MAKING CHANGES AT THE CEMENT PLANT

The Use of Marl Will be Discontinued and Crushed Rock Will be Shipped In.

During a recent visit of a representative of the Standard to the plant of the Michigan Portland Cement Co. at Four-Mile lake, Superintendent R. B. Koons showed him through the works, and a number of changes that are under way were noted.

One of the big changes is the substitution of rock for marl.

The building known as the clay storage is being enlarged by raising a section of the roof, which will make two extra floors. In this building a large cement pit has been built which will hold a large quantity of clay, which is dumped into it from the cars. A revolving mixing machine (known as a slurry mixer) has been installed. The clay is so thoroughly mixed by this machine that it is a liquid. A gate at one end of the pit can be opened and the mixture conveyed to two large crushers, where it is united with the rock. These crushers weigh several tons and are filled with five-inch steel balls, and have a capacity of 2,000 barrels of cement every twenty-four hours.

The stone is dumped from the cars into hopper-shaped pits at the sidetrack on the east side of the plant and conveyed by an endless hopper belt about 600 feet long to the top of the building, from where it is fed to the crushers, from where the mixture is conveyed to three large slurry tanks, and later the mixture is burned and ground.

In the east yards two receiving pits have been built, each holding two carloads of rock. It is removed from the pits by a steam shovel, and a large surplus stock will be kept in the yards.

A new tube mill is also being installed, which will make three that will be in operation. A short time ago the company installed power packers, which has done away with the hand packing of the finished product.

With the numerous changes that are being made the working force will be somewhat reduced.

Heretofore the cement has been made from marl, which was taken from the shore of the lake, but it is nearly exhausted, except what is in the lake. A change for the economical production of the raw material was found to be absolutely necessary and to a large extent in the future the plant will be operated on rock which will be shipped from northern Michigan.

The clay pits along the shore of the lake will supply the company for many years.

Another feature under consideration by the management of the company is the production of potash which is found in the clay. As there is a large demand for potash, a reclaiming plant may be installed, but this matter has not been fully decided upon.

When the numerous changes are completed, a number of kilns that are now in use will be discarded, and a considerable saving of fuel will be effected, as the clay, under the present process, is dried before it is ground and reduced to slurry.

The sidetracks in the east yard are being elevated over the pits that will receive the crushed stone.

The building operations are under the supervision of C. W. Maroney.

A GLIMPSE OF CAMP CUSTER

By Rev. P. W. Dierberger

The ancients spoke to their children of the Seven Wonders: The Pyramids, Diana of the Ephesian Temple, Jupiter at Olympia, the Tomb of Mausolus, the Colossus of Rhodes, the Pharos at Alexandria, and the Hanging Garden of Babylon.

But other wonders have taken the place of these; and Camp Custer may be reckoned as a modern, up-to-the-minute wonder of the world.

On July 4, 1917, when we in Chelsea were or were not shooting our toy pistols and cannon crackers, four buildings had been completed at the Battle Creek cantonment. On September 24 of this same year when I visited the Camp there were nearly nineteen hundred buildings completed or nearing completion. When the buildings are all completed, as they expect them to be by the time we hang up our Christmas stockings, Camp Custer will be a modern city with electric lights, water works, a sewerage system, fire department, hospital facilities, police protection, Y. M. C. A., and other things belonging to a strictly up-to-date city, charged with the care of 40,000 souls.

I got just a glimpse of the Camp. For you can no more see all of a huge army camp in a half a day, than you can see all of Detroit or Boston in the same length of time. What I did see, and what I found out, made me prouder than ever of my American citizenship. The American government is doing its utmost to care for the physical well-being of our soldiers. The boys are well fed, and the barracks that I visited are provided with beds in which any man could sleep and rest in comfort. The place is kept clean and the soldier is taught the virtue of cleanliness.

The men are adapting themselves splendidly to their new surroundings and with the proper training will make a fighting force that will give the Kaiser and militarism their knockout blow, and "make the world safe for democracy."

Ninetieth Birthday Anniversary.

Jay Everett, of Chelsea, reached the good old age of ninety years Tuesday, October 2, 1917, and relatives from far and near came and celebrated with him. It was a "perfect day" and was greatly enjoyed by all in visiting and renewing relationships. Many congratulations and some calls from friends were greatly appreciated.

It was also the birthday of his son, Fred Everett, who had the pleasure of making and decorating the birthday cake, which with its ninety candles made a beautiful picture.

The following guests were present: Mrs. Carrie Coe and Mr. and Mrs. Fred Everett, of Seattle, Wash.; Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Everett, of Stockbridge; Mr. and Mrs. G. H. Gay and sons Maurice and Welland, of Lansing; Mrs. Howard Everett and children Merle, Harmon and Esther, of Kalamazoo; Harry L. Coe, of Albany, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Gay, of Detroit; Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Skidmore and children Helen, Clinton and Barbara, of Washington, D. C.; Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Everett, of Kalamazoo; Mr. and Mrs. Henry L. Everett, of Chicago, Ill.; Mr. and Mrs. Ralph W. Boyden and children Ruth, Everett and Arthur, of Medina, Ohio; Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Spaulding, of Chicago, Ill.; Mr. and Mrs. Emanuel Jedele, of Dexter; Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Beach, of Lima; Misses Amelia and Gertrude Breed, of Ann Arbor; Fred Rowe, Mrs. Charlotte Thompson and Miss Everett, of Chelsea.

One daughter, Mrs. Irene Fennner, of Sumner, Wash., was unable to be present on account of ill health.

SPECTACULAR FIRE SATURDAY EVENING

H. S. Holmes' Evaporator Buildings Destroyed—High Wind Endangered Village.

The most spectacular fire ever witnessed in Chelsea occurred about 6:30 o'clock Saturday night, and before it was over the most of the inhabitants had been pressed into the ranks of the firemen.

The fire was in the evaporator buildings owned by H. S. Holmes, and they were totally destroyed. The buildings were completely filled with fire before the alarm was turned in.

The fire department was on the scene in a short time, and only by hard work saved the surrounding buildings.

There was a high northwest wind blowing which fanned the flames and carried blazing shingles through the central residence portion of the village. Watchers were placed on many roofs and garden hose was used to good advantage. Several fires were started but were extinguished.

The buildings have not been used for several years except for storage. Holmes & Walker had a number of farm implements in the buildings which were a total loss.

Holmes & Walker's loss by the fire amounted to $4000 with insurance of $1800.

The loss on the buildings was $2,500, insurance $500.

SATURDAY, OCT. 6.

Bessie Barriscale in "The Bawbs o' Blue Ridge," a play of love and adventure. How a romantic young author, seeking material for a new novel, finds his heroine, and incidentally the woman of his dreams, in the person of "Bawbs," a golden haired nymph of the mountains.

SUNDAY, OCT. 7.

Muriel Ostriche in "Moral Courage." The canny woman's wit of a Scotch lass who works in the Connecticut mill owned by a domineering old Scotchman whose only idea is to see his son married to a society belle, wins the son's love for her and a fortune too. This is a thoroughly pleasing, wholly delightful attraction.

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 10.

William Desmond in "Paddy O'Hara," the romance of a war correspondent, fighting his way through perils that daunt the heart of the bravest. An adventure-loving young newspaper man proves his worth and wins the girl of his dreams.—Adv.

"The Net."

"The Net," a high finance play involving New York's smart set will introduce Miss Lou Whitney at the Whitney theatre, Ann Arbor, Sunday, October 14. The plays that will be produced at the Whitney during the stock run will all have been supplied by the American Play Co., New York City, Messrs. Sanger and Jordan, New York, Messrs. Darcy and Wolford of New York, and George W. Winnet.

These agents have the sole and exclusive rights for all Shubert, Froham, French, Brady and Belasco plays, and in leasing "The Net" for the initial performance of their attraction, Messrs. Welsh & Welborn decided that only the latest offerings by these producers and agents would find favor with the theatre goers of Ann Arbor, therefore whenever a play is produced by Miss Whitney, it will have the stamp of approval of the entire theatrical world, having been tried as one night stand attractions and subsequently released by these responsible agents, and as this is one of the latest offerings, the royalty for the half of the week exceeds by double the amount what many managers are giving their patrons in other cities.

BREVITIES

Ann Arbor—The dog poisoner is again loose and nearly every night several dogs are killed.

Ann Arbor—A large dog pole was erected at the southwest corner of the court house park Saturday and hereafter "Old Glory" will swing from the top of the pole instead of the tower of the court house building.

Stockbridge—A Stockbridge man is in considerable of a quandry. His cabbages are ripening and his kraut cutter has been loaned to someone, just who he cannot remember. Hence an advertisement in the Brief-Sun requesting its early return.

Adrian—Standing on the back platform of a train, John Taylor, a traveling salesman, saw Anna Bardernitz, of Saline, caught and dragged 100 feet by the pilot of a locomotive. He fainted, fell from the platform and was seriously injured. Miss Bardernitz suffered concussion of the brain.

Cement City—A. J. Wise of this place lost three registered ewes and two lambs by the dog route. The h. c. of I. has not been discussed down to the dog question which is where it should have begun. Sheep will never be raised until the dog business has been placed on a logical basis. Every dog should be taxed as the auto is and every dog should wear a license plate in front and in the rear and at night wear a red light. In this instance $70 worth of mutton was taken from circulation which would buy all the dogs in Jackson county.

DIFFICULT TO MIX FEEDS

A More Scientific Result Can Be Produced By Machinery.

[National Crop Improvement Service.]

As no two lots run alike, it is very difficult to mix straight by-products of oats, barley, rye, corn, cottonseed, flaxseed, etc., by measure, because it is purely guessing. Only a few years ago intentional fraud or unintentional carelessness was the rule. Before the feed laws were passed, each manufacturer adulterated all the trade would stand.

Every car of feed sold to the consumer is not analyzed, and the farmer cannot become a feed expert because he has no laboratory. Not one car out of five hundred is officially inspected. In the old days country millers were throwing feeds together with no knowledge of feed and were ruining valuable cows and making the farmer poorer. In those days the feed tables were wrong, the feeds didn't fit the tables; the digestible analysis method was incorrect; feed standards for animals were not agreed upon nor complete; the animals didn't fit the standards; the buyer didn't know what was in the feeds he bought to mix; and there was an unavoidable variation in the concentration of the feed.

These conditions have been largely overcome through the joint action of the government and state experiment stations and the mixed feed manufacturers who have every facility for maintaining a uniform product. By using these scientifically prepared feeds, many a herd has doubled its yield and profits. There are some painters who can buy lead, oil and dryer and mix and match their own color uniformly but the best painters of today have learned that mill-made brands are much better than anything they can mix with a paddle. The same is true in fertilizers to a great extent. In mixed feeds there can be no economy in home mixing because the mixing factories, being near the large markets, can utilize by-products to the very best advantage. Home mixing cannot be accomplished at one-tenth of a cent per lb., besides the result is never twice alike and cannot be without the help of a laboratory.

ALWAYS RELIABLE

Chelsea Experiences Going Back For Over Three Years.

Kidney weakness can be cured. But what caused it once will cause it again.

Here's a Chelsea woman who has had several attacks.

Several times in over three years Mrs. Trouten has used Doan's Kidney Pills.

She says that Doan's have never failed her.

Over three years ago Mrs. Trouten publicly endorsed Doan's.

She now confirms her statement. What better proof of merit?

Proved by years of experience.

Told by Chelsea people.

This is convincing testimony:

Mrs. S. J. Trouten, McKinley St., says: "I suffered from backache and distressing pains across my kidneys. I had headaches and dizzy spells. My kidneys did not act right at all and caused me a lot of annoyance. I tried several remedies without relief until I used Doan's Kidney Pills. I bought Doan's at Fenn's Drug Store. They relieved the backache, strengthened my kidneys and did me good generally."

Over Three Years Later Mrs. Trouten said: "Doan's Kidney Pills cured me of kidney complaint and the cure has been a lasting one."

Price 60c. at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the name that Mrs. Trouten has twice publicly recommended. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.—Adv.

AN UNUSUAL LOVE STORY

By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM

THE PRINCE OF SEYRE PLOTS JOHN'S DOWNFALL THROUGH FASCINATING WOMEN, AND INTRODUCES HIM TO MADAME CALAVERA, FAMOUS RUSSIAN DANCER

Synopsis.—Louise Maurel, famous actress, was making a motor tour of the English Cumberland district, when her car broke down late one evening and she was forced to accept the overnight hospitality of Stephen and John Strangewey, reclusive woman haters living in a splendid old mansion on a great farm. Before she left next day she had captivated John and he had fascinated her. Three months later John, on a sudden impulse, went to London and looked up Louise. She was delighted to see him and introduced him to her friends of the artistic and dramatic world, among them Sophie, a light-hearted little actress, and Grailot, a playwright of remarkable mental gifts. The prince of Seyre, a wealthy French noble, whom he already knew, became his guide, and he entered the gay bohemian life of the city. Grailot warned Louise not to toy with her two ardent lovers, John and the prince, and told her the prince was dangerous for John.

"Ah, no, dear lady," he insisted, "I am not talking wildly. I am Grailot, who for thirty years have written dramas on one subject and one subject only—men and women. It has been given to me to study many varying types of the human race, to watch the outcome of many strange situations. I have watched the prince draw you nearer and nearer to him. What there is or may be between you I do not know. It is not for me to know. But if not now, some day Eugene of Seyre means you to be his, and he is not a person to be lightly resisted. Now from the skies there looms up this sudden obstacle."

"You do not realize," Louise protested, almost eagerly, "how slight is my acquaintance with Mr. Strangewey. I once spent the night and a few hours of the next morning at his house in Cumberland, and that is all I have ever seen of him. How can his presence here be of any serious import to Eugene?"

"As to that," Grailot replied, "I say nothing. If what I have suggested does not exist, then for the first time in my life I have made a mistake; but I do not think I have. You may not realize it, but there is before you one of those struggles that make or mar the life of women of every age. As for the men, I will only say this, and it is because of it that I have spoken at all—I am a lover of fair play, and the struggle is not even. The younger man may hold every card in the pack, but Eugene of Seyre has learned how to win tricks without aces. I stayed behind to say this to you, Louise. You know the young man, and I do not. It is you who must warn him."

"Warn him?" Louise repeated, with sprained eyebrows. "Dear master, aren't we just a little—do you mind if I use that word so hateful to you—melodramatic? The age of duels is past, also the age of hired bravos and assassins."

"Agreed," Grailot interrupted, "but the weapons of today are more dangerous. It is the souls of their enemies that men attack. If I were a friend of that young man's, I would say to him: 'Beware, not of the enmity of Eugene of Seyre, but of his friendship!' And now, dear lady, I have finished. I lingered behind because the world holds no more sincere admirer of yourself and your genius than I. Don't ring. May I not let myself out?"

He looked steadfastly into her eyes. His plain, bearded face was heavy-browed, lined, tired a little with the coming of age.

"You are not going?" she asked him. "Dear Louise," he said, "I am going, because the time when I can help is not yet. Listen! More harm has been done in this world by advice than in any other way. I have no advice to give you. You have one sure and certain guide, and that is your own heart, your own instincts, your own sweet consciousness of what is best. I leave you to that. If trouble comes, I am always ready!"

CHAPTER X.

During the remainder of that afternoon and evening John was oppressed by a vague sense of the splendor of his surroundings and his companion's mysterious capacity for achieving impossibilities. Their visits to the tailors, the shirtmakers, the hosiers and the bootmakers almost resembled a royal progress. All difficulties were waved aside. That night he dined, clothed like other men from head to foot, in the lofty dining room of one of the most exclusive clubs in London. The prince proved an agreeable if somewhat reticent companion. He introduced John to many well-known people, always with that little note of personal interest in his few words of presentation which gave a certain significance to the ceremony.

From the club, where the question of John's proposed membership, the prince acting as his sponsor, was favorably discussed with several members of the committee, they drove to Covent Garden, and for the first time in his life John entered the famous opera house. The prince, preceded by an attendant, led the way to a box upon the second tier. A woman turned her head as they entered and stretched out her hand, which the prince raised to his lips.

"You see, I have taken you at your word, Eugene," she remarked.

"You give me double pleasure, dear lady," the prince declared. "Not only is it a joy to be your host, but you give me also the opportunity of presenting to my friend, John Strangewey, Strangewey, this is my very distant relative and very dear friend, Lady Hilda Mulloch."

Lady Hilda smiled graciously at John. She was apparently of a little less than middle age, with dark hands of chestnut hair surmounted by a tiara. Her face was the face of a clever and still beautiful woman; her figure slender and dignified; her voice low and delightful.

"Are you paying your nightly homage to Calavera, Mr. Strangewey, or are you only an occasional visitor?" she asked.

"This is my first visit of any sort to Covent Garden," John told her.

She looked at him with as much surprise as good breeding permitted. John, who had not as yet sat down, seemed almost preternaturally tall in that small box, with its low ceiling. He was looking around the house with the enthusiasm of a boy. Lady Hilda glanced away from him toward the prince, and smiled; then she looked back at John. There was something like admiration in her face.

"Do you live abroad?" she asked.

John shook his head.

"I live in Cumberland," he said.

"Many people here seem to think that that is the same thing. My brother and I have a farm there."

"But you visit London occasionally, surely?"

"I have not been in London," John told her, "since I passed through it on my way home from Oxford, eight years ago."

"I have never heard anything so extraordinary in my life!" the woman declared frankly. "Is it the prince who has induced you to break out of your seclusion?"

"Our young friend," the prince explained, "finds himself suddenly in altered circumstances. He has been left a large fortune, and has come to spend it. Incidentally, I hope, he has come to see something more of your sex than is possible among his mountain wilds. He has come, in short, to look a little way into life."

Lady Hilda leaned back in her chair. "How romantic!"

"The prince amuses himself," John assured her. "I don't suppose I shall stay very long in London. I want just to try it for a time."

She looked at him almost wistfully. She was a woman with brains; a woman notorious for the freedom of her life, for her intellectual gifts, for her almost brutal disregard of the conventions of her class. The psychological interest of John Strangewey's situation appealed to her powerfully. Besides, she had a weakness for handsome men.

"At any rate," said Lady Hilda, "I am glad to think that I shall be able to watch you when you see Calavera in her dances for your first time."

The curtain rang up upon one of the most gorgeous and sensuous of the Russian ballets. John, who by their joint insistence was occupying the front chair in the box, leaned forward in his place, his eyes steadfastly fixed upon the stage. Both the prince and Lady Hilda, in the background, although they occasionally glanced at the performance, devoted most of their attention to watching him.

As the story progressed and the music grew in passion and voluptuousness, they distinctly saw his almost militant protest. They saw the knitting of his firm mouth and the slight contraction of his eyebrows. The prince and his friend exchanged glances. She drew her chair a little farther back, and he followed her example.

"Where did you find anything so wonderful as this?" she murmured.

"Lost among the hills of Cumberland," the prince replied. "I have an estate up there—in fact, he and I are joint lords of the manor of the village in which he has lived."

"And you?" she whispered, glancing at John to be sure that she was not overheard. "Where do you come in? As educator of the young? I don't seem to see you in that role!"

A very rare and by no means pleasant smile twisted the corners of his lips for a moment.

"It is a long story."

"Can I be brought in?" she asked. He nodded.

"It rests with you. It would suit my plans."

She toyed with her fan for a moment, looked restlessly at the stage and back again at John. Then she rose from her place and stood before the lookingglass. From the greater obscurity of the box she motioned to the prince.

John remained entirely heedless of their movements. His eyes were still riveted upon the stage, fascinated with the wonderful coloring, the realization of a new art.

"You and I," Lady Hilda whispered, "do not need to play about with the truth, Eugene. What are you doing this for?"

"The idliest whim," the prince assured her quietly. "Look at him. Think for a moment of his position—absolutely without experience, entirely ignorant about women, with a fortune one only dreams of, and probably the handsomest animal in London. What is going to become of him?"

"I think I understand a little," she confessed.

"I think you do," the prince assented. "He has views, this young man. It is my humor to see them dissipated. The modern Sir Galahad always irritated me a little."

She shrugged her shoulders.

"They'll never give him a chance, these women," she said. "Much better hand him over to me."

The prince smiled enigmatically, and Lady Hilda returned to her seat. John was still leaning forward with his eyes fixed upon Calavera, who was dancing alone now. The ballet was drawing toward the end. The music had reached its climax of wild and passionate sensuousness, dominated and inspired by the woman whose every movement and every glance seemed part of some occult, dimly understood language.

When the curtain rang down, John, like many others, was confused. Nevertheless, after that first breathless pause, he stood up and joined in the tumultuous applause.

"Well?" the prince asked.

John shook his head.

"I don't know," he answered.

"Neither does anyone else," Lady Hilda said. "Don't try to analyze your impressions for our benefit, Mr. Strangewey. I am exactly in your position, and I have been here a dozen times. Even to us hardened men and women of the world, this Russian music came as a surprise. There were parts of it you did not like, though, weren't there?"

"There were parts of it I hated," John agreed. "There were passages that seemed to aim at discord in every sense of the word."

She nodded sympathetically. They were on their way down the broad staircase.

"I wonder," she murmured, "whether I am going to be asked out to supper?"

"Alas, not tonight, dear lady," the prince regretted. "I am having a few friends at Seyre House."

She shot a glance at him and shrugged her shoulders. She was evidently displeased.

"How much too bad!" she exclaimed. "I am not at all sure that it is right of you to invite Mr. Strangewey to one of your orgies. A respectable little supper at the Carlton, and a cigarette in my library afterward, would have been a great deal better for both of you—certainly for Mr. Strangewey. I think I shall run away with him, as it is!"

The prince shrugged his shoulders.

"It is unfortunate," he sighed, "but we are both engaged. If you will give us the opportunity some other evening—"

"I am not at all sure that I shall have anything more to do with you, Eugene," she declared. "You are not behaving nicely. Will you come and see me while you are in town, Mr. Strangewey?" she added, turning to John.

"I should like to very much," he replied. "I think," he added, a little hesitatingly, "that I have read one of your books of travel. It is very interesting to meet you."

"So my fame has really reached Cumberland!" she laughed. "You must come and talk to me one afternoon quite soon. Will you?"

"I will come with pleasure," John promised.

They stood for a few moments in the crowded vestibule until Lady Hilda Mulloch's car was called. The prince stood back, allowing John to escort her to the door. She detained him for a moment after she had taken her seat, and leaned out of the window, her fingers still in his hand.

"Be careful!" she whispered. "The prince's supper parties are just a little—shall I say banal? There are better things if one waits!"

CHAPTER XI.

The reception rooms of Seyre House, by some people considered the finest in London, were crowded that night by a brilliant and cosmopolitan assembly. For some time John stood by the prince's side and was introduced to more people than he had ever met before in his life. Presently, however, he was discovered by his friend Amer-ton.

"Queer thing your being here, a friend of the prince and all that!" the young man remarked. "Where's Miss Sophy this evening?"

"I haven't seen her," John replied. "I don't believe she is invited."

"Like to be introduced to some of the girls, or shall we go and have a drink?"

John was hesitating when he felt a hand upon his shoulder. The prince's voice sounded in his ear.

"Strangewey," he said, "I am privileged to present you to mine, Aida Calavera. Madame, this is my friend of whom I spoke to you."

John turned away from the little group of girls and young men toward whom Amer-ton had been leading him. The woman was different from anything he had imagined, from anything he had ever seen. In the ballet a writhing, sensuous figure with every gesture a note in the octave of passion, here she seemed the very personification of a negative and striking immobility. She was slender, not so tall as she had seemed upon the stage, dressed in white from head to foot. Her face was almost marblelike in its pallor, her smooth, black hair was drawn tightly over her ears, and her eyes were of the deepest shade of blue. She raised her hand, as he bowed, with a gesture almost royal in its condescension. The prince, with quiet tact, bridged over the moment during which John struggled in vain for something to say.

"Mr. Strangewey," he remarked, "paid his first visit to Covent Garden tonight. He has seen his first ballet, as we moderns understand the term. I cannot help envying him that delight. He naturally finds it difficult to realize this additional good fortune. Will you excuse me for one moment?"

The prince departed to welcome some later arrivals. The noisy little group standing close at hand, from which John had been diverted, passed on into the refreshment room, and the two were, for a few moments, almost isolated.

"You were pleased with the performance, I hope?"

Her voice was in character with her personality. It was extremely low, scarcely louder than a whisper. To his surprise, it was almost wholly free from any foreign accent.

"It was very wonderful," John answered.

"The prince tells me," she continued, "that you are a stranger in London. Give me your arm. We will walk to a quieter place. In a few moments we are to be disturbed for supper. One eats so often and so much in this country. Why do I say that, though? It is not so bad as in Russia."

They passed across the polished wood floor into a little room with oriental fittings, where a lamp was swinging from the ceiling, giving out a dim but pleasant light. The place was empty, and the sound of the music and voices seemed to come from a distance. She sank down upon a divan back among the shadows, and motioned John to sit by her side.

"You have come to find out, to understand—is that not so?" she inquired.

"What you know of life, the prince tells me, you have learned from books. Now you have come to discover what more there is to be learned in the world of men and women."

"The prince has been very kind," John said.

She turned her head slowly and looked at him.

"A young man to whom the prince chooses to be kind is, in a way, fortunate," she said. "There is very little in life, in men or in women, which he does not understand. Let us return to what we were speaking about. I find it very interesting."

"You are very kind," John declared.

"What you will learn here," she went on, "depends very much upon yourself. Are you intelligent? Perhaps not very," she added, looking at him critically.

"You have brains, however, without a doubt. You have also what places you at once in rapport with the cult of the moment—you are wonderfully good-looking."

John moved a little uneasily in his place. He felt that the dancer's eyes were fixed upon him, and he was feverishly anxious not to respond to the invitation of their gaze. He was conscious, too, of the queer, indefinable fascination of her near presence in the dimly-lighted room.

"What you will learn," she proceeded, "depends very much upon your desires. If you seek for the best, and are content with nothing else, you will find it. But so few men are content to wait!"

"I intend to," John said simply.

"Look at me, please," she ordered.

Once more he was compelled to look into her deep-blue eyes. The incomprehensible smile was still upon her lips.

"You have loved?"

"No," he answered, taken a little aback by the abruptness of the question.

"You grow more wonderful! You are free from any distracting thoughts about women? You have no entanglements?"

"I have nothing of the sort," John declared, almost irritably. "There is one person who has made a wonderful change in my life. I believe I could say that I am absolutely certain of my feelings for her, but so far she has not given me much encouragement. Tell me, madame, why do you ask me these questions?"

"Because it interests me," she replied. "Why do you not insist that this lady should tell you the truth?"

"I have come to London to insist," he told her, "but I have been here only forty-eight hours. I am waiting."

"So many people spend their lives doing that," she went on presently. "It does not appeal to me. The moment I make up my mind that I want a thing, I take it. The moment I make up my mind to give, I give."

John was suddenly conscious of the closeness of the atmosphere. The fingers of his hands were clenched tightly together. He swore to himself that he would not look into this woman's face. He listened to the band which was playing in the balcony of the great hall, to the murmur of the voices, the shouts of laughter. He told himself that Mme. Calavera was amusing herself with him.

"The prince's party," she continued, after a long pause, "seems to be a great success, to judge by the noise they are making. So many people shout and laugh when they are happy. I myself find a more perfect expression of happiness in silence."

She was leaning a little back in her place. One arm was resting upon a pile of cushions, the other hung loosely over the side of the divan. John felt a sudden desire to rise to his feet, and a simultaneous consciousness that his feet seemed to be made of lead.

"You may hold my fingers," she said;

"and please keep your face turned toward me. Why are you nervous? I am not very formidable."

He took her fingers, very much as the prince had done upon her arrival, and pressed them formally to his lips. Then he released them and rose.

"You know," he confessed, "I am very stupid at this sort of thing. Shall we go back to the refreshment room? I shall be the most unpopular man here if I keep you any longer."

The smile deepened slightly. Little lines appeared at the sides of her eyes. So far from being annoyed, he could see that she was laughing.

"Joseph," she mocked, "I am not tempting you, really! Do sit down. I have met men in many countries, but none like you. Don't you realize that your love for one woman should make you kind to all?"

"No, I don't," he answered bluntly. She patted his hand gently.

"Come," she said, "do not be afraid of me. I will not make love to you—seriously. You must be kind to me because everybody spoils me. After supper there are one or two more questions I must ask you. Do you know that I am going to dance here? Never before have I danced in a private house in England. Except upon the stage, I like to dance only to those whom I love!"

The little space between the curtains was suddenly darkened. John turned eagerly around, and to his immense relief, recognized the prince. Their host came forward to where they were sitting, and held out his arm to Calavera.

"Dear lady," he announced, "supper is served. Will you do me this great honor?"

She rose to her feet. The prince turned to John.

"This is my privilege as host," he explained; "but if you will follow us, you will find some consolation in store for you."

"Well?" the prince asked, as he handed Aida Calavera to her place at his right hand.

"I think not," she replied.

He raised his eyebrows slightly. For a moment he glanced down the supper table with the care of a punctilious host, to see that his guests were properly seated. He addressed a few trivialities to the musical-comedy star who was sitting on his left. Then he leaned once more toward the great dancer.

"You surprise me," he said. "I should have thought that the enterprise would have commended itself to you. You do not doubt the facts?"

"They are obvious enough," she replied. "The young man tried to tell me that he was in love with another woman, and I felt suddenly powerless. I think I must be getting to that age when one prefers to achieve one's conquests with the lifting of a finger."

The prince sighed.

"I shall never understand your sex!" he declared. "I should have supposed that the slight effort of resistance would have provided just the necessary stimulus."

She turned her beautiful head and looked at the prince through narrowed eyes.

"After all," she asked, "what should I gain? The young man is, in his way, a splendid work of art. Why should I be vandal enough to destroy it? I shall ask you another question."

The prince slowly sipped the wine from the glass that he was holding in his lips. Then he set it down deliberately.

"Why not?"

"What is your interest? Is it a bet, a whim, or—enmity?"

"You may count it the latter," the prince replied deliberately.

Calavera laughed softly to herself.

"Now, for the first time," she confessed, "I feel interest. This is where one realizes that we live in the most impossible age of all history. The great noble who seeks to destroy the poor young man from the country is powerless to wreak harm upon him. You can neither make him a pauper nor have him beaten to death. Why are there princes any longer, I wonder? You are only as other men."

"It is an unhappy reflection, but it is the truth," the prince admitted. "My ancestors would have disposed of this young man as I should a troublesome fly, and it would have cost them no more than a few silver pieces and a sack of wine. Today, alas, conditions are different. It will cost me more."

She trifled for a moment with the salad upon her plate, which as yet she had scarcely tasted.

"I am feeling," she remarked, "unusually oriental—like Cleopatra. The sensation pleases me. We are bargaining, are we not?"

"We shall not bargain," the prince interrupted softly. "It is you who shall name your price."

She raised her eyes and dropper them again.

"The prince has spoken," she murmured.

He touched her fingers for a moment with his, as if to seal their compact; then he turned once more to the lady upon his left.

Do you believe that Strangewey will be able to withstand the magnificent fascinations and voluptuous efforts of the Russian dancer to ensnare him?

Galli-Curci at Ann Arbor.

Ann Arbor is indeed fortunate in bringing to Hill Auditorium, on Thursday, October 11, for the opening concert on this year's Pre-Festival Series the distinguished Galli-Curci, whose rise to fame has been one of the most talked about careers in generations. A year ago she was comparatively unknown; today there probably is no better known singer in the world. Instead of seeking engagements, music centers all over the country are besieging her manager, Mr. Charles L. Wagner, for dates, and the society which is fortunate enough to secure her for an appearance is indeed to be congratulated. Not only is she one of the most attractive singers of the present day, but her personality and stage presence is completely in harmony with her wonderful vocal attainments. Still in her twenties, attractive and refined, and possessing magnetism which at once wins and holds the sympathy of her audiences, she never fails to arouse the greatest enthusiasm from the moment she steps on the platform. Her song recitals stand out as features wherever she is heard. They are made the more attractive from the fact that she is assisted by two other artists, whose work is also well known—Manuel Berenguer, flutist, and Homer Samuels, pianist—the three making a combination which is incomparable.

Paying for the War.

Christopher Turnor, an English economist, writing in the London Chronicle of recent date, says the agricultural resources of Britain can be so developed as to practically pay the cost of the present war. Turnor notes that in normal times the 46,000,000 people of Britain yearly expend $2,000,000,000 for food supplies, of which amount only half is produced at home, the balance consisting of importations. Meanwhile more than 4,000,000 acres of arable British land is unproductive of food supplies and thousands of possible land workers are crowded into cities, insufficiently employed and fed. Only a few British farms produce the maximum of possibility, owing to tax methods of cultivation. Turnor argues for some form of agricultural reorganization and estimates that production can be far more than doubled, making it possible to realize $10,000,000,000 from this source to be applied to the war debt.

Dogs in Use at Battle Front.

So many thousands of dogs have been destroyed in the war that far off Greenland has been called on for supplies of dogs for the battle fronts, and a number of dogs entered in the famous 412 mile all Alaska sweepstake race were missing last year because they were engaged in hauling ammunition and doing other war work in the mountains of Italy and France. BUY YOUR DRESS GOODS AS SOON AS POSSIBLE. WOOLS ARE HIGH AND VERY SCARCE, AND IN A LETTER DATED SEPTEMBER 4, 1917, THE COMMERCIAL ECONOMY BOARD WROTE:

"We are facing a serious wool shortage," and to quote further from this letter, "Immediate action must be taken to assure, if possible, an adequate supply of wool for the needs of our army and navy. . . . Consequently this board recommends that, in so far as possible, cotton-mixed fabrics and fabrics containing re-worked wool should be substituted for all-wool fabrics in the manufacture of garments and clothing for civilian use."

Remember, This is the Voice of the United States Government!

Furthermore, a representative of the Commercial Economy Board met with representatives of clothing manufacturers in New York on Thursday, September 27th, to force the issue, and introduce other economies in the use of wool.

CHURNGOLD

CHURNGOLD has established a name among all classes of critical and common sense people which other makers of Oleomargarine may envy, but which they cannot match. It has required many years of patient effort on our part to bring the art of churning Oleomargarine to the CHURNGOLD standard of aroma, flavor and texture. No other maker of Oleomargarine with inferior methods, cheap materials, or catchy prices, can hope to cope with CHURNGOLD. It can't be done with success.

HUNDREDS HEAR HER TESTIMONY

Mrs. Harris Grew So Despondent She Gave Up Entirely, She Declares.

GAINED 35 POUNDS

"I Believe I've Told Fully Four Hundred People In Person About My Recovery on Taniae," She Says.

"I am not only a strong healthy woman instead of a nervous wreck like I was before taking Taniae, but I have actually gained thirty-five pounds in weight besides," said Mrs. Emma Harris, whose husband is in the transfer business and who resides at 5811 Belger street, Dallas, Texas.

"My health had been gradually failing for several months," she continued. "I just had to force down every mouthful I ate and I fell off until I weighed hardly more than a hundred pounds. I was tormented by boils and eruptions all over my body and suffered agonies from rheumatism that made my bones ache like they would break in two. My nerves were in such a state it was simply impossible for me to get any sleep and I felt so downhearted and hopeless that I just gave up entirely and took to my bed."

"One day a friend told me about Taniae and advised me to try it. I sent for a bottle and by the time I had used up half of it my appetite returned and I was soon up and about and able to take up my housework again. I eat anything I want now, my food gives me strength, my blood has cleared up, my rheumatism is gone and I suffer no pains. I sleep like a child and feel fresh and fine when I wake up. I believe I've told fully four hundred people in person, about my recovery on Taniae."

There is a Taniae dealer in your town.—Adv.

A Pointed Question.

Jean's maiden aunt is a dressmaker, and she is forever exhorting the little girl, who loathes the sight of a thimble, to learn to sew.

"Aunt Ruth," Jean remarked recently, "should every little girl learn to sew and make her own clothes?"

"Yes, indeed," replied aunts warmly. "Why do you ask?"

"Well, then, how would you make a living?"

Aunts subsided.

The Joy of Misery.

"Misery loves company." "Not if the other fellow has bigger woes to talk about."

HEALTH AT CUSTER NEARLY PERFECT

LESS THAN ONE PER CENT OF MEN ON SICK LIST, SINCE CAMP WAS OPENED.

MOST SANITARY PLACE IN STATE

Food, Kitchens, Receptacles, Barracks and Bedding Are Inspected Daily By Regimental Surgeons.

Camp Custer, Battle Creek—The health report of the first month of the camp's existence shows a sick list of less than one per cent and not a single death attributable to camp conditions.

Health conditions are superior to those of any municipality in Michigan, physicians say, and the thousands of men who are making this their home have been safe-guarded against disease as they never were before.

There have been a few deaths at Camp Custer. Epilepsy caused some and alcoholic excesses practiced prior to arrival was responsible for others.

Probably in no other place in Michigan is there such a searching inspection of sanitary conditions. Each regiment has its infirmary with a regimental surgeon and assistants. Twice each day men are requested to report if they require medical attention. The infirmary cares for the light cases. The more serious ones are sent to the base hospital.

But the preventative work goes deeper than this, regimental surgeons each day inspect every kitchen, every ice box, the food, the garbage cans, the barracks and the bedding.

They look at the mess kits which the men use to determine whether they are clean. If any one company reports a slight illness among several men, the matter immediately becomes a subject for investigation and a report must be made on the findings.

The blankets in which the men sleep are hung from the windows of the barracks and sunned and aired. At regular intervals bedding and clothing are washed.

And as for the men, whose companies are sent to the showers and are accompanied by officers who see that the matter of personal cleanliness is not overlooked.

PLEDGE WOMEN TO SAVE FOOD

Ford Administration Plans State Wide Campaign.

Lansing—The executive committee of the state food administration at a conference of Food Administrator Prescott and Government Expert S. H. Freeman, laid tentative plans for securing the co-operation of every woman in Michigan.

Pledges will be exacted by personal canvass in every corner of the state in the week of October 21. Until that time the executive committee will spend most of its time perfecting an organization.

The wheatless and meatless days will not be mentioned on the pledges to be exacted; instead the housewives will be asked merely to accept the suggestions of Food Director Hoover in regard to the conservation of food. Later will come the pertinent suggestions regarding the substitution of some other food for meat and white bread.

The selection of Tuesdays and Wednesdays of these two days will probably stand, although word from Washington indicates that their selection is only tentative.

The work is to be done by means of county committees.

MANY HOPE TO BECOME OFFICERS

Thousands At Camp Custer Aspire to Higher Rank.

Camp Custer, Battle Creek—Fort Sheridan stands as a great beacon of hope before some of the drafted men in Camp Custer, Waco, Texas, stands as a possibility before others.

There are thousands of drafted men who have developed an ambition to attain to rank as officers. They are anxiously awaiting the conclusion of the present term at Fort Sheridan. There is quite a general speculation among army men to the effect that the next Fort Sheridan class will be composed, not of men from civilian life, but of soldiers selected from the regulars, the national guard and the national army.

WITH THE BOYS AT CAMPCUSTER

Several of the late arrivals lost themselves in camp and were compelled to ask the Y. M. C. A. workers to help locate their barracks.

The state has offered $2,500 a mile for a new paved way to Camp Custer if the county will pay half. The road would cost $50,000.

Officers have issued the warning that letters and packages addressed to soldiers at Camp Custer must bear the regimental designation and if possible the company or battery designation, or suffer considerable delay. "John Jones, Battery A, 33rd Field Artillery, Camp Custer, Mich." is the proper form of address for prompt delivery.

NATIONAL GUARD IS RE-ORGANIZED

THREE MICHIGAN UNITS WIPED OUT—BECOME 125TH AND 126TH INFANTRY.

FORM 63rd FIGHTING BRIGADE

General Covell Saves Identity of Michigan Troops—Were Slated to Become Depot Brigade.

Camp McArthur, Waco, Tex.—Completely losing its identity as a regiment, the Thirty-first Michigan Infantry upon its arrival at Camp McArthur, Waco, was split up and the enlisted men and officers were divided between the old Thirty-second and Thirty-third.

No sooner had Colonel Ambrose C. Fack announced the safe arrival here of all the Thirty-first men than he was informed by General Lewis C. Covell, commander of the Michigan forces, that complete reorganization of all the state guard had been completed.

Here are some of the important points in the reorganization:

The Thirty-first, Thirty-second and Thirty-third regiments are wiped out as such; in their places there will be the One Hundred and Twenty-fifth and the One Hundred and Twenty-sixth infantry.

Cavalry outfits are transferred to artillery and there will be no cavalry troops in the National Guard.

Michigan troops will form what is known as a fighting brigade, the sixty-third, and are likely to go to France early in 1918.

A machine gun battalion of three companies will be part of the Sixty-third brigade.

Commanding the brigade will be General Lewis C. Covell; Colonel John B. Boucher, former commander of the Thirty-third, will command the One Hundred and Twenty-fifth infantry, and Colonel Joseph B. Westledge, who commanded the old Thirty-second in the north, will command the new One Hundred and Twenty-sixth infantry.

Identity of Troops Saved.

That the Michigan guard was not made the Fifty-seventh depot brigade as had been ordered, was due entirely to the activity of General Covell, officers here said.

If the Michigan soldiers had been used as a reserve force, then they would have been scattered among the Wisconsin fighting regiments and would have lost their identity. The result of this would have been that when the history of the war was written Michigan troops would have received no credit for participation.

Claiming that this was a decided injustice, General Covell, after many conferences, won over the department, and instead of Wisconsin having two fighting brigades, she now has one fighting brigade and one depot brigade, and Michigan has one fighting brigade.

TEUTONS WEAKER, SAYS BAKER

Secretary of War Says German Strength is On Wane.

Washington—Shaken, but still powerful, is the estimate of Germany's defensive strength on the western front given in this week's official communique, issued by the war department, under the name of Secretary Baker.

The superiority of the British over their enemies, the communique says, has conclusively been proved by the last week's fighting; while it has demonstrated that the fighting stamina of the German is deteriorating.

Of the activities of the American force in Europe, the communique says absolutely nothing. Of the forces at home, it reports mobilization of the national guard and the national army proceeding satisfactorily.

Frensdorf Serves Without Pay.

Jackson—Edward Frensdorf, chairman of the prison board of control, has assumed the wardenship of the prison here. With the granting of a leave of absence to Warden Disque, who has left to re-enter the army, Mr. Frensdorf was appointed as acting warden. He will conduct the business of the prison without salary.

New Circuit Judge Only 36 Years Old.

Detroit—Harry J. Dingeman, corporation counsel of Detroit, was ordered seated next January as one of the circuit judges in Wayne county in place of Ira W. Jayne, by the supreme court. Dingeman's petition, that the state board of canvassers had no right to certify Jayne after a recount, was granted. Dingeman will be one of the youngest circuit judges in the history of Wayne county, if not of the entire state of Michigan. He is only 36 years old.

Divorce Refused Four Times.

Flint—For the fourth time Lean and Sarah Tibbets have failed to gain release from their marriage bonds. Judge Fred W. Brennan has dismissed both the wife's complaint and the husband's cross bill. The original bill was filed in 1911 by Mrs. Tibbets. When it had been dismissed, Tibbets went to St. Clair county and began action and while that was still pending, he filed another bill here in Flint, which was dismissed by Judge Stevens.

PROFITS OF COAL DEALERS LIMITED

GOVERNMENT ORDERS PRICES BASED ON 1915 COST PLUS PROFIT.

ORDER IS EFFECTIVE OCTOBER 1

Committees Appointed By Fuel Administrator Will See That Order of Government is Enforced.

Washington—Government control over the coal industry has been made complete by an order of Fuel Administrator Garfield limiting the profits of retail coal and coke dealers throughout the country to a basis which is expected to bring about an immediate reduction in prices to the consumer.

The order, effective October 1, directed that the retailers shall fix their prices so to limit their gross margins over cost to the average of the gross profits during the year 1915, plus a maximum of 30 per cent of the 1913 margin, provided that in no case shall the average margin of the month of July, this year, be exceeded.

Local committees appointed by the federal fuel administrators in each state will see to it that the dealers comply with the order. Dealers themselves will be called upon to return sworn costs sheets showing the facts upon which they have based their prices.

Dr. Garfield selected 1915, as a normal year because the coal shortage which resulted in continued rises in prices did not begin until 1916. The additional 30 per cent is allowed to cover the increase in the retailers cost of doing business, which has increased substantially during the past two years. Prices already fixed by the government for coal at the mouth of the mine are near those charged in 1915, and with the jobbers' charge now limited to 25 cents a ton and the cost of transportation not materially increased, the consumer, in every community, should be able to get coal of any description at approximately the price he paid in 1915.

COAL SHORTAGE IN STATE ACUTE

According to Survey, 50,000 Detroit Homes Have No Fuel Supply.

U. S. AVERTS SEAMEN'S STRIKE

Great Lakes Sailors Get Pay Increase Through Shipping Board.

Washington—A strike of Great Lakes seamen, set for Monday was averted by union leaders when the shipping board, serving as arbitrator in their dispute with carriers, decided to grant the wage increases demanded. Other demands were waived, pending investigation by the board.

The dispute was brought to the shipping board when it appeared the carriers' refusal to deal with the seamen's union had defeated all hope of an adjustment. Both sides agreed to abide by the board's decisions in all except the demand for union recognition, which the carriers still refuse to meet.

The men asked a minimum for seamen in October and November of $95 a month. The carriers had declined to pay more than $85. Deck hands will receive $60 a month. It has been the custom on the lakes for years to pay higher wages during the last two months of the operating season. The summer rate for seamen this year was $72.

SMALL BENEFIT FROM STEEL CUT

Public Will Save But Little As There is No Steel to Buy.

New York—Obscure points in the government's recent price-fixing announcement for steel, iron and coke have been cleared up by conferences of manufacturers with the war industries board. An important point settled is that existing contracts will not be abrogated.

The public, nominally, entitled to buy at the same price as the government, will have little benefit from this, as war needs must be met first and these amount to 7,000,000 tons. Orders placed the last few days amounting to several hundred thousand tons, all for deliveries in from 30 days to 12 months. The building program alone calls for 2,400,000 tons of steel bars, plates and shapes.

All the Entente governments are in the market for more steel. England wanting 500,000 tons of shell bars and forgings, while France and Italy need several thousand tons of ship steel. The United States continues actively to place large munition and war machinery contracts.

Traverse City Dam Blown Up.

Traverse City—What was known as the lower dam of the Boardman River Electric Light & Power Co., which concern supplies Traverse City with light and power, was blown up entailing a loss of $50,000 on the spillway, possibly as much on the dam itself and throwing several Traverse City industries out of power. Unmistakable evidence shows that the dam and spill way were dynamited as bits of the structure were found hundreds of feet from the dam.

NOTICE TO SICK WOMEN

Positive Proof That Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Relieves Suffering.

Bridgeton, N. J.—"I cannot speak too highly of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for inflammation and other weakness. I was very irregular and would have terrible pains so that I could hardly take a step. Sometimes I would be so miserable that I could not sweep a room. I doctored part of the time but felt no change. I later took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and soon felt a change for the better. I took it until I was in good healthy condition. I recommend the Pinkham remedies to all women as I have used them with such good results."

Mrs. MILDRED T. CUMMINGS, 322 Harmony St., Penn's Grove, N. J.

Such testimony should be accepted by all women as convincing evidence of the excellence of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as a remedy for the distressing ills of women such as displacements, inflammation, ulceration, backache, painful periods, nervousness and kindred ailments.

ASTHMA REMEDY

The Worst Way.

Back in the dark ages, when the management of the Erie railroad was not all that it should have been—the rolling stock, needing more oil and the common stock less water—a west-bound passenger train jolted into Corning one day two hours behind time and halted to patch up the engine and take on such passengers as were in no hurry and preferred waiting to walking.

Just as the train was about to jerk itself into motion an excited individual came rushing along the platform, dragging a heavy carpetbag with one hand and waving a telegram with the other. "You must wait!" he shouted, breathlessly. "I'm in an awful hurry! I want to get to Buffalo the worst way!"

"All right!" sang out the conductor of the starting train. "Hurry up and jump aboard. You won't strike anything worse than this!"—Everybody's Magazine.

Get Menthol From Japan.

Before the war about half the menthol crystals exported from Japan were sent to Germany. Since the outbreak of the war the United States has become the largest purchaser of these crystals, followed in order by Great Britain, France and British India. The price was varied from $2 to $2.50 a pound during the last five years, remaining most of the time near the higher mark. Recent improvements in the process of manufacture have kept the price within reasonable limits in spite of a considerable increase in the demand since the beginning of the war.

Unaccountable.

"He declares that he despises, detests and abominates you." "That is very strange," replied J. Fuller Bloom. "I do not recollect ever having lent him any money."

GAVE UP HOPE

Often Wished For Death to End Her Misery. Doan's Effected a Complete and Lasting Recovery.

"I was helpless with kidney trouble," says Mrs. Ellen Janis, 1404 N. Third St., St. Charles, Mo., "and began to think my case was beyond the reach of medicine. The pain in my back laid me up in bed and it seemed as if my back had been crushed. I couldn't sleep and was so nervous I was almost frantic. Flashes of fire came before my eyes and the pains in my head were terrible. My sight was affected. Mrs. Janis, and there were large, puffy spots beneath my eyes."

"How I suffered when passing the kidney secretions! I screamed in agony and I often wished I might die and be out of misery. I had night sweats and mornings on getting up I was so weak and numb I could hardly stand up. I grew so pale and emaciated I looked like death. Doan's Kidney Pills cured me completely and I have been as well and healthy since as any woman of my age."

WRONG FEEDING METHODS.

(National Crop Improvement Series.) There is an old story about a ship captain who had a medicine chest. A sailor was sick and he found that No. 47 in his book was the indicated remedy, but alas! the bottle of No. 47 was empty, so he took equal parts of No. 40, which was strychnine, and No. 7, which was carbolic acid, and added them together and made No. 47—and the sailor died.

The application of this old story is that many a feeder will think that if a little of cottonseed or oilseed meal is good, a whole lot will be better. And, like the man who put the green spectacles on the horse and fed him shavings—just after he got him trained the horse died.

It is human nature to experiment in feeds, and the poor cow has to suffer for an overdose or an underdose before the proper ration is established.

Clinton—Two of Clinton's young men who passed the draft examination and had not asked for exemption were very much surprised when they received their discharge papers. They immediately went to Adrian to know the reason why and requested that their papers be sent to Detroit and an explanation made, as they wished to take their place with the boys at Camp Custer. They are anxiously awaiting the return of their papers.—Local.
