COUNTY ROADS WON

Given Big Majorities in All But Two Precincts: Supervisors Will Appoint Commissioners.

The county good roads proposition proved to be a popular issue Monday, and majorities in favor of the proposition were returned from all precincts excepting the townships of Salem and Dexter. The total vote in the county was 15,289. Only 2,631 votes were cast against the proposition.

A special meeting of the board of supervisors will be called soon, probably within the next two weeks, to choose three road commissioners, as provided under the new system. Actual construction work cannot start before next spring, as the commissioners must first make the necessary surveys and prepare plans to be submitted to and approved by the board of supervisors.

EASTERN STAR ELECTION.

Olive Chapter No. 108 O. E. S. elected officers Wednesday evening as follows: Worthy matron, Mrs. H. D. Litteral; worthy patron, R. B. Waltrous; associate matron, Mrs. Roy Harris; secretary, Miss Nell Maroney; treasurer, Miss Elizabeth Depey; conductress, Mrs. W. C. Boyd; associate conductress, Mrs. C. Freeman.

IN THE CHURCHES

ST. PAUL'S
A. A. Schoen, Pastor.

At 10 a. m. German service. With Evangelical people Palm Sunday is usually confirmation Sunday, but St. Paul's will have no class this year. Nevertheless, a confirmation service will be held.

During the year 31 of St. Paul's young men left home to enter the service of their country. Eight are still in service, mostly "over there." One made the supreme sacrifice. The rest are now at home. Next Sunday at 4 p. m. the young people will entertain and serve a supper to the "boys" at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Schneider.

At 7:30 we will have our "soldiers' night" at the church. Miss Spring will sing "The Lost Chord." A number of boys will give talks, relating their experiences. You are cordially invited.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. P. W. Dieberger, Pastor.
Sunday at 10 o'clock the pastor will speak on the subject, "The Triumphal Entry." Sunday school at 11:15. Rev. John Mason Wells, pastor of the First Baptist church of Ann Arbor, and chaplain in the U. S. army, will give a carefully prepared address on "What the World Owes the Baptists." This is the first of a series of addresses on the denominations represented in Chelsea.

METHODIST.

Rev. William J. Balmer, Pastor.
Special service Sunday morning at 10 o'clock in celebration of our Lord's triumphal entry into Jerusalem. Evening service at 7 o'clock. Theme, "The True Foundation of Knowledge." Sunday school at 11:15. Junior league at 3 p. m. Epworth league at 6 p. m.

CATHOLIC

Rev. Henry VanDyke, Rector.

NEIGHBORHOOD ITEMS

Brevities of Interest From Nearby Towns and Localities.

YPSILANTI—William T. Bradley, motorman on the Detroit, Jackson & Chicago railway, was made blind by flash of lightning Monday while coming from Ann Arbor. It is hoped that he may regain his sight after a few weeks.

MANCHESTER—Fred Beutler, a farmer about three and a half miles west of town, last October met with an accident which caused him to be paralyzed for a time and recently he has shown symptoms of an impaired mind. Tuesday he suddenly disappeared from home, and a company of a dozen neighbors and relatives spent most of the afternoon searching for him. He was found about 5 o'clock one and a half miles south of his home hiding in a thicket of thorn bushes on the Walter Stevens farm.

ANN ARBOR—Suit for $100,000 damages against the Detroit United railway has been started here by Dr. Harry J. Herrick, one of the victims of the Chelsea wreck last July. Dr. Herrick was seriously injured in the accident and was forced to undergo an operation to recover his health, and alleges that since that time he has lost knowledge of the dental profession. Before he would be able to resume his practice, Dr. Herrick claims, it would be necessary for him to take an entirely new course of preparation.

The Thirteenth Commandment

"What they used to call the decent thing we call indecent. You said yourself that marriage without love was horrible. And it is; it's all quarrel and nagging and deceit. If people are faithful to each other morally they seem to quarrel all the more. Long ago I vowed I'd never marry, and I don't intend to. I don't want to marry you. But I want your life."

"Mr. Dunne! Really, this is outrageous."

"No, it isn't! Hush and listen, honey—Miss Kip—Daphne—whatever you'll let me call you. I told you I was stark, starving, crazy mad about you. When I think of you looking for work, living in that awful spare room of those awful Chivvies—when I think of you going from place to place at the mercy of such men as you're sure to meet—when I think of you waiting for poor Wimburn to get out of the pothouse, I want to grab you in my arms and run away with you. It breaks my heart to see you in distress and anxiety; for I want you to have everything beautiful and cheerful in the world. And I can get it all for you. Let me! Let me love you and try to make you happy, won't you?"

She Was More Afraid of Him Now Than Ever.

He huddled nearer and he laid her fast against the door of the car.

His right hand clung to hers; his left slid down to her waist. He drew her toward him, staring up, beseechingly. He laid his cheek against her left side like a child, the big man pleading, to the little woman for mercy.

She felt sorry for him and for herself. She regretted that cruelty was her own unmistakable duty. She had no right to be kind, and charity would be a sin. She wrung her hands free from his with slow persuasion and shook her head pityingly.

He accepted the decision with a nod, but before she could escape from his arm she felt that he pressed his lips against her just above her heart. It was as if he had softly driven a nail into it. Tears flamed to her eyelids and fell on his hands as he carried them to his bent brow. He crossed them on the wheel and hid his face in them, groaning.

"Daphne! Daphne!"

She was more afraid of him now than ever. All the splendors he could promise her were nothing to that power of his longing.

While she waited in a battle of impulses, he regained self-control with self-contempt, in a general clench of resolution. "I apologize," he mumbled. "I'm a fool to think that you could love me."

CHAPTER XX.

Dunne did not speak till miles and miles of black road had run backward beneath their wheels. Then he groaned, "What a fool I was to dream of such a thing!"

More miles went under before he seriously led her to say, faintly, "What were you dreaming of?"

He laughed, and did not answer for another while. Then he laughed again.

"Do you really want to know?"

does him, and sacrifices a blamed sight more. He gives up his freedom, and if she gives up hers she's only giving up something she doesn't know how to use anyway."

Daphne had rarely found a man who would talk to her with Dunne's frankness, and if there is anything that interests a woman more than another it is to hear womanhood analyzed, even satirized. She was eager for more vinegar.

"You won't be shocked and angry?" he asked.

"I don't think so."

"You don't know how pleasant it is to talk life and love to a woman who doesn't rear up and feel insulted at everything. At first you gave me a couple of how-dare-you's, but they don't count. And if you do hate me a little more, why, so much the better. When I thought you had broken with Wimburn I said to myself, 'She's the one girl in the world for me. I'm going to ask her to marry me.' But I was afraid to, for I was afraid of marriage. And then—I— Well, I'd better not— Yes, I will. I said, 'She believes that men and women are equal and have equal rights, and she's going to get out and hustle for herself. Like a little man. Maybe she could learn to love me well enough to go into a partnership of hearts.' That's what I said to myself. You mustn't think it's because I don't want to cleave to one woman; it's because I do. But I hate handcuffs. Do you see? And now you know what I was dreaming of. What do you think of it?"

The answer to his long oration was complete silence. Dunne waited for his answer, and not getting it, laughed harshly: "Well, that's that. The next number on our program will be a half-dressed 'I Never Dreamed but I Bump My Head.' Go on! Marry Clay Wimburn on nothing a year and live miserably ever after."

She said nothing to this, either. Dunne was in a wretched state of bafflement. He put the car to its places, and it ripped through space at fifty miles an hour. Daphne had a new terror added to the load of her nerves.

The car went bounding up a steep incline toward the sverve of a headland, and in right silhouette by the far-reaching searchlight of a car approaching from the other direction. Dunne kept well to the outside of the road, but just as he met the other motor and winced in the dazzle of its lamps, a third car trying to pass it on the curve hurtled into the narrow space with a blaze like lightning and screeched the brakes. There was a yelling and hooting of horns and a sense of disaster.

Daphne bent her head and prayed for life, but without faith. Dunne, half-blinded, swung his front wheels off the road and grazed a wall. The rear wheels were not quick enough. The other car snorted them, crumpling the mudguard and slicing off the rear lamp.

Daphne was thrown this way and that, and it seemed that her spine must have snapped in a dozen places. When she opened her eyes again the car was standing still. Dunne turned to her with terrified questions, and his hands visited her face and her arms and shoulders. He held her hands fast and peered into her eyes while she promised him that she was not dead.

The car that had bested his did not return, but the other did, offering help from a safe distance till its identity was established. In the light of its lamp Dunne got down and examined his own car. Besides the damages in the rear, it had sustained a complete fracture of the front axle, a twisted fender, and a shattered headlight.

The driver of the other car came up and joined the coroner's inquest. He stared at Dunne, and cried in the tone of an English aristocrat, "Gobblies my soul, ain't you Tom Dunne?"

Dunne, blinking in the light, peered at him and said: "Yep! I can't see you, but the voice would be Wetherell's."

"Right-o; it's me. Oh, pardon me, you're not alone. Nobody hurt, I hope and pray."

"No, but we're pretty far from home and country."

"I see! Hum-m! Pity I couldn't get the number of the swine that hit you. I rather fancy I'll have to give you a lift—what? I was out on a tangaroo hunt, but that will wait—if you don't mind trusting yourself to 'bad company.'"

Dunne lowered his voice anxiously. "Is it very bad?"

Yonkers. We'll get another car there."

Wetherell came close and said: "Did he say Mrs. Kip? I can't see you, but I hope you are the fascinating Mrs. Kip I met at Newport. Have you forgotten me so soon?"

"I am Miss Kip," said Daphne.

"Oh, so sorry! I don't mean that, either. But my Mrs. Kip was a strenuous—Lella was her first name. I called her De-Lella, you see. And she called me Sunson. She was a—"

"She is my brother's wife," said Daphne.

"Oh, you don't tell me!" Wetherell gulped, and his abrupt silence was full of startling implications that alarmed Daphne, angered Dunne, and threw Wetherell into confusion.

Dunne helped Daphne to alight from the derelict and transferred her to the other car, where Wetherell introduced them to a mass of shadow whose name, "Mrs. Bettany," meant nothing to Daphne and everything to Dunne.

Dunne arranged to have a wrecking crew sent out to his roadster, and chartered a touring car and a chauffeur for the trip into New York.

He sat back with Daphne and murmured prayers for forgiveness because of the dangers he had carried her into and for the things he had said. Daphne's nerves had been overworked. She had been rushed from adventure to adventure of soul and body. She had been invited to enter a career of gorgeous sin, and she had been swept along the edge of a fearful disaster.

Mrs. Chivvis met Daphne at the door. Her recent affection had turned again to scorn, and she glowered at Daphne, who crept to her room in hopeless acceptance of the role of adventuress.

Tired as she was she could not sleep. The clangor of the morning called her to the window. A gray day broke on a weary town. The problem of debt and food and new clothes dawned again. Everything was gray before her.

Wisdom whispered her to take Dunne at his word and try the great adventure. How could it bring her to worse confusion than she found about her now? And then the morning mail arrived and brought her a large envelope addressed in a strange hand. She opened it and took from it a sheaf of photographs.

Her father's image a dozen times repeated lay before her. The untouched proofs omitted never a line, never a wrinkle. One of the pictures looked straight at her. She recalled that once she had stood back of the photographer and her father had caught her eye and smiled just as the bulb was pressed.

She made him smile like that. What would his expression be when he learned that she had "listened to reason," ceased to be his daughter, and become Tom Dunne's—

She shuddered back from the word and the thought. She forgot both in the joy of reunion with her father. All the philosophies and wisdoms and luxuries were answered by the logic of that smile.

She lifted his pictured lips to hers with filial eagerness and her tears pattered rubulously on the proof. She was satisfied to be what the jeweler in Cleveland had called her to Clay Wimburn—"old Wes Kip's girl."

Suddenly she remembered Wetherell and his messages to Lella. She felt so renewedly virtuous herself that it seemed her duty to go down and rebuke Lella for her apparent philandering at Newport. She was also curious to see how guilty Lella would receive the news that Wetherell had asked for her.

But she found Bayard at home for luncheon and she was neither mad nor mean enough to confuse Lella before him. And this was rather for his sake than Lella's.

Lella was just informing Bayard that the butcher had delivered the morning's order no farther than the freight elevator, and instructed his boy to send the meat up only after the money came down.

Bayard had no money and the chagrin of his situation was bitter. He snarled at Lella: "Tell the cub to take the meat back and eat it himself. Then I'll go over and butcher the butcher."

Lella dismissed the boy with a faint-hearted show of indignation. Then she came back and said, "And now we have no meat to eat."

Bayard was reduced to philosophy, the last resort of the desperate: "Well, the vegetarians say we ought never to eat meat, anyway. We're poor, but my Lord! we're in grand company. Look at this cartoon of Caesar's in the Sun—Father Knickerbocker turning his pockets inside out and not a penny in them. New York City has to borrow money on short-time notes at high interest to pay its own current bills."

"Look at Europe. All the countries over there were stumbling along under such debt that they wondered how they could meet the interest on the next pay day. And now they are mortgaging their great-grandsons' property to pay for shooting their sons."

"It's the old Thirteenth Commandment that we've all been smashing to flinders. And, my God! what a punishment we're all getting! And it's only beginning."

They sat down to a pitiful meal—meatless, malodorous, mirthless—hardly more than the raw turnips and cold water of Colonel Sellers. Lella fetched what victual there was.

After the meal Bayard shrugged into his overcoat and left without kissing his wife or his sister goodby.

Daphne and Lella went out to the kitchen, set the dishes in the pan, and the pan under the faucet. Lella turned on the hot water. Daphne was glad to be at work.

"There's one good thing about a small meal," she chirped, "it makes less dishes to wash." Then, with as much trepidation as if she had been the accused instead of the accuser she faltered: "Oh, say, Lella, do you remember a man named Wetherell?"

Lella dropped a plate. She said it was hot. But other plates had been hot.

"Wetherell? Wetherell?" she pondered, aloud, with an unconcealing uncertainty. "I believe I do remember meeting somebody of that name. English, wasn't he?"

"Very."

"Oh, yes. He was at Newport, I think. Why?"

"Oh, nothing. I met him last night and he thought I was you."

"How could he? Lella gasped. "We don't look the least alike."

"It was in the dark."

"In the dark! Good heavens! Where?"

Already Lella had gained the weather gauge. Daphne had to confess her outing with Dunne, the crash of the collision and the return to Yonkers in Wetherell's car. Lella took advantage of the situation to interpolate: "Good heavens! How could you? You of all people! And with Tom Dunne! What would Clay think?"

Daphne knew that she had no right to reproach Lella for having known Wetherell in Newport. She had no right even to suspect that Lella had overstepped any of the bounds of propriety. And still she was not convinced of Lella's innocence. She was utterly silenced.

CHAPTER XXI.

The next day her fears of Wetherell and of Lella were reinforced. She went down to ask Bayard to help her trace Clay. Bayard was out and Lella was on the point of leaving. She was dressed in her killingest frock and hat and generally accoutered for conquest.

"Aren't we grand!" Daphne cried. "You look like a million dollars. Where are you off to?"

"Going for a little spin."

"Who with?"

Lella hesitated a moment, then answered, with a challenging defiance: "With Mr. Wetherell. Any objection?"

Daphne disapproved and felt afraid; but when Bayard came in unexpectedly early and asked for Lella Daphne lied inevitably and said she did not know where she was.

She tried to be casual about it, but Bayard caught fire at once. He was already in a state of thirly irritability, and Daphne's efforts to reassure him as to Lella's innocence of any guile only angered him the more. He kept leaning out of the window and staring down into the street. Finally, spying Lella in Wetherell's car when it approached the apartment house, he dashed to the elevator and met the two at the curb.

When Lella got out she was startled to see him standing at her elbow. There was nothing for her to do but make the introductions.

"Oh, it's you, dear!" she fluttered. "I want you to meet Mr. Wetherell."

Mr. Wetherell, my husband."

"Ah, really!" Wetherell exclaimed, trying to conceal his uneasiness. "This is a bit of luck! I've heard so much about you! Your wife does nothing but sing your praises."

"Won't you come up?" said Bayard ominously.

"Er—thanks—no, not today. I'm a trifle late to an—er—appointment."

"Then I'll have a word with you here," said Bayard. "Run along, Lella; I'll join you in a minute."

He said it pleasantly; but Lella was terrified. The spectacle of rival bucks locking horns in her dispute is not altogether enjoyable to a civilized doe.

Lella went into the vestibule and watched through the glass door, expecting a combat. She could not hear Bayard saying:

"Mr. Wetherell, I'd thank you to pay your attentions elsewhere."

"What's that?" Wetherell gasped at the abrupt attack.

"Your attentions to Mrs. Kip are very distasteful to me."

"My dear fellow, I hope you don't imagine for one moment that— Why, your wife is the finest little girl in the world!"

"That's for me to say, not you!"

"My word! this is amazing!"

"It is, indeed. It will be more than that if you come around again. Had you heard that your country was at war?"

"I had."

"Well, a big, strapping fellow like you ought to be over there fighting for his country instead of looking for trouble here."

Wetherell's panic at the domestic situation was forgotten in the attack on his patriotism. He drew himself up with an unconsciously military automatism and said, "I fancy I'm doing as much service here as I could do over there."

"More, perhaps," Bayard sneered, with contemptuous irony. "But that's your business, not mine. Mrs. Kip is my business and I don't intend to have her subjected to your attentions. I'm trying to be neutral, but by— Well, I've warned you. Good day!"

Bayard joined Lella in the vestibule and they went up in the elevator together. She waited till they were in their own apartment before she demanded an account of the conversation.

He told her in a rage and she flew into another. She divided her wrath between Bayard and Daphne. There was enough for both. Daphne tried to escape, but, being cornered, proceeded to fight back, whereupon Lella denounced her to Bayard and told of her ride with Dunne.

It was a right good fight and getting well beyond the bounds of discretion when the telephone announced that Clay Wimburn was calling.

Nobody imaginable would have been welcome in that battlefield, but Clay seemed peculiarly ill fitted. Bayard went to the telephone and called down:

"Tell him we're out."

"Yes, sir."

Evidently the telephone was taken from the hallman's hand, for Clay's voice roared in Bayard's ear:

"I hear you, you old villain. I know you're in, and I'm coming up. It's a matter of life and death. I'm on my way up now."

It seemed decent that Lella and Daphne should disappear, since Bayard had said that they were all out. The women retreated to Lella's room as a goal of evasion.

PLANT CORN FOR ENSILAGE EARLY

Expensive Mistake Generally Made in Northern States by Planting Crop Late.

BEST FOR LARGE VARIETIES

Crops Are Made Much More Profitable When Judged by Feeding Value and Not by Its Height or Weight—Cultivation Pays.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Planting ensilage corn late instead of first is an expensive mistake very generally made in northern portions of the United States. Strong germinating seed of ensilage varieties from farther south should be planted two or three weeks earlier than the home-grown seed, which is planted for the production of grain.

Earlier Planting, Better Yields.

When large ensilage varieties from Virginia or Missouri, for example, are planted in northern states late in May, they make a rapid, long-jointed, tender, succulent growth, and are so green when fall frosts occur that they are heavy to handle, low in feeding value, and make ensilage which is sloppy and too sour. But when planted in April, or very early May, they make a slower, harder growth, better withstand spring frosts and summer droughts, and reach a more advanced condition of maturity and produce more grain than when planted later. Fall frosts, not spring frosts, are most to be feared.

Early maturing, home-grown varieties do not need and may not be benefited by unusually early planting, but large-growing ensilage varieties are benefited. Though somewhat dwarfed by very early planting, the large ensilage varieties will, by nature, make ample stalk growth, and because of early planting will yield more and richer grain and make richer and sweeter ensilage. Early planting supplies the age necessary for maturation and reproduction.

Early Cultivation Warms Soil.

Ensilage crops in the North are made much more profitable when these two points are observed:

Judge the crop by its feeding value and not by its height or weight, or the amount of labor necessary to silo it.

Although earlier planting necessitates earlier cultivation, it pays. Early cultivation dries and warms the soil surface. If it remains wet it remains cold, and the young corn cannot grow. Stiring causes the surface to dry rapidly, absorb heat, feel warm to the hand, and the corn to grow, while near by, uncultivated soil will remain cold, with corn at a standstill.

LESSONS OF DAIRYING APPLIED TO WOODLAND

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Few costs money. If a cow does not pay for her feed you dispose of her and buy a new one.

Why keep a tree if it is not paying rent on the land it occupies? Replace it by a faster growing tree.

If you want good calves you breed good cows.

You can not get good young trees from the seed of poor kinds. Leave seed trees of the kinds that grow fastest and are most valuable.

FEED GRAIN FOR FINISHING

Practice Is Advisable to Harden Soft Fat and Meat and Put on Additional Weight.

Farmers substituting pastures entirely for grain and other concentrated feeds to their market hogs through the summer will find that, before marketing in the fall, it will be advisable to feed grain to harden the soft fat and meat and put on additional weight. Light but steady grain feeding on pasture, however, gives better results than a heavier feeding during a short or finishing period.

SERUM TO PREVENT CHOLERA

Case Cited of Sow in Tennessee Which Survived After All Other Members of Herd Died.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Two years ago a farmer in Maury county, Tennessee, lost all his hogs from cholera—he didn't believe in vaccination then—so when the county agent called on him in the fall of 1917 to interest him in increasing hog production, in answer to the call of the United States department of agriculture, little encouragement was received.

However, the farmer wanted to do his part, so he purchased a broad sow and to please the county agent, he said, had the animal vaccinated. He placed the sow in his brother's herd for breeding the following spring. While there the destructive disease came and every one of his brother's hogs died, but the vaccinated sow survived and has since produced two litters of healthy pigs.

WHY EGGS WERE NOT FOUND

Commission Men Discover Farmers Were Selling Only Hens Which Were Laying on Job.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

When Missouri entered upon her vigorous poultry culling campaign she unwares deprived the commission men of a considerable source of profit. They had formed the habit of taking as "clean velvet" the eggs (usually from one to two dozen in each crate), laid en route from the country to the central market.

This winter, when the manager of one of the poultry firms which buys the surplus from Missouri flocks noticed that his "boys" were not turning in the customary number of "troves" he at once suspected that someone connected with the plant was appropriating the eggs.

He promptly started an investigation which reached all the way from Chicago to Missouri, before the guilty party was found. When the investigators reached Missouri they soon found that the farm bureau of this and other Missouri counties had been carrying on an active poultry culling campaign, and that the farmers and poultrymen were selling the buyers only the hens which neither had laid or which were new laying on their jobs.

The manager of the Chicago house now knows why there is such "slim picking" in his crates.

FEEDING VALUE OF SOY BEAN

Seed Contains From 30 to 45 Per Cent Protein and Compares Favorably With Other Feeds.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The feeding value of soy-bean seed, which contains from 30 to 45 per cent protein, is very high and compares favorably with other concentrated feeds. The growing of soy-bean seed will enable the farmer to produce at a moderate cost at least part of the high-protein concentrates necessary for stock feeding and milk production. When fed to sheep and hogs the beans can be fed whole, but in general it is preferable to crack or grind them. Practical experience has shown that it is necessary to mix the beans with corn or peas first and then grind together into meal. Owing to the high content of protein, soy-bean seed should always be fed in mixture with a less concentrated feed.

TO KEEP BARNYARD SANITARY

First Provide Drainage and Then Put in Filling of Gravel or Other Material.

In building a barnyard, first provide for drainage and then put in a filling of gravel or cinders. Soft cow ashes from a factory are a good material, but cinders from a railway locomotive are better. Such a yard will seldom or never be muddy, and it can be kept clean and sanitary.

USE VEGETABLES AND FRUITS

Plan How to Utilize All Perishable Products—Don't Wait Until Ready for Use.

Now is the time to plan how you will utilize the perishable products, such, for instance, as vegetables and fruits. If you wait till these products are ready for use to think about the way they are to be disposed of you will most surely lose much of the surplus.

Do You Sleep Well?

To be at his best a man must have sound, refreshing sleep. When wakeful and restless at night he is in no condition for work or business during the day. Wakefulness is often caused by indigestion and constipation, and is quickly relieved by Chamberlain's tablets. Try a dose of these tablets and see how much better you feel with a clear head and good digestion. Adv.

foundations.

When You Think about roofings, the name McFenry-Millhouse just naturally comes to your mind. That is because their Asphalt Shingles and Asphalt Prepared Roofings in rolls are known the country over for quality, durability and economy.

Nothing but the very best material obtainable enters into the manufacture of these products.

The processes are efficient to a high degree. The McFenry-Mil-are recognized as standard of the trade.

Thrifty planning in constructing new buildings or re-roofing your present buildings means that you will specify these high grade materials for the purpose. The roll roofing is exceedingly economical and practically indestructible.

There is absolutely no waste to roll roofing. It can be used to advantage on any and all classes of buildings.

Come in sometime and look these materials over. No obliga-
