

ELECTRIC BOOTLEGGER

John Galpa of Detroit Was Running
Liquor Into Cement Plant

John Galpa of Detroit was arrested Saturday on a charge of bootlegging, two gallons of whisky being found in a small suitcase he was carrying.

Galpa posed as an electrician and his suitcase was disguised to make it appear to be a tool case. Several tools used by electrical workers were attached to the outside of the case and to lend further effect a small piece of wire was allowed to protrude from under the cover. But the wire was "shorted" just inside of the case, the "electrical contact" was broken, and the two gallons of booze took up all the space.

Galpa had been seen here before with the same outfit, but when he came repeatedly, suspicions were aroused and his detention and arrest followed.

In Ann Arbor, Wednesday, he paid a fine and costs of $125 and will spend 30 days in jail also.

Two other booze dealers, George Rojtor and Lozio Geitz, who had been operating three stills making moonshine in Salem township, were each fined $400 and $50 costs Tuesday in Judge Samples court.

CHURCH FLOOR GAVE AWAY.

Last Sunday evening the M. E. church was filled to the doors with a crowd of people who had come to listen to the Children's Day exercises and just as the program had started, the floor in the center of the church suddenly gave way and settled about eight or ten inches. Pandemonium reigned for a minute and a terrible fatality was narrowly averted by a few cool headed men who admonished the crowd to be silent and pass out of the building in an orderly manner. This was done and the exercises were finished on the church lawn.

Upon investigation it was found that one of the supporting posts in the basement of the building had become decayed and broken off, thus permitting the floor to settle.—Webberville Index.

WAS A BOY DESPERADO

Whitmore Lake Five-Year-Old Gave Howell The "Once-Over."

Evidently they grow wild young over at Whitmore Lake. A five-year-old boy from that burg visited the Livingston county seat town one day recently and the Republican reports his antics as follows:

"Saturday morning a boy giving his age as five and his name as Vern Drumford (not sure about the name) came to Howell on the morning train from Whitmore Lake. On leaving the Ann Arbor depot he picked up a ladies umbrella as it was raining. On reaching Grand River avenue he unhitched a team and started west at a rapid pace. An automobile soon overtook the team and turned the boy over to Sheriff Miller. At the jail he had cleaned up on one or two of the sheriff's boys, husky kids too they are. He said he lived at Whitmore Lake, that his father was an old man, his mother a young woman. The runaway was dispatched back to Whitmore Lake on the afternoon train."

TRUCK DRIVERS FINED.

Two truck drivers, hauling cement from the plant of the Michigan Portland Cement Co. at Four Mile Lake to Ann Arbor recently paid stiff fines for overloading their trucks and damaging the roadway from the plant northwards. It is alleged that the trucks are of only five tons capacity but carried loads of approximately seven tons. When they were stuck the drivers dug holes in the roadway and neglected to fill them up again. The Dexter township officials grew tired of repeatedly repairing the road and having it ruined again in a few days and so caused the drivers arrest, with the result that the offenders were obliged to pay for the labor of filling up the holes and were given stiff fines also.

The House of Whispers

By WILLIAM JOHNSTON

Copyright by Little, Brown & Co.

"I AM IN TROUBLE."

Evangelicalism, a young girl, apparently in trouble, to whom he has an opportunity to be of slight service. She lives in the same apartment building as Rufus Gaston, and he accompanies her to the house. Gaston and his wife are going to Maine for a trip and want to leave Nelson in charge of the apartment. He accepts. Gaston and his wife tell their creation of mysterious noises—"whispers"—which they have heard in the house. On his way to the Gaston apartment the next Sunday Nelson again meets his accidental acquaintance of a few days before, Barbara Bradford. She urges him not to allow the fact of their being acquainted to be known. At the apartment Nelson meets the superintendent, Wick, and instinctively distrusts him. He finds a necklace of magnificent pearls, worth a small fortune. Meeting Barbara in the hallway she accuses him without recognition. Dining in a restaurant he is conscious of the unpleasant scrutiny of a stranger, but a man whom he had seen before. Next day Nelson finds the pearls have disappeared from the wall safe. His first idea of informing the police is not acted upon because of peculiar circumstances. He has been discharged from his position without adequate explanation or reason, and feels himself involved in some thing of a mystery. He decides to conduct an investigation himself.

I dined in a little restaurant in one of the side streets and walked home. Immediately on entering the apartment I decided to put my money in the wall safe. There would be less temptation for me to spend it if I carried only a little in my pocket. As I opened the safe by means of the combination I made the astounding discovery that one of the jewel cases had disappeared.

And now I stood hesitating at the telephone. Self-protection bade me notify neither the superintendent nor the police. Yet I must do something. The jewels entrusted to my care had been stolen. The thief must be found and the pearls recovered.

Why should not I myself play the detective? I had abundant leisure now. My great-uncle had informed me that there was something wrong in the house and had charged me to discover what it was. Here was the opportunity for me to fulfill the trust he had imposed on me.

The thought flashed across my mind, too, that perhaps the crafty old gentleman had deliberately planned the disappearance of the gems. Perhaps he had devised an elaborate test to see if I was honest, if I was of the right caliber to be his heir. Maybe he and his wife had not gone to Maine at all. They might even be quartered in another apartment in this very house, surreptitiously entering where they knew I was absent. There really had been no necessity for them to give me the combination of the safe. They need not have told me anything about the pearls. I wondered if they themselves might not have taken away the jewel box just to see if I would discover the loss and to ascertain what I would do about it.

Another theory suggested itself. My aunt evidently prized her jewels highly. After they had started she might have repented having left them behind and have sent the old colored butler back to get them. He, of course, would have a key to admit him, and they would have supplied him with the safe combination, as they had me. Probably he had been told to leave some message for me and had forgotten to do so. More than likely in a day or two I would receive a letter from old Rufus that would explain everything.

I was glad now I had not notified the superintendent nor the police. My second theory surely was far more logical than the first. It seemed preposterous that they would risk hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of gems just to test my honesty.

Still, I determined to make a thorough investigation. If they had been stolen, I would set about in a scientific way to discover the method of the theft and to bring about restoration. I would keep my investigation secret, and if it turned out that the pearls were safe, no one would know of my fright about the matter. I began outlining my work as a detective.

First, I would examine the safe knob for possible finger prints. Second, I would interrogate Mrs. Burke. I would watch her carefully for any appearance of guilt. I would try, without arousing her suspicion, to ascertain if she had let her key out of her possession.

Third, I would insert an advertisement offering a reward for the return of the jewels, so worded that only the thief and myself would understand. Fourth, I would try to locate the Gastons and would question the hall boy and telephone girl as to whether they had correspondingly returned.

Fifth, I must try and discover what was in the mysterious letter that had led to my discharge. While this did not seem to have any connection with the other affairs that were troubling me, if I was to remain in New York and become better acquainted with Barbara Bradford, as I fondly hoped, I meant to have nothing hanging over me.

I was about to get into bed, had turned on the light, in fact, when I recalled the errand that had led me to open the wall safe. I had more than two hundred dollars in my trousers pocket and I purposed putting it where it would be safe. With the feeling that if the jewels had disappeared, so might my money, I pressed the light button in the sitting room and looked about for a hiding place. Recalling a custom of my mother's, I stepped over to the bookcase and taking a Macaulay's History, Volume Three, from the shelf, placed behind the leaves all of my money except fifteen dollars. No burglar was likely to find it there.

I extinguished the light and in the darkness stepped back into my bedroom, and stopped stock still.

From somewhere in the room there came three distinct taps. Instinctively I crouched in an attitude of self-defense and strained my ears to listen. My first impression was that there was someone in the room, probably the burglar. I hesitated about turning on the light. If he were armed it would give him all the advantage. Breathlessly I listened. Once more there came three distinct taps, this time apparently from somewhere outside the room. I wondered if it had been sounds like these that had so terrified the old couple.

Perhaps it was the echo of someone pounding in another apartment, the noise being carried along by a water pipe. The thought that it might be the crackling of some hidden steam or refrigerating pipe suggested itself. Both these theories I rejected. The sound, whatever it was, had originated close at hand.

It came again. This time I was certain that it was not due to footfalls as I had at first conjectured. I was able, too, to locate more closely the direction from which it came. The window at the foot of the bed stood open, and the sound seemed to float in from somewhere outside. I hurried over to the window and thrust my head out. At first I could see nothing, but even as I looked a white arm thrust forth from an adjacent window on the same floor. It held a riding crop and reaching out as far as was possible it rapped three times on the sill of my window.

It dawned on me at once that the window next must belong to the Bradford apartment. It must be Miss Bradford trying to signal to me.

"Hello," I called out softly.

"Oh, is that you, Mr. Nelson?" a re-echoed voice whispered. "I thought you would never hear. I must see you."

"What's the matter?"

"I've had another letter."

"From those men in the park?"

"I suppose so."

"Tell me about it."

"I can't now. Can you meet me somewhere tomorrow?"

"Wherever you say."

"Do you ride?"

"Yes, indeed."

"I'll be to the cross lane that leads from McGowan's Pass tavern between eight and eight-thirty."

"I'll be there."

Whether or not she heard me I did not know. She withdrew quickly from the room as if someone had entered. I waited there in the window for a full hour in case she should wish to communicate with me again.

By and by the light in her window was extinguished, but even then I sat there at the window adjoining, hoping in vain that she would seek to renew the conversation.

When at last I got into bed I was in a restless mood. I had quite forgotten Miss Bradford for the evening when she met me in company with her maid and sister. It was enough for me to know that when trouble again threatened her she had decided to trust in me and had sought my aid.

I fell asleep at last and slept for I do not know how long. Opening my eyes in the darkness I seemed to feel the presence of someone in the room. There was the sound of footfalls somewhere—muffled, seemingly some distance off. I was almost certain I could detect unuttered words. In a curious detached state of mind I listened, wondering whether I was awake or asleep. The footsteps seemed to come closer, then recede. The whispering noise ceased. I sprang up, and hastily lighting up all the rooms, explored them thoroughly. There was no evidence anywhere of anyone's presence. As I lay there thinking about it, I decided that my illusion must have been a dream, due to my thought of spirit rappings when I first had heard Miss Bradford's signal.

I was still thinking about my experience when I awoke early the next morning. Springing lightly out of bed, I stopped in utter bewilderment. There, in the center of the room on the floor lay a small white folded slip of paper. It could not have been a dream, after all. I had heard foot-steps and whispers. I had not imagined it. Someone had been in the room while I slept. There was the proof, the note they had dropped.

Wondering if Miss Bradford had found still another unusual way of communicating with me I hastened to pick up the folded paper that lay on the floor. On the outside it bore my name, in typewriting, "Mr. Spalding Nelson."

With eager fingers I unfolded the paper, wondering what message it contained. As I read it, I stood there, aghast. It ran:

"Why didn't you tell the police about the pearls?"

CHAPTER IV.

I had twice traversed the cross lane near McGowan's Pass tavern waiting for Barbara Bradford. Although it had been my intention to ride thither I was amazed to learn on applying at two of the stables near the park entrance to hire a horse that the few they had there either were owned privately or had been already engaged.

There was nothing for me to do but to go to my rendezvous on foot. I had almost despaired of Miss Bradford's coming when I spied her entering slowly along the lane, followed at a decorous distance by a groom. She was looking right and left and when she saw me her face brightened but she rode a few steps past me with no sign of recognition. I was wondering what to make of this new sight when she suddenly reined in and allowed the groom to come up with her.

"James," I heard her say to the groom, "my head aches, and the riding is making it worse. Take the horses back to the stable, and I will walk the rest of the way home."

"Very well, Miss Bradford," he said, touching his cap, as he assisted her to alight.

She waited until he had vanished and then hastened to the bench where I was seated, one I had purposely selected because it was half hidden by a turn in the road and the branches of a wide-spreading tree.

She colored vividly as I rose to greet her with outstretched hand.

"Oh, Mr. Nelson," she cried, "don't know what you will think of me, asking you to meet me here. I am in trouble. I must tell someone. I don't know what to do!"

"The only thing to do," I suggested, "is to begin at the beginning and tell me the whole story. I've sisters of my own. Just pretend you are one of my sisters and let me help you."

She looked at me thoughtfully, studying me as if questioning whether or not I was to be trusted, and apparently deciding in the affirmative, told me an amazing story.

"It's all about my sister, Claire," she began. "She's five years older than I. She's a lovely girl, but she's—that is, she used to be—impulsive, romantic, and headstrong. She and my mother never got along well together, and she was sent away to boarding school. One winter, it was six years ago, another was in Europe and only Dad and I were at home."

She sighed sadly. Evidently her words were bringing back to her moments of heartache.

"To make a long story short, Claire ran away from the school and married—married a French chauffeur employed by a family in the neighborhood. She took me into her confidence a week later, and I—well, I told Dad. There was a terrible time about it all. Dad found out that her husband was already married, had a wife and child right here in this city. He had the marriage annulled and managed to keep everything out of the papers. He threatened Claire's husband with prison and made him go back to France. Dad was simply wonderful. He knew everything about Claire's complete except character, the principles of the school, and the judge down in Kansas county, who ordered the marriage annulled. Dad kept mother abroad until after it was all over, and to this day she never has heard a word about it."

"Your father must be a wonderful man," I said enthusiastically.

"He was," she said simply. "He has been dead two years."

"Oh, I'm so sorry," I cried. "I did not know."

"If Dad were alive he would know what to do. You see, when he died, there was not much money left. We're really little better than paupers. We're living from day to day on our tiny capital, and Mother has been working every wire to arrange a good match for Claire. I wanted to do something, to go out and earn a living for myself, but she never would consent. She insisted I'd be damaging Claire's prospects if I went into trade, as she calls it, and I promised her I'd do nothing until after Claire is safely married."

"And is she to be married?" I asked.

A troubled expression came into her face.

"She was to be, but now I don't know. She is engaged to marry young Harry D. Thayer, who is worth a lot of money, but someone has found out about it."

"How—how did you find out?" I asked eagerly. I understood now the mysterious meeting in the park that had brought me first into touch with Barbara Bradford. Some band of rascals was trying to blackmail Claire Bradford, and her sister was trying to save her.

"That's the greatest mystery of all," exclaimed Miss Bradford. "Before Dad died he turned over to me all the papers about the annulment of Claire's marriage. Somehow he seemed to rely on me far more than on either Mother or Claire. He explained to me the importance of always keeping them, in case the past should ever crop up, but he charged me to see that they always were safely put away where no one could find them."

"Where did you keep them?" I asked.

"In the wall safe in my sitting room."

"In the wall safe?" I cried, thinking in bewilderment of the coincidence that these papers should have had a similar hiding place to the Gaston jewels which had vanished so strangely.

"Yes," she answered, plainly puzzled at my bewilderment. "It was an excellent hiding place. No one but myself had the combination. I don't see now who could have taken them. I found the safe locked as it always was."

"When did you first discover the papers were missing?"

"Let me see," she pondered. "Claire's engagement was announced at a dinner three weeks ago last Thursday. The newspapers on Sunday carried a brief notice of it. Two days later the first note came."

"What note?"

She reached into the pocket of her riding habit and drew forth a folded slip of paper.

"I brought it with me to show you; here is the first one."

Like the mysterious note I myself had received only the preceding night this one was not inclosed in an envelope. It was just a folded slip, addressed in typewriting to "Miss Claire Bradford." On the other side was this message:

"What if Thayer knew about your being married before? How much will you give to get those papers back?"

"Where did you get this?" I asked.

"I found it on the floor of my bedroom one morning, when I got up late. I gave it to my sister without having read it, thinking she had dropped it there. She read it and screamed and fainted. Fortunately Mother was out of the house at the time. Naturally I read the note then. I went to the safe and found the documents gone. Claire has been nearly crazy ever since. She insists that it is all my fault. She says I ought to have destroyed the papers, but I couldn't, could I?"

"Of course not," I replied warmly.

"You did quite right in keeping them. It was not your fault they were stolen."

"I couldn't destroy them. Dad had told me to keep them," she said simply.

"What did you do then? Did you tell your mother?"

Barbara has heard the whispers, too.

Compensation in Age. It is true that a poet wrote a famous hymn, "I Would Not Live Always," yet people are interested in living as long as they can, so that is one of the great laws of nature. Even advanced age, bringing dim sight, loss of hearing and general decline, is not without its compensations, and Longevity proved that "Age is opportunity to men and youth."

ECZEMA!

THIS isn't one of those fake free treatment offers you have seen so many times. We don't offer to give you something for nothing—but we do guarantee that you can try this wonderful treatment, entirely at our risk, and this guarantee is backed by your local druggist.

This makes the offer one which you can absolutely depend upon, because the druggist with whom you have been trading would not stand behind the guarantee if he did not know it to be an honest and legitimate one.

Hunt's Salve, formerly called Hunt's Cure, has been sold under absolute money back guarantee for more than thirty years. It is especially compounded for the treatment of Eczema, itch, Ring Worm, Tetter, and other itching skin diseases.

Thousands of letters testify to its curative properties. M. Timerlin, a reputable dry goods dealer in Durant, Oklahoma, says: "I suffered with Eczema for ten years, and spent $1,000.00 for doctors' treatments, without result. One box of Hunt's Cure entirely cured me."

Don't fail to give Hunt's Salve a trial—price 75 cents, from your local druggist, or direct by mail if he does not handle it.

HOW SHIPS GET LATE MAIL

Airplanes Used to Overtake Liners and Drop Bags While the Vessel is Travelling.

Experiments have proved it entirely practicable to deliver belated transatlantic mail steamers at sea by airplanes.

The ship may have taken its departure several hours previously, yet the flying machine, with a speed of 100 miles or more an hour, can easily catch up with it and put the mail aboard.

A plane of the "flying boat" type is used for this purpose, and the waterproof mail bag is held in a chute on the side of the hull. The aviator flies over the ship and the flying machine catches a long line dropped from the plane that has grapple tails on its end. This line is attached to the mail bag, which, when the grapple tails catch, is jerked out of its chute, falling into the sea.

It is then an easy matter to haul the mail bag aboard, while the steamer continues its uninterrupted voyage.

One Friend Less.
One of my most embarrassing moments came soon after I was married, when I met an old acquaintance and begged to know why she had never yet been to call upon me. Rather coldly she replied: "I did not know that you wished me to, as I received no announcement of your marriage." I rather horrified and embarrassed to think she had been forgotten when the lists were made up, I lost my head and blurted out: "Oh, but you know we only sent those to our friends." Naturally after that I had one friend less.—Chicago Tribune.

Accommodating.
"Stop—her, stop," yelled an excited looking farmer, running toward the road as we passed in our car. My friend put on the brakes and ran back to give first aid, when the farmer turned and beckoned frantically to a little boy who came from the house to the road and then close to the car. "Look it over," said his father as the boy walked all around us. "This running machine is called an auto."
"All right," said the boy at last. "I saw enough of it," and we were allowed to proceed.—Exchange.

REFUSES TO EAT FOR SIX MONTHS

Strange Case of Self-Imposed Starvation Reported From Denver.

INSANE, SAY DOCTORS

Man Whose Normal Weight is 165 Dies Weighing 50—Ate Thanksgiving Dinner, Refused Food Thereafter.

Denver, Colo.—One of the strangest cases of self-imposed starvation on local record culminated in the death, recently, of George Severns, fifty-four, at the County hospital.

Severns had eaten only liquid foods, and very little of them, since last Thanksgiving. For nearly six months he steadily refused solid foods, and even the liquids had to be administered to him almost by main force. At the time of his death he weighed a scant 50 pounds, although normally his weight was about 165, according to his wife, Mrs. Ruth Severns.

Refuses to Eat.
Insanity was the cause of Severns' refusal to eat. He was taken to the County hospital April 20. At an inquest Mrs. Severns testified that her husband had been acting queerly and that she had been afraid of him for months. The lunacy commission found him insane, and he was committed to the hospital by Judge Ira C. Rodgers, where he should be in condition to move to the state insane asylum at Pueblo.

But the patient would not eat. The most appetizing dishes failed to tempt him. Occasionally he was induced to drink a few swallows of milk, but not enough to sustain life. For weeks he lived literally upon his bodily tissues, steadily wasting away until he was a living skeleton, his eyes sunk deeply into his head and his bones protruding sharply. His skin had become the color and consistency of parchment.

Ate Thanksgiving Dinner.
His wife said that he had eaten precisely nothing since Thanksgiving, when he partook of the Thanksgiving dinner with his usual heartiness. From that day on, she said, he refused food.

Severns came to Denver from Illinois ten years ago. He was a victim of influenza in the 1918 epidemic and did not rally for about three months. The subsequent attack of insanity is believed to have resulted from the former malady, according to Thomas M. Hunter, superintendent of the hospital.

Louisville, Ky.—While giving an exhibition to "student" firemen Henry Walton, a fireman, slipped and fell four stories, to be caught by three firemen who were standing on the ground. He was not seriously injured, hospital physicians said.

Walton was being passed from one window to another by two other firemen when he fell. A cry from spectators attracted firemen Richard Murray, Jacob Selger and James Underwood who, by speedy action, were able to lock their arms a few seconds before Walton crashed into them.

The rescuers went down under the impact, but received only slight injuries. Walton suffered a cut on the head and numerous bruises about the body.

When Doctors Disagree.
John Jenson was very ill. He called in a doctor, who hummed and hawed and called in a second doctor. Then, while John Jenson lay and suffered, the two quarreled about his case.

"You are wrong," said Doctor No. 1. "I'm right," retorted Doctor No. 2. "You're wrong," repeated Doctor No. 1.

Here the patient gave a groan and brought the medical men to a realization of the needs of the moment. But Doctor No. 2 couldn't resist a last swipe.

"Go your own way," said he. "but I'll prove I'm right at the post-mortem!"—From the Argonaut.

Use Doan's Kidney Pills. They have helped thousands the world over. Ask your neighbor!

Acid Stomach
Makes the Body Sour

Nine Out of Ten People Suffer From It

It sends its harmful acids and gases all over the body, instead of health and strength. Day and night this ceaseless damage goes on. No matter how strong, its victim cannot long withstand the health-destroying effects of an acid stomach.

Good news for millions of sufferers. Chemists have found a sure remedy—one that takes the acid up and carries it out of the body; of course, when the cause is removed, the sufferer gets well.

Bloating, indigestion, sour, acid, gassy stomach miseries all removed. This is proven by over half a million ailing folks who have taken EATON'S with wonderful benefits. It can be obtained from any druggist, who will cheerfully refund its trifling cost if not entirely satisfactory. Everyone should enjoy its benefits. Frequently the first tablet gives relief.

Yet it is more reasonable for an infant to sleep with grown-ups than to use a man's medicine in an attempt to regulate the delicate organism of that same infant. Either practice is to be shunned. Neither would be tolerated by specialists in children's diseases.

Your Physician will tell you that Baby's medicine must be prepared with even greater care than Baby's food.

A Baby's stomach when in good health is too often disarranged by improper food. Could you for a moment, then, think of giving to your ailing child anything but a medicine especially prepared for infants and children? Don't be deceived.

Make a mental note of this:—It is important, Mothers, that you should remember that to function well, the digestive organs of your Baby must receive special care. No Baby is so abnormal that the desired results may be had from the use of medicines primarily prepared for grown-ups.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to hear that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is catarrh. Catarrh being greatly influenced by constitutional conditions requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Medicine has taken internally and acts through the blood on the mucous surfaces of the system thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in the curative powers of Hall's Catarrh Medicine that they offer one hundred dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for testimonials.

HERMAN J. DANCER

What Is Telephone Service

It is because the telephone is so intimately yours—because the daily benefits from this service are so far-reaching and vital, that we are coming to you with a message.

This is in line with our wish to give the people of Michigan the very best and most extensive telephone service that could possibly be desired. And to do this we must have your friendly and complete co-operation.

In order to give that co-operation you naturally need and are justified in asking an intelligent understanding of the telephone business.

It is our purpose, therefore, in this and succeeding announcements, to tell you, among other things, exactly what the Michigan State Telephone Company is, what the giving of service involves, and to discuss with you present conditions and plans for the future.

The conduct of any public service corporation carries its share of unending problems—problems that are as vital to the public which it serves as to the company itself.

These problems cannot and in fairness should not be solved by the corporation alone. The public is too vitally interested and where public interest is so intimately involved, the public's judgment must have every consideration.

It is our purpose, therefore, to make these announcements as though we were all in council, where all have free opportunity of discussion.

Among the problems that will undoubtedly come before us are matters of service—why it is that there sometimes are apparent delays in getting a number, why you sometimes get the wrong number, etc.

The problem of telephone extensions also is a very vital one. Everyone should know why it is impossible under present conditions to install apparatus promptly for every new subscriber.

And we will want to discuss with you very frankly the rate problem, and tell the real crisis that confronts us in the face of constantly increasing costs of labor and material.

But it is neither our desire nor our intention to limit the discussion to published statements of our own.

We invite you to ask us by letter about those points that we may overlook or may not have made sufficiently clear.

To care for these answers promptly, we have established a special service to provide you with the necessary facts.

Where a large number of questions on any one subject indicate a general interest in that point, we will publish the questions and answers in these columns.

We will likewise be pleased to have you visit any of our exchanges and see for yourself some of the things telephone service involves, and how we endeavor to meet the demands placed upon us.

It will be our purpose to speak frankly, to acquaint you with every phase of the "telephone problem," and to maintain this open-minded attitude permanently.

We believe that this will result in a relationship that will make our mutual ideal of good telephone service for Michigan a practical reality.
