SUDDEN DEATH OF MRS. JOHN BUSH

Stricken By Apoplexy While Returning From Garden.

Mrs. John Bush died suddenly Wednesday morning about 9:15 o'clock while returning from her husband's garden a short distance north of town on McKinley street. Death was due to apoplexy.

Peter Beserep, an employe of the Michigan Portland Cement company, witnessed Mrs. Bush's sudden death. He was taking a walk out McKinley street and met Mrs. Bush, coming south, opposite B. Steinbach's property, just north of Letts creek. She spoke to him saying she was ill, and asked to be assisted to her home. He replied, asking where she lived, but before she could answer, she sank to the ground. Death was probably instantaneous.

It is said Mrs. Bush had been troubled with dizzy spells for a week past and had consulted a doctor regarding the trouble. Justice H. H. Avery was called, but decided that an inquest was unnecessary.

Mrs. Bush was born in Ohio, June 13, 1853, her maiden name being Amanda Shults. She was married in Hastings, September 27, 1878, and continued to reside in that place until about seven years ago, when Mr. and Mrs. Bush moved to this place. Her husband, one sister and a brother survive.

The funeral was held from the house this morning at ten o'clock, Rev. Albert A. Schoen conducting the service. Interment at Oak Grove cemetery.

SOLDIER BOYS' BANQUET

Chelsea People Honor Men Called to Uphold World Democracy.

Maccabee hall was crowded to overflowing last evening at the banquet given by the citizens of Chelsea in honor of the men recently drafted for the new national army and who will soon be called upon to report at Camp Custer, or who have already enlisted in various branches of the military service.

The banquet was served by the Maccabee ladies, about 200 being present. H. D. Witherell was toastmaster and the program follows:

Prayer—Rev. G. H. Whitney.
Vocal solo, "King of the Winds"—Blaine Barch, with piano accompaniment by Miss Josephine Miller. Encore, "Wake-Up."

Address—Rev. Lloyd Douglas, pastor of the Congregational church, Ann Arbor.

Reading—Mrs. J. N. Dancer.
Address—Rev. P. W. Dierberger.
Vocal solo, "One Fleeting Hour"—Miss Dorothy Bacon, with accompaniment by Miss Nina Belle Wurster. As an encore, Miss Bacon sang, "Fall in U. S. A."

Rev. Douglas in his address said that the present world war was the result of an inevitable clash between two social systems; one of which recognizes the necessary mutual cooperation of man, the other which believes in aggressiveness and the supremacy as expressed in the so-called German "kultur." World peace cannot exist until the latter social system is wiped out.

In the course of a few remarks by Rev. Dierberger, he mentioned the fact that he envied the young men about to go to the front and wished he was within the prescribed age. Rev. Dierberger has offered his services to the government as chaplain and is anxiously awaiting the acceptance of his application, which gives more force to his words and betrays any alleged insincerity on his part.

The Tribune is asked to announce that "comfort kits" have been prepared for everyone of the soldier boys and that they may be secured by calling at Dancer Bros. store.

MISSION SERVICES.

The program for the mission services Sunday at St. Paul's church is as follows:

Morning service, 9:30 o'clock—Hymn, congregation; prayer and creed; "Great is the Lord," choir; scripture; hymn; sermon, Rev. Theo. Eisen of Sandusky, Ohio; "Be Ye Joyful," choir; announcements, hymn and offering; benediction.

Afternoon service, 2:00 o'clock—Hymn, congregation; scripture and prayer; "The Allhighest," choir; sermon, Rev. H. Schottle of Dexter; hymn; sermon, Rev. F. Lueckhoff of Freedom; greetings, Sister Melinda Schmid; quartette, "Sing Aloud Unto God;" announcements, hymn and offering; benediction.

Evening service, 7:00 o'clock—Congregational singing; scripture; quartette, "How Blessed are the People;" prayer; hymn; sermon, Rev. Theo. Eisen; duet, "Say Watchman, What of the Night;" announcements, offering and hymn; closing service.

NEW SERIAL STORY

"The Girl Who Had No God," Starts in This Issue of the Tribune.

The opening chapters of a new serial story by Mary Roberts Rhinehart, the highest paid woman fiction writer in the world, appear in this issue of the Tribune.

It is a "mystery story" and if you enjoy queer tales, this one is sure to satisfy your biggest expectation. A pulse-stirring tale of a beautiful young girl who succeeds her father in the leadership of a band of intellectual anarchistic bandits. Read the opening chapters on page three of this issue. Succeeding installments will be published each week in Friday's issue.

SCHENK - LITTERAL.

Miss Adah Schenk and Mr. Harry Litteral were married Thursday evening, August 30, 1917, at six o'clock at the Schenk home in West Sylvan, Rev. George Nothdurft officiating.

The ring service was used, little Miss Helen Dancer of Chelsea, niece of the bride being the ring-bearer. Miss Linda Kalmbach played the wedding march and Miss Grace Schenk sang, "Oh Promise Me." The bride and groom were attended by Miss Agnes Cunningham of Chicago and Mr. John Fletcher of Chelsea.

Following the ceremony a four course dinner was served to about 40 guests, including Mrs. Ed. Pickell and daughter of Detroit, Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Kirkby and family of Jackson, Miss Cunningham from Chicago, and many relatives and friends from Chelsea and vicinity. Mr. and Mrs. Litteral will reside in Chelsea at 109 Grant street, which they had already furnished for their occupancy, Mr. Litteral holding a responsible position with the Michigan Portland Cement company at their plant at Four Mile lake.

STORMS - DANIELS.

Miss Gertrude Estella Storms and Mr. Warren Ruel Daniels were quietly married Thursday evening, August 30, 1917, at 6:30 o'clock at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Storms, Rev. Harvey Pierce of Detroit officiating.

Only the families and near relatives of the bride and groom were present and the wedding was a complete surprise to even their nearest and most intimate friends.

Following the ceremony, a wedding supper was served and Mr. and Mrs. Daniels left at eight o'clock on an automobile trip to Lansing and other points.

Both are popular young people and graduates of the Chelsea high school. The groom is a successful young business man, treasurer of the Chelsea Elevator Co. and is serving his second term as village clerk. They will reside in Chelsea in the residence recently purchased by Mr. Daniels, at South and Grant street.

Unusual in Design and Color

Satin is the new love of designers of afternoon gowns just now. They are not running after strange gods or sparing much attention to anything else. Few of the new fall models employ two kinds of silk, but there are many beautiful combinations of satin and wool. The trim is here and makes plenty of opportunity for the introduction of two fabrics in one dress.

The gown shown above is less simple than the average in the new displays of afternoon models for fall. Its color is an unusual purplish brown, dark and rich. It makes a wonderful combination with deep blue, and this color in soutache braid is used for decorating it.

Like nearly all the new dresses it sticks rather close to the straight-line idea; the high waistline is a means to this end. The skirt is plaited on a yoke with plaits at each side of a front panel and a tunic begins where the plaits end. Its fullness is also provided by plaits. It is laced to the yoke and two silk-covered buttons at each side are on guard to see that it remains in place.

The bodice is plain with a row of buttons down the front. Pointed revers at each side are finished with pendant buttons and a small sailor collar is overlaid with a still smaller one in cream georgette.

Afternoon Gowns Appear Wider. The afternoon models are generally somewhat wider in appearance. This effect is obtained by the use of bouffants, panels and tunics over narrow foundations. Large girdles are often employed forming draped effects.

The materials in these afternoon gowns are velveteen spangles with tarnished metal, satin, voile, mousseline and velvet in shades of beige, sand, ochre yellow and gray, often combined with black.

Three Triumphs in Millinery

Sure of a joyous welcome wherever the trained eyes of fashionable women fall upon them; that is the happy future of these beautiful hats. The rest of the successful hat is simple—it must flatter its wearer—she must look better with it on than without it.

The three hats pictured go even farther, for each has a decided character of its own to lend to the head it covers. At the left, a wide, graceful picture hat will provoke a sigh of longing in the heart of every girl. Its brim droops a little, making a fine shadow for the eyes and the narrow fall of georgette crepe about the brim edge is a trick of the milliner's that enhances every beauty—whether of eyes or complexion. The crown is soft and draped, and the hat is entirely black velvet.

The saucy hat at the center is made of blue taffeta, with a heavy braided pattern on it, and of black velvet. It is derived from the dashing hat worn by Colonel Fabry, the "Blue Devil of France"—called the Fabry hat. It is full of spirit, and chooses for trimming one of those interesting painted paddle quills. Of course it must be worn at a daring angle which assures it success with the younger set who aspire to looking a bit reckless and sophisticated.

The third hat is just a smart velvet shape for the street, trimmed with a flat feather band and a small fan of plaited ribbon. It is something of a tricorn and has all the vivacity and trimness of that undying favorite. It is a good hat for all-round wear, and should be considered by those who want a hat that will rob them of a few years.

Julia B. Stansley

Polka Dots Grow Larger.

Polka dots have developed into larger coin spots and are all the more effective for it in the country clothes. These coin spotted materials serve also a good decorative purpose for collars, cuffs and revers on the dark blue or beige serge and gaberdine dresses and suits, as well as for linings of the capes in the new three-piece street costumes.

A Hat of Velvet Ribbon.

A new hat is fashioned entirely of the narrowest width of velvet ribbon in a sort of gray blue. This is braided together and made into a soft high crown that crushes down all around and posed on a tiny cloche brim, with a band of the narrow ribbon about the crown base and many little ends of the ribbon forming an ornament at the front.

GRAVEL ROAD WORK

Construction Is Usually Divided Into Two Entire Distinct Classes.

SUBGRADE FOR THE SURFACE

Some of Most Important Details Requiring Careful Attention Are Frequently Overlooked—Some Precautions to Observe.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Figure 1 shows a typical cross section for a gravel-road surface and indicates the customary steps involved in the construction of such a surface. The limiting thicknesses shown on this cross section are by no means followed universally, but are believed to represent the best current practice. The minimum thickness shown is supposed to be employed where the traffic is light and the subgrade is uniformly stable, while the maximum thickness is adapted for opposite conditions. Perhaps the most usual compacted thickness of surface is eight inches at the center and six inches at the edges. The difference in thickness between the edges and center is effected by making the crown of the subgrade flatter than that of the surface.

The construction of a gravel road usually is divided into two entirely distinct classes of work. The work of grading and preparing the subgrade falls into one class, and that of hauling, spreading and compacting the gravel into the other. The first class of work has been discussed at considerable length in connection with earth and sand-clay roads, but since it is desired to emphasize certain features of subgrade preparation that are of increased importance in connection with gravel-road construction, both classes of work will be considered in the following discussion:

Preparation of the Subgrade. In grading the roadbed and preparing the subgrade for a gravel surface, it should be borne in mind also that the more expensive a road surface, the greater should be the care exercised to prevent it from being damaged loads are dumped all in one spot and spread later with shovels, as is done frequently, it is very difficult to secure uniform density of the surface crust by subsequent harrowing and rolling. The spots where the loads are dumped nearly always will be more densely compacted than the areas between, and, as a result, uneven settlement will develop soon.

2. The gravel should be spread in two or more courses, and the thickness of the different courses should be approximately the same, except that the first course may be made somewhat thicker than the succeeding courses, because, in general, a thicker layer of gravel may be compacted on the subgrade than when spread over a layer of gravel already compacted. It usually is impracticable to have the compacted thickness of any course greater than about 5 inches, and quite frequently 3 or 4 inches is as much as can be compacted satisfactorily at one time.

3. After each course of gravel is spread it should be harrowed with a tooth harrow until the various sizes of particles and the binder or cementing material are distributed thoroughly through the mass. Then it should be compacted by rolling with a power roller weighing about 10 tons, or by means of traffic. Where a roller is employed the rolling should be continued until the particles of gravel are all well bonded together and the surface presents a smooth, uniform appearance. When completed, the surface of each course should be so firm and unyielding that it will not be disturbed in any way by subsequent traffic.

4. Where it is necessary to add sand or clay to the gravel in order to fill the voids, it should be done after each course is spread and before it is harrowed, except that with some kinds of gravel it may be permissible to add a limited amount of fine material to the surface of the top course after the harrowing is completed and the rolling is in progress.

5. Where the binder consists of some material other than clay, it may be desirable to sprinkle each course with water while it is being rolled, and even where clay is used as a binder a small amount of sprinkling may be necessary in dry weather in order to secure a satisfactory bond. The sprinkling always should be done uniformly and in such quantities as not to wash the fine material out from the gravel or to soften the subgrade.

6. When the road surface is com-through settlement or upheaval of the subgrade, and the greater should be the accuracy with which the subgrade is constructed, so that no unnecessary surfacing material may be required to correct irregularities in grade and cross section. No matter what the soil conditions may be, the subgrade for a gravel road surface, when completed, should conform closely in grade and cross section with the requirements of the plans and should present an even, uniform appearance. Also, it should be as firm and unyielding as the conditions will permit.

Some of the most important details requiring careful attention in preparing the subgrade, and which are perhaps most frequently overlooked, are (1) backfilling culvert trenches so as to prevent subsequent settlement, (2) exclusion of vegetable matter from fills, (3) provision for draining wet-weather springs which occur in the subgrade, and (4) the matter of thoroughly loosening and distributing the materials contained in old road crusts.

After the roadbed has been graded and drained properly, and the details mentioned above have received proper attention, the work of preparing the subgrade consists simply in forming a trench, as shown in figure 1, to receive the gravel surface. The trench may be formed largely with a grading machine, but the final shaping should be effected by means of picks and shovels and rolling. It is customary to provide grade stakes at intervals of about 50 feet, to serve as a guide for the pick and shovel work, and where extreme accuracy is desired cords may be stretched between the stakes to insure that the subgrade conforms to the required grade throughout. The rolling is done ordinarily with a power roller weighing about ten tons.

In order that the subgrade may be well drained during the process of spreading and compacting the gravel it is frequently necessary to provide shoulder drains at comparatively short intervals. Such drains are constructed by opening small ditches through the shoulders and partially filling them with gravel.

The Gravel Surface.

The principal precautions to observe in constructing a gravel road surface, after the subgrade is prepared, may be commented upon briefly as follows:

1. The gravel should be delivered on the work in wagons or cars especially adapted for spreading each load uniformly over that part of the subgrade for which it is intended. Where

MAN WOULD NOT LET SON WORK

Father Keeps Boy From Toil, and Now He Faces Suit for Support.

WANTS LIFE INCOME

New York Man Gives Him Life of Ease With $5,000 Yearly Allowance—Cutting Off Income Leaves Son Helpless.

New York.—John Moller, Jr., forty-seven years old, is suing his father for support. The spoiled son is helpless in the great city of New York since his father cut off his allowance of $5,000 a year. The younger man always has depended upon his father for support and now is seeking $61,500 to support him for the balance of his life.

The son declares that he did not wish to depend solely upon his father for support. At the age of twenty-one he was anxious to enter business and see if he could not emulate the example of his grandfather, Peter Moller, who made a fortune in sugar refining. But Moller, Sr., would not listen to the suggestion, says the complaint, declaring that he wished his son to be a "gentleman" and enter society.

Temptation Was Too Great.

To assure the young man ample support while he lived a life of ease, the father promised him an allowance of $5,000 a year. The temptation was too great and young Moller has been spending the past 26 years as a "gentleman" in New York society. He declares that he is now to old to learn anything that will prove a means of livelihood for him.

Moller, Jr., says that his allowance was cut to $3,000 last January, two days after the father was married to an actress. In May the allowance was discontinued, says the son, and because the father crushed his son's ambition to make his own way in the world the younger man declares he is entitled to a life-time allowance.

SHOT WIFE FOR BURGLAR

Man Awakes to Find Some One Going Through His Jacket and Shoots.

Chicago.—Charles Sikorski awoke suddenly at midnight with the feeling that some one was in his room. He reached under the pillow for his gun and waited. As the moon broke through the clouds he saw a form silhouetted against the window, and the person was going through his trousers' pockets.

"Can't be my wife," Sikorski muttered as he took aim and fired, "she's left me."

It was, though, Mrs. Sophie Sikorski, twenty-four, who had left during a quarrel in the afternoon and had returned to get some funds, was shot three times in the abdomen. She was seriously wounded.

Sikorski was arrested. He told police he thought the intruder was a burglar.

Reputation

Before trusting your eyes to any optometrist, you naturally want to know something of his reputation; glasses not correctly fitted are worse than none at all. Consider the reputation of L. Goldsmith with his 29 years of successful experience. For 19 years he has practiced optometry in Detroit, and with such splendid results that his business is now the largest of its kind in Michigan. Consider the thousands of cases he fitted in his department at the J. L. Hudson Company store. What better proof of reliability can you ask—what greater assurance that you will obtain the very glasses that your eyes require at "The House of Optical Service?"

THE GIRL WHO HAD NO GOD

A Mystery Story

By MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

Friends, if you enjoy queer tales this one is sure to satisfy your biggest expectation. We consider it the best piece of work Mrs. Rinehart has done for a long time. She is the highest paid woman fiction writer in the world today because her writing makes a universal appeal.

THE EDITOR.

CHAPTER I.

Hilary Klagston had been shot. Old Hilary had been a familiar figure in the village of Woffingham for years. The eccentricity of his gray derby hat, his beetling gray brows, his always fresh gray gloves, his erect, rather heavy old figure, singled him out from the mass of commuters that thronged the city trains. The gray derby was a part of old Hilary. Except on those rare occasions when he attended service at Saint Jude's he was never seen without it.

He lived on the hill above the village, with his daughter—had lived there for ten years. The hill was beautiful, but old Hilary received no visitors, returned no advances. Visitors thought this curious. The villagers, prosperous business men with smart wives, shrugged their shoulders. The man's house was his own. If he found that he could do without the town, the town could get along without him.

There was no mystery about the hill, and little curiosity. Cars going to the country club passed under the brick wall of its Italian garden. Their occupants sometimes caught a glimpse of Elinor Kingston there, reading in a rose arbor, wandering among her peonies and iris in the spring, or cutting sprays of phlox in midsummer.

The men thought her rather lovely; the women, odd, with her blond hair and dark eyes. The assistant rector of Saint Jude's, newly come to the village, met her face to face on one of his long country walks, a month or so before old Hilary's death, and could not forget her.

He led the conversation to her that night at a dinner. "An exquisite face," he described her, "but sad, almost tragically sad." "Blond?" The lady on his right was a Mrs. Bryant. In honor of the new assistant rector, who came of fine family and was a distinct acquisition to the village, she wore the Bryant pearl-earl. She spoke rather curtly. "I should not call her exquisite—but you probably met Elinor Kingston. Her sadness is a pose, I believe; she has everything she wants."

The assistant rector was young, but very wise. So he spoke no more of Elinor until the women had left the table. Then he ventured again.

"Don't join the army of those of us who worship from afar," advised the youth who had moved up beside him. "She's the loveliest thing in this part of the country. But, except our sainted rector, no one ever gets to put a foot on the place. It's exclusiveness to the nth power, and then some. There's a lot of talk, of course, or used to be. Old Kingston brings his servants from New York, and except an elderly housekeeper, none of them speak English. They used to say around here that he was a refugee, but that's all rot. He's a stingy old dotard, afraid some handsome youth like myself will captivate the girl. That's all there is to it."

The assistant rector, whose name was Ward, smiled perfunctorily. Instead of the gleaming table, spread with flowers and candles, with the gay colors of cordials and liqueurs, he was seeing a girl standing at the turn of a country road and gazing down into the valley and the distant village with somber eyes.

Faith, hope and charity, and the greatest of these is faith. Faith in ourselves, faith in those around us, and that sublimest faith of all which trusts in something beyond. To all men is given such faith at the beginning of life, and some keep it to the end. But here and there is one who has lost it, who cannot turn his eyes up and say "Lord, Lord." Old Hilary had not kept the faith.

Years ago he had not been evil. He had gone from philosophy into unbelief, that route which all must travel. But, unlike the many, he had not come back.

He had started with socialism, but socialism must be founded on the Christ, and him he scorned. So from socialism he had drifted to anarchy. To rob the rich and give to the poor, at first. Later on, to rob the rich, to incite seditions, to arm the rebellions—oh, it was comprehensive enough, vastly wicked with that most terrible lawlessness of all, that believes itself law.

To pit his wits against the world and win—that had been old Hilary's creed. "For the oppressed" had been at first the slogan of the band he gathered around him. "Against the oppressor" it became later on. Vastly different the two. Most of human charity and kindness lay crushed down and trampled underfoot during old Hilary's progress from Christ to Antichrist.

The band had been gathered with much care. Respectability, order, decorum—these spelled safety to old Hilary's astute mind. Most of them were younger sons of English landed families, with a sprinkling of other nationalities. Young Huff was an Australian, for instance, the son of a wealthy sheep-owner. Boroday the Russian—implicated in the bomb-throwing that destroyed the minister of war—was a nobleman. Old Hilary had got him out of Siberia during those early days when he righted what, to his crooked mind, were wrongs.

There were twelve in the band at the beginning, and for five years there were no changes. Then came the kidnapping and holding for ransom of Mackintosh the banker in Iowa, and the unexpected calling out of the state militia. The band had hidden Mackintosh in a deserted mine and three of the band went down in the shooting that followed his discovery. In the looting of Tiffany's vaults, which has never been published, a Frenchman named Dupres was killed; and only recently a tire had burst after the holding up of the car of the governor of Delaware, and their car, overturning, had crushed Jerrold, the mechanic of the band and old Hilary's chauffeur. One way and another, there were only five left: Talbot and Lethbridge the

To Pit His Wits Against the World and Win—That Had Been Old Hilary's Creed.

Englishmen, Boroday, Huff and old Hilary himself. And old Hilary's hour was almost come.

Old Hilary lived well, as he might. His foreign servants were artists. He liked good food, good wines, good books. He even had a few pictures—from the leading galleries of Europe. He hung them in the house at Woffingham, with a cynical smile.

"Safest place in the world," he said to old Henriette, who protested. "The village has never even heard of them!"

And so in this atmosphere of which he surrounded himself, of fine living and wrong thinking, of atheism raised almost to religion, of no law and no Christ, old Hilary had brought up his daughter. He had been proud of her in his way; absolutely selfish, too. She had had no other companion. He taught her his unbelief, pointing out the churchgoers, as they drove together on Sunday mornings, as slaves to a myth. Also, he taught her to hate a lie, and to give alms. Early in her life their drives together had been punctuated with questions.

"But if my mother is dead, where is she?" asked Elinor on one of them.

Old Hilary had eyed her from under eyebrows that were already gray.

"She lives in the memories of those that knew and loved her."

"But I never knew her. Then for me she doesn't live! But Mademoiselle—" she checked herself. Suspicion had been dawning in old Hilary's eyes.

"Death is the end," he said tersely, and quoted Darwin and Haeckel to her. But at the end of the drive he interviewed Mademoiselle, and sent her flying to her chamber, where from under the carpet beneath her bureau, she got her rosary and wept over it.

Elinor was twenty the year her father died, a slender girl, fond of flowers, rather a dreamer. Well educated, too. Old Hilary had seen to that; she knew Malato, Haeckel, Bakunin; spoke French and Spanish—Hilary had spent much time in Central America helping the insurgents; it was he who financed the insurrection in northern Mexico—and wrote fluently the form of shorthand that her father had devised as a means of communication between the leader of the band. A keen-eyed, wistful-mouthed slip of a girl, shut off in the great house on the hill above Woffingham; living her life of big theories and small duties, caloused to robbery and violent deeds, and viewing wistfully from her windows the little children in the road below.

CHAPTER II.

Once a year the association closed its books. During all of the June before old Hilary's sudden death, Elinor had been busy arranging figures, collecting data in the cryptic shorthand she knew. Then, on the first of July, Hilary gave his annual dinner.

The band, from twelve, was down to five. Boroday, the Russian, glancing around the table, shrugged his shoulders. It was the chance of the game they played, and percentages would be larger. Nevertheless there was a weight of depression over them all.

Elinor was at her father's right, simply dressed. The diners were always a trial to her. She was palpitatingly anxious that the papers before old Hilary be in order and accurate. They were her work. The deeper significance of the meeting she was so so much ignorant of as profoundly indifferent to. If her father did a thing, it took on order, became a law.

There were present Talbot and Lethbridge, the Englishmen; Boroday, whose rescue from Siberia had made him old Hilary's henchman; and young Huff. Huff was the mechanic. He had been trained in the Riferiot works; airplanes to wireless, automobiles to automatic pistols, he knew them—all makes, all grades. If old Hilary was the brains, Huff was the hands of the band.

He sat beside Elinor, and watched her with worshiping eyes. Perhaps it was as well that old Hilary was intent on his food and on the business in hand.

The routine of the annual dinner seldom varied. Five of them then, that last dinner around the table, in evening clothes, well set up, spare, three of them young, all temperate, honorable about women—as polished, as harmless in appearance, as death-dealing, as the gleaming projectile of a twelve-inch gun!

First old Hilary went over the books. It might have been the board meeting of some respectable bank. He stood at his end of the table, and the light from the chandelier fell full on him.

"I have to report, gentlemen," he would say, "a fairly successful year." This is where it differed from a bank. The association had had no bad years. "While our expenses have been heavy, returns have been correspondingly so." And so on, careful lines of figures, outlays and returns, to the end. For old Hilary was secretary and treasurer as well as president.

This time, when he had reached the end of what was to be his last report, he paused and cleared his throat. "Unfortunately, that is not all, gentlemen. 'Nothing can we call our own but death.' And it is my sad duty to report, this last year, the loss of three of our number. A calamitous year, gentlemen."

He might have been a trustee, lamenting the loss of valued supporters to a hospital!

Afterward, in the library, with Elinor embroidering by the fire, they cashed in. They dealt only in cash. Securities were dangerous. Once or twice Boroday had successfully negotiated with a fence in Paris, but always under old Hilary's protest.

Some new and fascinating secrets about Old Hilary's past come to light in the next installment.

Growing in the Mind.

It is said that Coleridge once exclaimed to Charles Lamb: "I could write plays just as well as Shakespeare, if I had a mind to!" "Yes," said Lamb, "that is just what you lack." It is a blessing, however, that even though we may not be able to do the work of a great genius, we may count upon growth in strength and breadth of mind. You can do with your mind today what you could not do five years ago. If you will give your mind an opportunity to grow by hard, honest, faithful, severe work, you will be able to do much more five years from now than you are able to do today. If your mind becomes poisoned with low ideals, with poor literature, with wrong conceptions of life, you may as well expect it to grow, as to expect a plant to grow in your garden when you have allowed every sort of root enemy to burrow about the plants and feed on the stalks and leaves.

LINER ADS EFFECTIVE.
One of the most effective forms of advertising is in the "liner" or classified column where an investment of a few cents is certain to give prompt results. Tribune liner ads are always run in the same position on the front page where they are easy to find and invariably catch the eye. Only five cents the line for first insertion, 2 1/2 cents the line for each subsequent insertion. Next time you want to buy something, or have something for sale or rent, try a Tribune liner.

Ask Anyone Who Has Used It.
There are families who always aim to keep a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic and Diarrhoea Remedy in the house for use in case it is needed, and find that it is not only a good investment but saves them no end of suffering. As to its reliability, ask anyone who has used it.

YPSILANTI—Emmett Killenbarger of Detroit on Monday pleaded guilty in justice court to stealing two automobile lamps and two coils from the automobile of Pat O'Brien in Augusta township. He was fined $25 and $5.50 costs or 65 days in the house of correction. The fine and costs were paid.

STOCKBRIDGE—What might have been a serious fire to this locality occurred here Monday afternoon in the second story of the A. W. Brown company's drug store. With a high wind blowing it was thought for some time little could be done to save the building. As soon as possible two lines of hose were laid, together with the chemical engine, and with hard fighting the fire was put under control.

BROOKLYN—Mrs. Will Pitcher and Mrs. Roy Aldervey were quite badly injured when the auto they were driving turned turtle in a private road on the Nixon farms. The former was driving down a steep hill and at the bottom in some way lost control of the machine, which rolled over and over.

MASON—In a recent letter from Ion Cortright, a Mason boy, now in France, he tells he is hurrying to be ready to go to the front, or as near to the front as the Y. M. C. A. can get. He describes the unsanitary condition in the French villages and says they are at least 200 years behind the times.

MANCHESTER—Owing to the low condition of the water in the river for the last two weeks, the electric light plant has not been able to furnish enough power for the electric irons on ironing days.

ANN ARBOR—Suit for $25,000 damages was started in circuit court Wednesday by William McKinnon against Frank Turner, a farmer, of Pittsfield township. On December 1, 1915, McKinnon, employed by Turner as a feeder of a corn-husking machine, had both his arms caught in the rolls of both his arms, at a point near the shoulders.

Smart Autumn Coats

Bear Pricings Remarkably Low

Just the names of the materials which make Autumn Coats are attractive—pompon cloth, velours and silvertone—while the coats themselves are quite irresistible with their great enveloping collars, their soft-colored linings and luxurious style.

Within the modest compass of $10.75 to $25 one may select unusually good models in tweeds, rich-tone plaids and mannish fabrics. From $27.50 to $39.50 come the more elaborate street and afternoon coats, many with fur employed.

Women's New Fall Suits
