Grade Crossing Separated.

Speaking of the Detroit-Jackson trunk road, where about twenty-five miles remain to be improved, State Highway Commissioner Rogers states that a very important part of the project has been consummated in an agreement effected for an overhead crossing for the highway over the Michigan Central tracks at Leoni.

The federal government, state,
county and the railroad have agreed on an apportionment of the cost of the overhead crossing so that it will be ready for service when the remainder of the route is completed.

Free Tuberculosis Clinic Tuesday.

On Tuesday, July 6, from 10 o'clock
a. m. to 3 o'clock p. m., there will be a free tuberculosis clinic at Red Cross
headquarters in the Wilkinsonia building.

This is for men, women and children. Everyone who has had a bad attack of influenza or pneumonia or has a tired feeling, with loss of weight,
are especially urged to come.

Dr. VanderSice, who has charge of the Michigan Tuberculosis Association and is one of the best lung specialists in the country, will be one of the examining physicians.

This clinic is made possible by the sale of anti-tuberculosis seals at Christmas time.

A free baby clinic, with specialists from the university hospital, will be held at the same place and time.

County Fair September 21 to 25.

Washtenaw county's fair will be held from September 21 to 25. Preparatory work for a broad and general policy of the Washtenaw County Fair society occupied the time of the meeting held Friday night in the court house.

The society is endeavoring to secure Burns park as a fair ground this coming fall and as soon as word is received from the board of park commissioners of Ann Arbor, arrangements and details will be worked out in full. A committee was appointed to take care of the legal matters concerning the new county fair
fair grounds west of Ann Arbor.

Former Chelsea Football Player.

University of Michigan's 1919 ineligible football players have all come through the semester examinations satisfactorily according to an official announcement by athletic officials
last week, and every one of the veterans will be eligible next fall. The list includes Frank Stoketec, all-American full back in 1918, Ed Usher
and Jack Perrin, varsity half backs, and Jack Dunn, quarterback. The latter was a former Chelsea boy, who always tore up the turf whenever he was in a game.

Andrew N. Morton,
Andrew Nathaniel Morton was born in Marengo, Calhoun county, Michigan, August 22, 1844, and died at his home on Jefferson street, Chelsea, Saturday evening, June 26, 1920.

He was a son of Aaron Davis Morton and Lucy Ann (Hatch) Morton, and his parents became residents of Chelsea when he was 12 years of age,
and this place has been his home
since that time.

Mr. Morton was a veteran of the Civil War, having enlisted on August 4, 1862, and was honorably discharged at Jackson May 30, 1865. He was a member of Co. K, 20th Michigan Volunteer Infantry. He was wounded at Spottsylvania Court House May 12, 1864. He was commissioned a second lieutenant at the Grand Review in Washington, D. C., on May 17, 1867, but was not mustered in as an officer.
For many years he was secretary-treasurer of the Twentieth Michigan Association.

From 1889 to 1917, when he resigned,
he was in the railway mail service. Prior to that time he was active in the business life of Chelsea.

He was a member of the M. E.
church of Chelsea, always taking a great interest in the activities of the society.

Funeral services were held at his late home at 3 o'clock Monday afternoon, Rev. G. H. Whitney, of Plymouth, a former pastor, conducting the service. Fourteen members of his regiment were present. Interment at Oak Grove cemetery. Taps were sounded at the grave by Wesley Smith.

He was united in marriage with Betty Norman Congdon, youngest daughter of Elisha Congdon and Eliza (Standish) Congdon, January 27, 1869. Mr. Congdon was one of the founders of Chelsea.

Four children were born of the marriage: Frederick J., and Harry D., of New York City, Mrs. Thomas L.
Thomson, of Torrington, Conn., and the late Ward D., of Detroit. He is also survived by one sister, Mrs. Fannie Judson, of Ann Arbor, and two brothers, Charles C. Morton, of La Salle Mich. and William F. Morton, of Detroit.

Michael Heselschwerdt.

Michael Heselschwerdt was born in Wurtenburg, Germany, June 5, 1848,
and died at his home on Washington street, Chelsea, Monday, June 28, 1920.

When he was six years of age his parents came to this country and settled on a farm in Sylvan township, where he resided until seven years ago when he became a resident of Chelsea, retiring from the farm on account of failing health.

He was a member of St. Paul's church, and also of Chelsea Tent, No.
281, The Maccabees.

He was united in marriage with
Miss Dora Schaible February 11, 1882.
He is survived by his wife, one daughter, Miss Lizzie Heselschwerdt, two brothers, Jacob and W. H. Heselschwerdt, and several nephews and nieces.

The funeral was held from St.
Paul's church at 2 o'clock Wednesday afternoon, Rev. G. W. Krause officiating. Interment at Oak Grove cemetery.

CONSUMERS AIDED BY FARM ORGANIZATIONS

Growers' Marketing Associations Tend To Stabilize Food Supply.

That the present widespread organization of Michigan farmers curries with it future benefits for the city consumer, as well as for the agriculturalist himself, is the opinion expressed in a recent interview by R. J. Baldwin, director of extension work at the Michigan Agricultural College. The view held by some business men that co-operation among the farmers of the state is responsible for the threatened food shortage and for the high price of eatables is refuted by Mr. Baldwin, who points out that grower selling organizations reduce the cost of marketing and tend to stimulate and stabilize production.

"Neither the farmer nor the consumer has complete information in regard to the cost of production nor the cost of marketing food stuffs, and consequently each has misimpressions and between them there are many misunderstandings," says Director Baldwin. "The consumer says he is suffering under high food prices. The producer knows that the prices he receives will scarcely assure him a profit.

"The farmer remembers that under the individual selling system the spread between the price he received and the price paid by the consumer was very great, and that neither the producer nor the consumer had any contact with the forces which established the original and final price. He has seen prices remain low while the season's crop was being bought by dealers, and rise when the bulk of the crop was in the hands of the jobber. The lack of collective bargaining power has weakened the farmer's morale and undermined his faith in his business, resulting in unfavorable rural life conditions, and exodus from the country, an unstable condition of agriculture, and, consequently, a decreased food production.

"The consumer has no reason to fear the collective power of the producers of food, but rather should rejoice in the growth of their organization and look forward to the future with more confidence and optimism because of the stimulus they will give to efficient, standardized production.
Such results can already be observed
from the work of the California Fruit Growers' Exchange, the East Virginia Const Produce Exchange.

"All producers organizations have included in their constitution efficient production as one of the primary functions. All of them co-operate closely with state and federal forces working toward economic production of standardized articles. No organization has yet expressed an intention to control and limit production,
except perhaps the cotton producers.
The controlling factor remains as always 'the law of supply and demand'
and the expression of this law is ultimately the price paid for the product.

"The future food supply is much more certain when prices encourage production than when the returns for the crop leave the farmer too small a margin to finance further production operations.

"The chief concern of the food consumers of America should not be whether food prices shall decline, but whether there will be sufficient food
to supply the needs of the people.
The only safe insurance for the future is that food production be made a profitable business. The creation of marketing organizations is an effort
on the part of the farmers themselves to insure the future of their business, which is the basic industry, Agriculture."

Jackson County Fair.

The Jackson county fair, which gives its 1920 exhibition September 13 to 18, has a record of success probably not equaled by any county fair in the country. Six years ago the fair property consisted of an old condemned grandstand, the half-mile track and forty acres of land, the whole being on the market for $23,000. Today the buildings would be a credit to a state fair, with plenty of stables, pens and sheds for stock, housing for machinery, merchants' exhibits, art work, and exhibits of every nature.
At the track a new steel and cement
grandstand is under construction, which will have a seating capacity of 6,000 persons, with large dining room concessions, etc., beneath. The lighting, sewer and toilet accommodations have been enlarged in anticipation of a large attendance in the fall.

Our Ambition : Ideal Telephone Service for Michigan

The Michigan State Telephone Company has set itself earnestly to the task of making the telephone service in Michigan as near ideal as possible.

To us, ideal telephone service is summed up as follows:

First—When the service given present subscribers is as intelligent and as nearly perfect as human ingenuity and mechanical accuracy can make it.

Second—When every home and business, that has any use for a telephone, has one.

Third—When there is a mutual understanding between the Telephone Company and its subscribers, that fosters confidence and encouragement and courtesy.

The attainment of such an ideal calls for the best brains, the nimblest fingers, the most careful training, the expenditure of vast sums in buildings and material—yet it is a task that we are entering upon with all the enthusiasm of an age when mighty things are being accomplished.

There will be many obstacles and discouragements, but honest effort will overcome them all.

It is our purpose in these announcements, from time to time, to tell you of the progress we are making, and if we can know that we have your confidence and co-operation it will lend strength to our efforts and courage to our hearts.

BREVITIES

Stockbridge—Some blight seems to have come upon several of the orchards in this vicinity. The trees blossomed very profusely, but the leaves are turning brown and taking on a dead appearance. All orchards do not seem to be affected, but many are showing badly.—Stockbridge Brief-Sun.

Brighton—Charles Kelley tripped on a rug at his home Wednesday evening of last week and fell heavily. It was at first thought his hip was fractured but fortunately such was not the case. It is thought no bones are broken, yet the strain will confine him to the bed for some time.—Brighton Argus.

Howell—Friday night Sheriff Miller and his deputies made a raid on the old Arthur farm in Marion just east of the Sanitorium grounds and and lake. Three stills were seized and some 19 barrels of whisky mash. Two men who were running the place were arrested and brought in, Nick Opera and Theodore Tisaian.—Livingston Republican.

Ypsilanti—Six Washtenaw county young men, all members of prominent families, have been held to the circuit court for trial on charges of stealing clover seed, wool and automobile accessories. The men are Nelson Boutell, C. Leland, G. Lamb, Donald McLouth, Theodore Darling and Nelson Ableson. Lamb, Leland and Boutell are out on $2,500 bail each.

Pinckney—When the election board counted the ballots Monday night after the special election held for the purpose of either confirming or repudiating the township board's action in allowing the Edison Company to enter Putnam township for the purpose of furnishing electricity, it was found that only one vote out of a total of 223 was cast against the proposition.—Pinckney Dispatch.

Ann Arbor—Another shortage looms before Washtenaw county's ultimate consumers. This time it is milk bottles, and no profiteers are to blame. The recent wreck of two fast freight trains at Lakeland completely demolished several cars. One car contained 24,000 milk bottles. All were broken. Several other cars were loaded with coal. No one was injured in the wreck.—Ann Arbor Times News.

Stockbridge—Two young men riding motorcycles were quite badly hurt on the Roopke curve just east of town Sunday. They were making fast time, and on the curve lost control of the machines which ran into the ditch and tipped over. One of the boys was unconscious and was brought to Dr. Brogan's office, where he "came to" and was patched up. A truck later took the boys and machines home to Lansing.—Stockbridge Brief-Sun.

Ann Arbor—O. F. Moeckel of Stockbridge, drove at high speed through a flock of sheep owned by H. Wing on the Dexter road Monday morning and injured several registered head. Wing telephoned to the local police who arrested Moeckel at the city limits. Moeckel alleged that he could not slacken his speed because he had to take his daughter to a hospital. He agreed to pay all damages incurred by Wing.—Ann Arbor Times News.

Brooklyn—A community council was organized in Brooklyn Tuesday evening at a meeting called to discuss civic needs and improvements. The council is to aid in the promotion and maintenance of the best that can be developed in this locality. It is to bring together the various interests now represented by various clubs, churches and lodges and those having no such affiliations into one big group not restricted by limits, except as to community interests.—Brooklyn Exponent.

Howell—Saturday morning a boy giving his age as five and his name as Vern Drumford (not sure about the name) came to Howell on the morning train from Whitmore Lake. On leaving the Ann Arbor depot he picked up a ladies' umbrella as it was raining. On reaching Grand River avenue he unhitched a team and started west at rapid pace. An automobile soon overtook the team and turned the boy over to Sheriff Miller. At the jail he cleaned up on one or two of the sheriff's boys, husky kids, too, they are. He said he lived at Whitmore Lake, that there was nothing doing there, that his father was an old man, his mother a young woman. The runaway was dispatched back to Whitmore Lake on the afternoon train.—Livingston Republican.

John S. Haggerty, President Michigan State Fair.

John S. Haggerty, though one of the busiest manufacturers of Michigan, takes plenty of time to help foster the Michigan State Fair of which he is President. The administrative work falls on the shoulders of G. W. Dickinson, Secretary-Manager, but Haggerty maintains a close touch at all times. Last year, when the crowds got so big at the gates they could not be handled, he had pickets torn from the fence. Then he stepped in and acted as gatekeeper. In private life, he manufactures bricks. He has a model farm, and is a good roads enthusiast.

MILLION TO MEET AT STATE EXHIBIT

MICHIGAN NOW HAS LARGEST FAIR IN UNITED STATES—DATES SET ARE SEPTEMBER 3-12.

PROFITS GO BACK INTO CONTINUOUS BETTERMENT

An attendance of a million is predicted for the Michigan State Fair at Detroit, Sept. 3 to 12, this fall.

This estimate is based both on the public interest which has been shown in the fair so far this year, and on natural increase which may be expected over last year's showing.

When the last person passed through the turnstile at the 1919 show, the Michigan Fair had taken rank as the largest-attended institution of its kind in the United States. Every effort is promised by G. W. Dickinson, Secretary-Manager, to make this year's exhibition once again the nation's standard.

"Michigan's state fair," says Mr. Dickinson, "has become the greatest institution in the commonwealth for bringing its people together. No other activity fostered by the state brings any where near so many of its citizens together on common terms."

"In one way, it is the state's greatest educational institution. The character of fairs has changed greatly in the last few years. No one who attends a real fair nowadays can come away without having been mentally broadened and instructed. The city man sees the vast agricultural resources of Michigan; the farmer sees the cities' manufactured products which have given this state so advanced a position in the industrial world."

Every satisfactory feature of Michigan's fairs in the past will be retained this year, and many new ones will be added. Greatly increased gate receipts have made the fair profitable in late years, and under the state law, every cent of profit must go back into the permanent property and the annual exhibition.

Mr. Dickinson's policy has been to put on a better and better fair as the receipts warranted. And every time he has spent more money to put on a better fair, the public has insisted on attending it in such crowds that profits automatically increase. Then the annual circle is begun of plowing these receipts back into a better fair and a better show.

EXHIBITORS MUST HURRY TO GET INTO STATE FAIR

Exhibitors who plan on entering the contents at the Michigan State Fair, at Detroit, Sept. 3-12, this fall, will have to hurry.

So great has been the demand for space in the various buildings that G. W. Dickinson, Secretary-Manager, announces that he is all sold out in certain lines. Others are filling up fast. Mr. Dickinson is loath to close out any certain space without having heard from desirable exhibitors of previous years but the pressure for space is growing.

MICHIGAN STATE FAIR GREATER THAN EVER

G. W. Dickinson, Secretary-Manager, announces that it will in reality be far more than a million-dollar proposition. In exhibits, in premiums paid, in variety of farm crops and manufactured products shown, he declares it will be far greater than even last year's record-breaker. It is now one of the largest state fairs in the United States.

Hawaii Led in Prohibition.

Historians of the Hawaiian Islands assert that an Hawaiian monarchy was the first government in the world to put absolute prohibition into effect. Kamehameha the Great, first king of United Hawaii, in 1795, after having conquered all the other islands, issued an edict imposing prohibition. Its penalties were drastic. An offender was stripped of his property, real and personal, and was driven from his village clad only in a loincloth.

In later years foreign nations forced liquor on the Hawaiians and its sale was general in the islands until the great war, when, with the opening of the army training camps on the islands, prohibition went into effect.

"Two of the five councilmen are for sale; two are honest men—and one is an uncertain quantity. The mayor is a politician, I've known them all since boyhood, and if I dared come out in the open, I think that even the crooks have sentiment enough for what the Cardigans stand for in this county to decline to hold me up."

"Then why not come out in the open and save trouble and expense?"

"I am not ready to have a lot of notes called on me," Bryce replied dryly. "Neither am I desirous of having the Laguna Grande Lumber company start a riot in the redwood lumber market by cutting prices to a point where I would have to sell my lumber at a loss in order to get hold of a little ready money. I tell you, the man has me under his thumb, and the only way I can escape is to slip out when he isn't looking."

"Two of the Five Councilmen Are for Sale."

"I know he'll be and steal. I dare say he'd corrupt a public official."

Buck Ogilvy rose and stretched himself. "I've got my work cut out for me, haven't I?" he declared with a yawn. "However, it'll be a fight worth while, and that at least will make it interesting. Well?"

Bryce pressed the buzzer on his desk, and a moment later Moira entered. "Permit me, Moira, to present Mr. Ogilvy. Mr. Ogilvy, Miss McTavish." The introduction having been acknowledged by both parties, Bryce continued: "Mr. Ogilvy will have frequent need to interview me at this office, Moira, but it is our joint desire that his visits here shall remain a profound secret to everybody with the exception of ourselves. To that end he will hereafter call at night, when this portion of the town is absolutely deserted. You have an extra key to the office, Moira. I wish you would give it to Mr. Ogilvy."

Moira inclined her dark head and withdrew. Mr. Buck Ogilvy groaned. "God speed the day when you can come out from under and I'll be permitted to call during office hours," he murmured. He picked up his hat and withdrew, via the general office. Half an hour later, Bryce looked out and saw him draped over the counter, engaged in animated conversation with Moira McTavish. Before Ogilvy left, he had managed to impress Moira with a sense of the unmitigated horror of being a stranger in a strange town, forced to sit around hotel lobbies with drummers and other lost souls, and drew from Moira the assurance that it wasn't more distressing than to have to sit around a boarding-house night after night watching old women tat and tattle.

This was the opening Buck Ogilvy had sparred for. Fixing Moira with his bright blue eyes, he grinned boldly and said: "Suppose, Miss McTavish, we start a league for the dispersion of gloom. You be the president, and I'll be the financial secretary."

"How would the league operate?" Moira demanded cautiously.

"Well, it might begin by giving a dinner to all the members, followed by a little motor-trip into the country next Saturday afternoon," Buck suggested.

Moira's Madonna glance appraised him steadily. "I haven't known you very long, Mr. Ogilvy," she reminded him.

"Oh, I'm easy to get acquainted with," he retorted lightly. "Besides, don't I come well recommended?" He pondered for a moment. "Then: 'I'll you what, Miss McTavish. Suppose we put it up to Bryce Cardigan. If he says it's all right we'll pull off the party. If he says it's all wrong, I'll go out and drown myself—and fairer words than this has no man spoke.'"

"I'll think it over," said Moira. "By all means. Never decide such an important matter in a hurry. Just tell me your home telephone number, and I'll ring up at seven this evening for your decision."

Reluctantly Moira gave him the number. She was not at all prejudiced against this carotid stranger—in fact, she had a vague suspicion that he was a sure cure for the blues, an ailment which she suffered from all too frequently; and, moreover his voice, his respectful manner, his alert eyes, and his wonderful clothing were all rather alluring. The flutter of a great adventure was in Moira's heart and the flush of a thousand roses in her cheeks when Buck Ogilvy having at length departed, she went into Bryce's private office to get his opinion as to the propriety of accepting the invitation.

Bryce listened to her gravely as with all the sweet innocence of her years and unworthiness she laid the Ogilvy proposition before him.

"By all means accept," he counselled her. "Buck Ogilvy is one of the finest gentlemen you'll ever meet. I'll stake my reputation on him. You'll find him vastly amusing, Moira. He'll make Moira forget her troubles, and he does know how to order a dinner."

When Moira had left him, Bryce was roused from bitter introspections by the ringing of the telephone. To his amazement Shirley Sumner was calling him!

"You're a wee bit surprised, aren't you, Mr. Cardigan?" she said teasingly. "You're wondering why I have telephoned to you?"

"No, I haven't had time. The suddenness of it has left me more or less dumb. Why did you ring up?"

"I wanted some advice. Suppose you wanted very much to know what two people were talking about, but found yourself in a position where you couldn't eavesdrop. What would you do?"

"I wouldn't eavesdrop," he told her severely. "That isn't a nice thing to do, and I didn't think you would contemplate anything that isn't nice."

"But I have every moral, ethical, and financial right to be a party to that conversation, only—well—"

"With you present there would be no conversation—is that it?"

"Exactly, Mr. Cardigan."

"And it is of the utmost importance that you should know what is said?"

"Yes."

"And you do not intend to use your knowledge of the conversation, when gained, for an illegal or unethical purpose?"

"I do not. On the contrary, if I am aware of what is being planned, I can prevent others from doing something illegal and unethical."

"In that event, Shirley, I should say you are quite justified in eavesdropping."

"But how can I do it? I can't hide in a closet and listen."

"Buy a dictograph and have it hidden in the room where the conversation takes place. It will record every word of it."

"Where can I buy one?"

"In San Francisco."

"Will you telephone to your San Francisco office and have them buy one for me and ship it to you, together with directions for using?"

"Shirley, this is most extraordinary. I quite realize that. May I depend upon you to oblige me in this matter?"

"Certainly. But why pick on me, of all persons, to perform such a mission for you?"

"I can trust you to forget that you have performed it."

"Thank you. I think you may safely trust me. And I shall attend to the matter immediately."

"You are very kind, Mr. Cardigan. How is your dear old father? Moira told me some time ago that he was ill."

"He's quite well again, thank you. It's too bad the circumstances are such that we, who started out to be such agreeable friends, see so little of each other, Shirley."

"Indeed, it is. However, it's all your fault. I have told you once how you can obviate that distressing situation. But you're so stubborn, Mr. Cardigan."

"I haven't got to the point where I like crawling on my hands and knees," he flared back at her. "Even for your sake, I decline to simulate friendship or tolerance for your uncle; hence I must be content to let matters stand as they are between us."

She laughed lightly. "So you are still uncompromisingly belligerent—still after Uncle Seth's scalp?"

"Yes; and I think I'm going to get it. I'm not fighting for myself alone, but for a thousand dependents—for a principle—for an ancient sentiment that was my father's and is now mine. You do not understand."

"I understand more than you give me credit for, and some day you'll realize it. I understand just enough to make me feel sorry for you. I understand what even my uncle doesn't suspect at present, and that is that you're the directing genius of the Northern California Oregon railroad and hiding behind your friend Ogilvy. Now, listen to me, Bryce Cardigan: You're never going to build that road. Do you understand?"

The suddenness of her attack amazed him to such an extent that he did not take the trouble to contradict her. Instead he blurted out, angrily and defiantly: "I'll build that road if it costs me my life—in this fight to win. Understand! I'm in this fight to win. You will not build that road," she reiterated.

"Why?"

"Because I shall not permit you to. I have some financial interest in the Laguna Grande Lumber company, and it is not to that financial interest that you should build the N. C. O."

"How did you find out that I was behind Ogilvy?"

"Intuition. Then I accused you of it, and you admitted it."

"I suppose you're going to tell your uncle now," he retorted witheringly.

"On the contrary, I am not. If it will comfort you the least bit, you have my word of honor that I shall not reveal to my uncle the identity of the man behind the N. C. O. The fact is, both you and Uncle Seth annoy me exceedingly. How lovely everything would have been if you two hadn't started this feud and forced upon me the task of trying to be fair and impartial to you both. Forgive my slang, but I'm going to hand you each a poke soon."

"Shirley," he told her earnestly, "listen carefully to what I am about to say: I love you. I've loved you from the day I first met you. I shall always love you; and when I get around to it, I'm going to ask you to marry me. At present, however, that is a right I do not possess. However, the day I acquire the right I shall exercise it."

"And when will that day be? Very softly, in awesome tones!

"The day I drive the last spike in the N. C. O."

Fell a silence. Then: "I'm glad, Bryce Cardigan, you're not a quitter. Good-bye, good luck—and don't forget my errand." She hung up and sat at the telephone for a moment, dimpled chin in dimpled hand. "How I'd hate you if I could handle you!" she murmured.

Following this exasperating but illuminating conversation with Shirley Sumner over the telephone, Bryce Cardigan was a distressed and badly worried man. For an hour he sat slouched in his chair, chin on breast, while he reviewed every angle of the situation. He found it impossible, however, to disassociate the business from the personal aspects of his relations with Shirley, and he recalled that she had the very best of reasons for placing their relations on a business basis rather a sentimental one. For the present, however, it was all a profound and disturbing mystery, and after an hour of futile concentration there came to Bryce the old childish impulse to go to his father with his troubles.

"He will be able to think without having his thoughts blotted out by a woman's face," Bryce soliloquized. "He's like one of his own big redwood trees; his head is always above the storm."

Straightway Bryce left the office and went home to the old house on the knoll. John Cardigan was sitting on the veranda, and from a stand beside him George Sea Otter entertained him with a phonograph selection—"The Swannee River," sung by a male quartette. He could not see, but with the intuition of the blind he knew.

"What is it, son?" he demanded gently as Bryce came up the low steps. "George, choke that contraption off."

Bryce took his father's hand. "I'm in trouble, John Cardigan," he said simply. "and I'm not big enough to handle it alone."

The leonine old man smiled, and his smile had all the sweetness of a benediction. His boy was in trouble and had come to him. Good! Then he would not fall him. "Sit down, son, and tell the old man all about it. Begin at the beginning and let me have all the angles of the angle."

Bryce obeyed, and for the first time John Cardigan learned of his son's acquaintance with Shirley Sumner and the fact that she had been present in Pennington's woods the day Bryce had gone there to settle the score with Jules Rondeau.

With the patience and gentleness of a confessor John Cardigan heard the story now, and though Bryce gave no hint in words that his affections were involved in the fight for the Cardigan acres yet did his father know it, for he was a parent. And his great heart went out in sympathy for his boy.

"I understand, sonny, I understand. This young lady is only one additional reason why you must win, for of course you understand she is not indifferent to you."

"I do not know that she feels for me anything stronger than a vagrant sympathy, dad, for while she is eternally feminine, nevertheless she has a masculine way of looking at many things. Her first loyalty is to her uncle: in fact, she owes none to me. And I dare say he has given her some extremely plausible reason why we should be eliminated; while I think she is sorry that it must be done, nevertheless, in a mistaken impulse of self-protection she is likely to let him do it."

"Perhaps, perhaps. Eliminate the girl, my boy. She's trying to play fair."

"Sit Down, Son, and Tell the Old Man All About It."

to you and her relative. Let us concentrate on Pennington."

"The entire situation hinges on that jump-crossing of his tracks on Water street."

"He doesn't know you plan to cross them, does he?"

"No."

"Then, lad, your job is to get your crossing in before he finds out. Isn't it?"

"Yes, but it's an impossible task, partner. I'm not Aladdin, you know. I have to have a franchise from the city council, and I have to have rails."

"Both are procurable, my son. Induce the city council to grant you a temporary franchise tomorrow, and buy your rails from Pennington. He has a mile of track running up Laurel creek, and Laurel creek was logged out three years ago."

"But he hates me, old pal."

"The Colonel never permits sentiment to interfere with business, my son. He doesn't need the rails, and he does desire your money. Consider the rail problem settled."

"How do you stand with the mayor and the council?"

"I do not stand at all."

"That makes it bad."

"Not at all. The Cardigans are not known to be connected with the N. C. O. Send your bright friend Ogilvy after that franchise. He's the only man who can land it. Give him a free hand and tell him to deliver the goods by any means short of bribery. I know you can procure the rails and have them at the intersection of B and Water streets Thursday night. If Ogilvy can procure the temporary franchise and have it in his pocket by six o'clock Thursday night you should have that crossing in by sunup Friday morning. Then let Pennington rave. He cannot procure an injunction to restrain us from cutting his tracks, thus throwing the matter into the courts and holding us up indefinitely, because by the time he wakes up the tracks will have been cut. The best he can do then will be to fight us before the city council when we apply for our permanent franchise."

"Fartner, it looks like a forlorn hope," said Bryce.

"Well, you're the boy to lead it. And it will cost but little to put in the crossing and take a chance. Remember, Bryce, once we have that crossing in it stands like a spite fence between Pennington and the law which he knows so well how to pervert to suit his ignoble purposes." He turned earnestly to Bryce and waved a trembling, admonitory finger. "Your job is to keep out of court. Once Pennington gets the law on his side the issue will not be settled in our favor for years; and in the meantime—you perish. Run along, now, and hunt up Ogilvy."

It was with a considerably lighter heart that Bryce returned to the mill office, from which he lost no time in summoning Buck Ogilvy by telephone. "Thanks so much for the invitation," Ogilvy murmured gratefully. "I'll be down in a pig's whisper." And he was, "Bryce, you look like the devil," he declared the moment he entered the latter's private office.

"I ought to, Buck. I've just raised the devil and spilled the beans on the N. C. O."

"To whom, when and where?"

"To Pennington's niece, over the telephone about two hours ago."

Buck Ogilvy smote his left palm with his right fist. "How did you let 'he cat out of the bag'?"

"That remarkable girl called me up and accused you of being a mere screen for me and amazed me so I admitted it."

Ogilvy dropped his red head in simulated agony and moaned. Presently he raised it and said: "Well, it might have been worse. Think of what might have happened had she called in person. She would have picked your pocket for the corporate seal, the combination of the safe and the list of stockholders, and probably ended up by gagging and binding you in your own swivel chair."

"Don't, Buck. Comfort and advice is what I need now."

"All right. What do you want me to do to save the day?"

"I'll deliver to me by six o'clock Thursday night a temporary franchise from the city council, granting the N. C. O. the right to run a railroad from our drying yard across Water street at its intersection with B street and out Front street."

"Certainly. By all means! Easiest thing I do! All right, old dear! I'm on my way to do my d—est which angels can't do no more. Nevertheless, for your sins you shall do me a favor before my heart breaks after falling down on this contract you've just given me."

"Granted, Buck. Name it."

"I'm giving a nice little private, specially cooked dinner to Miss McTavish tonight. We're going to pull it off in one of those private screened corners in that highly decorated Chink restaurant on Third street. Moira—that is, Miss McTavish—is bringing a chaperon, one Miss Shirley Sumner. Your job is to be my chaperon and entertain Miss Sumner, who from all accounts is most brilliant and fascinating."

"Nothing doing!" Bryce almost roared. "Why, she's the girl that bluffed the secret of the N. C. O. out of me!"

"Do you hate her for it?"

"No, I hate myself."

"Then you'll come. You promised in advance, and no excuses go now. The news will be all over town by Friday morning; so why bother to keep up appearances any longer?"

And before Bryce could protest Ogilvy had thrown open the office door and called the glad tidings to Moira, who was working in the next room; where, upon Moira's wonderful eyes shone with that strange, lambent flame. She clasped her hands joyously. "Oh, how wonderful!" she exclaimed. "I've always wanted Miss Shirley to meet Mr. Bryce."

CHAPTER XIII.

Fortunately for the situation which had so suddenly confronted him, Bryce Cardigan had Mr. Buck Ogilvy; and out of the experiences gained in other railroad-building enterprises the said Ogilvy, while startled, was not stunned by the suddenness and immensity of the order so casually given him by his youthful employer, for he had already devoted to the matter of that crossing the better part of the preceding night.

"Got to run a sandy on the mayor," Buck soliloquized as he walked rapidly uptown. "Now how shall I proceed to sneak up on that oily old cuss' blind side?"

Two blocks farther on Mr. Ogilvy paused and snapped his fingers vigorously. "Eureka!" he murmured. "I've got Pennington by the tail on a downy hill. Is it a cinch? Well, I just guess I should tell a man!"

He hurried to the telephone building and put in a long-distance call for the San Francisco office of the Cardigan Redwood Lumber company. When the manager came on the line Ogilvy dictated to him a message which he instructed the manager to telegraph back to him at the Hotel Sequoia one hour later: this mysterious detail attended to, he continued on to the mayor's office in the city hall.

Mayor Poundstone's bushy eyebrows arched with interest when his secretary laid upon his desk the card of Mr. Buchanan Ogilvy, vice president and general manager of the Northern California. "Ah-h-h!" he breathed with an unpleasant resemblance to a hon vibrant who sees before him his favorite vintage. "I have been expecting Mr. Ogilvy to call for quite a while. Show him in."

The Truth.

"I have seen this article scores of times and you brought it to me as original."

"So it was. It must have been original with somebody."

His Position.

"Nellie says she wouldn't marry the best man in the world."

"Well, did you ever see anybody marry the best man at a wedding?"

WILSON LAUDED IN KEYNOTE SPEECH

CUMMINGS BLAMES REPUBLICANS FOR BREAKDOWN OF PRESIDENT'S HEALTH.

TREATY MUST PASS, HE SAYS

Calls Failure of Its Endorsement "Black Crime" On Pages of America's History.

San Francisco.—Holding President Wilson as the "immortal" leader of the Democratic party, Homer Cummings, temporary chairman of the Democratic national convention, in the keynote speech opening the convention, called upon the Democratic cohorts to "stand with the forces of civilization" and the president in a bitter fight against nullification of the peace treaty and the League of Nations.

"The choice is plain," said Cummings. "It is between the Democratic party's support of the League of Nations, with its program of peace, disarmament and world fraternity, and the Republican party's platform of repudiation, provincialism and world chaos."

President Wilson's illness resulted from "crucifixion" at the hands of his "political adversaries," Cummings charged.

"He had been physically wounded just as surely as were Garfield and McKinley and Lincoln, for, it is but a difference of degree between fanatics and partisans," Cummings said.

Mr. Cummings continued that in one sense "it is quite immaterial what people say about the president. Nothing we can say can add or detract from fame that will flow down the unending channels of history."

"The Republican platform contains a vague promise to establish another or different form of association," he said. "There is no mental dishonesty more transparent than that which expresses fealty to a League of Nations while opposing the only league that exists or is ever apt to exist."

"What nations stand outside? Revolutionary Mexico. Bolshevik Russia. Unspeakable Turkey and—the United States."

Cummings devoted more than half of his keynote address to the League of Nations and left no doubt that it is the desire of the president and those who support him that this question be made the outstanding issue of the 1920 campaign by the Democratic party.

Denial that the president opposes reservations to the peace treaty was made by Cummings when he declared that "it is not reservations that the president stands against, but nullification."

He declared that the president has constantly announced his "willingness to accept any and all reservations not incompatible with America's honor and true interests."

Outlining the achievements of the Democratic administration since 1912, Cummings asserted, "We placed upon the statute books of our country more effective, constructive and remedial legislation than the Republican party had placed there in a generation."

Peace achievements of the Democratic party, he asserted, "freed the farmer from the deadening effects of usurious financial control. Labor was given its Magna Charta of liberty. Business and finance were released from the thrall of uncertainty and hazard."

Turning to the record of the Republican congress since 1918, Mr. Cummings said it was "barren of achievement, shameless in waste of time and money and without parallel for its incompetencies, failures and repudiations."

President Wilson's two appeals before congress for legislation dealing with profiteering, reduction of taxation, aid for soldiers and laws to improve relations of capital and labor were ignored, he declared, and "after a year of sterile debate our country has neither peace nor reconstruction."

Cummings failed to touch upon many of the issues now in controversy. He referred only indirectly to some of the great issues in criticizing the Republican platform, which, he said, "contains no message of hope for Ireland; no word of mercy for Armenia; and it conceals a sword for Mexico."

The question of the party's attitude toward labor, government ownership of the railroads, industrial unrest and other important issues were not touched upon.

By the unopposed choice of Senator Glass as chairman of the resolutions committee which drafted the Democratic platform and the selection of Senator Robinson of Arkansas for permanent chairman of the convention administration forces demonstrated that they were in complete control of the convention machinery.

Any planks which William J. Bryan desired to have inserted in the platform and which failed to pass approval of the resolutions committee had to be brought into the convention with the endorsement of only a minority report.

Never-Ending Argument.

The minister had given a special address to his parishioners on the subject of domestic felicity, which had roused quite a lot of interest.

A day or so after the lecture, he met Sandy McPherson, who stopped to express the pleasure and benefit he had derived from the discourse.

"I'm glad you liked it, Sandy," said the minister. "And you—are you happy at home?"

"Dad aye!" replied Sandy. "The wife an' me's had on'y the yin quarrel since we weds wed!"

"Indeed!" The minister showed his pleasure at this good report.

"Of coorse," went on Sandy, "whiles it's been interrupted."—London Answers.

If You Need a Medicine You Should Have the Best

Have you ever stopped to reason why it is that so many products that are extensively advertised, all at once drop out of sight and are soon forgotten? The reason is plain—the article did not fulfill the promises of the manufacturer. This applies more particularly to a medicine. A medicinal preparation that has real curative value almost sells itself, as like an endless chain system the remedy is recommended by those who have been benefited, to those who are in need of it.

A prominent doctor says: "Take for example Dr. Kilmor's Swamp-Root, a preparation I have sold for many years and never hesitate to recommend, for in almost every case it shows excellent results, as many of my customers testify. No other kidney remedy has so large a sale."

According to sworn statements and verified testimony of thousands who have used the preparation, the success of Dr. Kilmor's Swamp-Root is due to the fact, so many people claim, that it fulfills almost every wish in overcoming kidney, liver and blood ailments, corrects urinary troubles and neutralizes the uric acid which causes rheumatism.

You may receive a sample bottle of Swamp-Root by Parcel Post. Address Dr. Kilmor & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and enclose ten cents, also mention this paper. Large and medium size bottles for sale at all drug stores.—Adv.

The Bachelor Tax.

George Ade, apropos of the French bachelor tax of 10 per cent. said at the Chicago Athletic club:

"This tax will no more cause bachelors to link up than the remark of old Lusher did."

"Young man," said old Lusher, "you ought to marry. A cozy home, a loving wife, beautiful children—there's nothing like it on earth. And then, above all, you have the sweet recollection of your jolly bachelor days."

TESSA MODISTE

By NELL ADAIR.

(Copyright, 1920, Western Newspaper Union)

She moved into the little brown house by the mill, with only an old woman for company. She was a girlish little creature, with brown questioning eyes, and a rum-o-shanter cap pulled over her waving dark locks. She wore unusually short skirts of woolen stuff and a Norfolk jacket of many pockets, and tramped through the woods, whistling boyishly when no one was near. She was at once the small town's enigma and annoyance. Annoying, in that she kept resolutely to herself, relieving in no way the natural curiosity, and an enigma, in that she constantly furnished surprises.

Old Doctor Worthington had finished telling of being called one night to attend the sick child of Italians in the town, and of finding the strange girl there relieving their distresses. Once the doctor's son, returning from the city, brought information that he had seen this same quiet brown-eyed girl in beautiful evening apparel, seated in a box at the theater.

Cartersville disapproved of inconsistencies; it disapproved of mystery, so the inmate of the brown house was left to herself. Helen-Marie, an accepted town authority on social matters, shrugged disdainful shoulders. Later, when she met the girl, her winsome face aglow as she walked at Jack Hamilton's side, Helen-Marie unreasonably resented her presence.

"Why did she come here?" she asked herself.

She questioned Jack contemptuously, concerning his new acquaintance.

Jack, who had been Helen-Marie's dominated property, flushed confusedly as he murmured his reply. He had come upon the girl on the long drive one day. It had been raining hard and he had offered to drive her home. The woman who lived with her was some sort of a relative, he explained. She called the girl "Tessa." Jack could tell no more.

Helen-Marie's resentment deepened as days passed and she found Jack enjoying more and more the strange girl's companionship. Sometimes she saw them seated on the cross bench on the bridge, smiling into each other's eyes; sometimes the two came swinging down the road from a long country walk. Helen-Marie bowed to Jack coolly. It was not his desertion alone which galled, but the humiliation of his preference. This girl! This unknown humble girl! Was Helen-Marie not the town's idol, their social leader, exhibited musician and authority on fashions? Was it not Jack Hamilton's aristocratic mother who had planned and encouraged their friendship? Who but Helen-Marie might be worthy of her son with his assured future?

The strange girl sat on the brown house veranda, when Helen-Marie passed, and then paused thoughtfully. The girl was sewing upon some lovely flimsy stuff. As Helen still hesitated, the girl held the material up with a shy smile.

"Pretty?" she asked.

"Very," Helen-Marie replied.

"You make your own clothes?"

The girl raised her brown eyes.

"I make—other people's?" she answered slowly. "I am Tessa, modiste."

So that was it. Helen-Marie went briskly up the walk. When dressmakers came to town, with herself rested always the decision of their capabilities. If, as usually happened, an anxious seamstress failed to find favor in her eyes, the seamstress might well prepare to seek other fields.

"I should like you to make a frock for me," said Helen.

Tessa considered, then she laughed softly.

"They tell me," she replied, "that Miss Helen Marie Terry has always her own way. Therefore, I may as well agree."

Helen-Marie went on to see Jack's mother.

"Your son's new friend, the dressmaker, is sewing for me," she said.

When the white frock was finished, Helen-Marie regarded her own mirrored figure in reluctant admiration.

"It is not," she said at last sharply, "at all as I should have wished. I am afraid that I will not be able to recommend you to my friends. However, my bill?"

"There is no bill," little Tessa answered quietly. "When a garment falls to give satisfaction."

Helen-Marie placed a bill upon the table. "That will at least pay for your time," she said and departed.

Jack's mother, descending from her automobile, met Helen-Marie at the brown house door.

"I must warn you," Helen instantly advised, "that the girl's work is impossible."

"I am coming," Mrs. Hamilton said slowly. "To make a friendly call at my son's request. He is going to marry—the girl—you see. It was love at first sight with them both, that day in the road. All Jack knew of her was the same she gave—Tessa Modiste."

"My dear! Can you conceive that this young creature is 'Theresa' of New York and London? You know of course, the significance of a 'Theresa' label. The girl does her own designing, and she came to this quiet place for a rest."

Mrs. Hamilton looked back over her shoulder.

"I am glad, Helen-Marie," she said, "that you never really cared."

MEMORIALS TO MINE SWEEPERS.

A replica of the memorial to the Dover mine sweeping and drifting patrol which is to be erected on Shakespear Cliff in Kent, England, is to be put up in the United States, and there will be still another in France,
for the fund raised by the mayor of Dover is sufficient for both the original shaft 100 feet high and the two copies, so it has been announced. And the Dover patrol is quite worthy of memorials in three countries, for,
throughout the war, it not only held the Straits of Dover, thus preventing the enemy from reaching England, but also safeguarded the passage of troops and supplies from England and America to France. And both the United States and France co-operated in maintaining the patrol which has a remarkable record of accomplishment,
having daily swept more than 600
miles of sea free from German mines,
and having safeguarded the passage
across the straits of more than 8,000, 000 soldiers, to say nothing of supplies and munitions of war, says Christian Science Monitor. One proposal is that the American replica of the memorial shall be placed either at the battery in New York city or at some point on Long Island whence it can be seen by all who pass into or out of the harbor.The world war has been the cause of many evils, but it has done at least one good thing for the United States in helping it to attain its chemical independence. In that connection the advances made in the manufacture of high explosives and of deleterious gases will occur readily to the mind.
Aside, however, from the military point of view, the need for certain chemicals used in the practical arts began to be felt very acutely when the supply was cut off soon after the commencement of the war in 1914.
Thrown on their own resources, American chemists proceeded to experiment and in a comparatively short time were able not only to manufacture dyes, but also to put to use many rare materials, for the supply of which in ante-bellum days this country was almost wholly dependent on Germany and Austria.German farmers are being forced to give up their live stock without compensation for repatriation to France and Belgium, whose live stock was carried off to Germany during the war.
The people at large are now beginning to find out the cost of the war
they were so enthusiastic about when they were told it meant the ruin of their enemies only, says Baltimore American. The reverse of the medal is not making a pleasant picture for national contemplation.Dutch authorities are said to have arrived at the conclusion that Bill Hohenzollern has outstayed his welcome and if some ardent patriot can invent a scheme to inveigle the wood-sawyer over into Germany no doubt the Netherlands government would be prepared to do something in a quiet way to pay for the service.Some people are raising much noise because the silver in a silver dollar is worth intrinsically, or as a commodity, more than the gold in a gold dollar, says Houston Post. It doesn't worry us half so much as the fact that neither will buy 40 cents worth of corned beef or two bits worth of butter.The department of agriculture estimates that this year the total value of the country's important crops is $14,062,740,000. That is about $130 per capita. We want to say that we have been swindled out of a part of ours and what we did get we had to pay three prices for.Sixty-eight thousand girls disappeared from their homes in the United States last year, a large proportion of this number being runaways. The problem in the case is to find out if the principal share of the blame lay with the girls or the homes.A peculiar thing that has been noticed about these gentry who declaim
the loudest against American laws and institutions is their instant invocation of these laws when anybody attempts to use their own methods
against them.The increase in pay of railroad workers just allowed will amount to $30,000,000 yearly and the public will have to pay it. It will have to pay it because, even then, riding will be cheaper than shoe leather.When a man finds himself after 43 years of service with a salary of only $2,000 a year, he is justified in wondering whether Uncle Sam's pay roll
should not be the subject of some vigorous reconstruction work.European hotels are expecting an enormous number of visitors in the near future. America will be expected not only to help out with the food supply, but to provide many of the consumers.
