Recommend the Primrose Separator

The Primrose is Built for Service

BOTH the reasons why you buy a cream separator are met fully by the Primrose. The first is to get all the cream with the least work; the second, to buy a machine that you or your wife can easily keep in operating machine that you or your wife can easily keep in operating condition, and that will skim closely for years.

You know that there is nothing about a Primrose to get out of order. You know, too, that it has a splash oiling system that takes care of every bearing, and that it is a clean machine—no oil in the milk, and no milk in the oil.

But the Primrose has some other exclusive features you ought to know before you buy any separator. For instance, at any position, the handle takes hold the instant pressure is applied, and lets go the instant the pressure is taken off. The spindle stays in the separator, where it belongs. When you place the bowl on the spindle, it centers itself automatically without any pounding and without trying more than once—that saves the lower spindle bearing and prevents dangerous springing of the spindle itself.

No matter what separator question you bring up, you will find it fully answered by the Primrose. Come in and take a good look at it before you buy.

American Library Association War Service has turned loose a stream of books which is destined to become one of the most powerful factors in winning the fight for liberty. Already the efforts of the association have been crowned by signal success and this, in spite of the fact that as late as the end of last summer it had nothing but a concrete plan and a determination to put that idea into operation. Since the association set for itself the task of putting into the hands of the soldiers and sallors the books it felt they needed and would appreciate It has, by an intensive campaign carried on last autumn, raised a million and a half dollars; has procured, through donation and by purchase, more than half a million books which it has assorted and sent out; with the for a book on the valuation of public $320,000 donated by the Carnegie corporation for the purpose, has erected camp library buildings in 34 camps third, for a Roumanian dictionary. He and has others in the course of construction; has opened a dispatch station at one of the points of embarkation from which books are being shipped to France and has got together a force of trained workers to carry out its plans on a gigantic scale.

The headquarters of the American and handed it back. Library Association War Service are at the library of congress. Dr. Herbert Putnam, librarian of congress, is the Assistants to the director are Carl H. Milan, librarian of the pub-He library of Birmingham, Ala., and Joseph L. Shade, head of the periodical the most of this privilege. All the liclvision of the library of congress, and P. L. Windsor, director of the library school of the University of Illinois, are also on the headquarters staff.

Keep Down Expense.

It has been the determination of Doctor Putnam and his associates in the war work to keep overhead expenses down to a minimum. Much of the most important work of the service is being ferred them by the American Library done by volunteers and experts drawn association to read serious books. Befrom libraries all over the country who are working only for the salaries they receive from their regular occupations. The standard salary of the camp librarians is $100 a month, and by obtaining hoard at the Y. M. C. A. or at the camp mess the cost of subgistence is held to a low figure.

To the war service the most gratifying result of its work so far is the tremendous demand for books, a demand so great and so wide in its range gs to prove conclusively to the assoclation that it has a definite field of endeavor and one which is bringing untold happiness to thousands of men. At all the camp libraries a system of book requests has been installed and It is giving accurate information on what the men want to read.

To the great surprise of the older army officers the draft men are calling continuously for serious books. Fiction naturally leads, but not by so wide a margin as one who gave but ly thrown away by the librarian. In casual thought to the matter might surmise. For example, a day's record at the camp library at Camp Meade, Md., the following subjects were represent-

Here is the way you can change the stews to make them different and to suit the season:

1. The meat. This may be any kind and more or less than a pound may be used. Use the cheap cuts, the flank, rump, neck, or brisket. The long, slow cooking makes them tender. Game and poultry are good.

2. Potatoes and barley may be used or barley alone, or rice hominy, or macaroni

3. Vegetables. - Carrots, turnips onions, peas, beans, cabbage, tomatoes are good, canned or fresh. Use one or more of these, as you wish. 4. Parsley, celery tops, onlon tops, Seashore cities-small and sleepy villages in winter, great, bustling cities in summer-are now so numerous that they can hardly be counted. They dot the coast from Maine to Florida; the gulf coast has any number of pretty, salubrious bathing spots, and the Pacific coast, from Gray's Harbor to San Diego, abounds in ocean resorts. Miss Berggren heard a salesman telling of the opportunities in homesteads in the West. Immediately she wrote to friends in Montana, asking them how to take a claim. They told her and she filed on 160 acres, which cost her $24. Later she took 160 acres more, then bought 13 acres and finally took another 160-acre tract. This made a total of 493 acres in her possession, and now it can be sold for $50 an acre.

War prices of farm products came to the aid of Miss Berggren. She put up her shack and made the necessary improvements around the homestead. She did most of the plowing and planting herself, although neighbors helped her some. Then her crop began to ripen, and she soon was in a position to travel back to Duluth as a wealthy land owner.

The trip back to Duluth, however, was for only a short vacation. Miss Berggren hurried again to her homestend in Montana and expects to stay 'out where there's room to breathe."

And thus, doggedly, the two wounded men continued to carry on their weird | not know me, but I ask that you trust ducl until the winding African river had carried the Hon. Morison Baynes out of sight around a wooded point.

Meriem had traversed half the length of the village street when a score of white-robed negroes and halfcastes leaped out upon her from the dark interiors of the surrounding huts, She tried to flee, but heavy hands selzed her, and when she turned at last to plead with them her eyes fell upon the face of a tall, grim old man glaring down upon her from the folds of his

At sight of him she staggered back in shocked and terrified surprise. It ness toward me, and I want to like was the shelk!

The shelk and his party had been marching southward along the river when one of them, dropping out of fine to fetch water, had seen Meriem making for the village. The fellow had called the sheik's attention to the strange sight—a white woman alone in central Africa-and the old Arab had hidden his men in the deserted village to capture her.

And when at last the woman had walked into the trap he had set for her and he had recognized her as the same little girl he had brutalized and maltreated years before his gratification had been huge. Now he lost no time in establishing the old relations of father and daughter that had ex-Isted between them in the past.

A two days' march brought them at last to the familiar scenes of her childhood, and the first face upon which she set her eyes as she was driven through the gates into the strong stockade was that of the toothless, hideous Mabunu, her one time nurse. It was as though all the years that had intervened were but a dream. Had it not been for her clothing and the fact that she had grown in stature she might well have believed it so.

For a time the inhabitants of the sheik's village who had not been upon the march with him amused themselves by inspecting the strangely clad white girl whom some of them had known as a little child

Among the Arabs who had come in her absence was a tall young fellow of twenty, a handsome, sinister looking youth, who stared at her in open admiration until the shelk came and ordered him away, and Abdul Kamak went, scowling.

At last, their curiosity satisfied, Meriem was left alone. As of old, she was permitted the freedom of the village, for the stockade was high and strong and the only gates were well guarded by day and night. But, as of old, she cared not for the companionship of the cruel Arabs and the de graded blacks who formed the following of the sheik, and so, as had been her want in the sad days of her childbood, she slunk down to an unfrequented corner of the inclosure where she had often played at housekeeping with her beloved Geeka.

Meriem pressed her hand above her heart and stifled a sigh, and as she did so she felt the hard outlines of the photographs she had hidden there as she slunk from Malbihn's tent. Now she drew it forth and commenced to re-examine it more carefully than she had had time to do before.

As she sat gazing at the picture she suddenly became aware that she was not alone; that some one was standing close behind her, some one who had approached her noiselessly. Guiltily she thrust the picture back into her waist. A hand fell upon her shoulder. She was sure that it was the sheik, and she awaited in dumb terror the blow that she knew would immediately follow.

No blow came, and she looked upward over her shoulder-into the eyes of Abdul Kamak, the young Arab.

"I saw," he said, "the picture that you have just hidden. It is you when you were a child, a very young child. May I see it again?"

Meriem drew away from him. "I will give it back," he said. "I have heard of you, and I know that you have no love for the shelk, your father. Neither have I, I will not betray you. Let me see the picture."

She drew the photograph from its hiding place and handed it to him. He turned the picture over, and as his eyes fell upon the old newspaper it is true, but still as dear to him as cutting they went wide. He could rend French-with difficulty, it is true, Paris. He had spent six months there on exhibition with a troop of his desert fellows. Slowly, laboriously, he read the yellowed cutting. His eyes were no longer wide. Instead, they narrowed to two slits of cunning. When he had done he looked at the girl.

"You have rend this?" he asked. "I have not had the opportunity,"

Again he that might be furthered if the girl aimed and fired, the bullet splintering were kept in ignorance of the contents were kept in ignorance of the contents of that newspaper cutting. It would certainly be doomed should she learn its contents.
"Mericin," he whispered, "never until today have my eyes beheld you, must ever be your servant. You do me, I can help you. You hate the sheik. So do L. Let me take you away from him. Come with me and we will go back to the great desert where my father is a shelk mightler than is yours. Will you come?"

Meriem sat in silence. She hated to wound the only one who had offered her protection and friendship, but she did not want Abdul Kamak's love. Deceived by her silence, the man seized her and strained her to him, but Meriem struggled to free herself.

"I do not love you!" she cried, "Oh, please do not make me hate you! You are the only one who has shown kindyou, but I cannot love you!"

Abdul Kamak drew himself to his full height.

"You will learn to love me," he said, "for I shall take you, whether you will or no. You hate the sheik, and so you will not tell him, for if you do I will fell him of the picture. I hate the

"You hate the sheik?" came a grim voice from behind them.

Both turned to see the shelk himself standing a few paces from them. Abdul still held the picture in his hand. Now he thrust it within his burnoose.

"Yes," he said, "I hate the shelk." And as he spoke he sprang toward the older man, felled him with a blow and dashed on across the village to the line where his horse was picketed, saddled and ready, for Abdul Kamak had been about to ride forth to hunt when he had seen the stranger girl alone by the bushes,

Leaping into the saddle, Abdul Kamak dashed for the village gates. The shelk, momentarily stunned by the blow that had felled him, now staggered to his feet, shouting lustily to his followers to stop the escaping

A dozen blacks leaped forward to in tercept the horseman, only to be ridden down or brushed aside by the muzzle of Abdul Kamak's long musket, which he lashed from side to side about him as he spurred on toward the gate.

But here he must surely be intercepted. Already the two blacks stationed there were pushing the unwieldy portals to. 'Up flew the barrel of the fugitive's weapon. With relas flying loose and his horse at a mad gallop, the son of the desert fired once, and one keeper of the gate dropped in his tracks. An instant later the other had been ridden down.

With a wild whoop of exultation, twirting his musket high above his head and turning in his saddle to laugh back into the faces of his pursuers, Abdul Kamak dashed out of the village of the sheik and was swallowed up by the jungle.

> CHAPTER XVI. A Strange Meeting.

Sometimes lolling upon Tantor's back, sometimes roaming the jungle in solitude, Korak made his way slowly toward the west and south. He made but a few miles a day, for he had a whole lifetime before him and no place in particular to go. Possibly he would have moved more rapidly but for the thought which continually haunted him that each mile he traveled carried him farther and farther away from Meriem-no longer his Meriem, as of yore,

Thus he came upon the trail of the shelk's band as it traveled down river from the point where the shelk had captured Meriem to its own stockaded village. Suddenly he came to the camp of the renegade Swede Malbihn, whose black attendants field in terror at sight of Tanter and Korak. Malbihn lay in a hammock beneath twisted roughly into shape and held a canopy before his tent. His wounds together by strings of twine. The elephant stopped a couple of paces from the wounded mosning. He was too weak to escape. He could only lie there with staring eyes, gazing in horror into the blood rimmed, angry little orbs fixed upon him, and await his death.

Then, to his astonishment, a man slid to the ground from the elephant's back. Almost at once Malbihn recognized the strange figure as that of the creature who consorted with apes and baboons-the white warrier of the jungle, Malbihn cowered still lower.

It was from Malbiba's dving lips that Korak learned of the Swede's encounter with Baynes and how Meriem was again in the camp of the shelk. Kornk lost no time in seeking her.

When speed was required Korak depended upon no other muscles than his own, and so it was that the moment Tantor had landed him safely upon the same side of the river as lay the village of the shelk the ape man deserted his bulky comrade and took to the trees in a rapid race toward the south and the spot where the Swede had told him Meriem might be.

It was dark when he came to the palisade, strengthened considerably since the day that he had rescued Meriem from her pitiful life within Its cruel confines. No longer did the giant tree spread its branches above the wooden rampart, but ordinary man made defenses were scarce considered obstacles by Korak.

Loosening the rope at his waist, he tossed the noose over one of the sharpened posts that composed the palisade, A moment later his eyes were above the level of the obstacles, taking in all within their range beyond. There was no one in sight close by, and Korak drew himself to the top and dropped lightly to the ground within the inclosure.

Then he commenced his stealthy search of the village. First toward the Arab tents he made his way, sniffling and listening. He passed behind them, searching for some sign of Mericm. Not even the wild Arab curs heard his passage, so silently he went—a shadow passing through shadows.

Naked but for his leopard skin and his loin cloth, Korak the Killer slunk into the shadows at the back of the tent, where his keen scent told him Meriem was. His sharp knife slit a six foot opening in the tent wall, and Norak, tall and mighty, sprang through upon the astonished visions of the inmates.

Meriem saw and recognized him the nstant that he entered the apartment. Her heart leaped in pride and joy at the sight of the noble figure for which t had hungered so long.

"Korak!" she cried. "Meriem!" He uttered the single word as he burled himself upon the inmates of the tent. Three negresses leaped from their sleeping mats, screaming. Meriem tried to prevent them from escaping, but before she could succeed the terrified blacks had darted through the hole in the tent wall made by Korak's knife and were gone screaming through the village.

Korak turned toward Meriem, and at the same moment a bloody and disheveled apparition leaped into the apartment.

"Morison!" cried the girl. For it was Baynes, who, despite his wounds, had made his way to the sheik's village.

Korak turned and looked at the newomer. He had been about to take Meriem in his arms forgetful of all that might have transpired since last he had seen her. Then the coming of the young Englishman recalled the scene he had witnessed in the little clearing, and a wave of misery swept over the ape man.

Already from without came the sounds of the alarm that the three negresses had started. Men were running toward the tent. There was no time to be lost.

"Quick!" cried Korak, turning toward Baynes, who had scarce yet real ized whether he was facing a friend or foe. "Take her to the palisade, following the rear of the tents. Here is my rope. With it you can scale the wall and make your escape,'

"But you, Korak?" cried Meriem. "I will remain," replied the ape man "I have business with the shelk." (TO BE CONTINUED.)

Within the limits of the city, motorists, most critical of road users, can travel for more than 150 miles by diverse routes, without experiencing the slightest difficulty because of poor roads or dusty ones, the head of the highway bureau asserted. Visiting tourists, impressed by this fact, have heralded the reputation of Philadel phia as the city of good roads throughout the country, he said. A man on the shady side of forty thought he was going into a decline. He went to his physician, submitted to a thorough examination and waited the word which was to consign him to the scrap heap.

This is what the doctor, who happened to be a modern physician, told him two or three days later:

"You cat too much, drink too much, sit around too much and walk too litwalk."

The man who thought he was going into a decline demurred at the doctor's suggestion of a rigid diet. At the end of a week of dieting and walking, this man began to look upon life with different eyes. His work, which had been a burden, began to assume an attractive glow. At the end of two weeks, with a modified but still skimpy diet, and more walking, he began to catch himself in the act of running up the stairs instead of dragging himself up by main force. At the end of four weeks of this treatment, without taking a drop of medicine or a single pill, he felt as if ten years had rolled off his shoulders.
