FIVE MORE BOYS ENLIST

Chelsea Young Men Volunteer For Services in Government Quartermaster's Corps.

Chelsea again has reason to be proud of her patriotic sons, five of whom enlisted in the United States Quartermaster's Corps, Mechanical Division, Wednesday in Detroit. All are employed in the Hollier automobile factory and their enlistment means the addition of five stars to the Hollier service flag.

The young men who enlisted and who successfully passed the examination are: Clarence Raftrey, W. S. Heselshwerdt, John R. Hummel, Clarence Spanberg and William Townsend. Roy Dillon accompanied them to Detroit intending to enlist, but did not pass the physical examination.

The young men will leave Chelsea for Washington, Monday morning at 6:30 o'clock from the D. J. & C. station, and they expect to be in France by January 1st.

MISS CHERRYBLOSSOM IS BIG SUCCESS

Charming Music and Stage Settings Combined in Local Talent Musical Comedy

Tuneful music and charming stage settings and costumes, combined with careful training under the direction of Mr. John Wilson Dodge, the author, combined to make "Miss Cherryblossom" one of the best amateur attempts ever staged in Chelsea, Wednesday and Thursday evening.

Miss Winifred Bacon was exquisite in the part of "Cherry" and was ably assisted by the other members of the cast. The part of "Jack" was taken by Mr. Dodge. Herbert Kuhl as Togo, a Japanese aristocrat, and Louis Eder as Kokemo, the greedy and sophisticated proprietor of a Japanese tea-house, had several long speaking parts which they carried off admirably. Miss Margaret Farrell and Donald Riley, as Jessica and Harry, respectively, featured in several catchy songs and a male quartet composed of Ray Thomas, Blaine Barch, Victor Morris and Howard Boyd sang several songs and were repeatedly encored.

The costumes used were all furnished by Vantine of New York. Miss Josephine Miller played the accompaniments.

NEW SCHEDULE FOR BEANS

Farmers Advised to Delay Threshing Until Well Along in Winter.

Recently there was held at Alma a meeting of the Central Bean Jobbers association for the purpose of requesting the government to reconsider the price they had set on beans, which would not allow elevator operators to pay the farmer over $6.00 per bushel, which under the present unfavorable conditions of the crops is not considered enough.

According to government orders beans will be bought on 100-pound basis instead of bushels. Therefore there will be a new bean schedule. They will also be bought on a moisture test, on account of the excessive moisture in all beans this year, and the government requires dry beans that will keep in warm climates.

Therefore, it behooves the farmers not to thresh their beans until well along in the winter, as they will dry out in the pods much better than they will after being threshed, and the beans will handle much better in frosty weather.

INTERURBAN STRUCK AUTO

Accident Wednesday Afternoon on South Main Street Crossing of D. J. & C. Railway.

Driving south on South Main street, Wednesday afternoon about 5:30 o'clock, Herman Gross' automobile was struck by a Detroit, Jackson & Chicago electric interurban car, which was just leaving the station, westbound. The automobile, a Buick four, suffered considerably in the crash, the right-hand rear wheel being broken and the axle shaft sprung so badly that a complete new rear axle must be installed.

The car which hit the Gross auto was the second section of the car due to arrive at 5:11 p. m. The first section had passed only a few minutes before and the second section had just started from the station, located just east of the crossing. The interurban hit the automobile about at the rear door, crushing in the side of the body and pushing the machine into the ditch just south and west of the crossing.

Fortunately, Mr. Gross was not injured and the automobile can be repaired.

PAPER WADS.

Thanksgiving vacation Thursday and Friday.

Virginia Barbour and Ella May Foster have returned to school after a siege of the mumps.

Thanksgiving programs were given in nearly all the grades, Wednesday afternoon.

The children of the third grade have been making a theater of "Pilgrims Going to Church."

The fourth grade pupils are engaged in making maps of the school room.

Many of the grades are engaged in war work for the Red Cross, cutting snips, gun-wipes, making paraffin candles, knitting and so forth.

The sixth grade will be given a half holiday on Wednesday afternoon as a reward for an attendance of 98 per cent and no tardy marks.

The little folks of the first grade had no tardy marks the first month.

The perfect spellers of the third grade during the past month are: Arnold Steger, Helen Imerson, Doris Shepherd, May Hamp, Paul Axtell and Fay Nemethy.

The following poem was composed by the pupils of the fifth grade:

Our Boy's Thanksgiving.

This day of thanks we give to those Our soldier boys in France. We thank our God for Freedom and Our lads across the sea.

And we at home prepare for them A good Thanksgiving day. We'll send our turkey crisp and brown And all things good to eat.

Our weary boys are glad to see The good things come to them; They'll know that we are praising them And loving them for aye.

The Son of Tarzan

By EDGAR RICE BURROUGHS

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

Then the son of Tarzan slipped across the room, slipped through the open window and slid to liberty by way of the spout from an eaves trough.

Mr. Moore wriggled and struggled about the bed. He was sure that he should suffocate unless aid came quickly. In his frenzy of terror he managed to roll off the bed.

The pain and shock of the fall jolted him back to something like sane consideration of his plight. Where before he had been unable to think intelligently because of the hysterical fear that had claimed him, he now lay quietly searching for some means of escape from his dilemma.

The best that he could do was to attempt to attract attention from below; and so, after many failures, he managed to work himself into a position in which he could tap the top of his boot against the floor. This he proceeded to do at short intervals until, after what seemed a very long time, he was rewarded by hearing footsteps ascending the stairs, and presently a knock upon the door.

Mr. Moore tapped vigorously with his toe—he could not reply in any other way. The knock was repeated after a moment's silence. Again Mr. Moore tapped. Would they never open the door? Laboriously he rolled in the direction of the door. If he could get his back against the door he could then tap upon its base, when surely he must be heard.

The knocking was repeated a little louder, and finally a voice called, "Mr. Jack!"

It was one of the housemen. Mr. Moore recognized the fellow's voice. He came near to bursting a blood vessel in an endeavor to scream "Come in!" through the stifling gar. After a moment the man knocked again, quite loudly, and called the boy's name. Receiving no reply, he turned the knob, and at the same instant a sudden recollection filled the tutor anew with terror—he had himself locked the door behind him when he had entered the room!

He heard the servant try the door several times, and then depart. Upon which Mr. Moore swooned.

In the meantime Jack was enjoying to the full the stolen pleasures of the music hall. He had reached that temple of mirth just as Ajax's act was commencing, and having purchased a box seat was now leaning breathlessly over the rail, watching every move of the great ape, his eyes wide in wonder.

The trainer was not slow to note the boy's handsome, eager face, and as one of Ajax's biggest hits consisted in an entry to one or more boxes during his performance, ostensibly in search of a long lost relative, as the trainer explained, the man realized the effectiveness of sending him into the box with the handsome boy, who doubtless would be terror-stricken by proximity to the shaggy, powerful beast.

When the time came therefore for the ape to return from the wings in reply to an encore, the trainer directed his attention to the boy, who chanced to be the sole occupant of the box in which he sat.

With a spring the huge anthropoid leaped from the stage to the boy's side. But if the trainer had looked for a laughable scene of fright he was mistaken. A broad smile lighted the boy's features as he laid his hand upon the shaggy arm of his visitor. The ape, grasping the boy by either shoulder, peered long and earnestly into his face, while the latter stroked his head and talked to him in a low voice.

Never had Ajax devoted so long a time to an examination of another as he did in this instance. He seemed troubled and not a little excited, jabbering and mumbling to the boy and now caressing him as the trainer had never seen him caress a human being before. Presently he clambered over into the box with him and snuggled down close to the boy's side.

OVERCOMING PARENTAL OPPOSITION BY FORCE, JACK CLAYTON GOES TO SEE THE PERFORMING APE AND IMMEDIATELY MAKES FRIENDS WITH THE ANIMAL

Synopsis.—A scientific expedition off the African coast rescues Alexis Paulvitch. He brings aboard an ape, intelligent and friendly. Exhibited at a theater in London a few weeks later, the animal makes a hit. Jack Clayton, son of Lord Greystoke, is forbidden to go and see the ape, but thwarts his parents.

The audience was delighted, but they were still more delighted when the trainer, the period of his act having elapsed, attempted to persuade Ajax to leave the box. The ape would not budge.

The manager, becoming excited at the delay, urged the trainer of greater haste, but when the latter entered the box to drag away the reluctant Ajax he was met by bared fangs and menacing growls.

The audience was delirious with joy. They cheered the ape. They cheered the boy, and they hooted and jeered at the trainer and the manager, which luckless individual had inadvertently shown himself and attempted to assist the trainer.

Finally, reduced to desperation and realizing that this show of mutiny upon the part of his valuable possession might render the animal worthless for exhibition purposes in the future if not immediately subdued, the trainer hastened to his dressing room and procured a heavy whip.

With this he now returned to the box, but when he had threatened Ajax with it but once he found himself facing two infuriated enemies instead of one, for the boy leaped to his feet and, seizing a chair, stood ready at the ape's side to defend his new-found friend. There was no longer a smile upon his handsome face. In his gray eyes was an expression which gave the trainer pause, and beside him stood the giant anthropoid growling and ready.

What might have happened but for a timely interruption may only be surmised, but that the trainer would have received a severe mauling if nothing more was clearly indicated by the attitudes of the two who faced him.

It was a pale-faced houseman who rushed into the Greystoke library to announce that he had found Jack's door locked and had been able to obtain no response to his repeated knocking other than a strange tapping and the sound of what might have been a body moving upon the floor.

Four steps at a time John Clayton took the stairs that led to the floor above. His wife and the servant hurried after him.

Once he called his son's name in a loud voice; but, receiving no reply, he launched his great weight, backed by all the undiminished power of his giant muscles, against the heavy door. With a snapping of iron hinges and a splintering of wood the obstacle burst inward.

At its foot lay the body of the unconscious Mr. Moore, across whom it fell with a resounding thud. Through the opening leaped Tarzan, and a moment later the room was flooded with light from a half-dozen electric bulbs.

It was several minutes before the tutor was discovered, so completely had the door covered him, but finally he was dragged forth, his gag and bonds cut away and a liberal application of cold water hastened his recovery.

"Where is Jack?" was John Clayton's first question, and then, "Who did this?"

Slowly Mr. Moore staggered to his feet. His gaze wandered about the room. Gradually he collected his scattered wits. The details of his recent harrowing experience returned to him. "I tender my resignation, sir, to take effect at once," were his first words. "You do not need a tutor for your son—what he needs is a wild animal trainer."

"But where is he?" cried Lady Greystoke.

"He has gone to see Ajax."

It was with difficulty that Tarzan restrained a smile, and after satisfying himself that the tutor was more scared than injured, he ordered his closed gar around and departed in the direction of a certain well-known music hall.

CHAPTER III.

Exit Paulvitch.

As the trainer, with raised lash, hesitated an instant at the entrance to the box where the boy and the ape confronted him, a tall, broad-shouldered man pushed past him and entered. As his eyes fell upon the newcomer a slight flush mounted the boy's cheeks.

"Father!" he exclaimed.

The ape gave one look at the English lord and then leaped toward him, calling out in excited jabbering. The man, his eyes going wide with astonishment, stopped as though turned to stone.

"Akut!" he cried.

The boy looked, bewildered, from the ape to his father, and from his father to the ape. The trainer's jaw dropped as he listened to what followed, for from the lips of the Englishman flowed the gutturals of an ape that were answered in kind by the huge anthropoid that now clung to him.

And from the wings a hideously bent and disfigured old man watched the tableau in the box, his peckmarked features working spasmodically in varying expressions that might have marked every sensation in the gamut from pleasure to terror.

"Long have I looked for you, Tarzan," said Akut. "Now that I have found you I shall come to your jungle and live there always."

The man stroked the beast's head. Through his mind was running rapidly a train of recollections that carried him far into the depths of the primeval African forest, where this huge, manlike beast had fought shoulder to shoulder with him in years before. He saw the black Mugambi wielding the deadly knob stick and beside them, with bared fangs and bristling whiskers, Sheeta the Terrible and, pressing close behind, savage as the savage panther, the hideous apes of Akut.

The man sighed. Strong within him surged the jungle lust that he had thought dead. Ah, if he could go back even for a brief month of it; to feel again the brush of leafy branches against his naked hide; to smell the musky rot of dead vegetation—frankincense and myrrh to the jungle-born—to sense the noiseless coming of the great carnivore upon his trail; to hoot and to be hunted; to kill!

The picture was alluring. And then came another picture—a sweet-faced woman, still young and beautiful; friends; a home; a son. He shrugged his giant shoulders.

"It cannot be, Akut," he said. "But if you would return I shall see that it is done. You could not be happy here; I may not be happy there."

Then Briefly Tarzan of the Apes Told His Son of His Early Life.

The trainer stepped forward. The ape bared his fangs, growling.

"Go with him, Akut," said Tarzan to the ape. "I will come and see you tomorrow."

The beast moved sullenly to the trainer's side. The latter, at John Clayton's request, told where they might be found. Tarzan turned toward his son.

"Come!" he said, and the two left the theater. Neither spoke for several minutes after they had entered the limousine. It was the boy who broke the silence.

"The ape knew you," he said, "and you spoke together in the ape's tongue. How did the ape know you, and how did you learn his language?"

And then, briefly and for the first time, Tarzan of the Apes told his son of his early life—their birth in the jungle, of the death of his parents and of how Kala, the great she ape, had suckled and raised him from infancy almost to manhood.

He told him, too, of the dangers and the horrors of the jungle—of the great beasts that stalked one by day and by night; of the periods of drought and of the cataclysmic rains; of hunger, of cold, of intense heat, of nakedness and fear and suffering.

He told him of all those things that seem most horrible to the creature of civilization in the hope that the knowledge of them might expunge from the lad's mind any inherent desire for the jungle. Yet they were the very things that made the memory of the jungle what it was to Tarzan—that made up the composite jungle life he loved.

And in the telling he forgot one thing—the principal thing—that the boy at his side, listening so eagerly, was the son of Tarzan of the Apes.

After the boy had been tucked away to bed John Clayton told his wife of the events of the evening and that he had at last acquainted the boy with the facts of his jungle life. The mother, who had long foreseen that her son must some time know of those frightful years during which his father had roamed the jungle, a naked, savage beast of prey, shook her head, hoping against hope that the lure she knew was still strong in the father's breast had not been transmitted to his son.

Tarzan makes an important explanation to Jack, but the talk does not have the effect hoped for by the father.

UNIFORM PIG CROP

One of the First Considerations in Selecting Original Herd.

CONFORMATION OF GOOD SOW

Many Judges of Swine Regard Good Rummy Females as Being Especially High in Fecundity—Male Is Half the Herd.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

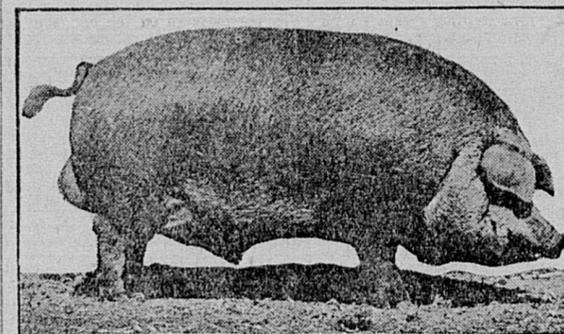

In feeding hogs for the market, as also with any other class of meat animals, larger returns are obtained when the stock is as nearly uniform as possible, and as it is very profitable for each farmer to breed his own feeders, particular attention should be given to the selection of the original breeding stock. Uniformity is of primary importance, for to have a uniform crop of pigs there must be uniformity in the breeding herd, and to obtain this must be one of the first considerations in selecting the original herd.

The Sows.

The females of the herd may be obtained by purchasing bred sows or gilts safely in pig to a boar of recognized worth. As it is often difficult to obtain a sow which has shown herself to be a good breeder by the previous litters she has produced, it is advisable for economy's sake to purchase bred gilts. These should be about twelve months old, being bred after the age of eight months, and if possible all should be in pig to the same boar. Here is the first opportunity to practice selection for uniformity; whether pure-bred or not, the sows should be similar in color, marking, type and conformation. The type of the sows selected should be the one which the market demands. While there is some variation between the different breeds, it is largely a matter of characteristics, as a good individual, no matter what breed it represents, if properly fed and managed will make economical gains.

Conformation.

In conformation a brood sow should show first of all femininity. This is well marked in the hog if a close observation is made, and is characterized by quality and refinement in all parts of the body. The bristles are finer and less erect than those of the boar, giving the sow a smoother appearance. The forehead is smoother, the neck much thinner, and a little longer in proportion to the rest of the body. The shoulders are not as heavy, although they must not be narrow, for such a condition is an indication of lack of constitution. By no means accept any breeding animal that is narrow-chested, for it is a sure indication of lack of vitality and consequently of breeding ability. Ample capacity in the middle should be provided by well-sprung ribs, and long, deep sides. Many judges of hogs regard good rummy sows as being especially high in fecundity, and this characteristic is certainly no detriment to their conformation, provided it is combined with quality.

A sow should show the type demanded in a market animal, namely, a strong, wide, deeply fleshed back; smoothly covered shoulders; plump, well-rounded hams; and a trim, neat underline. A wide, well-developed pelvic cavity will insure easy parturition, and the udder should be evenly and well developed and have at least 12 teats. Her legs should be strong and well placed, have good clean bone, and strong, straight pasterns. It is not of as great importance to have perfect feet and legs in a sow as in a male, but she should show no weakness at this point. A sow should have scale and size, combined with quality. Strong, clean, hard bone, trim joints, neat ears, fine, glossy bristles, and freedom from folds and wrinkles in the skin, are all indications of quality. A large, raw-boned sow, having plenty of capacity and size, but lacking in femininity and quality, is one of the poorest investments a breeder can make, for her pigs will be slow to develop, hard to fatten, and lacking both in numbers and in uniformity.

Selection.

If possible, the first purchase of sows should be made from one herd, for in this manner it is easier to get uniformity. Uniformity goes deeper than the mere visible type or conformation; it is determined by past ancestry and is controlled by the characteristics contained in the germplasm. The germplasm is continuous, extending from individual to individual, and any member of the chain shows in its visible conformation only a few of the possible combinations. In other words, a sow may not produce offspring similar in type to herself, unless her ancestors were of the same type. By selecting the sows from one herd, it is not only possible to choose animals similar in visible type, but they are apt to be similar in dormant characteristics as well. In buying such animals the farmer is not purchasing separate individuals to form so many breeding units, but rather kindred individuals, all parts of a single established line or type which will blend together to form a single breeding unit.

At best, it is impossible to choose sows that will produce true to type, for as yet no line of breeding is absolutely pure, but by selecting the sows in this manner, the chances for uniformity are immeasurably increased. Some mistakes are bound to be made, and their correction will be difficult, but by keeping records of the breeding stock and their produce, it will be possible to dispose of undesirable individuals as their poor reproductive ability becomes known. One ideal must always be uppermost in the breeder's mind, and the stock must constantly approach nearer to that one ideal in order to make any real progress. It is relatively easy to produce hogs, but to produce uniform hogs, hogs that will build up and advance the breed, requires time and constant effort.

The Boar.

The farmer who lives in a community where it is possible to obtain the services of a good boar, and who has only a few sows, will not find it profitable to keep a male simply for use in his own herd. However, if he has six or more sows, or if it is impossible to get the use of his neighbor's boar when necessary, it will be well to purchase one of his own. It is often desirable to delay the purchase of the boar until some time after the original female stock has been selected. If the gilts were bred at the time of their purchase, the service of a boar will not be needed until several months later, when it is necessary to breed for the second lot of pigs. This is not only a saving of money at the time of starting the herd, when expenses are apt to be very heavy, but it also gives the breeder time to study the original sows along with their offspring and select a boar that will correct their faults.

There is a hackneyed but nevertheless true expression that the "male is half the herd." He really does represent 50 per cent of the breeding stock, and therefore is the most important individual in the whole herd, but granting that he forms half, the sows most certainly constitute the other half, even though their influence is divided into several parts. Certainly both halves are equally important and neither can well be neglected at the expense of the other.

It is well to select a boar at least

ROAD BUILDING

TIME FOR DRAGGING ROADS

Much Depends on Character of Road Material—No Exact Rule Will Fit All Cases.

If clay is mixed with water and "puddled" and then allowed to dry a hard, almost waterproof, and nearly dustless material is formed. If a smooth, well shaped road could be constructed of this material it would never become very muddy or very dusty, and would be an ideal earth road. Under ordinary conditions this ideal is not realized, because, after being puddled the earth dries in ruts and holes which are rough while dry and which hold water like dishes when it rains. If the muddy road, after being puddled by the horses' hoofs and wagon wheels, can be smoothed out and properly shaped before drying then the ideal is attained, and this smoothing and shaping is the work accomplished by the road drag. The water standing in pools and puddles is spread out over a larger surface, so that it dries quickly, the minute holes or pores in the clay, are smeared over and closed, making the surface more nearly waterproof; the ruts and holes are gradually filled up and made smooth, and just enough earth is moved toward the middle to give the proper crown. The result is a smooth, hard, well-shaped road which will shed water and never becomes very muddy in wet weather or very dusty in dry weather.

From the above discussion it can readily be seen that dragging should be done when the road is wet, or at least when it is moist. The exact time to drag any given road will depend upon the character of the road material, and no exact rule can be given which will fit all cases. If traffic can be kept off from the dragged portion for awhile then the road may be dragged when it is very wet and sloppy, but if wagons are going to follow right behind the drag, making deep ruts as soon as the old ones are filled up, the dragging must be deferred until the road has partly dried out. Good judgment and experience on the part of the operator will soon tell him what is the best time to drag any given road. Roads which dry out quickly must be dragged immediately after a rain, while others may be allowed to dry for several days before being dragged. Dragging a dry road simply makes it dusty. Dragging should be done, if possible, after every rain, and as soon thereafter as conditions are right.

SURFACING THE FARM ROADS

Materials Ordinarily Used in Building Roads Are Too Expensive—Few Good Suggestions.

Many of the materials ordinarily employed in road construction will be found too expensive for use in improving the farm roads. One or more of the following will, however, usually be found available and within the means of the farmer for surfacing his roads and paths: gravel, mixtures of sand and clay, cinders, brickbats from old buildings, brickyard waste and quarry waste. The material selected should, however, be hard enough to withstand crushing under heavy loads and possess sufficient binding power to compact well and maintain a firm, hard surface under all ordinary weather conditions.

IMPROVE ROADS AND DRIVES

Where Any Considerable Amount of Hauling Is Necessary Surface Improvement Is Needed.

Roads and drives immediately around the farmyard and barns which are used very frequently are usually of sufficient importance to warrant some surface improvement. Very light or extremely sandy soils cut up badly in dry weather, while certain heavy and absorbent soils become very sticky and soft during the rainy season. Where any considerable amount of hauling is necessary, roads over soils of this character may require to be surfaced.

$300,000,000 Lost Yearly.

The farmers of the United States have been allowing $300,000,000 in real money to escape from their pockets each year because of poor roads, according to the testimony of experts who made a survey of the effect of bad roads upon markets for the department of agriculture.

Importance of Discipline.

There is not that thing in the world of more grave and urgent importance throughout the life of man, than is discipline. What need I instance? He that hath read with judgment of nations and commonwealths, of cities and camps, of peace and war, sea and land, will readily agree that the flourishing and decaying of all civil societies, all the movements and turnings of human occasions, are moved to and fro as on an axle of discipline. So that whatsoever power and sway in mortal things; weaker men have attributed to fortune, I durst with more confidence ascribe either to the vigor or the slackness of discipline. And certainly discipline is not only the removal of disorder . . . but the very visible shape and image of virtues; whereby she is not only seen in the regular gestures and motions of her heavenly peace as she walks, but also makes the harmony of her voice audible to mortal ears.—Milton.

A Sense of Approaching Doom

The Kids Wuz Crazy
by KATHERINE POPE

warmers for footrests, then of Mrs. Hall walking miles to her work to save five cents.

Attending a Kinsolving concert a recent morning in the crystal ballroom of the Blackstone hotel, after the concert loitering awhile in the lobby, later sauntering along Michigan avenue and stopping to look at this window of exotic blooms, at that one where platinum, diamonds and pearls showed up with full effect against their velvet backgrounds, the while seeing the stream of luxurious vehicles flowing on in such volume, the companion that was with me had said, "Well, undoubtedly America is prosperous this year; I have never been so impressed with our luxury, with the general well-being."

Coming from the Halls that later day I thought of this remark, of the whole pleasurable scene calling it forth; and I wondered at the why and the wherefores of the inequalities. Why the too-much on the one table the bare subsistence on the other? The slothful warmth, and the dreary cold? The over-brilliant rooms, and the long darkness? Of chiffon bordered with fur, and of shivering Jimmie? Of "the colonel's lady, and of Julia O'Grady"?

Who are going to solve it, when is it going to be solved? Nobody, it seems. Never, it seems. But at least once in awhile, at this special season and that, a momentary lifting of the cloud may occur—at least for the children. Say at Thanksgiving and Christmas, if each able one would look after one unable family, what a lot of "kids could be made crazy!"

Come on, pile up the basket! Telephone to the center that knows the needs, or take a case whose needs you yourself know, and do your best to spoil one group of small ones for one day. Put in the chicken! Put in vegetables enough for a week. Don't forget the potatoes. Remember the fruit. Add candy. Get some Jimmie a woolen coat, and long thick stockings, and exchange his misshapen, run-down-at-the-heels shoes for brand-new ones, thick-soled and equal to keeping out the cold. Give the sure-to-be-there baby a warm outfit, second-hand or first-hand, matters not. Cover that little girl's thin red fingers with thick red mittens. Be sure to give plenty of candy—it won't hurt 'em. And tie all the stuff up fancy like and foolish like. Your friends are bored to extinction, of course, by the repeated complexities of today's Christmas packing; but folk like the Halls won't be. They'll like it; luxuries will help toward that wildness of joy you are working for. Come on, ye unhappy overfed, ye over-warmed, ye blinded by too much light and color, ye of the frivolous fur trimming, and ye lady of the limousine; come all and have a hand in this riot, this midwinter madness, this effort to make a certain class of kids "crazy."

I went over to Mrs. Hall's home, and the setting and situation seemed to my inexperience exaggerated beyond actuality. The place looked like a stage representation of poverty. The husband had deserted; there were three children, a toddler, a sickly girl of nine, a sickly boy of ten; and the mother had "pains in the chest," could work only intermittently. There was plenty of work to be had this year, she said, but first one child fell sick, then another, and she herself, after being so hot in the steamy basements where she did washings and then going out into the cold, would get those pains in the chest and would have to give up for awhile. At present about all she was doing was working at home, putting strings on express tags.

Going home in the street car I fell into such an abstraction I went nearly to the limits before I woke up enough to consider the matter of alighting. I got to thinking of contrasts—of a world of folk fussing about the over amount of protein they had in their systems, and that other world with the family milk ration one tin a week; of people suffering from superheated apartments, and of those that watched anxiously the dwindling nuggets in the basket; of people blinking under the glare of too-many-and-too-high-power bulbs, of the Hall family that went to bed right after supper to save light; of dancing-dresses trimmed with fur, of the thin cottony coat Jimmie Hall was wearing; of limousine with orchids showing at the glass and foot-

Changing the buying habits of thousands

Bond's Economic Principal of Clothing Distribution Brings Thousands of Men to Bond's Busy Stores

is as simple as it is effective; it is not hard to understand. It is in no way complicated. In fact, it is the straightforward, DIRECT methods we use that brought Bond's organization to the front and made it, in a little over two years, A POWER TO BE RECKONED WITH in the clothing world.

First, we STARTED right. We planned for months; we INVESTIGATED. We knew that men were becoming more particular about their clothes, and the majority of men wanted more clothes, but felt they couldn't afford the kind they wanted.

NOW they can. Men who formerly paid the ordinary retailer $25 to $30 now buy BOND'S CLOTHES and SAVE the difference. They now wear the kind of clothes they want, but instead of paying a retailer more, just because a retailer has more expenses, these men buy DIRECT FROM THE MAKER—from Bond's. Yes, we've changed the buying habits of thousands!

are certainly worthy of your careful inspection. They are wonderful values, from the standpoint of fabrics, style and tailoring. Even though our idea might have been right, we could never have attained our present tremendous proportions unless our MERCHANDISE was right.

THE PET OWL.

Once upon a time there was a lot of cousins who had great fun playing in a big barn. They used to run and jump off the great mow right into the sweet, hot hay. And when they were tired of playing hide and go seek they used to swing from the great beams and drop right down on to the floor, all soft with hayseed.

One day the biggest boy found a young owl perched high up in the peak of the barn on a big beam.

Young owls can't see very well, you know. So the biggest boy picked the young owl right up in his hand and carried him into the house.

"Oh, mother," he cried, "could you make Jack a rag owl to play with? Because he just lost his willow whistle, you know."

Now, their mother was very clever with sewing things, so she cut some brown cloth in just the shape of the young owl and stuffed it. She embroidered a beak and neck feathers and sewed two bright buttons among them for eyes. And when it was all finished the biggest boy let the real young owl fly away into a little tree, where he hooted his thanks.

Game of Butterfly.

Each girl is given a butterfly fashioned of crumpled paper perched on a stem about two feet long. Each boy receives a net, also fastened on a handle. Two lines are marked off about thirty feet apart, or a wide space between trees may be chosen. The boys take the position opposite the girls and try to catch in their nets the butterflies which the girls hold out temptingly as they sway and swing on the ends of the wire nets. As each girl's butterfly is caught she is out of the game, and when all are captured the sport is over.
