripple over the hips and a plain front. A belt extends from the side seams at the back and fastens in front. The cuffs are faced with velvet, and round buttons that finish them are covered with velvet.

A scarf of the same material made to wear with this suit adds a wonderfully chic finish to it. It is wound about the throat and knotted at the left side, where a long pointed end hangs to the bottom of the coat.

In Millinery's Passing Show.

At the cafe dinner the loveliest millinery is to be seen to the best advantage. Every woman realizes that her hat and her blouse are sure to come in for close and deliberate inspection (if they are at all worth looking at) when she dines in a smart hotel or restaurant. And the passing show is worth going out of one's way to see.

There are hats of all sizes and of all sorts of rich materials and intricate workmanship. There are shapes inspired by headwear in all the four corners, and more, of the world. They bring to mind far countries and remote periods of history. The imagination is kept busy, for the student of costume, by all that is suggested in this endless procession of really wonderful hats.

Three brilliant examples of millinery are pictured here. They include a big picture hat of gray velvet with a shirred band of velvet about the side crown and a collar of skunk fur.

His Grief Not Deep.
With a face that vainly endeavored to appear mournful, and eyes that strove to produce a respectable flow of tears, Patrick Murphy O'Dolan entered a drapers' shop.

"I want ye to tell me," he began "phwat the custom is for th' wearin' iv mounrin'—the depth of it, I mane?"

"Well," replied the assistant, "of course it varies. If it's a near relative a band of black on the sleeve or hat, and for a more distant friend a black tie is enough."

For some moments Patrick Murphy O'Dolan considered.

"Give me a shoe lace," he said, at last. "It's me wife's mother."—London Tit-Bits.

SUBMARINE ATTACK ON BOOZE

For the married man who cannot get along without drinks, the following is suggested as a means of freedom from bondage to saloons:

Start a saloon in your own home. Be the only customer (you'll have no license to pay.) Go to your wife and give her two dollars to buy a gallon of whiskey, and remember there are sixty-nine drinks in a gallon. Buy your drinks from no one but your wife, and by the time that the first gallon is gone she will have eight dollars to put into the bank and two dollars to start business again.

Should you live ten years and continue to buy booze from her, and then die with snakes in your boots, she will have enough money to bury you decently, educate your children, buy a house and lot, and marry a decent man, and quit thinking about you entirely.

Fritz Kreisler, November 8.

Fritz Kreisler, the great Austrian violinist, who will appear in the Choral Union concert series in Hill Auditorium, Ann Arbor, on the evening of November 8, is one of those rarely gifted men for whom success was certain whatever line of work he might have followed. His position among violinists of our time is, to say the least, second to none. In deciding to devote himself to the violin, if the testimony of such a man as Harold Bauer is to be believed, there was lost to the world in Kreisler an equally great pianist. In fact, he is still an admirable pianist and only a few years ago he appeared in London in such a capacity in a concert of chamber music. He had a brilliant career in Vienna when a youth, as a student of medicine. His father is a famous physician and Fritz had he continued his work in medicine, undoubtedly would have become one of the great men of the world in that profession.

A graduate of a school of officers, he has already shown himself, to have the qualities necessary to make a distinguished soldier. He stood at the head of his class of cadets and when the great European war began in August, 1914, he, then a reserve officer, was recalled to his regiment and served with distinction and honor in the summer campaign about Lemberg until he was severely wounded.

Finally, to round out his versatility, he has shown extraordinary talent as a writer. It has been well known that he wrote with fluent grace and style in German and French but it was not until his little book "Four Weeks in the Trenches" was published in the spring of 1915 that it was realized that he could write with equal skill and ease in English, a language which he mastered after he was twenty years old.

Tickets for the course or for single concerts may still be secured from Charles A. Sink, secretary, the University School of Music.

Special interurban cars will leave from in front of Hill Auditorium, east and west, after the concert.

BEAKES

Our Congressman

Never was there a time when a man of character, a man of convictions, a man mentally equipped and a man of experience was more necessary in Congress than now.

In these times it is poor policy to swap horses. Mr. Beakes is known as one of the hardest working men in Congress. He has learned how. A new man would have to devote the next two years to learning how. He would be merely an apprentice.

A Plain Statement of Facts is here made by E. J. Helber, Editor and Publisher of the WASHTENAW POST, of Ann Arbor, in regard to the "Bacon Ad" that appeared in the Thursday's issue (Oct. 26th)

"Neither Mr. Bacon nor his managers are responsible for the wording of Mr. Bacon's ad. in last week's WASHTENAW POST, (the German paper).

"The ad. was ordered by one of Mr. Bacon's managers as we were about to go to press, and as it was late it was left for the foreman to write and set up. He alone is responsible for the wording. MR. BACON DID NOT EVEN KNOW THAT AN AD. WAS TO BE RUN IN OUR PAPER."

WITH MCGRAW'S AID MERKLE LIVED DOWN FAMOUS MISJURY

Giants' Former First Baseman Became Great Player In Spite of the Jeers of the Fans.

In the recent trade which sent Fred Merkle, veteran first baseman of the Giants, to the Brooklyn club in exchange for Catcher Lew McCarthy, nothing stands out more prominently than the perseverance of John McGraw, manager of the Giants, in making a ball player of Merkle after the latter had made his famous bonehead play of September 23, 1908. It was on that fatal day that Merkle failed to "touch second."

Merkle, hooted and hissed by the fans, derided by sport writers and twitted by rival players, but all the time patted on the back by John McGraw, has held his head up all these eight years and has proved to the world that he is a real ball player in spite of his lapse of memory which gave Chicago the National league championship. McGraw's faith in his young first baseman is entirely responsible for the fact that Merkle still is a big league ball player.

Not only has McGraw stuck to Merkle in spite of his failure to touch second, but after the 1912 world's series, when Boston won from the Giants through Merkle's failure to catch an easy foul fly, McGraw again stood by and insisted Merkle was good enough for him. Fans have howled and laughed at Merkle for those two plays, but always McGraw has stood pat.

Merkle has vindicated the judgment of his former chief. When he perpetrated the first of his famous bad plays he was only a youngster and McGraw knew that censure probably would wreck whatever chance there was for Merkle to show any class as a first baseman.

So, instead of harsh words, Merkle was given encouragement. At every slip McGraw was ready to pat the youngster on the back and urge him on in his effort to live down the misdeed. And Merkle did it.

The work of this first sacker has been a prominent feature of every one of McGraw's drives pennantward. Merkle has been a heavy, consistent batter and a heady, dependable fielder in nearly every emergency. His slips have been no more than players considered wonderful have made, but they have come at a time when they stood out. No one ever has taken the trouble to proclaim his brilliant feats under the same pressure, so he has been called a "bonehead."

Merkle has slipped in his hitting this year, but the averages, for the long number of years he has been a major leaguer, show he has batted consistently around the .300 mark. Last year he hit just one point below that mark, and his fielding average was .989.

Pretty fair for a man called a bonehead by the critical public.

Some Things That Are New.

A novel fan that resembles the familiar electric fan is driven by a hot-air engine in its base, gas or denatured alcohol being the fuel used.

A centrifugal pump directly connected with an electric motor that runs equally well either in or out of water has been invented by an Englishman. The capacity of a clothesline is doubled by a new device that straddles the line and provides two pieces of wire to which clothes can be fastened.

A cheap imitation of tinfoil is made in Germany by coating paper with a mixture of finely-powdered metal and resin and subjecting it to friction.

A noiseless bowling alley is the invention of a Parisian, the clash of falling pins being silenced.

Waterproof electric flashlights to be attached to life preservers for night use are a recent invention.

Harness to suspend a basket from a fruit picker's shoulders and leave both hands free has been invented.

A Frenchman has mounted a bicycle frame on a sled to drive it over ice or snow with an aerial propeller.

Transoms can be raised and lowered like a window shade with a device an Oregon inventor has patented.

To Whom it May Concern.

We, the undersigned citizens of Ann Arbor, hereby certify that Alfred J. Paul is an honest, faithful and efficient employee of the city of Ann Arbor.

In the past two years Mr. Paul has held the position of Street Commissioner in this city, and as such has shown exceptional ability in handling the many important details of that office. Not only has he shown the greatest consideration to our citizens in all matters where his department was concerned, but he has, also, managed the department in a most efficient manner, and through his ability, good judgment and economy has saved our city much unnecessary expense.

Truth Better Than Flattery.

"I WEIGH SIX POUNDS MORE THAN I EVER DID BEFORE, SINCE I STARTED TANLAC."

Mrs. Elizabeth Mahone a widow, living with her three small children at Jackson, just outside the city limits, told the Tanlac demonstrator "I have to work and make a living for my three little children and pay rent, and rent day seems to come around pretty often."

"I was feeling miserable with a pain in my back that seemed to reach up into the back of my neck. As I am clerking and have to be on my feet continually, you may imagine what torture I suffered. I began to grow very weak and thin, could not sleep, and only dragged myself along all day."

"I read of a friend of mine recommending Tanlac so I went to the demonstrator at Week's drug store and inquired into it more fully. I was advised to try Tanlac, which I did, and now I am glad I was told of this wonderful remedy."

"I feel much better in every respect. I sleep well and do my own work for myself and children besides my duties in the store."

"I weigh six pounds more than I ever did in my whole life. The pain in my back and neck has gone and I feel an interest in my work and life once more."

"I recommend Tanlac because I know it is all right and will do just the same for others it did for me."

USED BY ORIENTAL PRINTER

Type-Setting Device That Would Seem to Be a Fearful and a Wonderful Thing.

According to reliable reports from Hawaii, an apparently successful machine for setting Japanese and Chinese type has been developed and is in use at a Honolulu newspaper plant. Its size seemingly gives it a ludicrous appearance, for it is described as looking like a model of the Brooklyn bridge. The keyboard extends along the center beneath the "bridge" for its full length, while the operator is provided with a sliding seat on which he can move from one end to the other when working. Rectangular brass tubes are used as cases for the type, and when the latter are released, by pressure upon the keys, they are caught by a belt carrier and conveyed to one end where they are deposited in a holder. The 5,000 or more characters used by oriental printers have been classified into approximately 100 units. These are collected in the brass tubes, which are likewise classified by means of notches on their sides. While it is intended to market the machine in China and Japan, the opinion has been expressed here that its sale will probably be very limited, owing to its cost and the fact that it will have to compete with the cheapest kind of labor in the cities of both those countries.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

In Case of Burns.

The best immediate application for a burn or scald is carron oil. This preparation of equal parts of linseed oil and lime water should be kept always at hand when there are young children about. When a child receives a burn or scald, shake the bottle of carron oil thoroughly, then saturate some lint, gauze or muslin with it and put on the burned surface. Clean olive oil or vaseline are good substitutes for the carron oil.—Do-It-Yourself.

Home Rule Saloons

Saloons in "Home Rule" territory are bold and defiant, producing every kind of crime. The following are "Home Rule" produced crimes:

- Home Rule drunkard insults woman and is shot.
- Home Rule boy, while drunk, kicks his mother to death.
- Home Rule man of wealth, being drunk, shoots head waiter.
- Home Rule cafe gave nation notorious murder trial.
- Home Rule saloons produce and shelter immorality.
- Home Rule saloons foster gambling and obscene pictures.

The following data was furnished by a man who until recently was a "wet." His business partner, who was a splendid artist, became more and more a slave to drink until in a drunken row in a saloon he committed suicide. This so affected Mr. Rice that he became a temperance man and he is now giving his time and ability, with no compensation, for the cause of prohibition. The following are from his personal observation and personal knowledge:

"In Dennison, Ohio, under Home Rule, a drunken white man, coming from a saloon insulted a colored woman and was shot."

"In Princetown, Indiana, under Home Rule, the County option law having been repealed, a boy spent all of his money in a saloon and was refused more liquor. He went home and beat his aged mother until she gave him money. He returned to the saloon and spent what she had given him. He went home again and asked for more money. His mother pleaded with him on her knees. He beat and kicked her so that she died within an hour."

"In Fort Wayne, Indiana, under Home Rule, a man of wealth got drunk in one of the so-called model bar rooms. He went to the Anthony Hotel and in his drunken condition he shot and killed the head waiter."

"In this same city, under Home Rule, some of the saloons have wine rooms for women which are in reality loafing rooms and headquarters for common prostitutes."

"In Indiana, under Home Rule, gambling goes on in nearly every saloon. This is especially true of many of the Fort Wayne saloons where there are also pictures in the penny slot machines too vulgar and obscene to be described."

"Do not forget Harry Thaw, who in New York City, under Home Rule, killed Stanford White in a high toned cafe. This deed has cost millions of dollars."

"In a saloon in Massillon, Ohio, under Home Rule, girls were kept for immoral purposes and rooms were rented upstairs. The proprietor was arrested but continued to run his saloon. This was by no means the only saloon in Massillon of this character."

"In Cincinnati, Ohio, under Home Rule, one saloon on Vine street kept women for immoral purposes and rooms were rented upstairs. There were many such saloons in this city."

(Signed) CHARLES RICE.

What Mr. Rice stands ready to prove regarding Cincinnati saloons and the other Home Rule saloons mentioned, he also said regarding some of the saloons of Youngstown, Ohio; Parkersburg, West Virginia, when it was under Home Rule; Akron, Canton, Cleveland, Columbus and other Ohio cities. What the Home Rule saloons do with all boldness seem to me too base to be described in further detail and I am therefore omitting much of the data which has been given me by Mr. Rice, over his signature.

Home Rule saloons are cesspools of iniquity, breeding the same kind of vice, poverty and crime that come from other kinds of saloons. We, the citizens of Michigan, have taken a vow to do all in our power to banish forever this social cancer, this economic parasite and this moral vulture.

STOCKBRIDGE—Infantile paralysis has made its appearance in this locality at last. The child of Ferd Bowdish, living four miles southeast of this place has a slight attack, but as yet is not thought to be in a serious condition.

ANN ARBOR—The Come-pact Furniture Company's plant of this city, which was involved in financial difficulties, has been bid in by L. J. Hoover of this city for $18,450. Final action to determine whether the Hoover bid will be accepted will be taken today.

YPSILANTI—A charged electric light pole in the rear of the Occidental block gave trouble to the Edison Company on Wednesday of last week. It was necessary to rearrange the entire system of electric wiring in that vicinity.—Record.

GRASS LAKE—Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Croman have returned from a visit to New Haven, Conn., New York City and Albany. New Haven is Mr. Croman's ancestral home. He visited the home farm and while there took a picture of the well with its old oaken bucket now over 200 years old.—News.

CLINTON—Monday afternoon about 3 o'clock the large feed grinder at the Atlas Milling Company's plant flew to pieces and scattered in all directions. The machine had just been thrown out of gear when the grinding cylinder burst, a large section tearing through the floor into the basement and making a bad wreck of the timbers and driving shaft below. Another large piece was thrown through the ceiling into the second floor, passing out the end of the building, over the flume and has not yet been found. Smaller pieces broke holes in the floor and walls. Luckily no one was injured.

JACKSON—Mayor Sparks hand an unpleasant experience while returning by automobile from the Saturday football game at Ann Arbor. As his car passed a horse-drawn rig the driver lashed him across the face with his whip, and then sped away in the darkness of the night. All the combativeness of the mayor was aroused by the act, and turning his car he pursued the loafer who had struck him. To make an interesting story short, the rig was overtaken, the occupants brought to submission, and on their knees humbly begged pardon for the wanton insult. A swollen hand on the mayor would indicate they were not brought to this condition without some strenuous reasoning, physically applied.—Patriot.

No President has had more disputes, difficulties and differences to deal with during this administration than President Wilson.

Mr. Voter, compare the public welfare achievements of President Wilson's administration during the past three and a half years with those of the Republican Party in the preceeding sixteen years.

BREVITIES

STOCKBRIDGE—Otis Richmond, one of the leading farmers of Stockbridge township died Wednesday night of last week. A few weeks ago he was kicked by a horse and sustained injuries which resulted in his death.

GRASS LAKE—Rowe and Cowden have finished painting the buildings at the Starr seed farm. They used 238 gallons and painted 21 buildings. The seed farm is becoming one of the show places of southern Michigan.—News.

HILLSDALE—The city of Hillsdale is facing a grave proposition. The state health board has handed down its opinion on the city's water supply from Baw Beese lake, claiming that on account of the Stock mill pond which backs up in the lake makes the water supply contaminated, then again the milk supply is not safeguarded, and the city fire marshal upon an inspection tour of public buildings finds that the college buildings have not the proper fire escapes, also some of the school buildings.

YPSILANTI—This is a poor city for crooks. In addition to having active officers it has citizens who aid in law enforcement and the apprehension of criminals. Howard Boyd, 28, of Tecumseh, thought he would make some easy money here. Howard figured that ministers are marks, so he called on Rev. Finlayson and told him that he was a member of his church in good standing, that he lived a few miles out in the country and that he needed $2 in a business deal he was making. Rev. Finlayson did not remember Howard and after asking him a number of questions decided that he was an impostor. He stepped to the telephone to call an officer. Boyd started to leave but was told to remain. Falling to get an officer the minister took Boyd before a justice and charged him with begging. Rev. Finlayson then called up the pastor of the Presbyterian church at Tecumseh and learned that Boyd was an old offender, and that he had done the same thing there a dozen times. Boyd pleaded guilty and was sentenced to serve 65 days in the Detroit house of correction. Only a few days ago Theodore E. Schaible, local auto dealer, at the point of a rifle held up Roy Elliott, University of Michigan student, who had stolen a car at Ann Arbor. About a month ago Mrs. D. Z. Curtis stopped an auto thief east of the city at the point of a revolver and held him until officers came.

Amazingly Comfortable

They like its power—it's the world's most powerful low priced car.

Everybody concedes its beauty.

It wins on economy.

But its roomy seats, deep upholstery and easy riding cantilever springs—

These things make it so amazingly comfortable that people can hardly believe their senses.

You wouldn't think that a small, light, economical, low priced car could be so comfortable.

But come in and let us prove it to you.

VOTE NOV. 7
MICHIGAN DRY
"YES" FOR PROHIBITION
"NO" ON HOME RULE

Vote for a Square Deal and Defeat "Home Rule"

VOTE NOV. 7
MICHIGAN DRY
"YES" FOR PROHIBITION
"NO" ON HOME RULE

On Nov. 7 every voter will receive ballots for four Constitutional Amendments. Two of these relate to the liquor traffic and two do not. Your special attention is called to the two amendments relating to the liquor traffic.

Every voter must vote twice on the liquor traffic. Every enemy of the saloon must vote "YES" on the Dry State-wide Amendment to Article XVI, Section 11, for prohibition. Every voter, wet or dry, who believes in the square deal, will vote "NO" on the "wet" or so-called "Home Rule" Amendment to Article VIII, Section 30.

What is the so-called "home rule" amendment? It is a plan to change the Michigan Local Option Law so that the voting unit will be the city, village or township instead of the county, as at present. It is distinctly a wet measure, advocated by the Michigan Home Rule League, which is the anti-prohibition organization of the Michigan saloons who are backed by the brewers and distillers in many other states than Michigan.

Who wants the so-called "home rule" amendment? The saloon crowd, brewers and distillers. Who are fighting the "home rule" amendment? The United Dry Federation of Michigan, including the Michigan Anti-Saloon League, Michigan Grange, Michigan Gleaners, Michigan State Sunday School Association, The Trade Union Dry League, W. C. T. U., and other great organizations, both Catholic and Protestant.

What the "wets" want in Michigan is to defeat state-wide prohibition and nullify county local option—and to do this they hope to deceive enough dry voters so as to get a majority, November 7.

If the state-wide dry amendment is defeated and the wet "home rule" amendment is adopted, the county local option law of Michigan will be destroyed and the state will be as wet legally as it was before Van Buren County went dry in 1890.

A Chat With You on the Overcoat Subject

Overcoats are primarily intended for warmth and bodily comfort, but style is a mighty factor of importance that must be considered.

This season, Fashion has decreed the extremes in Overcoat designs—the form fitting English models and swagger full box effects share equally in popular favor.

The fabrics are bold in pattern and inclined to be high in color and you may as well make up your mind that your last year's overcoat will never do if you want to be properly attired.

It's not too early for Overcoats, the evenings are getting chilly and its always advisable to make early selections, thus insuring yourself of obtaining first choice of a complete new stock

The children and grandchildren of the late Charles Henry Kempf desire to express their appreciation to their Chelsea friends, for the kindness and sympathy shown them in their recent bereavement. The whole town seemed like one family, with the desire to assist in any and every way. Such kindness was a beautiful tribute to Mr. Kempf and will ever be gratefully remembered by all his relatives.

We wish to thank our friends and neighbors for their kind assistance to us during our recent bereavement. Also those who contributed floral offerings, especially the church and Sunday school. Mrs. Charles Allyn and daughter, Minnie.

It being impossible for us to thank all our friends and neighbors personally for their kindly acts of assistance in our recent bereavement, we take this method of expressing to them our grateful appreciation of their sympathy and helpfulness.
