BABCOCK RESIDENCE BURNED ON MONDAY

House was Occupied by Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Mapes—Caught From Electric Wiring.

The Babcock residence on East Middle street, occupied by Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Mapes, was burned to the ground early Monday morning. The fire is thought to have started from the electric wiring. Mr. and Mrs. Mapes and Messrs. VanZandt and Coleman, the latter being roomers in the house, retired about 12 o'clock, and when they went to their apartments everything seemed to be in its usual condition. About 2:20 o'clock the light in Mr. VanZandt's room went out and he discovered the presence of smoke. He aroused the inmates and saved most of his personal effects except a new suit of clothes. In sliding down the porch roof Mr. VanZandt sprained an ankle.

Roy Thomas, another roomer, lost a sum of money and all of his clothing except the suit that he wore. Mr. Pancost, who roomed with Thomas, lost all of his clothing but a little that he gathered up to dress in. Both of the young men were nearly overcome with the smoke. They escaped by way of the stairs, and one of the young men used the parlor for a dressing room while the other took the front porch.

Frank Coleman, a barber employed by Wm. Schatz, and arrived in town the last of the week, saved all of his personal effects except a necktie containing a diamond stickpin valued at $150.

Mr. and Mrs. Mapes' loss will far exceed the amount of their insurance, $900. Their loss consists of the complete furnishings of four rooms on the second floor, all of their dishes, silverware, food, kitchen outfit, rugs, clothing and many other articles.

The house was owned by C. E. Babcock, of Grass Lake, and was valued at $5,000, with $3,000 insurance.

After being aroused, Mr. Mapes devoted his time to fighting the blaze, which was over the dining room.

Several windows in the residence of Dr. H. H. Avery, close to the burned building, were broken and the paint was considerably scorched.

Mr. and Mrs. Mapes have moved into the residence of W. S. McLaren adjoining their former home.

The members of the fire department did excellent work in saving the adjoining residence, being handicapped by the zero weather that prevailed. They worked until about 10 o'clock before being able to leave the scene.

Pomona Grange Elects Officers.

With an attendance of members from Ann Arbor, Chelsea, Scio, Pittsfield, and Stony Creek, Pomona County grange met at Masonic temple, Ypsilanti, last Tuesday for the annual business meeting. It was an all-day session, at which the election of officers was the feature.

At the afternoon session the following officers were elected: Master, Joseph Glasse; overseer, Philip Broesamle, of Chelsea; lecturer, Mrs. Nathaniel Laird, of Chelsea; steward, George Gill, Jr.; chaplain, Mrs. Emma Sober; treasurer, Mrs. Frank J. Fletcher; secretary, Mrs. B. D. Kelly; gatekeeper, B. D. Kelly; Ceres, Mrs. Mary Moore; Pomona, Mrs. Anna C. Alexander, all of Ypsilanti; Flora, Mrs. Lydia Lavander, Pittsfield; lady assistant steward, Mrs. George Gill, Jr.; executive committee, George McCauley, Pittsfield, and George English, of Chelsea.

Officers were installed immediately following election. Nulan C. Carpenter, a past master, acting as installing officer. Master Gleason announced the following committees: Meetings—Mrs. Laird, Miss Buell, Mrs. D. V. Harris.

Legislative—George English, Hon. Andrew Campbell, George Gill, Jr. R. J. Bird was appointed Pomona market director to work with State Market Commissioner McBride, and the secretary, Mrs. R. D. Kelly, was instructed to notify subordinate granges to appoint a similar director.

During the session a vote was taken in favor of the Housewives league of Ann Arbor.

Made Pastor Glad.

Grass Lake News: The occupants of the Methodist parsonage had their hearts warmed last Friday by a visit of a goodly number of the members of the Sharon congregation. They revived the old-time custom of making the pastor feel that his work is not unappreciated nor in vain by coming to his home and breaking bread with the family. It was the time of the monthly meeting of the Woman's Home Missionary Society of Sharon and connection with it at this particular time there was a general free-for-all good time. It was a heart-warming visit and will long be remembered by the Pastor and family.

A very material expression of their visit was given in such things as enrich the larder, an enrichment which has not been known in this particular larder, for these many days since the reign of high prices, a goodly sum of money was also given to the family, all of which was most gratefully appreciated by the Pastor and family.

HOLLIER MEN GET INSURANCE POLICIES

Straight Life Policies Were Presented to Employees of Lewis Co. Last Thursday.

At the Lewis Spring and Axle Plant—home of the "Hollier Eight"—occurred last Thursday the culmination of the splendid event beginning two weeks ago when Mr. Fred H. Lewis, president of the company, placed as a Christmas gift for the protection of his employees and their families $250,000 of "straight life" insurance benefits. These policies carry with them the cash, loan values and the paid-up insurance features, this kind of insurance, group benefit, being the most magnanimous of its form known to the insurance world.

The distribution of the policies occurred at the noon hour when each of the employees received personally his policy as he rang out by the clock number and by previous arrangement he proceeded to the concert auditorium where the "Camera-man" was in waiting to do his share in perpetuating the brotherhood of the "Hollier Eight" workers.

The spirit of enthusiasm and appreciation among the workers for this splendid effort of Mr. Lewis in establishing the co-operative, good-will medium seemed from the first to increase in tendency until as a climax following the Camera-man's final click there burst from the crowd three cheers of sincerity to the success of Mr. Lewis and his industry.

Long live Lewis, Lewis, Lewis, Who makes the "Hollier Eight," "Hollier Eight," "Hollier Eight."

Though the home of the "Hollier Eight" is indeed a perfectly equipped plant, it is also interesting to know that production alone is not the principal aim of success with Mr. Lewis in the development of his industry, for it is very worthy of mention that several branches of organized Welfare are practiced and successfully carried out in this plant, viz.: A recreation branch with rooms for gymnasium practice, the billiard and club rooms and the open swimming pool.

This great room occupied during gymnasium work is also utilized as a concert auditorium where members organized among the workers conduct a well-trained band for private and public entertainment, this feature of the work being personally superintended by Mr. Lewis, who has long been publicly recognized as an artist in this line.

Cavanaugh Lake Grange Meeting.

The next regular meeting of Cavanaugh Lake Grange will be held at 1 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, January 23, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Gelske. The new annual work will be imparted at this meeting. The program will be as follows:

Song, by the Grange. Words of good cheer and encouragement, by the Worthy Master P. Schweinfurth.

The inner workings and prevailing spirit in the State Grange as seen by the delegate, Mrs. Kate Gleske.

A funny story, by Herbert Harvey. Encouragements and discouragements as experienced in the past two years in the Grange, by the Worthy Lecture P. H. Riemenschneider.

Select reading, by Albert Schweinfurth. Closing song.

School Officers' Meeting.

County School Commissioner Essery has given out notice of a meeting of school officers to be held at the court house on January 30, when discussions of school law and county school problems will take chief place of interest.

Officers from the rural schools of every township in the county are expected to be in attendance at this meeting, which is to be held in the circuit court room.

The regular mid-winter meeting of the teachers' association is to be held in Ypsilanti on February 9. Commissioner Essery announces that Harold Jarvis, Detroit singer, has consented to sing at this meeting.

Gloria Romance

BY MR. AND MRS. RUPERT HUGHES

Novelized From the Motion Picture Play of the Same Name by George Kleine

Copyright, 1916, by Adelaide M. Hughes

SYNOPSIS.

Pierpont Stafford, banker and railroad magnate, with his sixteen-year-old daughter, Gloria, is wintering at Palm Beach. Gloria is a vivacious, but willful young lady who chafes under the restraining hand of a governess from whom she repeatedly escapes. Her childish capers cause young Doctor Royce to fall in love with her. She steals from her room at night and in an auto plunges into the surf where she leaves the car. Becoming lost in the everglades she falls into the hands of the Seminole Indians. She is rescued and returned to her father who had offered a reward for her return.

THIRD EPISODE

Never before in all her luxurious young life had Gloria encountered the slightest hardship. The most exquisite of the niceties of existence had been hers as regularly as the breath she drew. So she had wearied of them and rebelled. And now she had found that adventure was not altogether pleasant, either. A primeval jungle inhabited by a primeval people was, to say the least, distinctly uncomfortable.

Gloria felt it especially lucky that since she had to be rescued fate had been polite enough to select a good-looking rescuer for her. "The more she studied Mr. Freneau the better she liked him. He had a nice name, too—a nice, marriageable name.

The only fly in the ointment was the bad behavior of Dr. Royce. She had thought him charming. But now he was sulky and moody.

Dr. Royce was glum because he did not know just what he ought to do. He was confronted with a duty that he could not solve. It was like some obscure disease, hard to diagnose. To speak up and denounce Freneau as a liar and thief was impossible. Royce had no proof that Freneau had played either the cad or the coward. He knew only that Freneau must have seen him battling with the Indian, and a decent man would have come to the assistance of a fellow white. Even if Freneau had felt that he ought to put Gloria in the boat first, he might have come back to help Royce. But Freneau had left Royce to his fate. That was ugly.

Royce heard Pierpont Stafford say to Freneau: "My boy, you've earned a million dollars!"

Now Royce felt that he understood. Freneau had been coaxed into the everglades by that $5,000 lottery prize. He had won it; and it looked as if Freneau were expecting to win Gloria's love in the bargain. For Gloria was simply devouring him with her eyes.

Royce knew little about Freneau, and that little was not to his advantage. Freneau neglected his office, but neglected no opportunity for a love affair. Dr. Royce had come to Palm Beach as the private physician of old Judge Freeman, and he had abundant opportunity to see the influence of Freneau on the judge's daughter, Lois. It was not a wholesome influence.

On the long ride back to Palm Beach they passed the spot where Gloria had left her brother's racing car in the ocean. They paused to look at it. Several men and a team of mules were struggling to drag it out of the water.

When they reached the Royal Poinciana Gloria passed through a throng of welcoming friends, and Freneau received congratulations innumerable. Royce sneaked off to his room and plunged into a hot bath, treated his wounds as best he could, shaved, and put on fresh clothes.

Then he strolled out to order a new evening dress in a hurry from a Palm Beach tailor. He met Freneau, carrying his honors jauntily. Royce went to him and held him skinned with his eyes as he said:

"Look here, Freneau, haven't you a little something to say to me?"

Freneau colored a trifle, but he stared back at Royce without discomfort and he laughed no less easily than usual:

"Why, no, old man; nothing that I know of—except that I suppose I ought to feel sorry that you arrived too late. But I can't feel sorry, I didn't even know you were there."

Royce glared at him, then laughed harshly and said:

"The diagnosis in your case is clear. You are hopelessly infected with yellow fever; but you are immune to all honorable sentiments. Don't lose your head, though; and don't try any of your tricks on little Gloria Stafford."

Freneau laughed again, a more ugly laugh this time. "That seems to me to be Miss Stafford's business, and certainly none of yours."

"I'm going to make it mine," said Royce.

After Gloria had enjoyed all the redeeming influences of a tub, and a shampoo, and fine linen and a silk frock, she found that her interest in Mr. Freneau was as keen as ever. She even felt grateful to Lois Freeman for flirting with David. She sat out on the ledge of the veranda and day-dreamed.

When her father sauntered by and asked her what she was up to she answered:

"O, nothing! I'm just basking in the sun."

But when Pierpont came by that way a little later he found Dick Freneau basking in Gloria's most bewitching smile. They were Romeo and Juliet at Palm Beach, separated only by a low wall and a clump of rhododendrons. And Romeo was reaching across that with his walking stick.

It was the first time Pierpont had seen his child in a flirtation. He did not like her in that employment. He took her by the ear and led her away. She protested at the indignity.

Pierpont let go her ear. He had always been afraid of her and unable to manage her. He was not afraid of Freneau, however. He went for him at once. He was about to begin with a stout, "How dare you speak to my daughter?" He paused, feeling that without Freneau's help he might have no daughter to be spoken to.

Pierpont was used to accomplishing his ends with the weapon of the check book. He drew the weapon now and a fountain pen and said:

"By the way, there's that reward. It will give me great pleasure to pay it over."

He wrote after "Pay to the order of" the name "Richard Freneau" and the amount "Five thousand and no-hundredths dollars—$5,000." Freneau's fingers twitched to clutch the fortune, but his brain advised him to play for higher stakes. He put away the temptation with a proud smile.

"It is reward enough to have been able to be of service to Miss Stafford." If Gloria had not adored him before, that chivalrous speech would have won her. It quite disarmed Pierpont. With his check book ruled out, his best weapon was gone. But he blustered all the harder. "My daughter is a little girl. I won't have her fooling time away with you. She must get her education first. She is hardly more than a child."

"Oh, papa!" Gloria cried.

Pierpont went on: "And she's going to school at once. We start north on the next train."

"Then Mr. Freneau will come north, too, and we shall see each other all we want to. For we love each other, don't we, Mr. Freneau? Desperately! Don't we, Mr. Freneau?"

Mr. Freneau's answer was blurred. Pierpont studied the two young people. He had his own opinion of Freneau. It was formed on brief acquaintance, but he was a judge of men.

"You love each other, eh? Desperately, too? Well, well! Now, look here," he said, after a quick balancing of his mind, "of course you both know that Gloria is too young for marriage. She must prepare herself for the solemn responsibilities of life and graduate at a good finishing school. Now, if you will wait, and not see each other or write to each other, till then, and if you still love each other then, I will not oppose your marriage. I'll do all I can to make you happy. Is it a bargain?"

Freneau had not the courage to refuse the demand in the cold eyes of the millionaire. To be accepted as his son-in-law at any time was a marvelous promise. He hastened to give his own in exchange for it.

When he had promised there was nothing left for Gloria to do but promise also.

"For five years, then," said Pierpont grimly, "you promise not to bother each other or speak or write—for five years."

"I promise!" said Freneau quickly. "From tomorrow," said Gloria with equal grimness.

"The train leaves very shortly," said Pierpont, and led her in to superintend the packing.

Freneau walked away in a daze. Yesterday he was a broker's clerk. Today he was the son-in-law elect of one of the country's wealthiest men. What were five years to him?

Five years sounded unimportant to Gloria, too, at the moment. She would love that young man forever.

Five years is a long time, and many things can happen in the eighteen hundred odd days and nights.

Freneau hated Royce, for he rarely like the people whose property we have stolen.

Gloria was gone and Lois was gone, but an attractive youth like Freneau was not left alone in such multitudes of women as gather at Palm Beach with no more serious purpose than escaping the cold drafts of the North and the torments of boredom in the South.

He spent so much time gathering the applause from fair women that when the season closed at Palm Beach his firm gave him his full liberty. He had done nothing, they wrote, to encourage them to pay him further salary. He had to go next to places where his fame had not reached—where he had only his winning personality as capital. He found men rather hard to impress, but there was always some woman foolish enough to believe in his beautiful eyes.

Some of them were rich and some of them were as poor as poor Nell equally brilliant answer. The same thing was true of him.

"But I'm no longer Miss Freeman," said she.

"I'm still Mr. Freneau," said he. "I'm how Mrs. Stafford?"

"Stafford? Stafford? The name sounds familiar," said Freneau.

"Surely you haven't forgotten David Stafford, your old rival for my young affections?"

"Of course not," said Freneau. "I've never forgiven him for cutting me out. How long have you been married?"

"Oh, for an eternity—two years."

"Really? You don't look it at all! But that's long enough for you to come and take tea with me somewhere isn't it?"

"I suppose so. Anyway, I'm dead tired and in need of a pick-me-up. It's so stupid shopping all day. And my husband has already been married long enough to be quite frank about my extravagance. But what else is there for me? He is at the office all day; and he travels a good deal. He's ambitious to outdo his father in business."

"So am I," said Freneau.

"They were buzzing away merrily when they found seats in a tearoom where dancing was the main business, with tea as an excuse. Freneau did not even take tea. He was not particular about excuses. He urged Lois to dance with him. But she saw several people she knew and she declined. Also, she slipped away early. She knew enough to be elusive.

They met again, however, at a less conspicuous tearoom. Then she danced with him.

And all this while Gloria was cherishing her ideal of Freneau and working hard to make herself worthy of him; and her brother was cherishing a trust in Lois and working hard to give her the luxuries she exacted with increasing greed.

Five years was a long time for Gloria, too; but not so long as she told herself. Her girl soul did not

She Learned to Fence Well.

Lois that should have been devoted to the intricate stratagems—not to say treasons and spoils—of Wall street.

He and Mulry in the flush of their early successes had spread out—had established branch offices in Albany, Buffalo, Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, St. Louis and Pittsburgh. While the tide set their way these branches served as so many hands to gather in shekels. But when the hard times came upon the financial world they served as so many mouths to feed. The office of Freneau & Mulry became one of those dismal places where the pay roll is a weekly agony and where the watchword is "everything going out and nothing coming in."

When Freneau at last awoke to realize that bankruptcy instead of plutocracy was likely to be his portion he turned back to his work with a desperate energy. And now Lois found that he was as fierce an office man as her husband. He had engagements when she was lonely.

She naturally imputed his neglect to some other charmer. She could not believe him guilty of overwork. She grew jealous and their meetings were stormy. She kept his telephone busy to make sure that he was at his desk. She began to annoy him. He wished to be rid of her, but she would not be jilted.

It was during this crisis that Gloria marked off the last month of her five years' ordeal. She was ambitious enough to go on and finish her course and get her diploma. She compressed her last year of schooling into half a year and graduated all alone in mid-winter.

She dashed into her room at college for the last time, with her solemn mortarboard askew on her head, her somber black gown flying from her shoulders, and in her hand her parchment diploma. She looked like a little girl for a moment.

She threw her diploma in air and her mortarboard after it. She whipped off her black robe and began to juggle school books, letting them fall where they fell. She danced a jig over her scholarly past and made haste to pack her things and dart out to meet her future. "Future" was her spelling of "Freneau."

The journey to New York from school was as long as the journey to New York from Palm Beach had been years ago; only then she had been traveling away from her romance, now toward it.

When her father met her at the train she hugged him almost to suffocation, then asked him how dear Mr. Freneau was the last time he saw him.

"The last time I saw dear Mr. Freneau was at Palm Beach," said Pierpont, who had almost forgotten his name and had hoped that Gloria had forgotten it entirely.

As soon as she reached the house on Riverside drive and embraced the old servants and shook hands with the new, Gloria took her father into his library and asked him for Mr. Freneau's telephone number. She had found "Freneau & Mulry" in the book already, and she said: "Do you suppose that that Mr. Mulry's Freneau is my Mr. Freneau?"

"I don't know, I'm sure," Pierpont grumbled. "But it wouldn't be very correct to telephone a busy man."

"I suppose not," Gloria admitted. "Where's a pen? I'll write him."

"How long has it been since you wrote him last?" said Pierpont anxiously.

"Why, I've never written him at all," Gloria answered, shocked. "I promised, didn't I?"

Pierpont kissed her brow with a profound pride. Then he ventured to say, "Don't you think it would be nicer if you waited for him to look you up?"

Gloria gnawed the end of the penholder a moment, and then sighed with all the impatience of youth in the shackles of conventionality. "I suppose so." She flung down the pen and wondered how she could manage delicately to attract Mr. Freneau's attention without seeming to.

"By the way," said Pierpont, "there's a big gala performance at the Metropolitan Opera house tonight, a special benefit for some war relief. Would you like to go?"

"You bet!" cried Gloria with school-girl elegance.

At about that time Freneau was just putting down the telephone in his office. Lois had called him to say that her husband was taking her to the benefit and she hoped that he would be there. She had something important to tell him. Everything she had to tell him was immensely important nowadays to her—and immensely unimportant to him.

The thing that agitated Lois was her knowledge that Gloria had come back to New York and was still in love with the memory of Freneau. Lois was in an anguish of fear and jealousy and she wanted to compel Freneau to swear that he would not forsake her for Gloria.

Freneau was oblivious of this, but he had no intention of keeping his promise to Lois till Mulry, who had overheard Freneau's end of the conversation, said: "Come along. I got stung for a couple of tickets. You can have one of them. We might meet somebody who might give us a line on the market."

So the Romeo-like Freneau went with his Falstaffian partner. They haunted the promenade of the boxholders, wishing to be seen in expensive company.

Glancing over the balustrade, Freneau caught sight of Lois mounting the stairs with her husband. She was looking for him, and he smiled back at her with stunted grace. He did not notice that on the other stairway of the big double zigzag Pierpont Stafford was coming up with a vision of young loveliness at his side. He did not see her clutch her father's arm and almost swoon with delight.

He might have observed all this and still not have suspected who the girl was, for the Gloria he had found in squaw costume in the everglades, the Gloria who had exchanged vows with him on the veranda of the Poinciana, the Gloria who had waved farewell to him from the receding train five years ago, had all but receded from his memory.

What recollection he had of her was of a little sixteen-year-old thing with her hair down her back and an air of almost childish immaturity.

The Gloria who marched up the broad steps of the Metropolitan was a young lady of twenty, one with her hair up, her head full of knowledge, and her features changed as the bud is changed when it becomes a rose. Her costume was the latest thing from Paris, still Paris in spite of the war.

Gloria could hardly climb the steps to the level of Freneau. Her father did not know him, but she did. She left her father's side and hurried to Freneau's. He did not hear her or know that she was at his elbow, trembling with rapture and trying to keep from crying his name aloud and seizing him by the arm that had saved her from the Indians. She coughed and he did not hear. At last she ventured the terrific deed of touching his sleeve with her finger tip. He turned and she murmured:

"Mr. Freneau, I believe?"

He turned, saw that a most exquisite creature had addressed him, wondered who under the sun she was, lifted his hat, made a violent pretense at remembering her perfectly, having met her just the day before, and exclaimed: "Why, hello! I'm so glad you got here."

He put out his hand, but hers fell away before he could clasp it. She had thrust her arm into her father's elbow and hurried him along toward the door of their box while Freneau whirled and stared.

Mulry stared, too, and muttered: "Good Lord, who's the new peach with old Pierpont?"

"It must be his daughter; it's Gloria!" Freneau gasped.

"His daughter! Do you know her?" "Know her!" Freneau laughed. "Well, rather! I'm engaged to her in a way."

"Engaged in a way!" Mulry repeated. "Well, marry her quick. Her old man's money will come in mighty handy."

Freneau leaned against the balustrade thinking so hard and recasting his plans so rapidly and with such enthusiasm that Lois not only touched his arm but pinched it fiercely before he noticed her. Then he stared at her with a cold indifference that verified her wildest fears.

Meanwhile Gloria was sitting in miserable splendor on a little gold chair in a box like a prison cell to her, and she was batting her eyes fast to shake away the tears that came pell-mell. She was wringing her little white gloved hands and trying not to sob aloud: "He doesn't remember me! He doesn't remember me!"

She Did Nothing More Vicious Than to Hold a Chafing-Dish Orgy Now and Then in Her Room.

Trask, the daughter of Gideon Trask, a canal boat captain. He met her in a cheap boarding house, where he paid his landlady nothing much except his promises and some extravagant compliments.

He behaved very shabbily in his affair with Nell Trask, and deserted her cruelly because, at a critical time for her, he got a tip on the market and sold it to a broker, who gave him a share of the proceeds.

He was so tired of poverty that he went to New York and anticipated his promise. But Gloria and her father were abroad on a summer vacation, and Freneau was thrown on his own resources. He fitted himself into another tip and sold that to a broker named Frank Mulry.

Mulry knew the value of such a partner, and he encouraged Freneau to learn from financiers' wives and daughters what could not be learned otherwise. In the course of time Freneau made himself so important to Mulry that he was taken into the firm as a silent partner. At length, through a most confidential tip, he got in as a sort of stowaway in a piratical raid on the market and cleaned up so much money that Mulry was glad to take him into full-partnership as the senior member of the firm.

When he saw the legend, "Freneau & Mulry, stocks and bonds, members of the stock exchange," on the door and on the letterheads Freneau felt so important that he did not care what Pierpont Stafford or his daughter thought of him. He was the young Napoleon. One of these days he would buy and sell Pierpont Stafford.

His success enlarged his acquaintance, his attractiveness, and his temptations.

He was on the crest of the wave when he met Lois Freeman again. He was studying the diamond crop in a jeweler's window and wondering just what peace offering he should buy for a certain person whom he had rendered violently jealous when who should step out of the shop but Lois Freeman!

Each stared at the other with eyes ready for flirtation. Each recognized the other as a former Palm Beach comber.

"Why, Mr. Freneau!" was Lois' exclamation. Her language was not so brilliant as her eyes.

"Why, Miss Freeman!" was his feel the emotional demands of a grown woman. She could put Freneau's picture on her bureau and find satisfaction in paying it worship.

In the school she had discovered a new world. She fought her way to the captaincy of a basketball team as if it were the presidency of an Amazonian republic. She learned to fence well and to box a little. She even took an interest in some of her text books.

She thought she was very wicked, but she did nothing more vicious than hold a chafing dish orgy now and then in her room.

Gloria had few sorrows of importance, beyond the occasional disappointment her examination records gave her. The chief of her disappointments was her brother's marriage to Lois. She never had liked Lois and had never understood her charm.

Lois had taken little interest in winning the approval of women. She had played a part in winning over David's serious interest. She never cared for him, but she could not resist the wealth and prestige of his name. She was bitterly disappointed in him when after the honeymoon was over he expressed his unwillingness to live on his father's money and vowed that he would earn his own way by his own energy. The life of travel and gaiety that Lois had planned was staked from her.

Gloria had a staunch little heart and she kept her word to her father. She kept faith, too, with her fiancé five years removed. She fell into the habit of talking to his photograph. When she was tempted to forget that she was a solemnly betrothed young person she would find strength in his image to be austere and to deny herself many of the gayereties of the school or of her companions in the gorgeous resting places where she spent her vacations.

It was a quaint and bitter irony that the eyes in Freneau's photograph should have had so pious an influence, while his own eyes were devoted to casting such evil spells.

Unconsciously Lois revenged her husband on Freneau, for while Freneau was causing Lois to forget her duties to the partnership she had entered into with David Stafford her fascinations led Freneau to neglect his duties to his partnership with Frank Mulry. He spent time and money on

SYRUP OF FIGS FOR A CHILD'S BOWELS

It is cruel to force nauseating, harsh physic into a sick child.

Look back at your childhood days. Remember the "dose" mother insisted on—castor oil, calomel, cathartics. How you hated them, how you fought against taking them.

With our children it's different. Mothers who cling to the old form of physic simply don't realize what they do. The children's revolt is well-founded. Their tender little "insides" are injured by them.

If your child's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing, give only delicious "California Syrup of Figs." Its action is positive, but gentle. Millions of mothers keep this harmless "fruit laxative" handy; they know children love to take it; that it never fails to clean the liver and bowels and sweeten the stomach, and that a teaspoonful given today saves a sick child tomorrow.

Ask at the store for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies; children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on each bottle. Adv.

No Precaution Neglected. The little son of a clergyman recently appeared at breakfast with distinct evidences of a hastily made toilet.

"Why, Edmund," his mother remonstrated, "I believe you forgot to brush your hair!"

"I was in such a hurry to get to school," he explained.

"I hope you didn't forget to say your prayers?" she asked anxiously.

"No, siree!" was the emphatic assurance; "that's one thing I never forget. Safety first!"—Harper's Magazine.

Woman Soldier Lived to Be 108. There is a tombstone in St. Nicholas' churchyard, Brighton, to a woman soldier. It is erected to the memory of Phoebe Hessel, who was born in Stepney in the year 1713, and states:

"She served for many years as a private soldier in the Fifth Regiment of Foot in different parts of Europe, and in the year 1754 fought under the command of the duke of Cumberland at the battle of Fontenoy, where she received a bayonet wound in the arm. Her long life, which commenced in the time of Queen Anne, extended to the reign of George IV, by whose munificence she received comfort and support in her last years. She died at Brighton, where she had long resided, December 12, 1821, aged one hundred and eight years."

It is hardly too much to say that the automobile as she is at present driven has made walking for pleasure or walking for health—walking of every sort, in fact, except mere pavement strolling or hurried, rabbitlike dashes for the shelter of the nearest trolley car—practically impossible, a source of annoyance and perpetual discomfort instead of a pleasure.—Exchange.

BILIOUS, HEADACHY, SICK "CASCARETS"

Gently cleanse your liver and sluggish bowels while you sleep.

Get a 10-cent box. Sick headache, biliousness, dizziness, coated tongue, foul taste and foul breath—always trace them to torpid liver; delayed, fermenting food in the bowels or sour, gassy stomach.

Poisonous matter clogged in the intestines, instead of being cast out of the system is re-absorbed into the blood. When this poison reaches the delicate brain tissue it causes congestion and that dull, throbbing, sickening headache.

Cascarets immediately cleanse the stomach, remove the sour, undigested food and foul gases, take the excess bile from the liver and carry out all the constipated waste matter and poisons in the bowels.

A Cascaret to-night will surely straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist means your head clear, stomach sweet and your liver and bowels regular for months. Adv.

VOGUES AND VANITIES

JULIA BOTTOMLEY

Made for Youthful Wearers

The style-wise manikin is busy parading the newest thing in one-piece gowns before the practiced eyes of buyers of ready-made dresses. First, she wonders how she gets into them; next, she wonders why she ever wears anything different, and finally she buys. Shortly you will be doing likewise, for the one-piece frock has made a hit with matron and maid.

The model shown here is designed for a miss who has arrived at the dignity of sixteen years, at least, or progressed somewhat beyond. It may be successfully made of any of the light-weight woolen fabrics, as serge, gabardine, broadcloth, and other weaves. It is very effective made in small black-and-white shepherd's check, and trimmed with black braid instead of embroidery.

This dress looks too simple to need description, and it is simple, but less so than a glance conveys. It has a fitted lining under the waist, which supports the skirt and holds the waist in position.

A pliated and shirred panel is let into the plain, straight-hanging skirt at each side.

The bodice is gathered into a belt and fastens along the shoulder and under arms with snap fasteners. The sleeves are large and gathered at the wrists into a narrow band. The easy turnover collar, faced with white, is of exactly the right character for a frock of this design.

Embroidery in rich colors brightens the bodice, girdle, and sleeves, and a little band of it appears on the panels in the skirt.

When She Goes Bicycling

Clothes exactly suited to their use are sure to possess distinction, because this is one of the elements of good style. Now that everybody goes bicycling, costumers have bent their fertile minds upon toys for the wheel, and have turned out such alluring fetching creations that the sportswoman dotes upon them. It is enough to tempt one to live out of doors all the time, when comfort and beauty are combined as they are in sports clothes.

From top to toe the lady who smiles at life in the accompanying picture, is dressed as she should be. Her suit comprises three pieces, knickerbockers, coat and skirt. She wears golf stockings and low-heeled, broad-toed calfskin shoes. Her hat is close fitting, a smart shape with brim enough to shade the eyes. It is of a light-colored velour, trimmed with a scarf of soft silk.

White on the subject of sports hats a new, rainproof fabric which is double faced merits mention. It looks like a thin leather on one side and a satin on the other. It is used in hats intended for motoring, or any other sport. Then there are hats crocheted of a patented braid. They are beautiful and comfortable, clinging to the head like a glove to the hand.

The wheel suit shown in the picture is made of serge in shepherd's check, and depends upon bone buttons for its decoration. The coat is made with a set-in bit of the material, and is provided with patch pockets. The wide sailor collar is faced with satin. Plain coat sleeves are finished with deep cuffs with a pointed turned-back flap at the top fastened down with a button. The knickers are just plain knickers, with nothing to distinguish them from any others. The skirt is perfectly plain, fits smoothly about the hips, and is just full enough to allow a comfortable stride. When the fair bicyclist abandons her wheel to walk, take tea, or otherwise disport herself, she may fasten it at the front, for it is furnished with buttons and button holes for that purpose.

TILLAGE IN ORCHARDS QUITE BENEFICIAL

PEACH TREES WHICH ARE FOURTEEN YEARS OLD.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

In orchards tillage is beneficial to the soil in several ways. It improves the condition by increasing the depth and by fining the soil; it conserves moisture by increasing the water-holding capacity and by checking evaporation; it increases plant food by promoting nitrification and by hastening the decomposition of organic matter.

There are three methods of soil management with reference to tillage; namely, clean tillage, clean tillage with cover crops, and sod mulch. Clean tillage consists in keeping the soil throughout the orchard in a good state of cultivation until midseason and then stopping all cultivation. With this method of tillage the orchard is plowed as soon as the soil is workable and then harrowed as often as necessary to preserve a dust mulch on the surface of the soil.

Clean tillage with cover crops consists of clean tillage until midseason, and then seeding the orchard down with a cover crop like rye, clover, etc. The cover crop is plowed under the following spring, and tillage given as in the previous year.

The sod-mulch system consists in seeding the orchard down to grass or clover. During the season this crop is mowed several times, and the material is scattered about the trees to form a mulch. In a great many orchards, where the land is so rough and rocky that cultivation is impracticable, weeds and other herbage are allowed to grow and this material is cut during the season and used as a mulch about the tree.

There are differences of opinion as to the best methods of tillage in an orchard. Some growers adhere strictly to the clean-tillage system, others to the clean tillage with cover crops, and still others to the sod mulch. We should not claim that any one system of tillage is best, for each has its own adaptations. Many growers will give good results under the sod-mulch system for a while and then would be very much benefited if clean tillage was given for a few seasons. Conditions should govern the plan of tillage to follow. If the grower keeps in mind the benefits to be secured by tillage, and understands the principles involved, he can decide on the plan which best suits his needs.

Maintenance of Fertility.

It is always better to maintain the soil in a highly fertile state than to permit it to become depleted to such a degree as to become unproductive. Good tillage and the maintenance of a good supply of humus will keep the soil in suitable condition for fruit growing. Where stable manure is plentiful, there is probably no better way of supplying humus than by the liberal use of it. When manure is not available, cover or green-manure crops are to be advised. A careful study of the growth of the trees from year to year is necessary for intelligent fertilizing. Young trees usually need considerable quantities of nitrogenous fertilizers in order to make wood growth, while bearing trees require considerable quantities of phosphate and potash. It is impossible to give any definite formulas for fertilizing trees without knowing all the conditions.

Cover Crops.

There are two main groups of plants used for cover crops, namely, leguminous and nonleguminous. The first group comprises such plants as red, crimson, and bur clovers, cowpeas, soy beans, alfalfa, vetch, pennants, and velvet beans. The second group includes rye, oats, buckwheat, millet, rape and turnips.

Cover crops improve the soil in several ways. They improve the physical condition of the land by preventing the soil from cementing together or puddling by holding rains and snows until they can soak away, and by drying out the soil in the spring, making possible early tillage. They catch and hold leaching nitrates, add humus to the soil when plowed under, render plant food available, and collect nitrogen if they are legumes.

Where it is intended to omit tillage for a season, orchards are very commonly seeded down to red clover. Crimson clover is used quite extensively as a winter cover crop in the orchard, especially on the lighter soils throughout New Jersey, Delaware and Maryland. It gives excellent results, particularly in seasons where there is a good supply of moisture in the soil at planting time. Vetch is very widely planted in the northern fruit regions, and alfalfa in the apple orchards of the states west of the Great Divide. Cowpeas and soy beans are very widely planted in the middle and southern latitudes, and velvet beans in the extreme south.

Rye is probably the most widely planted of all the nonleguminous cover crops. It can be sown very late in the season, it germinates when very little moisture is available, and it lives over winter, starting into growth early in the spring. Rye and vetch in combination have been found very satisfactory in many instances.

SIX CAPITAL RULES FOR PLANTING TREES

Holes Should Be Large Enough to Accommodate Roots Without Bending or Crowding.

(By W. J. MORRILL, Colorado Agricultural College, Fort Collins.)

1. Dig hole large enough to accommodate all the roots without bending or crowding; it should be at least 3 feet in diameter and 2 1/2 to 3 feet deep. The loam should be packed around the roots, by thoroughly stamping each shoe. Two or three inches on top should be left loose as it will help to hold the moisture. Plant the tree at the same depth that it stood in the nursery or an inch or two deeper.

2. If soil has become dry, add a few bucketfuls of water to the loam as you plant. Trees newly planted should be thoroughly watered about once a week during dry weather.

3. A stake 9 to 10 feet long should be driven 2 1/2 to 3 feet into the ground near the base of the tree. The end of the stake should be tarred or creosoted for about 4 feet, or 1 foot above the ground. Tie the tree to the stake near the top of the stake by means of a tarred rope slipped through a piece of 3/4-inch rubber hose about 10 inches long, placed around the tree and the stake in the form of a figure eight.

4. A piece of heavy wire netting, 1-inch mesh, 6 feet long and about 20 inches wide should be placed around the tree and fastened to the ground and should come no nearer the tree than 2 inches. The width of the piece of netting will vary according to the size of the tree and stake, and the distance they are apart. Other forms of guards are used, but this one is serviceable and economical.

5. Do not plant trees under wires.

6. Dynamite for blasting holes not only makes the digging easier, but loosens the ground for some distance, causing thrifty, rapid growth in the tree.

WINTER PROTECTION REQUIRED BY TREES

Steps Should Be Taken to Prevent Attacks of Mice and Rabbits in Orchard.

(By J. J. GARDNER, Colorado Agricultural College, Fort Collins.)

There is usually less danger of mice gnawing trees in a cultivated than in a sod orchard. Particularly few young orchards this is one of the best arguments for the practice of cultivation. However, there is always enough danger from mice and rabbits practically everywhere to make it advisable to furnish some kind of protection through the winter. Several methods are satisfactory. The simplest for mice is to tread the snow with the feet about each tree, being careful not to injure the bark. Generally something further is necessary. Late in the fall the tree may be wrapped with good veneer strips. The height necessary for protection will vary according to the distance the tree is headed from the ground. Cellar window wire is also used for this purpose, and in the western fruit country is generally considered better as it admits of a free circulation of air, sunlight, and there is less danger of sun scalding. The wire may be removed in the spring and used year after year.

GRADING APPLES PAYS WELL

Growers Can Make Money for Themselves and Assist in Bettering Market by Little Care.

Apple growers can make more money for themselves and help a great deal in bettering the apple market as it is met by the consumer, if they will take as much care in grading their fruit for size and condition as they do in growing the fruit.

The New Method

(By L. W. BOWER, M. D.)

Backache of any kind is often caused by kidney disorder, which means that the kidneys are not working properly. Poisonous matter and uric acid accumulate within the body in great abundance over-working the sick kidneys, hence the congestion of blood causes backache in the same manner as a similar congestion in the head causes headache. You become nervous, despondent, sick, feverish, irritable, have spots appearing before the eyes, bags under the lids, and lack ambition to do things.

The latest and most effective means of overcoming this trouble, is to eat sparingly of meat, drink plenty water between-meals and take a single Anuria tablet before each meal for a while. Simply ask your favorite druggist for Anuria. If you have lumbago, rheumatism, gout, dropsy, begin immediately with this novel treatment.

Remnant of Only Confederate Balloon Discovered

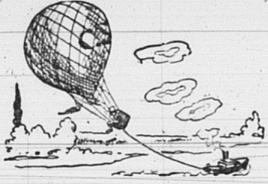

WASHINGTON.—The aviation branch of the war department has just received an interesting present in the shape of a piece of the only balloon owned by the Confederate army, which was made out of silk dresses contributed by the women of Richmond during the siege of that city.

This relic was found among the effects of the late Prof. T. S. C. Lowe, who was aeronaut of the Army of the Potomac during the Civil war. It was given to the war department by his son, Leon P. Lowe of San Francisco.

Professor Lowe was the first aeronaut to take up Count Zeppelin and the first to take up a United States officer, General Heinemann. They looked into Yorktown. General McClellan, who was in command of the Army of the Potomac, had seen balloons used in the Crimean war, and so made use of them in his campaign, selecting Professor Lowe to command that branch.

The captured Confederate balloon was under the command of Gen. E. P. Alexander with the Army of Northern Virginia. It made but one ascension and that not very successful. This balloon was towed down the James river by a tug.

After the balloon was captured, it was turned over to Professor Lowe for whatever use his department might make of it. Being of impractical materials and construction, it was cut up and pieces given as souvenirs to prominent persons of that day.

Woman Scientist Puts Potato Through Its Paces

FOR a number of years past the United States department of agriculture has been studying the potato and scientifically selecting and breeding new varieties that will bring it up to the highest standard of efficiency in its duty to mankind. In its later efforts toward the improvement of the useful tuber, it has called in the assistance of a woman that she may bring her woman's knowledge of home economics to bear upon the study of the vegetable.

It is the province of Miss Margaret Connor, scientific assistant in pomology, the youngest woman scientist in the government employ, to put the potatoes through their paces from the standpoint of the home economist.

Potato growing on a large scale in the United States has been centralized in half a dozen localities, corresponding roughly to the various geographical divisions of the country. This specialization has created a demand for varieties adapted to conditions in particular localities, or for varieties possessing certain desirable qualities, such as heat and drought resistance, resistance to parasitic fungi, early or late maturity, high-starch content, etc.

As a result of the years of selection and breeding literally thousands of seedling potatoes have been secured. These are grown in all parts of the United States where the office of horticulture and pomology has experimental grounds—Maine, Virginia, North Carolina, Colorado and Idaho—and complete records are kept of every phase of their development.

"No matter how disease or drought resistant a potato vine may be, the seedling will prove of little practical importance if the potatoes have a disagreeable flavor or odor, if their flesh turns black after cooking, or if they do not prove suited to the demands of the housewife," said Miss Connor in talking of her work. "The tubers from each seedling which is thought worthy of saving are subjected to a cooking test, and if this is unfavorable the seedling must possess some very desirable culture characteristics to save it from the discard."

"There are three general tests which we apply to each potato—boiling, baking and potato chips. The first two methods of cooking are the foundation of practically all the ways in which potatoes are served in the household."

Awkward Moments When the President Is Present

PRESIDENT WILSON and several of his predecessors have been very generous about attending many of the balls, receptions, and other semi-public functions to which the chief executive is invited, and certainly the president's presence adds immeasurably to the interest of the function.

Usually his arrival with the ladies of his party is marked by some degree of pomp and ceremony, and what is more important, by some cordiality on the part of his hosts, as to the proper form of procedure.

But after the greetings are over there are many awkward moments for all concerned, and usually the president's retreat is almost in the nature of a rout. Take, for instance, the Southern society's ball at the Pan-American building. The first little informal reception, when the president met the guests of honor, the diplomats of Pan-America, was very pleasant, the supper for the distinguished guests a really charming affair.

But between whistles, when the notables were seated in even rows in a sort of roped-off box and the other guests crowded around for a glimpse of them, one could think of nothing but Mrs. Jarley's wax works.

At the Navy Relief ball the president and his party were half way across the room on their way out, when it was suddenly decided that some formal notice should be taken of their departure and the band struck up "The Star-Spangled Banner."

There they had to stand at attention in the middle of the room until it was all over.

The same sort of thing will continue to happen until there is some definite understanding of the etiquette which should attend the arrival of the president, his departure, and the time which he spends at a social function.

Permanent Exposition of States in the Capital

THE long-projected idea of the establishment in Washington of a permanent exposition of the states is revived and advocated on a comprehensive scale by the Federation of Citizens' Associations in conjunction with its plans for holding a government educational exhibit in Washington during the week of February 26 to March 4.

This announcement was made by Charles S. Shreve, president of the federation, who declared that exhibit week, which is to be arranged primarily for the entertainment and instruction of pre-inaugural visitors, will be utilized as the first step toward the carrying out of the larger proposition.

The plan, Mr. Shreve said, is to invite the governors of the states and territories or their personal representatives to attend a mass meeting to be held in Washington, probably on the evening of March 3, for the purpose of considering the desirability of establishing a permanent exposition here.

Whether the original suggestion for separate buildings for the states will be advocated or in lieu of that, the proposal for one building in which each state will be represented by a room or suite of rooms where its exhibits may be installed, the conference itself will determine.

Many Washington organizations from time to time have advocated the permanent exposition idea, and members of the federation believe that the time is now at hand for launching the undertaking on a big scale.

SEEMS TO PUT PEACE FAR OFF

Reply of Entente to President Wilson by No Means Conciliatory in Tone.

MEAN TO CONTINUE WAR

Terms on Which They Would Agree to a Cessation of Hostilities Will Not Be Considered by Germany—Berlin Makes Statement.

Washington.—Following is the translation of the entente allies' reply to President Wilson's peace note, transmitted to the state department by Ambassador William G. Sharp in Paris: "Ambassador Sharp to the Secretary of State, American Embassy, Paris, Jan. 10, 1917.

"The allied governments have received the note which was delivered to them in the name of the government of the United States on the 10th of December, 1916. They have studied it with the care imposed upon them both by the exact realization which they have of the gravity of the hour and by the sincere friendship which attaches them to the American people.

"In a general way they wish to declare that they pay tribute to the elevation of the sentiment with which the American note is inspired and that they associate themselves with all their hopes with the project for the creation of a league of nations to insure peace and justice throughout the world.

"They recognize all the advantages for the cause of humanity and civilization which the institution of international agreements destined to avoid violent conflicts between nations would prevent, agreements which must imply the sanctions necessary to insure their execution and thus to prevent an apparent security from only facilitating new aggressions.

"But a discussion of future arrangements destined to insure an enduring peace presupposes a satisfactory settlement of the actual conflict.

"The allies have as profound a desire as the government of the United States to terminate as soon as possible a war for which the central empires are responsible and which inflicts such cruel sufferings upon humanity.

Not True for Peace.

"But they believe that it is impossible at the present moment to attain a peace which will assure them reparation, restitution, and such guarantees to which they are entitled by the aggression for which the responsibility rests with the central powers and of which the principle itself tended to ruin the security of Europe; a peace which would, on the other hand, permit the establishment of the future of European nations on a solid basis.

"The allied nations are conscious that they are not fighting for selfish interests, but above all to safeguard the independence of peoples, or right, and of humanity.

"The allies are fully aware of the losses and suffering which the war has caused to neutrals as well as to belligerents, and they deplore them; but they do not hold themselves responsible for them, having in no way either willed or provoked this war, and they strive to reduce these damages in the measure compatible with the inexorable exigencies of their defense against the violence and the wiles of the enemy.

Understand U. S. Position.

"It is with satisfaction, therefore, that they take note of the declaration that the American communication is in nowise associated with that of the central powers transmitted on the 18th of December by the government of the United States. They did not doubt, moreover, the resolution of that government to avoid even the appearance of a support, even moral, of the authors responsible for the war.

"The allied governments believe that they must protest in the most friendly but in the most specific manner against the assimilation established in the American note between the two groups of belligerents; this assimilation, based upon public declarations by the central powers, is in direct opposition to the evidence, both as regards responsibility for the past and as concerns guarantees for the future; President Wilson in mentioning it certainly had no intention of associating himself with it.

"If there is a historical fact established at the present date, it is the willful aggression of Germany and Austria-Hungary to insure their hegemony over Europe and their economic domination over the world.

"Germany proved by her declaration of war, by the immediate violation of Belgium and Luxembourg, and by her manner of conducting the war, her systematic contempt for all principles of humanity and all respect for small states; as the conflict developed the attitude of the central powers and their allies has been a continual defiance of humanity and civilization.

Cites Enemy's Atrocities.

"Is it necessary to recall the horrors which accompanied the invasion of Belgium and of Serbia, the atrocious regime imposed upon the invaded countries, the massacre of hundreds of thousands of inoffensive Armenians, the barbarities perpetrated against the populations of Syria, the raids of Zeppelins on open towns, the destruction by submarines of passenger steamers and of merchantmen even under neutral flags, the cruel treatment inflicted upon prisoners of war, the juridical murders of Miss Cavell, of Captain Fryatt, the deportation and reduction to slavery of civil populations, etc.?

"The execution of such a series of crimes perpetrated without any regard for universal reprobation fully explains to President Wilson the protest of the allies.

"They consider that the note which they sent to the United States in reply to the German note will be a response to the questions put by the American government, and, according to the exact words of the latter, constitute a 'public declaration as to the conditions upon which the war could be terminated.'

"President Wilson desires more: He desires that the belligerent powers openly affirm the objects which they seek by continuing the war; the allies experience no difficulty in replying to this request.

"Their objects in the war are well known; they have been formulated on many occasions by the chiefs of their divers governments. Their objects in the war will not be made known in detail, with all the equitable compensations and indemnities for damage suffered until the hour of negotiations.

Their Terms Stated.

"But the civilized world knows that they imply in all necessity and in the first instance the restoration of Belgium, of Serbia, and of Montenegro and the indemnities which are due them; the evacuation of the invaded territories of France, of Russia, and of Roumania, with just reparation; the reorganization of Europe guaranteed by a stable regime and founded as much upon respect of nationalities and full security and liberty of economic development which all nations, great or small, possess, as upon territorial conventions and international agreements suitable to guarantee territorial and maritime frontiers against unjustified attacks; the restitution of provinces or territories wrested in the past from the allies by force or against the will of their populations; the liberation of Italians, of Slavs, of Roumanians, and of Techo-Slovaks (Czech Slavs) from foreign domination; the enfranchisement of populations subject to the bloody tyranny of the Turks; the expulsion from Europe of the Ottoman empire decidedly . . . (apparent omission) to western civilization.

"The intentions of his majesty the emperor of Russia regarding Poland have been clearly indicated in the proclamation which he has just addressed to his armies.

"It goes without saying that if the allies wish to liberate Europe from the brutal covetousness of Prussian militarism it never has been their design, as has been alleged, to encompass the extermination of the German peoples and their political disappearance.

"That which they desire above all is to insure a peace upon the principles of liberty and justice, upon the inviolable fidelity to international obligations with which the government of the United States has never ceased to be inspired.

"United in the pursuits of this supreme object, the allies are determined, individually and collectively, to act with all their power and to consent to all sacrifices to bring to a victorious close a conflict upon which they are convinced not only safety and prosperity depends but also the future civilization itself. "SHARP."

Belgium Takes Firm Stand.

Washington.—A supplementary Belgian note, which accompanied the entente allies' reply to President Wilson's peace appeal, pays tribute to the sentiment of humanity which prompted the president of the United States to send his note to the belligerent powers, and declares ardent wish to end the war. It refers to the German treatment of Belgium as "barbarous," and alleges the former government, after the occupation of Belgian territory, displayed no better observance of the rules of international law or the stipulations of The Hague convention. The heavy taxation imposed on the country, and the deportation of Belgian workers, are denounced.

Germany Denies Allies' Charges.

Berlin.—"We offered peace and meant what we said. The offer was spurned. We shall fight on until that peace which might have been gained by diplomacy is won by our sword."

In substance, this is what Germany, speaking for her allies, Austro-Hungary, Bulgaria and Turkey—told the neutral world on Thursday.

The note is, in effect, a reply to the entente's rejection of that offer.

"The form in which they clothe their communication," says the note, "excludes an answer to them." For this reason that which the central powers feel they should make known to the world is told in the message to the neutrals.

Reiteration of the assertion that the responsibility for the continuance of the war does not rest with the central powers, a statement of the central powers' case in the conflict, emphatic refutation of the accusations made in the entente's reply to the peace offer, and a renewed expression of "the will to victory" are the main features of the note.

$26,013.47 SPENT BY DEMOCRATS

THE DEMOCRATS RAISED $30,162.15 AND HAVE A BALANCE IN THE TREASURY FOR SPRING ELECTION.

E. O. WOOD, DONATED $1,000

Personal Contributions Amounted to $23,982.45—The Democratic National Committee Put Up $5,901.

Lansing—It cost the Democrats of Michigan $26,013.47 to conduct the campaign last fall according to the report of Harris E. Thomas, treasurer of the Democratic central committee. This is about $1,000 less than the expenses of the Republican committee. The Democrats raised $30,162.15, and now have a balance in the treasury for the spring campaign.

Personal contributions amounted to $23,982.45. The Democratic national committee put $5,901 into the Michigan campaign.

Edwin O. Wood, of New York city, former Democratic national committeeman from Michigan, was the largest individual contributor.—Mr. Wood donated $1,000 to the committee, while Lawrence Price, of Lansing, Democratic candidate for United States senator, put nearly $900 into the state campaign fund.

Among the long list of contributors appear the names of Insurance Commissioner John T. Winship $100, State Oil Inspector R. E. Barron $100, United States District Attorney John Kinnane $200, United States Marshal Henry Behrendt $200, United States Marshal Herman O'Connor $200, ex-Governor Woodbridge N. Ferris $150, Postmaster Charles Hogadone of Grand Rapids $100, Thomas Gloster of the Industrial accident board $100, Postmaster W. J. Nagel of Detroit $300, Railroad Commissioner Charles S. Cunningham $100, Mediation and Arbitration Commissioner Frank Dodge $100, and H. W. Riker of Lansing $100.

The largest item of expense, according to the report, was for advertising. The advertising bills amounted to $7,083.75, of which $1,745 was spent for display cards in street cars.

CANVASSING VOTES BIG ITEM

Wets Spent $198,579.05 During Campaign Trying to Defeat Prohibition.

Detroit—"Canvassing voters" was one of the big items of expense of the Home Rule league during the late campaign to defeat prohibition. The munificent sum of $198,579.05 was expended for work of this description.

Just what is meant by "canvassing voters" is not made clear by the league's report, but most of the canvassing must have been done on election day, as the largest sums were paid out near this time. The sums paid for work of this kind range from $2.50 to $7,000, the latter amount having been paid to John Mohr, November 6. Mr. Mohr must have been one of the league's official distributors of the "canvassing voters" fund, for the report shows that $5,000 was also paid to him on November 1 for "canvassing voters," and that a total of $28,800 was paid to him during the campaign.

INDIANS CLAIM $10,000,000

Tribes of Michigan Will Wage Fight to Collect Large Sum They Claim U. S. Owes Them.

Manistee—With a meeting here Jan. 23, Ottawa and Chippewa Indians of all parts of Michigan will start a fight to collect $10,000,000 out of which they claim the government has defrauded them. The fight will be carried to President Wilson, if such course is necessary and possible.

Claims which will be placed against the government date from 1795. Since that time, it is said, 135 treaties have been made with the two tribes. Had the terms of the treaties been observed by the government, the Indians say, more than $17,000,000 would have been paid them.

MICHIGAN STATE ITEMS

The Saginaw supervisors will ask the Michigan legislature to pass a general road act providing a consistent plan for the construction, financing and maintenance of roads. At a committee meeting recently held a report was adopted calling upon the supervisors to frame such a bill and present it to the legislature.

NATION MOURNS DEWEY'S DEATH

HERO OF MANILA SUCCUMBS AFTER A WEEK'S ILLNESS AT THE AGE OF 79.

MANY SEND CONDOLENCE

Admiral G. Dewey Fought and Won the First Great American Naval Battle Against a Foreign Fleet Since 1812.

Washington—Admiral George Dewey, the hero of Manila bay and president of the general board of the navy, died at his home here after a week's illness, at the age of 79.

Mrs. Mildred McLean Dewey, his wife, who was constantly with him through his brief illness, was at his bedside when the end came.

The doctors delayed the announcement of the admiral's death some 15 minutes.

The admiral had been unconscious for hours and his death had been expected. He had suffered great pain throughout the past two days, but with the approach of death he subsided into a state of quiet coma, which lasted to the end.

As the president of the general board of the navy, ranking officer of the naval organization, lay dying in his room, official Washington besieged the house for word of his condition.

After the announcement of Admiral Dewey's death a flood of statements of condolence from official Washington was forthcoming. Headed by the president, the chiefs of the government expressed their grief at the death of one of the most famous figures of American history.

Admiral George Dewey, "hero of Manila bay," fought and won the first great American naval battle against a foreign foe since the War of 1812.

His whole life was full of honorable achievement from the days of the Civil war down to the time when, as the head of the navy general board, he began the last chapter of his work by laying plans for the defense of his country in time of war. His life was a striking exemplification of the possibilities of a career upon the exact and intelligent performance of every routine duty which molds a man on inflexible lines of duty and honor.

During January and February schools will be conducted as follows: Jan. 9-12, Gilead, Lowell, Hudson, Freeport, China township; Jan. 23-26, New Richmond, Big Prairie, Colon, Beerlin; Jan. 30 to Feb. 8, Hartford, Rockford, Dublin, Saginaw; Feb. 6-9, Brookside, Algonac, Benton Harbor, South Haven, Kent City; Feb. 13-16, Springfield, Allegan, Zeeland, Reese, Coloma; Feb. 19-23, Etna, Holland, Marcellus, Three Rivers, Scotts; Feb. 27 to March 7, Athens, Ironton, Au Claire, Paw, Paw; March 13-6, Charlevoix, Bingham, Victory township, Harbor Springs.

FERRIS LOSTRACE FOR MAYOR

Mayor A. B. Cogger, Receives a Total of 615 Votes and Ferris Received 417.

Big Rapids—Former Governor Ferris was defeated in the recall election for mayor of this city by Mayor A. B. Cogger.

Out of a total of 1,032 votes cast Cogger received 615 and Ferris 417, a majority of 198 for Cogger. Both men live in the First ward. Ferris lost the ward by 39, Cogger receiving 115 votes and Ferris 76.

In the Third and Fifth wards, the factory district, Cogger received 313 and Ferris 124.

The election was the result of recall proceedings instituted against Mayor A. E. Cogger and Commissioner Y. W. Miles and W. A. Northrup. Both Miles and Northrup were re-elected by large majorities. Miles received 654 votes and Northrup 642. The two candidates for commissioner were sent down to defeat with former Governor Ferris were L. F. Bertram and Max Marx.

The Pere Marquette shops at Ionia employing 280 men, will shut down for lack of coal.

The body of Clarence Hinton, 35 years old, was found on the Lake Shore railroad. He had frozen to death. The body was under a pile of ties and within 10 miles of a farmhouse three miles west of Hudson.

Washington—Because of the increase the cost of labor and material since the 1917 army budget was made up at the last session, Secretary Baker has submitted to the house a deficiency estimate of $1,795,000 for ordnance stores and supplies.

The Destroying Angel

By LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

THE POOL OF FLAME, THE BRONZE BELL, THE BLACK DAG, THE BRASS BOMB.

D ID you ever risk your life and come within a breath of losing it while trying to save a friend? There is a mighty thrilling episode pictured in this installment.

Taking up the thread of the story, you will recall that Hugh Whitaker, returning to New York five years after his supposed death, finds his wife, now a famous actress known as Sara Law, engaged to marry Drummond, his old partner. Drummond supposedly commits suicide. Sara Law disappears. Whitaker, assailed mysteriously, goes to the country place of Martin Ebmer.

He becomes acquainted with charming Miss Fiske, living nearby, and discovers she is watching her. One night she is abducted in a motor boat when Whitaker starts to make a call. He follows the kidnapers in another launch and sees their boat wrecked on a reef.

clashed them to its bosom, tossed them high upon its great glassy shoulder. They fought madly to retain that place, and to such purpose that they rode it over a dozen yards before it crashed upon the beach, annihilating itself in a furious welter of creaming waters. Whitaker felt land beneath his feet.

The rest was like the crisis of a nightmare drawn out to the limit of human endurance. The undertow tore at Whitaker's legs as with a hundred murderous hands. He came out of it eventually to find himself well up on the beach leaning against the careened hull of a dismantled catboat with a gaping rent in its side. At a little distance the woman was sitting in the sands, bosom and shoulders heaving convulsively, damp, matted hair veiling her like a curtain of sunlit seaweed.

He moved with painful effort toward her. She turned up to him her piteous, written face, white as parchment.

"Are you—hurt?" he managed to ask.

"I mean—injured?"

She moved her head from side to side, as if she could not speak for panting.

"I'm—glad," he said dully. "You stay—here . . . I'll go get help."

He raised his eyes, peering inland.

Back of the beach the land rose in long, sweeping hillocks, treeless but green. His curiously befogged vision made out a number of shapes that resembled dwellings.

"Go . . . get . . . help . . ." he repeated thickly.

He started off with a brave, staggering rush that carried him a dozen feet inland. Then his knees turned to water, and the blackness of night shut down upon his senses.

When Whitaker awoke the afternoon was cloudy-warm and bright, so that his eyes were grateful for the shade of a white parasol that a girl was holding over him. He grew suspicious of his senses; and when the parasol was transformed into the shape of a woman wearing a clumsy jacket of soiled covert cloth over a nondescript garment of weirdly printed calico—then he was sure that something was wrong with him.

Besides, the woman suddenly turned and bent over him an anxious face, exclaiming in accents of consternation: "O dear! If he's delirious!"

His voice, when he strove to answer, rustled and rattled so that he barely managed to say: "What nonsense! I'm just thirsty!"

"I thought you would be," said the woman, calmly; "so I brought water. Here."

She offered a tin vessel to his lips. He sat up suddenly, seized the vessel and buried his face in it, gradually tilting it, while its cool, delicious sweetness irrigated his arid tissues, until every blessed drop was drained. Then, and not till then, he lowered the pail and with sane vision began to renew acquaintance with the world.

He was sitting in the lee of the beached catboat. The woman he had rescued sat quite near him. The gale was still booming overhead, but now with less force (or so he fancied); and the surf still crashed in thunders on the beach a hundred feet or more away; but the haze was lighter, and the blue of the sky was visible, if tarnished.

The sands curved off in a wide crescent, ending in a long, sandy spit. There was a low, ragged earth bank rising from the sands. Midway between the beach and where the busy uplands lifted their blurred profile against the faded sky, stood a commonplace farmhouse, in good repair, strongly constructed and neatly painted; with a brood of out buildings. Here and there, in scattered groups and singly, sheep foraged.

With puzzled eyes Whitaker sought counsel and enlightenment of the woman, and found in her appearance quite as much to confound anticipation and deepen perplexity. What she had worn the night before he could not say; but it certainly could have had nothing in common with the worn, stained, misshapen jacket covering her shoulders, beneath it the calico wrapper scant and crude beyond belief, upon her feet the rusty wrecks that once had been shoes.

As for himself, his once white flannel trousers were precious souvenirs, even though the cloth had contracted to an alarming extent—uncomfortable as well; while his tennis shoes remained tolerably intact, and the canvas-brace had shrunk upon his ankle until it gripped it like a vise.

But these details he absorbed rather than studied, in the first few moments subsequent to his awakening. His chiefest and most direct interest centered upon the woman. There was a warm color in the cheeks that he had last seen livid, there was the wonted play of light and shadow in her fascinating eyes; there were graceful rounded curves where had been sunken surfaces, hollowed out by fatigue and strain; and there remained the ineluctable allurements of her tremendous vitality.

"You are not hurt?" he demanded.

"You are—all right?"

"Quite," she told him with a smile significant of her appreciation of his generous feeling. "But you? Haven't you slept at all?"

"Oh, surely—a great deal. But I've been awake for some time—a few hours."

"But I—I! What time is it?"

"I haven't a watch, but late afternoon, I should think—going by the sun. It's nearly down."

"Good heavens!" he muttered, gasped. "I have slept!"

"You earned your right to. . . . You needed it far more than I." Her eyes shone, warm with kindness.

She swayed almost imperceptibly toward him. Her voice was low pitched and a trifle broken with emotion:

"You saved my life—"

"I—? Oh, that was only what any other man—"

"None other did!"

"Please don't speak of it—I mean, consider it that way," he stammered. "What I want to know is, where are we?"

Her reply was more distant. "On an island, somewhere. It's uninhabited, I think."

He could only echo in bewilderment: "An island . . . ! Uninhabited . . . !" Dismay assailed him. He got up, after a little struggle overcoming the resistance of stiff and sore limbs, and stood with a hand on the coaming of the dismantled catboat, raking the island with an incredulous stare.

She stirred from her place and offered him a hand. "Please help me up."

He turned eagerly, with a feeling of chagrin that she had needed to ask him. For an instant he had both her hands, warm and womanly, in his grasp, while she rose by his aid, and for an instant longer—possibly by way of reward. Then she disengaged them with gentle firmness.

She stood beside him so tall and fair, so serenely invested with the flawless dignity of her womanhood that he no longer thought of the incongruity of her grotesque garb.

"You've been up there?" he asked, far too keenly interested to scorn the self-evident.

She gave a comprehensive gesture, embracing the visible prospect. "All over. . . . When I woke, I thought surely . . . I want to see, found nothing living except the sheep and some chickens and turkeys in the farmyard. And the farmhouse—apparently it's ordinarily inhabited. Evidently the people have gone away for a visit somewhere. It gives the impression of

LAWSON SURPRISES MANY IN LEAK QUIZ

NAMES REPRESENTATIVE R. L. HENRY CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE AS LEAK INFORMER.

Washington—Thomas W. Lawson, hailed before the house rules committee to tell what he knew or had heard about a stock market "leak" on President Wilson's peace note or be punished, calmly declared that the mysterious congressman who told him a cabinet officer, a senator and a banker were engaged in a stock gambling pool, was none other than Representative Henry, chairman of the committee.

Then, before his hearers had time to recover from the shock, Lawson sprung one sensation after the other by declaring that the cabinet officer referred to was Secretary McAdoo; that the banker was H. Pinney Fiske, of New York, and that he knew the senator by the initial "O."

To complete the explosion Lawson went on to charge that Paul M. Warburg, of the Federal Reserve board, had knowledge of the "leak" machinery; repeated a rumor that Count von Bernstorff, the German ambassador, had made $2,000,000 in the stock market, and to mention a list of well known men whom he thought should be questioned. The committee promptly issued subpoenas for all of them.

Mr. Lawson said he had been told that Malcolm McAdoo, the secretary's brother, knew of the "leak," as did C. D. Barney & Co., and Stewart G. Gibbons, of New York. A Mrs. Ruth Thompson Visconti, of this city, he said, had declared to him in the presence of her attorney, that Secretary Tumulty "received his bit" and that W. W. Price, one of the White House correspondents, was "the go-between for Tumulty and others."

H. Pinney Fiske, Lawson said, was the banker he referred to previously as dominating a cabinet officer, and Archibald White, he said, had given him this information.

IN THESE EXCERPTS ALLIES AND KAISER STAB PEACE HOPES

How the Allies, answering President Wilson and the Kaiser, in synchronized counter, each slammed a door on peace is shown in the following extracts.

The Allies Demand

The restoration of Belgium, of Serbia, and of Montenegro. The indemnities due them.

Evacuation of the invaded territories of France, of Russia and of Rumania, with just reparation.

Reorganization of Europe guaranteed by a stable regime.

Restoration of provinces or territories wrested in the past from the Allies by force or against the will of their populations.

Liberation of Italians, of Slavs, of Rumanians and of Techo Slovaques from foreign domination.

Enfranchisement of population subject to the bloody tyranny of the Turks.

Expulsion from Europe of the Ottoman empire, which has proved itself so radically alien to western civilization.

The Kaiser Proclaims

Germany and her allies made an honest attempt to terminate the war and open the road for an understanding among the belligerents. The imperial government merely depended upon the decision of the adversaries whether the road towards peace should be entered upon or not.

The hostile governments have declined to accept this road. Upon them falls the full responsibility for the continuation of the bloodshed.

The four (Teutonic) allied powers, however, shall continue to struggle until a peace will be gained which guarantees to their nations their honor, existence and liberty of development.

AUDITORIUM SUPPORTS SELF

During Nine Years the Total Receipts Were $71,289.79.

Saginaw—Saginaw's municipally-owned auditorium, which is the largest and best equipped in the state, having a capacity of 4,000, has recently had its accounts audited for the entire period since it was opened in 1908. The audit shows most gratifying results. During the nine year period the total receipts were $71,289.79, and the expenditures $70,229.55, leaving a balance in the treasury of $1,060.27. The expenditures include not only maintenance and running expenses of all kinds but an outlay of $8,077.42 for improvements.

Miss Edith Lindensmitt, 11 years old, daughter of Sheriff Herman Lindensmitt, of Ann Arbor swallowed three pins while playing with her doll. Her mother patted her on the back and she coughed two of them up. A doctor at the university hospital removed the other and in an hour and a half from the time Edith swallowed the pins she was busy making a pin cushion. The pin which lodged in the girl's throat was removed without injuring the child.

Nearly a block of the business section of Riverdale, burned when flames destroyed four buildings, two used by stores, one by a barber shop and one by a cream station.

"This woman is not dead. My services are not needed," declared Coroner Simeon LeRoy of Grand Rapids as he looked at Mrs. Belle Shannon, 90 years old, who had been found unconscious. Coroner LeRoy summoned the family physician after administering first aid. As he prepared to go the woman died. The coroner pronounced death due to old age.

G. W. WELSH WINS IN RECOUNT

His Majority Being 175 Votes Over Theodore Vanderveen His Opponent.

Grand Rapids—Alderman George W. Welsh, Republican, has been elected the legislative recount his majority being 175 over Theodore Vanderveen, Democrat, who on the face of the original returns won by 60 votes. Joseph J. Front and Henry Schmidt, Democrats, who were elected to the house over William DeBoen and Adrian DeFoung by pluralities of about 800 and who joined in the contest with Welsh, withdrew when the early returns showed no appreciable change in their favor.

INSTITUTIONS LEFT $25,000

Mrs. Anna Sears in Will Filed for Probate Gives to Educational and Religious Institutions.

Ann Arbor—According to the will of the late Mrs. Anna Sears, filed with the probate court, more than half her estate, or $25,000, was given to religious and educational institutions for the furtherance of the work for which each is designed. The First Congregational church of Chelsea got $5,000 and like sums went to the Michigan Home Missionary society; the Women's Board of Missions of the Interior, and Olivet college. The latter sum is to be used as a loan fund for needy students at Olivet.

William Toering, of Cadillac, a farmer, is dying from injuries he received when the side of a gravel pit in which he was working caved in. He was completely buried and was unconscious when workmen reached him. Thomas Murdock, a retired farmer, of Corunna, is recovering despite that he has a broken neck. Murdock was standing in a box car when another car was shunted against it. He is now able to be about the home, although doctors say a turn in the neck is liable to prove fatal.

being a home the year round. There isn't any boat—

"No boat?"

"Not a sign of one, that I can find—except this wreck." She indicated the catboat.

"But you can't do anything with this," he expostulated.

The deep, wide break in its side placed it beyond consideration, even if it should prove possible to remedy, its many other lacks.

"No. The people who live here must have a boat—I saw a mooring buoy out there—with a gesture toward the water. "Of course. How else could they get away?"

"The question is, how we are to get away," he grumbled, morose.

"You'll find the way," she told him with quiet confidence.

"I'll find the way? How?"

"I don't know—only you must. There must be some way of signaling the mainland, some means of communication. Surely people wouldn't live here, cut off from all the world . . . Perhaps well and something in the farmhouse to tell us what to do. I didn't have much time, to look round. I wanted clothing, mostly—and found these awful things hanging behind the kitchen door. And then I wanted something to eat, and I found that—some bread, not too stale, and plenty of eggs in the henhouse. . . . And you—you must be famished!"

What do you suppose Whitaker and Miss Fiske will find on the island—a solution of the whole mystery?

A QUESTION OF DRESS

By EARL REED SILVERS.

"I wish I could take you over to the horse show in New York tomorrow night," said Jim Chambers, speaking with the frankness of an engaged young man to his worshiping fiancée. "But I can't. I'm dead broke."

Edythe Merritt sighed resignedly. "If you only could," she suggested, "I would wear my green taffeta."

"Well, why not wear it to the club tonight?"

"I can't; it's an afternoon dress."

"What's it like?"

Edythe manifested a slight degree of interest.

"I'll let you see a picture of it if you care to," she said rising. "It's in the April Ladies' Star."

"Here it is," explained Edythe, opening the magazine and indicating one of three young ladies representing the very latest of spring styles. "And—well, isn't that strange?"

"Isn't that strange?"

"Why on this very page is the pattern for Doris Howard's evening dress."

Jim's eyes opened wide. A picture of the country club bazaar as his sister had described it flashed before him. "Which one?" he asked.

"The one next to mine. My, but it's pretty."

"Not so pretty as yours. You have a new hat to go with the dress, haven't you?"

"Yes! Would you like to see it?"

"Sure; go up and put it on."

Edythe hurried upstairs; and as soon as she had disappeared, Jim seized the magazine she had laid on the table and looked long and earnestly at a picture of a dimpled young lady in blue satin, covered with silk net of the same shade. Then, hearing signs of activity from the room above, he hastily drew forth a pen-knife and cut picture and description of the girl from the printed page.

After supper that evening, before he took Edythe to the bazaar at the country club, Jim drew a slip of paper from his pocket and consumed 15 long minutes in learning, word for word, the detailed description of a certain evening gown. Reaching the club, he wandered around with seeming aimlessness, gradually drawing his companion toward a certain anteroom, over the door of which were emblazoned the words, "The Great Dress Description Contest."

"It's a guessing contest," the girl explained. "Doris Howard has on her new evening dress. Any man who thinks he knows anything about dresses is given five minutes in which to write a description of it. The one who writes the best description wins the prize of twenty-five dollars."

"Lough to know a lot about dresses, hearing you describe yours all the time," said Jim thoughtfully. "I guess I'll take a chance."

He entered the room and was seated at a table with paper and pencil before him.

Jim glanced at Doris Howard, who was standing on a slightly raised platform at the far end of the room. Smiling confidently, he set to work.

"This beautiful evening gown is of pink satin, silk net of the same shade and maize silk net bordered with gold spangles," he wrote. "The wide grille and pointed skirt sections of satin are mounted over a lining-foundation, while the top of the bodice and sleeve sections are of gold net joined with the spangled guimpe. The skirt has a foundation of messaline, finished at the bottom with a flounce of lace."

His description finished, he rejoined Edythe outside.

They wandered about from booth to booth, chatting happily until midnight arrived, when the various prizes were awarded.

"The great dress description contest," the president of the club announced, "drew forth many responses, but by far the best description was given by our well-known fellow-clubman, Mr. Jim Chambers. This effort was a masterpiece." He paused.

Jim smiled broadly.

"What did I tell you?" he whispered to Edythe. "You can wear your new dress after all!"

"But," the president continued, "although Mr. Chambers' description was a wonder, he described the wrong dress. Miss Howard's creation, the ladies inform me, is of rose-colored taffeta and pale pink chiffon cloth, while the dress described by Mr. Chambers was of satin, covered with silk net and bordered with gold spangles. Therefore, while we feel that Mr. Chambers should receive honorable mention, the prize must go to Mr. Harold Janeway, whose description, although less flowery, was more exact."

When he had partly recovered from the shock Jim drew Edythe to one corner of the room.

"Didn't you tell me this was Doris Howard's dress?" he asked, indicating the crumpled piece of paper he had drawn from his pocket.

Edythe glanced at it, burst into a stifled roar of laughter.

"You foolish, foolish boy," she said, when she could control herself. "That isn't the one; you cut out the wrong picture and description. The right one was on the other side of my dress."

"Well, I'll be jiggered!" Jim looked the picture of dejection, and the girl placed her hand impulsively on his arm.

"Never mind," she said softly. "I didn't want to go to the horse show, anyhow."

A TIP

The Saturday Evening Post, January 8th, says in effect:

"A small part of the urban population of the United States have made money on the rise of stocks. A LARGE part are regretting they did not also wade in and are seriously considering wading in now."

"It is a matter of historical fact that the time when everybody wades in is usually about half-an-hour before stocks begin to go down."

"We have no hesitation in giving this tip: Now is a good time to leave stocks alone and buy sound bonds. In fact, any time is a good time to buy sound bonds."

And now, what are "sound bonds"? Such bonds as pay over 5%—bonds in which both principal and interest are GUARANTEED—bonds in which every $1 of investment is secured by more than $2 of actual income-producing property—bonds that are Tax-Exempt.

Such bonds are SOUND bonds—and they are such bonds that you get in our $100, $500 and $1,000 5% Guaranteed First Mortgage Bond Certificates.

ASK YOUR BANKER. Send for descriptive Booklet of Sound Bonds.

Foley's Honey and Tar for This!

Stops La Grippe Coughs!

The quickest and simplest way to stop an ugly, hard, la grippe cough is to take Foley's Honey and Tar

In it, you get the curative influence of the pine balsam (so beneficial for inflamed bronchial tubes and sore chest) and other healing ingredients, together with the mollifying laxative action of honey.

It covers and sheathes the inflamed surfaces of the throat, puts an end to the hard, racking cough stops tickling and hoarseness.

Bedford, Ind., F. C. Prevo writes: "Two bottles of Foley's Honey and Tar cured me of a severe cough following an attack of la grippe."
