Several Chelseaites Are Named On Committees; Miss Gladys Schenk Is Assistant Secretary.

Chelsea should have more than ordinary interest in the Washtenaw County Fair this year for the reason that several local people are prominently connected therewith.

Miss Gladys Schenk has been made assistant to Secretary Earl W. Martin and is already on the job, and several have prominent official or committee places.

O. C. Burkhardt is vice president; J. E. McKune is a member of the committee on speed and driving horses; J. W. Heselchwerdt will serve as a member of the committee on draft and general purpose horses, and Fred Reichard of Lima will be superintendent of the sheep department.

One page of the premium list will be devoted exclusively to Chelsea and her industries.

FLINT'S EX-MAYOR OUT FOR NOMINATION FOR GOVERNOR

Visited Chelsea Saturday and Made Pleasant Call On Tribune.

Charles S. Mott, business man, industrial executive and three mayor of Flint, was in Chelsea, Saturday, in the interest of his candidacy for governor on the Republican ticket. He is a personal friend of F. H. ## LIGHTNING GIVES TRIBUNE WALLOP

Sky-Juice Put Intertype Motor Out Of Business Sunday.

Lightning Sunday, coming in on the Tribune's electric power line, burned out the armature on the motor on the Intertype machine which sets and casts the most of the type used in the paper and pretty nearly put us "out of the running" the first of the week.

A large part of the type for Tuesday's paper was set by hand, a mighty slow and laborious process as compared with modern machine methods, and especially so when one has only a limited amount of "news" type on hand. Most of our old "S-point" was sold when the machine was installed about four years ago.

A temporary drive was arranged Wednesday from the line-shaft motor and yesterday morning the Intertype resumed regular operation after a three-days variation.

Repairs to the machine motor are being made, but it will be a week or more before they are completed.

WON CAMP BIRKETT HONORS.

Ralph Axtell made a nearly clean sweep of "honors" at the second section of Camp Birkett at Big Silver Lake, conducted by the Y. M. C. A., which closed Tuesday, and for the first time since the camp opened in 1912 brought the honor cups to Chelsea, including both the Camp Birkett loving cup, awarded to the best all-around boy in camp and the Reid Athletic cup which is presented to the best athlete in camp. Only once before, in 1918, have both cups been won by the same boy.

Ralph also won several other tokens of prowess in both land and water sports, including a big blue "B" awarded the boy gaining the most points in land sports, and a big white "B" for the best in aquatic contests. In the field events he took 37 points out of a possible 50. Second place was won by George Lirette of Ann Arbor with 12 points.

TO THE VOTERS OF WASHTENAW COUNTY

Through the kindness of the electorate of this county, I have for the past four years served as your county clerk, clerk of the circuit court, clerk of the good roads and clerk of the board of county auditors; and also appointed clerk of the local draft board by Gov. Sleeper, which office I held throughout its existence. During this time I endeavored to serve the public without favor or prejudice and always to the best of my ability. I have now decided to become a candidate for the office of Judge of Probate of Washtenaw County at the primaries to be held August 31st, 1920, and if my administration has met with your approval and you see fit to nominate and elect me to this office, I would consider it in the nature of a promotion for my services, and will endeavor to give the same attention to that office as I have to the others I have held in the past.

Very respectfully yours,
EDWIN H. SMITH.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS

Brief Items, of Interest in Chelsea And Vicinity, From Nearby Towns and Localities.

HOWELL—W. P. VanWinkle, prominent attorney and financier, died Tuesday at his home here. Both of his legs were broken just below the knee in an automobile accident about a month ago, but they were healing nicely. The shock of the accident, however, was too much for his weakened constitution. He was born near Pinckney and practiced law there for about 18 months following his graduation from Ann Arbor in 1884, then moving to Howell, which had since been his home.

JACKSON—Thousands of freight cars, many of which are unloaded, are standing on tracks in the local yards of the Michigan Central railroad. While manufacturers are complaining of a freight tie-up, railroad officials deny that such a condition exists and assert traffic is normal.

YPSILANTI—Byron Meggison, aged 20 years, a married man, was arrested Friday evening by Police Chief Connors. According to the police complaints from Normal students and neighbors on West Cross street were coming in to the effect that Meggison was frequently seen posing in the nude state in front of a window along the street. Chief Connors secured a warrant and when he went to arrest Meggison he caught him in the act of posing in the nude. He was locked up and arraigned Saturday before Justice Stadtmiller. He waived examination and was bound over to the next term of the Washtenaw circuit court. Bail in the sum of $1,000 was furnished by friends of Meggison.—Record.

ANN ARBOR—The city council has approved the new lighting rate schedule of the Detroit Edison company, recently filed with the Michigan public utilities commission at Lansing. The new rates, which are a 40-cent monthly increase for ordinary light users became effective July 1.

JACKSON—As a result of the efforts of the sheriff's department, Jackson county has 17 less bootleggers, blind pig keepers and illegal distillers than on June 30. Sheriff Edwin Larrabee, assisted by deputies and state food and drug inspectors has averaged one arrest a day since the beginning of the month for violation of the prohibition law.

HOG CHOLERA MENACE CALLS FOR CONSTANT VIGILANCE BY BREEDER

Hogs Kept Under Conditions Here Shown Are More Susceptible to Disease Than Hogs Kept Under Sanitary Conditions.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

"And this hog lot?" I asked, admiring a tract of several acres surrounding a spacious hoghouse, neatly fenced but apparently neglected. "Looks like a tip-top place for hogs; better than what you just showed me. What's wrong with it?"

"Hog cholera," replied my friend in a tone that indicated my question had touched upon a sore spot. He surveyed the place mournfully, then added: "It's ideal, and I had my hogs here until a month or so ago. But cholera suddenly broke out among them and they dropped off at the rate of 10 to 20 a day. For a couple of weeks I didn't know what was the matter and then by the time I got a veterinarian here with serum it was too late to save many of them."

"How do you explain it?" I asked, knowing him to be the sort of man who is very careful about sanitation.

"We didn't know how to account for it for some time, but finally we learned it was brought on the place by a dog. One of the small tenants in the neighborhood had a few hogs. Some of them died of cholera and instead of burning the carcasses as he should have done he buried them in a shallow ditch. A stray dog found the carcasses and brought the disease over here."

"So," I said, "you are quarantining the place?"

"Yes; and I have disinfected the building. I also intend to plow up this lot before I use it again for hogs," he replied. "And you can bet I'm taking no chances now. All of the hogs now on the place have had the preventive treatment. After sanitation, it's the only course to pursue in raising hogs. I should have called a veterinarian when I first noticed that a couple of hogs were sick."

He was right. He had been the victim of one of the many means of spreading this pernicious and costly disease; and being at the mercy of careless or ignorant neighbors, he was forced to resort to a free use of the recognized means of prevention. He did not make the mistake of stopping here, however, but observed closely the few simple rules of sanitation emphasized by the United States department of agriculture.

Co-Operation Desired.

Like most thinking farmers my friend looked forward to the day when by co-operation of producers in the cleaning and disinfecting of infected premises and in the proper disposal of diseased carcasses the use of anti-hog-cholera serum would be reduced to a minimum or better still made unnecessary at all. As an instance of what this legitimate expenditure cost the farmers of the country, in 1918 approximately $5,260,000 worth of the serum was produced. This, plus the cost of administering it, was borne by the farmers. So large an amount of money, not to mention the $60,000,000 estimated as the value of the 2,000,000 hogs stricken by cholera that year, could very profitably be turned to increasing production, which in turn would mean a healthier economic condition for the whole country.

Farmers generally have been called the land army. The comparison is good concerning hog breeders. It is particularly so if the hog breeders are likened to a company of soldiers at drill. Each man has his position in the squad and each squad its position in the company. The success of all depends upon the way each individual performs his part. If Bill takes four paces instead of the required five in executing a movement, he will keep Jim from taking his proper three paces or worse still trip him up and send him sprawling and thus put the whole squad into confusion. In turn the whole company would feel the effect.

Each hog breeder has a very definite responsibility to his community, directly to his neighbors and indirectly to every hog breeder in the country. If he fails to care properly for his hogs and is not alert in guarding his stock against infection, he may be responsible for the introduction of cholera and its spread among the hogs of his neighbors. An infected area would be created and if not properly quarantined might easily prove a menace to producers many miles distant.

Remaining Problems.

The eradication of hog cholera is largely a matter of education and depends to a great extent upon the co-operation given by state agencies, live stock producers and dealers, and practicing veterinarians. A great deal of value has already been accomplished and prejudice against the use of serum has been largely overcome.

There remain other problems, though, to be completely solved and which need special attention. Among them are: The neglect on the part of owners to clean and disinfect; infected premises; the promiscuous use of hog-cholera virus in the treatment of the disease by irresponsible or incompetent individuals; the failure of some farmers and officials to observe closely prescribed methods to prevent the introduction and spread of infection; the lack of restrictions in the traffic in infected animals; the improper disposal of hogs that die of cholera; and the sale, purchase, and transportation of cholera hogs by unscrupulous dealers.

All that is required of the producer is the observance of a few simple rules of precaution. Infected premises should be quarantined, sick hogs and newly purchased stock isolated, cholera-stricken ones burned and swine quarters thoroughly cleaned and disinfected. A few days each year of scraping, cleaning and disinfecting will accomplish a great deal; and use of serum in time may save a whole herd. Constant vigilance is the price of cholera-free hogs.

GOOD CARPET-GRASS PASTURE FOR STOCK

Little, if Any, Inferior in Value to Bluegrass.

Close Grazing Is Essential to Maintenance of Crop in Best Condition—Must Never Be Burned Over—Write for Bulletin.

Good carpet-grass pasture on the evidence available seems little, if any, inferior in value to bluegrass pasture. The experience of careful farmers indicates that the best carpet-grass pasture will furnish grazing for one cow to the acre for about five months each season and for one cow to two acres for three or four months longer.

Close grazing is very essential to maintain the grass in the best condition. The trampling by the stock keeps the soil compacted, favoring the spread of carpet grass, and close grazing keeps down the taller growing plants which would injure it by shading.

If a field of carpet grass be left ungrazed after October 1 it will grow quite tall. In the protection thus afforded green leaves will appear through much of the winter and furnish water pasture. The cattle in eating the green leaves consume insects incidentally many of the dry leaves which otherwise they would avoid. Such a field must never be burned over, as it is very destructive to carpet grass.

Write to the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C. for Farmers' Bulletin 1130.

CRISP, COOL THINGS FOR AUGUST WEAR

EVEN the sheerest things we wear in the dog days. They prove themselves possessors of an unsuspected and unwelcome warmth, especially if they are of the clinging sorts of materials, and clinginess is the very last thing one will long for in hot weather.

All our concern is to keep as cool as possible and look considerably cooler than we feel—and now is the day of crisp fabrics—organdy, dimity, Swiss and tulle. The first of these accounts for many a delightful midsummer frock and figures as a triumphant in frills, or accessories, on dresses of all these other materials.

An old favorite appears among the crisp, cool frocks and skirts that look comfortable in sweltering weather. Dark blue Swiss with scattered dots of white, brightened with collar and cuffs of organdy, makes many a refreshing looking dress and is a joy to behold in the country or on the streets. It is usually meant to be practical and is less frilly than dotted Swiss dresses in lighter colors. These are frivolous and go to any length they choose in the matter of organdy dissipation. Striped dimity, having a white ground and stripes in gay colors, keeps up with them in this matter of organdy frills.

Besides these irresponsible but charming cotton frocks, there are those of chiffon tulle, actually even cooler than sheer cottons. Collars and cuffs of organdy contribute to their daintiness also. Tulle proves the best of all choices for making the coolest separate skirts with everything to recommend it. An example of the tulle skirt worn with a voile blouse is pictured above. And this skirt may have a pretty bodice to match it, with a frilly vestee of lace, a fichu of organdy or other fanciful aids that convert it into an afternoon dress. In this way the skirt does double duty.

The Hats of Late Summer

IN MIDSUMMER'S dazzling light, eyes retreat into the shadow of wide-brimmed hats; those glowing and protecting shadows that millinery offers in so great a variety of color and degree of shade. Leghorns, crepes, hair-brain, tulle, organdy and many other airy stuffs go to make up the gay or picturesque dress hats that are the climax of the year's bright in millinery and along with these bright crowns for beauty's head there are always those stately hats of fine black lace or malines. These seem fewer this colorful year than in past summers, but they are among those present and perhaps a little more distinguished than ever. But the wide-brimmed hat is not for every face or every occasion; it has competitors that are oftener worn and narrower-brimmed, like those examples for midsummer wear that make up the group of hats shown above.

In this group there are four hats that present themselves as millinery of the kind that makes itself very generally useful and it includes one hat—at the top of the picture—made of black maline and having a certain edge about the brim. The brilliant material called celophane adds a sparkle to the design, placed in parallel rows at the crown and in the upper brim. There is no trimming except a sash of satin ribbon with bow and ends across the front. Below it, at the left, there is a hat of pink crepe georgette, faced with a light, soft braid in the same color. It has a scarf of georgette that falls from the brim of the back and is edged with button-hole stitches in yarn. This scarf is embellished with yarn embroidery in pastel colors and furnishes all the decoration the model needs.

A very simple but becoming hat, at the right is made of wide satin ribbon, having double tucks across it at intervals. This shape has proved so great a favorite that it will reappear in fall hats. This model being of ribbon, in a strong blue, may be worn at any season. The last hat has a brim of raffia and soft crown of tulle and contents itself with a sash and ends of narrow satin ribbon finished with fringe.

For Dancing Frocks, Gold and silver cloths are favored for dancing frocks.

A wealthy western congressman, says the Argonaut, much against his will, erected a magnificent mansion in Washington to please his wife and daughter. The congressman was of plain tastes and had no liking for the social activities of the national capital. One day an old friend visited him. Wearing a face of the deepest gloom, the owner of the stately home escorted his caller throughout the place. The visitor was admiring and enthusiastic, but the host said little or nothing. When the inspection was finished and the two had returned to the library on the first floor, the visitor said:

"Well, Jim, you certainly can't say that you haven't everything that you want."

"Yes, I can," replied the millionaire soberly: "I want a parrot."

The House of Whispers

By William Johnston Illustrations by Irwin Myers

A BEAUTIFUL GHOST.

Synopsis.—Spalding Nelson is occupying the apartments of his great-uncle, Rufus Gaston. The Gastons, leaving on a trip, tell him about mysterious noises and "whispers" that have scared them. He becomes acquainted with Barbara Bradford, who lives in the same big building. He instinctively dislikes and distrusts the superintendent, Wick. The mysteries in his apartments begin with the disappearance of the Gaston pearls from the wall safe. He decides not to call in the police, but to do his own investigating. It is soon evident that someone has access to his room. Becoming friendly with Barbara, he learns that her apartments are equally mysterious. She tells him that several years before her sister Claire, who lived with her, had made a run-away marriage with an adventurer, from whom she was soon parted, and the marriage had been annulled. Claire is supposed to be married and someone has stolen documents concerning the affair from the Bradford apartment and is attempting to blackmail the Bradfords. Nelson takes Miss Kelly, the telephone girl, to dinner with the idea of pumping her. Gorman, a hotel detective, recognizes her as the wife of Lefty Moore, a noted burglar. Nelson partly confides in the detective and arranges to meet him.

CHAPTER VI.—Continued.

"You're right about that," I replied, "and, look here. Why can't you meet me somewhere tomorrow afternoon. There are a lot of mysterious things happening in the Granddeck. Maybe you can help me in trying to clear them up."

"It's a date. I'll be in the back room of Jim Connor's place over on Third avenue at three o'clock waiting for you."

"I'll be there," I said, as I bade him good night.

"Hold on a minute," he said. "Do you know where Lefty Moore's wife lives now?"

I recalled the number she had told me to give the taxi man and repeated it to him, an address way over on East Sixty-second street near the river.

"I like to know them sort of things," he explained. "In our business you never know when you'll be needing them."

On my way home, after I left him, I congratulated myself on having made James Gorman's acquaintance. In him I had found a man with police and detective experience. The fact that he held a responsible position with a big hotel ought to be sufficient voucher for his honesty. Of course Miss Bradford must be consulted before I met Gorman the next afternoon. I could hardly tell him my own almost unbelievable experiences without bringing in the attempts to blackmail her sister. Surely Miss Bradford would not object to my plan. We were making such poor headway in solving the mystery ourselves that I was certain she would welcome Gorman's advice.

And would it not be a surprise to Barbara Bradford to learn that a criminal—or at least the wife of a criminal—was employed as a telephone girl in the apartment house? I was hoping that she would be at home and in her room when I arrived at the house so that I might signal her and tell her my great news at once.

I let myself into the apartment and without bothering to turn on the lights made my way back toward my own room.

As the Light Flooded the Room There Was a Suppressed Scream Followed by a Frightened Gasp.

As I reached the end of the hall, my ears detected a scuffling noise that seemed to come from my quarters. I stopped stock-still and listened breathlessly. Unquestionably there was someone in my room.

I tiptoed softly forward. As I crept along in the darkness, making no sound, I found myself devoutly wishing for some weapon. Of course it might be Barbara, who had entered by means of the ledge to leave some message for me, but if it were not she, I felt certain that I would discover who was at the bottom of the plots against us.

I gained the door without my presence having been discovered. In the dim half-light that came from the open window I could detect a figure standing on a chair apparently feeling along the wall near the ceiling. I recalled with curiosity that it was from that spot that the whispers I had heard had seemed to come.

Such by then I edged noiselessly forward, my eyes on the intruder until at last my fingers found the electric light button. As the light flooded the room there was a suppressed scream, followed by a frightened gasp. The figure on the chair turned quickly and faced me. I saw that it was a woman, a badly frightened woman, with her hands clutching at her heart. Almost instantly I recognized her. It was not Barbara Bradford, but her sister, Claire. She was clad in some sort of a dark house gown thrown over her nightgown. Her slippered feet were bare of stockings, and her hair hung in a great braid down her back.

As I stared at her she sprang from the chair and made a rush for the open window. I grabbed for her and though she fought desperately I managed to hold her fast and to drag her away from the window. After a moment's futile resistance she suddenly collapsed in my arms, moaning in a teary whisper:

"Let me go, please let me go."

I placed her in a chair, and still keeping a tight hold on one of her arms, studied her, debating what to do. What desperate motive could have driven this girl to the daring journey across the narrow ledge by which she had gained access to my quarters? Was she, I wondered, once more in the power of that evil husband of hers, driven by fear of him to such desperate deeds?

"Let me go," she moaned again.

"Not until you tell me what you were doing in my room," I answered firmly.

"I did not know there was any one here. I thought the apartment was vacant. I thought the Gastons were away."

"But why did you come?"

"I can't tell that," she moaned. "I can't tell that."

"You must," I repeated. "I am going to keep you here until you do tell me."

"You must not keep me here," she said. "I don't want my people to know about my having been here. You look like a gentleman. Please let me go."

"Doesn't Barbara—doesn't your sister know you are here?"

At my mention of her sister's name an expression of amazement escaped her.

"Who are you?" she asked excitedly. "How did you know who I was?"

"I am a friend of your sister," I answered. "She will tell you who I am. You must trust me. I feel I have a right to know what you are doing here. Won't you tell me?"

A strange look came into her eyes and she shook her head.

"You wouldn't understand. I was trying to trace the whispers."

"The whispers?" I cried excitedly. "You have heard them, too?"

"Often," she said. "I heard them tonight. Mother and Barbara were out to the theater. They seemed to come from near the ceiling in my sister's room. They seemed to vanish in the direction of this room. I thought there was no one here. I decided to creep along the ledge and see if I could trace them."

"And did you succeed?"

She shook her head.

"When I first came in this room I could still hear them. They seemed to be coming from up near the ceiling. I got up on a chair and put my ear to the wall to listen. Then they stopped altogether and then—you came in. May I go now—before my mother comes home?"

"On one condition," I answered, "that you tell your sister about your having been here."

"I'll tell her if you wish me to," she replied. "And now, please may I go? Could you let me out of your door? See, I brought a key to our apartment with me. I don't think I dare make that trip across the ledge tonight."

As I escorted her to the door, my mind in a whirl over the events of the evening, I suddenly remembered how important it was that I should see her sister for a long talk before I kept my appointment with Gorman.

"Tell your sister," I said to Claire Bradford as she departed, "that it is imperative that she meet me at lunch on tomorrow. I have news of the utmost importance—news that concerns all of us. Tell her to meet me at the Astor at one. She must come."

"I'll tell her," she replied.

CHAPTER VII.

It was the next evening that I made my astounding discovery, when pure chance led me plump into what both Barbara Bradford and I recognized at once as our first real clue to the mysteries surrounding us.

My find came unexpectedly at the end of an exciting day. As my imagination I slept little in the hours following my unexpected meeting with Claire Bradford in my room, coming as it did right on top of Detective Gorman's revelations as to the identity of the telephone girl. Coupled with these circumstances was the fact that if my hopes were realized, Barbara would be within a very few hours lunching with me for the first time.

I just had to see her before I met Gorman. The tale I was to unfold to him was so improbable, so almost unbelievable, that I wanted to go over it with her step by step, in order to be able to convince the detective that it was the absolute truth.

I could not help but realize how preposterous it would sound in the telling. Mr. Gorman could hardly be blamed for believing that my mind had been inflamed by witnessing too many movie thrillers. Yet I had proof. There were the entries in my great-uncle's diary that I could show. I had the anonymous notes. My story of the strange whispers, if need be, could be confirmed by the old laundress, by Barbara Bradford, yes, and by Claire, too. That is, if the reason Claire had given to account for her presence in my room was the true one. It sounded logical, and yet I did not place the confidence in her that I did in Barbara.

But what I relied on most of all to convince Gorman of the truth of my preposterous tale was his own knowledge of who the telephone girl was. Just when I had reached the deduction that the band plotting against us must have a coadjutor in the building, he had come forward with the knowledge that pointed toward the person most apt to be involved.

"She Shouldn't Have Gone to Your Room. That's Just Like Her, Though."

I was pondering it all over in my mind as I left the house to meet Barbara. I was out on the street and just turning the corner when I remembered that I had spent most of the money in my pocket the night before. Retracing my steps, I returned to my apartment and took some bills from their hiding-place in the bookcase. As I emerged into the street again, I became aware that across the street was a man whose appearance seemed vaguely familiar. As I once more turned the corner, walking briskly, I glanced back for a second look at him and was surprised to see him coming in my direction.

Then all at once my subconscious mind came to my rescue. I realized when it was that I had seen him before and what made his appearance so familiar. As I left the house not ten minutes ago that very same man had been standing across the street. As I had turned back at the corner he had been coming in my direction just as he was now.

He must be following me, trailing me, shadowing me. I determined to test out my theory. At the next corner I turned sharply, glancing quickly back as I did so. He was still following me, though on the other side of the street and perhaps half a block away. I went a few steps out of sight and then stopped as if to look to a shop window. He came hurrying around the corner an instant later, slowing down as soon as he spotted me again and walked on slowly past me as if not noticing me. I waited until he was some distance beyond and retracing my steps quickly to the avenue again stopped in the shelter of a building to light a cigar, purposely wasting a number of matches. In hardly ten seconds he was back, covertly watching me from the other side of the street.

There was no question about it. He was trailing me. But who could be having me shadowed? Certainly he was not in the employ of the Bradfords or of Detective Gorman. Either he must be one of the band of plotters, or—I hated to voice my suspicion, but somehow the thought of my great-uncle Rufus kept obtruding itself. It would be just like the suspicious old miser, if it was he who had planned all this devilment, to put me in a position of trust and then to have me watched night and day.

Whoever it was that inspired this pursuit, I determined to lead my shadow a merry chase. Jumping into a taxi I bade the driver take me to a department store. Looking back I saw the shadow hastily entering another cab. Arrived at my destination I thrust fare and tip into the driver's hand and hurrying inside managed to catch an elevator just ascending. One flight up I got out and reentered to the main floor by a staircase at the rear, emerging thence on to a side street. A second taxi took me to the Twenty-eighth street subway station, and there, with no sign of my pursuer, I took a train to Times square and went to the Astor to meet Barbara Bradford, arriving on the dot of one. She was there awaiting me and we quickly found a secluded table in one of the less conspicuous rooms.

"I've told Claire everything," she said as soon as we were seated. "I hope you're not angry with me."

"Of course not. You had to tell her. I am sorry to have frightened her."

"She shouldn't have gone to your room. That's just like her, though. She always acts on the spur of the moment. She's awfully worried, too, poor girl."

"We can save her," I said. "Why," she asked quickly. "What have you learned?"

"I was convinced that they must have someone in the house aiding them. I've found out who it is. It's the telephone girl—Nellie Kelly in the name she goes by."

"I can't believe it," cried the girl, shocked at my statement. "She's only a girl like myself. I have talked to her lots of times. I'm certain there's nothing wicked or wrong about her."

"I'm afraid there is," I explained. "I took her out to dinner last night, to the White Room. The house detective, while she was off telephoning, practically ordered me out of the place because I was with her. She's notorious. Her husband is Lefty Moore, a well-known burglar. He's in Sing Sing now. Detective Gorman arrested him. He ought to know."

"Oh, the poor girl," exclaimed Miss Bradford, tears welling up in her eyes. "I'm so sorry for her."

"But think of your sister. Think what they are trying to do with Miss Kelly's aid."

"But how do you know she's aiding them?"

"I don't know it. But I do know that nobody could pull off all the things that have been happening in the Granddeck without some one there helping them. We've found someone used to helping criminals—a criminal's wife. Isn't that enough? All we need to do now is to watch her closely and fasten the thing on her."

"How are you going to do that?"

"That's why I insisted on your coming here today. I am to meet Detective Gorman at three. I feel that he could aid us, and I think we ought to tell him everything."

"Tell the police?" Her face grew white at the thought. "Wouldn't that mean a scandal—the newspapers and all that sort of thing?"

I shook my head decisively.

"Gorman's not with the police now. He's employed as a hotel detective. But he is just the man we need to help us. He knows all about criminals and how to track them. With his aid we can quickly clear the whole thing up."

"Will you have to tell him everything—about Claire's marriage?"

"We've either got to tell him everything or nothing."

"Oh, how I wish we did not have to. The more people there are who know about things the more likely they are to become public."

"Yet you trusted me with your sister's secret."

She gave me a quick glance of confidence.

"You're different."

"I'm afraid most people would not agree with you. They would regard me as a worthless, discredited young fellow out of a job."

"But it's not your fault."

"The point is, I went on, 'that we have reached a place where we need expert advice. Gorman has fortuitously turned up to give it. The only way is to tell him everything.'

For a moment she debated the matter silently, her pretty forehead puckered in thought.

"Yes," she said at last. "I suppose it is the only way. But won't he want a lot of money for his services?"

"I'll attend to that," I answered. "I'll make my great-uncle reward him handsomely for recovering the Gaston jewels."

"If he does."

"He must. We've got to get these back."

From her hand-bag she produced the anonymous letters she had received and handed them to me.

"Will you want to show the detective these?"

"Yes, I think I had better. The whole tale sounds so preposterous that I need every bit of corroborative evidence we can muster."

For half an hour we lingered over the table, discussing all the aspects of the case. Eventually I think I persuaded Miss Bradford that the evidence pointed most damningly to the telephone girl as one of the conspirators or at least one of their aides. She was eager to know what plan of action Gorman would advise and as we parted we arranged to be at our adjoining windows at ten that evening in order that we might have another chat.

I found Gorman waiting for me at the place he had mentioned.

"I told you that girl was a bad one," was his greeting.

"What do you mean?" I cried. "What have you learned about her?"

"Nothing except that the address she gave you last night was phony. The number she gave is the hospital grounds"—he pronounced it "hospitals."

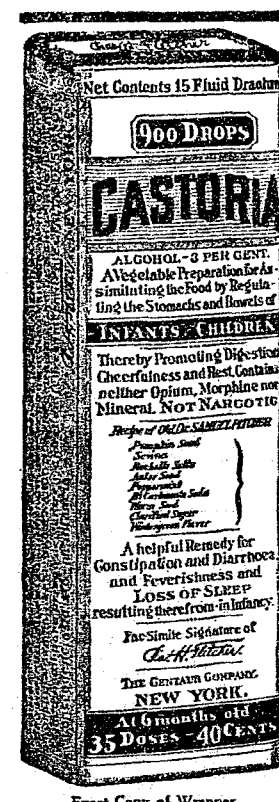

"Where does she live, then?"

"She's keeping that under cover. She shook the taxi at Fifty-ninth and Third."

Detective Gorman to the rescue.

SHIFTING STATUE OF LIBERTY

Oldtime's Simple Explanation of Matter That Had Greatly Puzzled the Rookie Gob.

The destroyer Sharky, which arrived in New York harbor some days ago, dropped anchor near the Statue of Liberty on the starboard side, but during the night the tide shifted it about to the port side.

This transformation was most perplexing to a rookie gob, who finally confided his problem to a C. P. O.

"Well, you see, it's like this," the oldtimer informed him. "New York and Brooklyn both claim the statue, so to stop the argument the government lets New York have it one day and then moves it over to the Brooklyn side the next."—American Legion Weekly.

Special Care of Baby.

That Baby should have a bed of its own all are agreed. Yet it is more reasonable for an infant to sleep with grown-ups than to use a man's medicine in an attempt to regulate the delicate organism of that same infant. Either practice is to be shunned. Neither would be tolerated by specialists in children's diseases.

Your Physician will tell you that Baby's medicine must be prepared with even greater care than Baby's food.

A Baby's stomach when in good health is too often disarranged by improper food. Could you for a moment, then, think of giving to your ailing child anything but a medicine especially prepared for Infants and Children? Don't be deceived.

Make a mental note of this—It is important, Mothers, that you should remember that to function well, the digestive organs of your Baby must receive special care. No Baby is so abnormal that the desired results may be had from the use of medicines primarily prepared for grown-ups.

I. R. Swegles of Cleveland, formerly of Chelsea, has been visiting D. W. Caswell for a few days. Yesterday, accompanied by D. L. Rogers, they made a fine catch of bass at South Lake.

Dr. and Mrs. D. D. Delveit and children, of Toledo, are expected to spend the week-end with Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Hesel-schwerdt.

Mrs. Evelyn Russell has resigned her position in the office of the Bacon-Holmes Co. She will be succeeded by Mrs. Charles VanNatter.

Mrs. John Roth of Detroit, nee Miss Marquand, a former teacher in the Chelsea high school, visited Mrs. Alice Roedel the first of the week.

LaVerne Yettah, who served overseas and who reenlisted about a year ago, is home from Ft. Ethan Allen, Conn., for a 10-days furlough.

Mr. and Mrs. Avery Downer of Ann Arbor, Mrs. Clara Harmon and Mrs. Emma Freeman, of Detroit, were Sunday guests at the home of Mrs. William Grey.

The old frame and corrugated iron building in the rear of the Sylvan town hall, owned by the village, is being rebuilt. When it is completed the walls will be of concrete blocks and only the roof of the original building will be retained. It will be used as a storage place for tools belonging to the village.

You Control The Michigan State Telephone Company

Your telephone is operated by a company, organized and controlled under the laws of the State of Michigan.

So far as its rates are concerned, it is directly subject to the decisions and direction of the Michigan Public Utilities Commission.

You, through this commission, actually control the telephone service which is so intimately a part of your every day life. Its future success or failure is directly in your hands, because the commission must have your moral backing if it is to deal fairly with the telephone company in the matter of revenues. Sufficient and adequate revenues are absolutely vital to the very existence and the development of the utility. Without them the telephone cannot properly function in the industrial and social advancement of the State.

The close association of your telephone company with the Bell system of America gives you the advantages of a service which is world-wide in its scope. By means of this service, you can, at your will, talk to any one of 13,000,000 telephones in use throughout the United States today.

It gives your telephone company, too, the advantages of the scientific research of the greatest telephone engineers in the world. This research has developed the telephone art in the United States until today it is by far the most efficient in the world. It is daily developing new improvements which will do much to make your service better.

The officers of your telephone company, who are directing its affairs, are Michigan business men, keenly alive to the many problems incident to the development of the State.

And so it is throughout the entire personnel of our company. It is made up of men and women, actuated by no other desire than to do their jobs well and to deserve this great responsibility of giving to the people of Michigan the kind of telephone service they desire.
