SAVING SEED POTATOES.

A. B. Spencer, superintendent of the Methodist Old People's home, has developed a system whereby he expects to save a quantity of seed potatoes this spring. Briefly, his idea is to save the seed ends from table potatoes, also as many of the small potatoes as he considers fit for seed. He believes there will be a greater shortage of seed potatoes this spring than there was in 1919 and he has asked as to pass the suggestion along, also to inquire if others in his vicinity have tried this plan previously. Mr. Spencer thinks he can save enough seed to plant at least a half acre.

JACKSON ON CENTRAL TIME.

Jackson will not change to eastern standard time in April as a number of Michigan cities and villages have decided to do. THE OLIVER NO. 26 SULKY is a two wheel sulky plow. That is, when the operator wishes to raise the bottom from the ground he merely presses a foot trip which puts into operation the lifting mechanism. The lifting mechanism operates so that when the bottom has been raised to the proper heights, the latch dog automatically unlocks, rendering impossible a break through some mistake on the part of the driver. The horse lift feature saves the operator the hard work of raising and lowering the bottoms every time he comes to the end of the field or a turn. It is also particularly desirable for work in extremely hard plowing conditions, and for use on rough and uneven land because it can be backed easily. Let us show you some of the exclusive features of the Oliver sulky plow.

LESS MEAT IF BACK AND KIDNEYS HURT

Take a Glass of Salts to Flush Kidneys if Bladder Bothers You.

Eating meat regularly eventually produces kidney trouble in some form or other, says a well-known authority, because the uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish; clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region; rheumatic twinges, severe headache, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salt is made from the best of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus avoiding serious kidney disease.—Adv.

If You Need a Medicine You Should Have the Best

Have you ever stopped to reason why it is that so many products that are extensively advertised all at once drop out of sight and are soon forgotten? The reason is plain—the article did not fulfill the promise of the manufacturer. This applies more particularly to a medicine. A medicinal preparation that has real curative value almost sells itself, as like an endless chain system the remedy is recommended by those who have been benefited, to those who are in need of it.

A prominent druggist says "Take for example Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a preparation I have sold for many years and never hesitate to recommend, for in almost every case it shows excellent results, as many of my customers testify. No other kidney remedy has so large a sale." According to sworn statements and verified testimony of thousands who have used the preparation, the success of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is due to the fact, as many people claim, that it does almost every thing in relieving kidney, liver and bladder ailments; corrects urinary troubles and neutralizes the uric acid which causes rheumatism. You may receive a sample bottle of Swamp-Root by filling out the coupon below and enclosing ten cents; also mention this paper. Large and medium size bottles for sale at all drug stores.—Adv.

GETTING RICH QUICK.

Synopsis.—Dick Morgan of Syracuse, N. Y., a failure in life, enlisted in the English Legion of the French army under the name of Henry Hilliard. The French surgeons ask for a photograph to guide them in restoring his face. In his rage against life he offers to deliver a picture postcard bearing the radiance of a smile. The surgeons do a good job. On his way back to America he meets Martin Harmon, a New York broker. The result is that Morgan, under the name of Hilliard and disguised as Morgan, goes back to Syracuse to sell a mine. He is eventually lured to make good. He tells people of the death of Morgan. He works in Angela Cullen a loyal follower of Dick Morgan. He meets Carol Durant, who had refused to marry him. She does not hesitate to tell him that she had loved Morgan. Hilliard tells her still loves her and is tempted to confess.

"I'll have to admit," said Hilliard lightly, "that the odds are on the side of the experts. But as for the romance—" He smiled at Angela and wondered if he dared begin his mission to build up the framework of his son. "I've been telling Angela that it's mostly hard work. Once in a while you do run into something bright, of course—romantic. If you want to call it so. I remember one bit out of my own experience." Angela had dropped the papers, and was listening as closely as her father. "A few years ago some friends of mine bought up an old abandoned property out in the Butte region; bought it for a song, and it was a very quiet peaceful little thing at that, because metals had been dull, and to continue the metaphor—my friends weren't particularly good salesmen just then. But after they'd taken this, they realized that they'd only seen the first verse of the song, and there were a lot more verses and a pretty strenuous chorus. There was a shaft to be unwatered and a lot of timber-work to be done; they were in for a big expense, and their credit had lapsed in it, and the outlook wasn't any too rosy. But thirty years from the main workings there was a fairish sort of tunnel, with the start of a vein—that's a blind shaft running down obliquely from a horizontal tunnel, and it pointed straight toward the main shaft, and it occurred to them that they could continue that vein another few feet, strike their main shaft about the hundred and fifty foot level, and save a lot of labor and expense that way by getting a clean approach to the shaft instead of taking a lot of bother with it in its deranged condition. Well, they began to go down that vein, and inside of ten feet they struck a brand new and unsuspected vein—there hadn't been any outcrop showing; it was sheer, unwatered luck. Then they had credit—they certainly did! To make a long story short, they pawned their futures, and begged and borrowed every penny they could lay their hands on, and they developed that property to the last cent, and when they had perhaps two hundred thousand or so tons of four per cent copper in sight, and there were indicated ore reserves of another half a million tons, they sold that property to a group of New Yorkers for an utterly phenomenal price, without ever having so much as touched the original shaft for which they'd bought the property!"

"Ouch!" said Cullen, and "Goodness!" said Angela. "And," said Hilliard, smiling reminiscently. "If the original owners had pushed that vein for a couple of days more than they did, or if my friends hadn't decided to go at the problem in exactly that way... well, as I say, what's one man's romance is another man's tragedy. My friends got their investment back in something less than four months, and after that it was velvet. And the selling price was in the neighborhood of two hundred times what they'd paid for it. That's mining history, Mr. Cullen." And indeed it was—and the only fabrication about it was Hilliard's claim of friendship for the lucky owners. This, as he assured himself, was salesman's license—every successful operator is a "friend" of any salesman.

Cullen nodded thoughtfully; his eyes were bright. Angela was alternately regarding him with indulgent pity, and sending it told-you-so messages to Hilliard. "Where was this—in Montana?" "Silverthorn county. Near Butte. Yes, there is romance in that country, Mr. Cullen. It's in every tree and every rock, and in every hill and valley and under the ground. And I'm afraid I'm just enough of a realist to find most of my own under the surface." "To save my life," said Cullen, "I can't help thinking of that region as a Mark Twain sort of country—somebody and six-shooters and Vigilantes and stage-coach hold-ups and gold dust as a medium of exchange. I know it's childish, but I've never been out there, and it's hard to get over what we learned at school." He surveyed his stunted partner less arrogantly; the mountain, which in his moments of complacency had all the attributes of a geyser for him, was suddenly a feeble faucet, and the tidy lawn was no more seductive than a window-box. "The up-to-date schoolbooks," said Hilliard, laughing, "have a good many changes in them. The West of the early eighties is all gone, the atmosphere is all gone, the old-style miners are all gone; you used to see some picturesque sights even ten years ago, but nowadays you best realize how the industry has changed when you see a couple of pals hunting for work in an auto drive up to a camp, ask for a job, get it, park the auto, take the tools out of the delivery door on behind, and pitch in. And you can't imagine the other chances that accompany that one. Of course, that's especially typical of Arizona, but we get it in Montana, too. I'm not saying that the color has gone out entirely, because it hasn't, but in the old days the West was the West, and now it's too good East as it is today, you'll have to go down to Wall street. That's where it lives."

"Mining—mining!" mused Mr. Cullen. "Sounds adventurous just to say it." He gazed at the fountain. "And to industry is less understood—even by intelligent men, Mr. Cullen. As a matter of fact, the public doesn't even understand most of the commonest terms. The buying public doesn't even know what it is buying. That's why it's so easy to sell worthless stock."

"Oh, Mr. Hilliard!" "For instance," he said, "I spoke of a certain number of tons in sight, and that's one of the very commonest expressions in a fake prospectus. I suppose you know you couldn't see it, don't you?"

"Why, no!" said Mr. Cullen, blankly. "Couldn't I?"

"You might actually see a few thousand dollars' worth."

"Why," said Angela, surprisedly, "I thought it stuck right out on the walls in gold! And you knocked it off with a pickax? And shoveled it up?" "Not exactly that," said Hilliard kindly. "Sometimes you go at an ore body with steam shovels, and other times you don't. But when you remember that three or four pounds of copper to every hundred pounds of rock means a very handsome profit, if your costs aren't excessive, you have some idea of how little you could knock out a wall. No—you tear down the whole mass. You go at it wholesale."

"What I meant by romance," said Mr. Cullen, "wasn't necessarily luck. And besides, this yarn you've just told us doesn't illustrate what I call a business proposition. What I'm trying to get at is that you've got an occupation that isn't a cut-and-dried one like the average. There's breadth to it—vision. There's drama. There's the outdoor side to it. There's—"

"Don't forget," Hilliard warned him, "that I purposely gave you that illustration, and I think you've missed the moral. It was a business proposition. My friends bought the mine for the values they knew were there. They'd have made money if they'd gone ahead unwatering and timbering and developing the old shaft—so that it wasn't all bull stock, not by any means. And I claim that the romance and the drama and the excitement is in the combination of business sense with that wonderful possibility of accident. You don't go in at random; you use your best judgment, and expect about ten per cent on your money—and it's the chance of getting a thousand per cent that keeps the game alive. Some men don't ever get the ten; they might just as well get the thousand; that the gods have been good to me, and put me somewhere in between."

"Now You Just Wait a Second."

as anything else. The trouble comes in knowing when a mine's a mine, and when it's a swindle, and I guess you have to be a metallurgical shark to know that anyway. But the way things have been going for the last year or two, with all this speculation in the metals, and all the fortunes that have been made, sort of set me to thinking that with good advice, you—"

"I beg your pardon," said Hilliard quickly. "There's been a mighty little speculation in metals, Mr. Cullen; but there's been a tremendous amount of speculation in stock. The difference between West and East; the difference between insider and outsider; the difference between the capitalist and the gambler is this—the East, the outsider and the gambler buy stock; the West, the insider and the capitalist buy mines. Buy them outright and develop them first and exploit them afterward. If they're good, the West keeps them to itself and pockets the profits; if they're shabby, the West sells stocks to the East, and gets its profit that way, and cubby steps out from under. The art and science of underwriting—"

"Now you just wait a second," interrupted Angela, who had been fidgeting and playing with her wrist watch. "Dad—Mr. Hilliard! This is actually interesting, but dinner's in just a few minutes, and—"

"Plenty of time," said Cullen, waving her off. "Plenty of time! Go ahead, Mr. Hilliard. This is too good to miss. Smoke a cigarette for an appetizer?"

"Thank you," Hilliard, having decided to take complete advantage of the present opportunity, marshaled salient details as he held a match for his host. "Well, perhaps I can show you best by an actual example. I'm out of the game entirely, as I said, but I was invited a day or two ago to join a New York syndicate in financing a property I appraised myself in 1911. It's owned at present by four boys with a shoe-string apiece. They can't finance it themselves, so they need help, and they've come to Wall street and whispered their secret through a megaphone. Now suppose just to make it clear all around, that you and I and Angela are to form a syndicate to underwrite the company." He was sustained by the reflection that even though he came in the guise of a mountebank, there was nothing dishonorable about the wares he had brought to sell.

"Ooh!" said Angela, joyously. "Thanks!" "Simultaneously her father gave her a little frown of affectionate remonstrance, and Hilliard gave her a little smile of affectionate esteem.

"Now, the boys who own it," said Hilliard, "are in such straits that we can practically dictate our own terms. I don't mean to imply that we'd take too great an advantage of them, but it's a plain case of supply and demand, and we're naturally interested in a bargain. We go over the mine very carefully, and find that although it isn't actually producing any copper just yet, because the owners run out of money before they could get that far, it has enough ore reserves to guarantee at least ten thousand tons a year for twenty years, provided the necessary equipment is bought and put into operation. That tonnage, with the price of copper where it is now—around thirty cents—and the cost of production what it is now, and other factors what they are now would eventually mean a net profit of about a quarter of a million dollars a year. So first we have these present owners organize a corporation, capitalized at two million dollars."

Cullen smoked violently, and looked puzzled. "You're getting out of my depth. How do you arrive at that?" "That's so as to insure ten per cent dividends. And the mine can pay ten per cent, provided we can arrange to get the capital. You see, Mr. Cullen, a copper mine isn't like a factory, and you can't figure it the same way, because a factory runs on indefinitely, and if you simply replace the machinery whenever it wears out, there's nothing to prevent the same plant from keeping on making the same sort of product for a hundred years. But every pound of ore you take out of a mine leaves that much less for the future, and eventually your ore's going to be all gone. And if this particular mine is going to be exhausted in about twenty years, it stands to reason that it's being exhausted at the rate of one-twentieth, or five per cent, a year. You must take that always into consideration. And therefore, every stockholder is entitled to get back at least five per cent of his money each year to cover that depreciation. In addition to whatever he ought to get for ordinary profits which is another five per cent. Otherwise—"

"Oh! I see!" cried Angela. "Prove it!" commanded Hilliard indignantly.

"Why, if the company just paid five per cent for twenty years, and at the end of it, your ore was all gone, the people would only just have got their money back, and they wouldn't have made any real profit at all!"

"Exactly!" said Hilliard. "So the company must pay at least ten per cent—half for long file dividends and half for depreciation."

"Oh!" said Cullen, opening his eyes. "Is that why the big mining companies pay such big dividends? I thought it was all clear profit!"

"No, sir. The dividends of a mining company have to be very high to be attractive at all; they have to make good that depreciation. Well, we make the boys incorporate, as I said, for two million dollars, on which we can pay ten per cent. I'll show you what the setup looks like." He wrote on the back of an old envelope: Capitalization $2,000,000—200,000 shares at $10 each.

"Now, the company (and you must remember that so far we haven't any official connection with it), agrees to take over the property, and pay the present owners for it with 80,000 shares of stock, and it also agrees to sell to you and Angela and me the other 120,000 shares at a dollar apiece, or $120,000, of which we agree to pay half in cash, and the balance in about thirty days."

"Now then, we own 120,000 shares for which we've paid, and agreed to pay $120,000. That is, we've underwritten these shares for a dollar apiece, and paid down half the amount. Now let's begin to look at it from the public's standpoint. Here's a mine with plenty of ore; and a company with cash enough on hand to begin producing at a profit very soon—although nobody pretends that it's actually producing now. It has $60,000 in the bank, and another $60,000 due in thirty days. It can go ahead and contract for machinery and workmen, and it does, and you and Angela and I are still letting the former owners manage it, but since we're in control of the stock, we either elect ourselves as directors, or elect other people whose names carry weight with the public, so that we can always direct the general policy, and see that it's careful and conservative. From every angle, then, financial and moral, the venture looks like a big success. So you and Angela and I go to a good broker, or to a group of brokers, and make them of the value we have; we let them send their own engineers out to make a report, and as evidence of good faith, we pay all their expenses; we let them go over our books. Everything's fair and square and above-board. And we agree that these brokers will take some of this stock off our hands to sell to the public because they've got a selling organization already established, and plenty of customers who look to them for advice; and it's agreed that they'll pay us—say, four dollars a share for what they think they can sell. The brokers then do some advertising, send out their circulars and bulletins and pamphlets to their customers, and sell that stock to the public for anywhere from six to eight dollars a share. That is, the public is glad enough, when the prospect's a good one, to pay seven or eight dollars (because every share's going to be worth ten) for what cost the broker four dollars, and cost us one dollar—which we've already got back from the brokers, and we've still got the half of those 120,000 shares of ours left besides! So here's the final balance sheet!" He hastily totaled the list, and handed it over to Cullen.

"In this particular case," he said, "the syndicate's about half formed. Nothing final, but it's pending. And it is good—so good that I doubt if any layman could break into it with a cold chisel." Again, he excused himself on the ground of salesman's license. "But that's the fundamental, Mr. Cullen—that's how the thing is done, and that's how the public carries the whole burden of financing, and doesn't know it."

He assumed an attitude of easy unconcern. Angela, her breath coming rapidly, was regarding him with untrusting eyes. Mr. Cullen, his mouth drawn to a perfectly straight line, was gazing spellbound at the orderly array of figures on the envelope.

"And this—is a genuine mine?" he managed presently. "In my opinion, it's a very wonderful prospect," said Hilliard, and he believed every word of that solemn statement.

Mr. Cullen folded the envelope, and then suddenly, as though too cautious to betray his profound absorption (which he had been betraying frankly for at least twenty minutes), tossed it back to Hilliard.

"When you've got a syndicate that'll let me in for six, thirty cents," he said, with elaborate humor. "Just pass along the good word, will you?" "I never try to do business with my friends," said Hilliard, with the most delicate touch of reproof.

"Give" and "Get." The two little words "give" and "get" sum up the differing creeds of earth and the ambitions of mankind. Those who are eager to bestow, to enrich the world around them, to help, to uplift, constitute the one class. The other crowd grasps everything for self, only its own.

there's a huge profit for us, isn't there?" "But suppose there's never a dividend?"

"Don't we know there will be? Didn't I say we control the board of directors?"

"But suppose you can't find brokers to—"

Hilliard gestimated broadly. "Why, as a matter of fact, we don't care very much if we don't! That's the commoner method, and that's the way to get our money back almost at once, and then play on velvet. But if instead of working through brokers we were willing to tie up our capital a little longer, we'd make considerably more money in the long run, as you can plainly see. We'd advance one hundred and twenty thousand dollars, wait until dividends could be declared, and then get the stock listed on the curb and begin to feed it out to the public through a fiscal agency. There'd be twice as much in it for us, but we wouldn't be in that perfectly delightful position of owning a lot of valuable stock which literally hadn't cost us anything. Or, of course, we could offer some of the shares to our personal friends at a fair price, and reimburse ourselves that way. Knowing that it's worth ten or fifteen, we wouldn't feel very gully about selling it to personal acquaintances at eight or nine, would we? Why not—when we know for a certainty that it ought to go up to fifteen? They'd bless us for it!"

"Bar the main point, the staggering thing about it is—"

"Is that if the public gets ten or fifteen per cent dividends," said Hilliard, "or buys at ten and sells a few dollars higher, it thinks it's lucky; and in the meantime, the underwriters make anything up to a thousand per cent, and get it in a few months. And I've known some of these syndicates to turn over in a few days."

"Oh, I want to do it!" said Angela ecstatically. "I want to do it! Dad! Let's be a syndicate and go out to Montana until it's over! Come on! Let's!" Hilliard laughed cheerfully at her.

"In this particular case," he said, "the syndicate's about half formed. Nothing final, but it's pending. And it is good—so good that I doubt if any layman could break into it with a cold chisel." Again, he excused himself on the ground of salesman's license. "But that's the fundamental, Mr. Cullen—that's how the thing is done, and that's how the public carries the whole burden of financing, and doesn't know it."

Sick for Five Years and Given Up

Fontaine, Mich.—"A few years ago I was in a very bad state of health and had been sick for about five years. Had several good doctors but kept getting worse all the time. Some said I had consumption; some said I had some other thing, and some another. I finally made up my mind that I would try Dr. Pierce's medicine. I had tried several different kinds of medicines but nothing seemed to give me any relief. One day I saw Dr. Pierce's medicine advertised and I got a bottle of 'Golden Medical Discovery' and it began to help me. I felt that I had some other chance so I got the 'Favorite Prescription' and the 'Pleasant Pellets' also, and these medicines cured me completely in just one year when I was so sick and had been sick for five years. I am now in perfect health and I am very grateful to Dr. Pierce for my good health and keep his medicines in my home for immediate use. I consider they saved me from suffering and doctors' bills as well. I have recommended Dr. Pierce's remedies to many people and will gladly reply to anyone wanting to know about these medicines and how they can be obtained.—MRS. B. J. BALDWIN, 246 Norton Ave.

STOMACH TROUBLE Can Now Eat Anything Grand Rapids, Wis.—"I have used Dr. Pierce's medicine and found them very beneficial. I had stomach trouble for about four years. I had been sick and I would eat or I would be down sick. I suffered something terrible about a year ago. I started to take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and two bottles put me in fine condition. I can eat anything and not feel distressed. I had taken many medicines previous to this and had doctors prescribe for me but nothing gave me any relief until I started taking the 'Discovery.' It gave me great relief. I take pleasure in recommending it.—MRS. EMIL OESTLICH, 212 14th Ave., North

WHAT HE SHOULD HAVE SAID

Reporter Had Much to Learn About Proper Method of Referring to Different Speakers.

"I'm afraid you won't do for us," said the editor, controlling his temper with an effort, as he eyed the new reporter coldly.

"Why not, sir?" asked the reporter in surprise.

"Well, you said you had had considerable experience as a political reporter."

"So I have," retorted the scribble.

"Then why on earth did you make use of such unjournalistic language in this report?"

"Well, Bill Blank next harangued the mob, of course."—London Answers.

The kidney secretions were held back until only a few drops came, and I bleated until I thought my skin would burst. My legs were twice their normal size. The water seemed to fill my chest and press against the heart. For three months I never moved out of the chair and I choked and gasped for breath like a dying man. All the doctors failed, and my weight went from 185 to 125 pounds."

HANDS ACROSS

By GRACE R. RILEY.

(See 1236 by Article Newspaper, syndicate)

The electric fan hummed monotonously; the bookkeeper's pen scratched unceasingly; even the keys under the stenographer's fingers were momentarily still, when the door suddenly opened and a voice boomed through the silence:

"Is Duncan Pratt in?" The office force became rigid; alert. "Your name, please," a clerk inquired.

"Norman Dodge of Dodge, Ltd., London."

A comprehensive glance flashed from one to the other. Dodge, their largest competitor?

Mr. Pratt's door opened and a striking young woman, tall and slender, with a regal carriage, whose bronze hair in sunlight turned to gold, summoned the stranger within. What occurred there no one knew; but in a short time he emerged, muttering in a testy voice:

"You'll regret your decision, Pratt!"

As he drove away from the building his brain plotted the downfall of Pratt & Co. He forgot the war had undetermined the once inalienable solidity of his house; that he was driven to Duncan Pratt to reconstitute his business to its former financial standing. His car halted abruptly; his chauffeur leaped from the motor and lifted an unconscious girl from the pavement. Without looking at her, Mr. Dodge ordered that she be taken in his car to the hospital.

His days were crowded. His brain was constantly revolving the problem of Pratt's refusal. A week passed before he again visited the hospital, where he learned that Patient 36 was doing well and would like to see him. She sat in a chair by the window; the sun on her hair turning it to gold.

"How do you do, Mr. Dodge?"

With a great effort he managed to say something agreeable, but his mind and his speech had no connection whatsoever. For an hour they chatted pleasantly. When departing he touched lightly upon their first meeting.

"Now that I have run down his secretary, Mr. Pratt will be even more obturate on my proposal."

"Please don't think that. I intend you shall be friends some day."

Every day Norman Dodge spent an hour with "Miss 36" as she insisted upon being called, and finally she was able to ride with him.

"I am going home tomorrow, Mr. Dodge. Next Sunday will you dine with us?"

"Where is your home?"

He was surprised when she gave him an address in the heart of Boston's most exclusive center.

"I'll be there."

When Sunday came he was elated as a college boy. Never had he met a girl like this one, and he knew the impression was to be a lasting one. The girl's home was of solid brown stone.

Miss 36 is an anomaly—her character and appearance belong to this beautiful house, yet she is one of the totters of the world. He thought, as he waited for her in a room whose rich simplicity bespoke not only money, but good taste.

"Mr. Dodge," she came in with hand extended, "father will be here directly, so let's be frivolous while we may before you become immersed in business. Father lives and moves and has his being in business, and the only chance I ever have of seeing him is at his office."

"What's that, daughter?"

"This man her father! It could not be!"

He found himself greeting Duncan Pratt. His daughter left them alone.

"Dodge," said Mr. Pratt, "since we last talked business, your chauffeur has accomplished that which was absolutely beyond you. In running down my daughter, he has brought us together. In business—you will pardon my frankness—you had cut my throat as often as possible. I would have retaliated, but the great Dodge, Ltd., was beyond my reach. Then the war—the great leveler—brought you within my grasp and I meant to crush you. When you had this accident, your treatment of a girl whom you supposed to be poor, made a strong appeal, and my daughter, whom I prize more than she can ever know, has made a stronger. She insists, and I agree if you do, that we must be friends."

Norman Dodge took the hand extended to him. "I gladly agree."

"Then shall we go further—let us reconsider the matter which brought you to my office. If details can be arranged, shall we clasp hands across the sea?"

"Wait a moment, you two—I am coming into this hand-holding campaign." Natalie Pratt came back into the room. "I think the combination should include me, too." She looked from one to the other, the dimples coming and going, a blush coloring her cheeks.

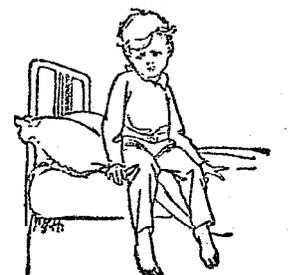

"Mr. Pratt, can you open your heart still further and accept me as a son? I love your daughter, and—"

"She loves you, and you might well know it!" interpolated Natalie.

"Dodge, since I declined to go with Natalie into society, Natalie insisted upon going with me into business. You will do her in acquiring her head as well as her heart. We will have a combine that can't be beaten!" said her father, as he clasped their hands in his own.

COMMON ANCESTOR TO BLAME

Unsightly "Apple" is a Legacy Bequeathed to His Posterity by Old Father Adam.

We all "have it in" for Adam for shutting to our faces the gates of the Garden of Eden. But many of us, though we may not know it, bear a particular resemblance to this common ancestor that puts another chip on the shoulder. For it is generally conceded that an "Adam's apple" is no aid to beauty. And besides making of our Paradise a cold, bare world, it is Adam who inflicted upon us this additional burden. When our common progenitor took the fatal bite that forever doomed the rest of us to existence by the sweat of our brows, a piece of the fruit is supposed to have lodged in his throat and stuck there in his children's children unto the nth generation. And that is why the slight protuberance that some people have at the front of the throat is called "Adam's apple!" Speaking of ancestry, some of us carry about on our persons unmistakable proof of our ancient lineage.—Chicago Journal.

His Fervor Dampened. Down in southern Oklahoma, after the cotton crops are laid by, it is the custom of the colored population to hold big camp meetings. At one of these the minister was talking of the great joys of heaven. One of the brethren became very much excited and began shouting: "Praise de Lawd; how I does wish I see a June bug; I'd spread my wings and fly away to heaven."

At this one of the sisters sprang up and said: "Why, Brudder, Moses, one o' dem woodpeckers would be sho' to git yo' on de way!"—New York Evening Post.

There is more catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and for years it was supposed to be incurable. Doctors prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Catarrh is a local disease, greatly influenced by constitutional conditions and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Medicine, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is a constitutional remedy, is taken internally and acts thru the blood on the mucous surfaces of the system. One hundred dollars reward is offered for any case that Hall's Catarrh Medicine fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio. Sold by all druggists, 75c. Why Colds are Dangerous.
You are often told to "beware of a cold," but why? We will tell you: Every cold weakens the lungs, lowers the vitality and paves the way for the more serious diseases. People who contract pneumonia first take cold. The longer a cold hangs on, the greater the danger, especially from the germ diseases, as a cold prepares the system for the reception and development of the germs of consumption, diphtheria, scarlet fever and whooping cough. The quicker you get rid of your cold, the less the danger of contracting one of these diseases. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy has a great reputation as a cure for colds and can be depended upon. It is pleasant to take. Adv.

"The Farmer Kept Faith With the Country
--Now Let the Country Keep Faith With Him"
LEONARD WOOD

This is Wood's sentiment toward the American Farmer, as expressed in his Platform and speeches:
"If the farmers had not kept faith as they did we would have lost the war, we would have been unable to feed our Allies and ourselves. They sent their sons to war, and in spite of the shortage of labor they raised the biggest crop in history."
"We want to maintain our rural population because it is the basis of our most stable citizenship. To do this, we must make life on the farms more attractive. The farmer must have good roads—he pays his full share of taxes. His interests must not be permitted to suffer so that other interests may profit more. If there is anything more important in this country than Agriculture, I do not know it."
"We must have a Department of Agriculture conducted for the Farming interests by men who really know farming from the furrow to the crop."
"We must have national economy at Washington, and a budget system."
"We must have federal suppression of all dishonest business, no matter how large, no matter how small."
"We must have more producing, less spending, a saner cost of living."
"We must have a longer term of years to pay the war debt."
"We want fewer tenant farms, more owned farms."
