

ROAD WORK IS SLOW; PAVING NOT STARTED

Grading On Territorial Road Project Nears Completion, But Cement Work Is Not Started.

Work on the Territorial road paved-way between this place and Ann Arbor is disappointingly slow for the average citizen and taxpayer, and many facetious remarks are heard regarding the seemingly inefficient progress of the job.

Although the first of the grading work was started early last spring before the last snow storm, the graders are still at work; but to the casual observer that portion of the job seems to be nearing completion and nearly ready for the cement surfacing.

The cement laying machines are all idle and promise to remain so for several weeks at least. Even the most optimistic guess would hardly predict that any of the cement could be laid before September 1st, and probably not then. With fall coming on, rains and freezing weather will eventually hamper the cement work so that in all probability there will be only about three or four weeks time available for the work following September 1st. We understand that a paving machine will lay about 500 lineal feet of paving per day, so that perhaps two miles of the road may be paved before winter weather stops the work.

Assuming that the paving work is started from the west end of the grade eastward it is possible that the cement laid this fall may extend eastward as far as Ed. Weiss' corner, which would make it easier for traffic from the south to get into town this winter.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS

Brief Items of Interest in Chelsea And Vicinity, From Nearby Towns and Localities.

SOUTH LYON—The formal opening of the State Savings bank of South Lyon, at the corner of Lake and Lafayette streets, occurred Wednesday, August 18, from 9:00 a. m. until 10:00 p. m. The building itself is a handsome one-story red brick and stone structure on the main corner of town. The interior is exceptionally fine. The woodwork is mahogany finish and all metal fittings are of bronze. The floor and baseboard are of tile.—Herald.

ANN ARBOR—Damage claims totaling $174,000 have been presented to the council. The city gets its water from springs on the Steere farm and the damage claims are for loss of crops on farms in that vicinity alleged to be due to drainage of water from under the land.

PINKNEY—A reunion of the Bell family was held Sunday at Silver Lake, Dexter township. The following officers were elected: President, Henry Lee of Danville; secretary, Mrs. W. H. Gregory of Ann Arbor; treasurer, Miss Muriel Holtz of Lansing.

DEXTER—Sneak thieves robbed the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Francisco early Monday morning. Two gold watches, a pair of opera glasses, between ten and twenty dollars in money and other articles are missing.

PRINT PAPER IS HIGH.

Last October the Tribune purchased a reserve stock of print paper at seven cents the pound, most of which was used long ago. But we still have one bundle or about 2500 sheets of that seven cent print in the office, held in reserve against a possible emergency. Yesterday a paper salesman who was looking over our stock offered to take the bundle @ 14½¢ the pound, which is the wholesale price today. The same paper would cost us 16¢ and upwards. He also told us that we have more shipping tags in stock than his company has in its warehouses, and we have only a few thousand at that.

PROSPECTED FOR GOLD.

Members of the Ann Arbor Rotary club listened with a great deal of interest Wednesday to the story told by N. S. Potter of this city, of a gold mining expedition in which he participated shortly after the Spanish-American war. Mr. Potter and a party of Jackson men went up into the Canadian Rockies in quest of gold and the story of the trip by boat through a country known only to the Hudson Bay traders and Indians proved a most interesting narrative.—Times-News.

MISSION FESTIVAL.

Next Sunday, August 22nd, St. John's church at Rogers Corners will celebrate their Mission Festival. Three services will be held, at 10 o'clock a. m., 2:30 p. m., and 7:30 p. m., on that time. Excellent speakers will be present. You are cordially invited to attend the services.

A GOOD AMERICAN.

The editor of the Washtenaw Post pulls a wise one! In discussing the candidates for governor on the Republican ticket he says: "There are a number of good men in the field, among them a good American." Well, who but a good American could run for public office in Michigan or any other state in these United States.

BACON-PALMER.

Miss M. Winifred Bacon, daughter of Mrs. William Bacon, and Dr. A. A. Palmer, son of Dr. and Mrs. George W. Palmer, both popular Chelsea young people, were united in marriage Wednesday afternoon, August 18, 1920, at four o'clock. The ceremony was performed at the home of the bride's mother, 115 Orchard street, Rev. H. R. Bentley officiating.

Only the immediate relatives of the bride and groom were present, the out of town guests being D. B. Taylor of Lansing, Dr. Royce Palmer of Detroit and Bert Gerard of Dallas, Texas. Both the bride and groom are graduates of the Chelsea high school and were classmates from the kindergarten. They left Thursday morning for a honeymoon trip to Cleveland, Ohio, and other points east, expecting to return about September 1st to make their home in the A. N. Morton house, 216 Jefferson street.

HOLMES & WALKER BELLEVUE SPREADER NO. 10

The "Bellevue No. 10 Spreader" has set a new standard of satisfaction. We positively know it will create surprise rather than disappointment, when placed in operation by the most exacting farmers. This surprise will be brought about not only by the excellent work it performs in thoroughly diffusing, scattering and spreading the manure over a wide area, but by the unusual strength of its design and general construction and by the care exercised in assembling and finishing. We feel perfectly safe in claiming it to be the best all-around Spreader on the market from points of efficiency, workmanship, materials and finish.

To see is to believe, and we invite the most critical inspection of our product and suggest that a comparison be made point for point with any Spreader upon the market. By this method an intelligent and profitable decision can be reached.

As I pondered over it I decided that my chance meeting with Barbara Bradford in the park had upset the plans of a blackmailing band, and that they were avenging themselves on me for my unwitting part. I was certain that Wick and Lefty Moore's wife were in connivance with them, and that the gang possibly included Claire Bradford's ex-husband. Wick had a pass-key that enabled him to enter the Luton apartment. Undoubtedly he could also enter mine as well. But Wick could have nothing to do with the planting of the revolver in my rooms. I was positive about that. He had not been out of my sight for a single moment from the time that we had discovered the body. The only way that it seemed possible to involve him in that was on the theory of a prearranged plot to make me appear the murderer. Was it possible that Claire Bradford had participated in this? I knew she had been in my rooms after the murder. It must have been she who put the revolver there.

One of the detectives who had arrested me appeared at my cell door. "Come along," he commanded gruffly.

As I came out I was again shackled and led to the patrol wagon that was waiting. I had supposed that I was being taken to court to be arraigned, but such was not the case. I found myself at police headquarters, where both my photograph and my fingerprints were taken. I refrained from giving any information about myself, beyond giving my name and age, being careful to have my name recorded as John S. Nelson. Out in my home town everybody for years had known me by my middle name "Spaulding," and I was hopeful that they might fail to identify me if they read anything about me.

When everything that might serve to identify me had been recorded, I was taken into a large room where perhaps half a hundred men were assembled, most of them wearing masks. I looked about with curiosity. I had read of this ceremony. I was being "lined up" before the members of the city's detective force to see if any of them could identify me and to give them an opportunity to familiarize themselves with my features in case it should ever be necessary to arrest me again.

"Never saw him before," I heard one of them say. "Guess he must be a western crook."

"He's no amateur," said another. "That job up at the Grandlock was done by a professional."

Many snatching comments were made, too, on my personal appearance. I learned for the first time that I had a "bad ear," and that my eyes were shifty. The only emotion these comments aroused in me was a feeling of pity, not for myself but for all poor unfortunates who fall afoul of the law. Even though a man is presumed to be innocent until he has been convicted I had observed that since the first moment of my arrest everybody had taken it for granted that I must be guilty and had treated me with little respect or consideration.

From headquarters I was taken to the police court and without further delay brought before a magistrate.

"John S. Nelson, arrested for the murder of Daisy Luton," said the detective.

"Have you counsel?" asked the magistrate.

"No," I replied.

"I will assign Mr. Myers as the prisoner's counsel," he announced.

A young chap, evidently just out of law school, stepped forward, and drew me a little to one side.

"Plead 'Not guilty,'" he directed, "and be careful to say nothing more."

"Of course," I replied. "I'm not guilty. I had nothing to do with it."

I could see by his face that he did not believe me and as I turned again to the court I made up my mind that even if the court had assigned him as my counsel I would tell him nothing.

"How do you plead?" asked the court.

"Not guilty," I replied.

"Remanded without bail for further examination until Thursday morning," announced the court, and I was led back into an anteroom. Mr. Myers and the detective accompanying me. The latter there surrendered me to some official, presumably a prison keeper.

"Looks pretty bad for you," said Myers, as we were left alone for consultation.

"I suppose it does look that way," I laughed.

"No chance to make it self-defense," he went on, plainly amazed at my manner. "No jury'd ever stand for a bargain shooting in self-defense."

"No," I admitted. "I suppose they wouldn't. Fortunately I'm no burglar."

"If we could make out it was a lovers' quarrel," he suggested.

"I had ever known Miss Luton," I admitted. "That might not make a bad defense."

"Back here," he replied indignantly. "You're a lawbreaker. You're up against it before you even begin to realize."

They've got the goods on you, and it'll be the chair for yours if you're not careful. You've got no chance proving an alibi."

"Why not? I never saw Miss Luton until I saw her body in her rooms. I never was in her rooms until I went in there with Mr. Wick after we had heard the shot. What's more, I never owned a revolver in my life and never saw the one the detectives found until they pulled it out of my dresser drawer."

Incredulously he listened. I could see that he did not believe a word I was saying.

"You don't look like a dope head, either," he observed sardonically.

"Look here," I retorted, "it is bad enough to have the police take it for granted that I am a criminal and a murderer, but when the counsel the court assigns me starts out on the same course, we quit right now. I'll get a lawyer of my own when I need one."

"I'll come around this afternoon and see you again," he said coolly. "A few hours in the Tombs will make you see things differently."

A few minutes later I found myself ensconced in a cell again, still confident of my speedy release, but somewhat puzzled as to what would be my best method of procedure. I was unacquainted with any lawyers; in fact, with any one in the whole city with whom I could consult. My immediate hope lay in my friend, Detective Gorman. There was nothing for me to do but to wait until I heard from him.

Fortunately I had had the forethought when the detectives were arresting me to take from its hiding-place in the hookcase my little hoard of money. This enabled me to send out of the prison and have a luncheon brought in. Making myself as comfortable as possible, I sat down to wait for Gorman, occupying my mind meanwhile with thinking of Barbara Bradford.

The thing uppermost in my mind was how to prevent her from being in any way involved. She must never know that only by her testimony would I be able to prove an alibi. Should she ever realize this, I knew that her sense of justice would make her come forward and tell the truth, even though it meant the loss of her own reputation and the scandalizing of all her acquaintances. She must not be permitted to talk.

She must not even try to see me while I was in prison.

The one way—the only way—I saw by which I could escape from the law's coils without implicating her was through the speedy rounding up of the band of criminals who I was positive were responsible for Miss Luton's murder as well as for all our troubles. I was relying on Gorman to do this.

A keeper's voice interrupted my chain of thought.

"You're wanted down in the counsel room," he said. "There is a visitor for you."

"A visitor," I cried excitedly. "Who is it?"

"I thought of course it must be Gorman come to my rescue."

"It's your sister," he announced.

My sister! A thrill shot through me at his announcement. I knew of course it could not be my sister. Both of them were mere children far away in the West. It must be Barbara.

"I'll go," I said.

"I will assign Mr. Myers as the prisoner's counsel," he announced.

A young chap, evidently just out of law school, stepped forward, and drew me a little to one side.

"Plead 'Not guilty,'" he directed, "and be careful to say nothing more."

"Of course," I replied. "I'm not guilty. I had nothing to do with it."

I could see by his face that he did not believe me and as I turned again to the court I made up my mind that even if the court had assigned him as my counsel I would tell him nothing.

"How do you plead?" asked the court.

"Not guilty," I replied.

"Remanded without bail for further examination until Thursday morning," announced the court, and I was led back into an anteroom. Mr. Myers and the detective accompanying me. The latter there surrendered me to some official, presumably a prison keeper.

"Looks pretty bad for you," said Myers, as we were left alone for consultation.

"I suppose it does look that way," I laughed.

"No chance to make it self-defense," he went on, plainly amazed at my manner. "No jury'd ever stand for a bargain shooting in self-defense."

"No," I admitted. "I suppose they wouldn't. Fortunately I'm no burglar."

"If we could make out it was a lovers' quarrel," he suggested.

"I had ever known Miss Luton," I admitted. "That might not make a bad defense."

"Back here," he replied indignantly. "You're a lawbreaker. You're up against it before you even begin to realize."

"Not guilty," I replied.

"Remanded without bail for further examination until Thursday morning," announced the court, and I was led back into an anteroom. Mr. Myers and the detective accompanying me. The latter there surrendered me to some official, presumably a prison keeper.

"Looks pretty bad for you," said Myers, as we were left alone for consultation.

I stood there astounded. It was not Barbara. It was her sister Claire.

CHAPTER X.

For a full minute Claire Bradford and I stood there observing each other. Even before a word was spoken I think we both sensed our mutual distrust. As I studied her, I was trying to conjecture what could have been the motive so impelling that she had dared to come even within prison walls to see me. Had Barbara sent her? I doubted it. I was sure that more than likely her visit was to plead with me to keep silent about her part in the tragedy. I was certain she was going to ask me to pledge my word to tell no one of her second visit to the Gaston apartment.

Yet as I studied her weak, beautiful face, so like Barbara's and yet so different, with its sensuous mouth and roving, brilliant eyes, I still was wondering how it was possible for a girl of her refinement and social position to have become enmeshed with such common criminals as the two employees of the Granddeck, Wick and the telephone girl.

"To what am I indebted for the honor of this visit," I asked at length, adding with some sarcasm, "from my sister?"

Never for a second had I imagined that other than a selfish motive could have brought her thither, and the conversation that followed was all the more surprising to me on that account.

"I had to say I was your sister," she answered quickly. "I wanted to be sure of seeing you and I did not wish anyone to recognize me. You know, I believe, who I am?"

"You are Barbara's sister," I replied.

"That's why I came," she cried, "for Barbara's sake. I have come to plead with you for her."

"To plead—with me—for her," I echoed in astonishment.

"Yes," she cried passionately. "She's young. She's little more than a child. She did not realize what she was doing. You must not let anyone know you even know her. You must never, never tell."

"Never tell what?" I answered non-committally.

She answered with a convulsive sob. "I thought for a little that she was going to break down completely. Her manner and the pallor of her face attracted the attention of the keeper who was in the room with us, and he started forward as if expecting her to fall in a faint. Resolutely she pulled herself together and went on in calmer tones."

"Oh, I know all about it. I know that she is completely fascinated by you. I know that she has been meeting you in the park. I know that she has lunched with you at the Astor. She hesitated and her face crimsoned—"I know that she has even visited you in your rooms late at night. Oh, please, please, I beg of you, if there is a spark of manhood in you, do not take advantage of a silly girl's weakness. Please help me protect my little sister's name; promise you will, won't you?"

"Why should I?" I replied carelessly, repressing my desire to leap at once to Barbara's defense and explain how pure and honorable her conduct had been and how lofty the motive that had governed her actions.

Tempered though I was to defend her, I realized that this might be an opportunity to learn something of Claire Bradford's associates, and I determined to make the most of it. How else could she know of all my meetings with Barbara unless she was in league with the persons who had been having me shadowed? How the knowledge that Barbara had been in my apartment could have come to her was a mystery beyond me. I would have sworn that that was a secret sacred to our two selves.

"Listen to me," she commanded, speaking in low tones. "Barbara is my baby sister, innocent of the ways of the world. I must save her from herself, and her heedlessness. Never, never, if I can help it, shall she suffer the agony and shame and disgrace that I have known. Years ago I, just as she is now, became infatuated with a man far below me in the social scale. He, too, was a criminal."

I sniffed indignantly at the "he, too," but she paid no attention.

"I ran away from school and married him and learned too late that he had a wife and child already. All my life, ever since, that terrible thing has followed me. It's like a specter ever rising to confront me. Even if I have to kill you, I am going to save my little sister from following in my steps."

"Where is Gaston Maurice now?" I asked. "Have you seen him recently?"

She gasped and shuddered, looking at me incredulously.

"You," she breathed excitedly, "who are you? How do you know his name?"

"Never mind how I know it," I replied. "What I want to know is where he is now? Who did you see him last?"

"Not for years—not since long before the day when we were married."

"Nor heard from him," I persisted. "No, nor heard from him," she hesitated, "unless—"

"Unless what?" I insisted, as she stopped abruptly.

"I can't tell you," she said firmly. "I don't know. They must have come from him. From someone who told of our marriage? How else could they know?"

Her distress was so real and her manner so convincing that I decided that she must be telling the truth.

"Well," said I, "if you cannot tell me where to find Gaston Maurice there is one thing that you can tell me."

"What is that?"

"Why did you visit my apartment late last night? Why did you put that revolver in my dresser?"

"Revolver," she queried in a puzzled tone, "what revolver?"

"The revolver with which Miss Luton was killed."

She eyed me in shocked surprise. "Why do you say this to me? I never saw the revolver."

"You cannot deny that you were in my apartment last night."

"But the revolver," she protested. "What do you mean by that? I know nothing of any revolver."

"Last night, a few minutes after Miss Luton was murdered," I said sternly, "some man, or woman entered my rooms and placed a revolver with which one chamber discharged in the dresser in my bedroom. It was evidently placed there for the purpose of throwing suspicion on me, of making me out the murderer. The detectives found it there and arrested me. If you did not enter my apartment to hide the revolver, why then were you there?"

"I knew nothing about the murder," she answered irrelevantly, "and it's morning—until I read about it in the papers."

"What about Wick?" I hurried at her. "Didn't Wick tell you?"

"Wick," she repeated in a puzzled way. "Oh, Mr. Wick, the superintendent. No, I have not seen him for several days."

"Did you do nothing yesterday at his direction?"

"How absurd! Of course not."

"Why, then, did you go into my rooms?"

She looked at me with a frightened face, and her manner became more confused.

"I really believe you are trying to implicate me in your crime," she ejaculated. "It's absurd for you to try to question me this way."

"Lady," interrupted the keeper, "you'll have to be going now. That's up."

"Promise me, she begged hastily in an undertone as she departed, 'whatever you think about me, you'll keep my sister out of it.'"

"I'll promise nothing unless you confess everything," I repeated, determined. If I could, to drag her secret from her, even though I, as well as she, was eager to shield Barbara's name.

Claire Bradford's attitude, I must confess, puzzled me greatly. He denied that she had seen the revolver or that she had been working in conjunction with Wick seemed to ring true, and I was also inclined to believe her statement that she knew nothing of her former husband's present whereabouts. While I was pondering over her statements, my cell door opened and Gorman was let in. "Well, young fellow," he said, "this sleuthing business didn't turn out exactly the way we expected it to, did it?"

"You don't think I'm guilty, do you?"

I waited in agony for his answer. If he failed me, there was no one absolutely no one, to whom I could turn.

Unappreciative Guest.

Ralph, three years old, was spending the day with his aunt. Thinking a custard would appeal to him, she inquired if he liked them, at which he answered, "Oh, my, yes." However, upon being served, he fell short of his expectations. He ate a little and winking it to his aunt, said: "You can give it Aunt Merv. I am not to eat it, you know, because it is fresh."

IN THE making of dress accessories, ribbons appear to have eclipsed all other materials. Everything from hats to shoes and from undies to wraps looks to ribbon for adornment and, besides being used for making garments, it plays a part in the construction of many accessories. To begin at the beginning in ribbon accessories, is to begin with sashes. There is a world of them to consider, from the simplest bands of the narrow fashionable two-toned, pleated-edged ribbons that have decked sheer summery frocks, to gorgeous and intricate affairs in rich moire or brilliant brocade that are elaborated into bodices and draperies. There are sashes for afternoon and evening gowns and there are sashes for street gowns, all as different in character as the frocks themselves are. There are sashes that are prolonged into trains and others that are made draperies for skirts or aspire into bodices, with the aid of malines or net or lace. Frocks are really merely lovely back grounds for these ambitious efforts of the accessory designer.

An affair of this kind elicits consideration in the group of sashes pictured. This extravagant and ingenious arrangement consists of an overbodice and giraffe which becomes a ripple of plaited over the hips and blossoms in loops and four hanging ends at the back. Two long ends reach the bottom of the skirt and are edged with frills of narrow lace. These and the two shorter ends are rounded. The flung gown serves to set off this elaboration of the sash into the most important feature of the costume. It would be effective in any of the lovely colors used for evening dress.

A much simpler and more popular sash is made of wide, soft and plain satin ribbon. It is adjusted about the waistline in a crushed giraffe that is brought twice around and raised at the left side. It is necessary to stay a giraffe of this kind with wire or some other support. It is finished at the back with two loops and two ends and over its fastening at the side, a spray of small roses takes up the color of the ribbon and repeats it in many delightful tints.

A description of sashes for evening frocks might go on indefinitely, there are so many of them in such varied arrangements, but their growing importance in tailored frocks compels attention. For these there are fine tailored sashes like that pictured in the group shown here, and others, less staid. This one is made of black satin ribbon folded and arranged into two loops and one looped end. The folds are tucked to place. These tailored giraffes and tailored tail ornaments are very interesting and designers find it worth while to specialize in making them.

WOMEN who want to make pin money have found better success in specializing along certain lines of work than in trying many different things. They establish and build up a following that comes back to them year after year at holiday time, or at other seasons of the year. One bright woman in a small city has been making rag dolls and cloth animals at odd times for many years and selling them at holiday time. She has as much work as she cares to take and makes a good profit on it. These dolls are of all sizes and kinds; some of them made of old printed cotton dolls, which can be bought in the stores, but most of them ingeniously put together of scraps of cloth. It is interesting work and dolls that represent many different pieces help to make it fascinating to the worker.

Other holiday articles for children are easy to make. These are the cloth books. They are made of thin cambric in bright colors with pictures of all sorts, comic and otherwise, pasted on the pages. To make them, several thicknesses of newspaper are cut into uniform size for the pages. Each of these pages of several layers of paper is covered with the cambric and buttonhole stitched around the edges with bright-colored yarns and several of them tied together at the back. These bright-colored picture books delight the small children and the demand for them is constant.

In the larger towns and cities the specialist who makes pretty candle and lamp shades can place them in stores, and in bazaars at holiday time. Others, situated so that they have time for needlework, place embroidered lunch cloths, dollies and things of that character. A work of this kind that some women find profitable, is the making of layettes and embroidered dresses for little children. The making of layettes may be developed into quite a business by clever needle women. In thickly settled communities, where there are many young women who have little knowledge of needlework and cannot for this or other reasons, make their own baby's clothes.

One ingenious woman has invented an amusement that children enjoy. She cuts from magazines the colored pictures of foods—those perfect cakes, fruits, ham, breakfast foods, bread, bacon and rolls, that are so enticing. These are pasted against cardboard backgrounds, and a set of them, with a paper tablecloth, makes an outfit for a party. These foods are pictured in dishes so it is easy to set out a table with them. A paper tablecloth with a set of pictures wrapped in it is sold for a small but profitable price. The cloth animals are made by patterns, bought of the pattern companies, and clothes that are adapted to the different animals, helped out with water color paints.

Some women are very successful in raising flowers and have capitalized this happy faculty until their friends look to them for blossoms and flowering plants. Considering the high prices asked for cut flowers, profits in this direction ought to be very good. One New England woman specializes in Jonquills; sweet violets in bunches and ready buyers in the cities. The marketing of perishable things presents some difficulties, but can be managed if one can find a distributor who will handle them for a commission.

To Clean Doekskin Gloves.

Let the gloves soak in a saucer with sufficient gasoline to cover them; take out, do not squeeze, but let the dirty liquid drop off. Lay on a thick clean cloth, and with a dry piece of rag rub down, working from the wrist to the fingers. Constantly change the surface of the rag, for as soon as it gets dirty it is apt to smear them. After this, if the gloves are not quite clean, but then through the same process again and hang in the air.

KEEP YOUNG PIGS IN CLEAN PENS

Young Porks Should Not Be Housed in Pens Contaminated by Other Swine.

Investigations reported in a recent technical publication of the bureau of animal industry, United States department of agriculture, disclosed additional evidence of the importance of keeping young pigs in clean pens that have not been contaminated by other swine.

A roundworm of pigs, known as Ascaris suum, is held responsible not only for many deaths among swine but for a large proportion of the runts among these animals. Development and perpetuation of the roundworm is fostered by badly drained and manure-covered, hog lots, which are on this account dangerous to young pigs and not good for pigs of any age.

Soil May Become Infested. Eggs of the parasite may remain alive in soil for five years and even longer. Pines occupied by pigs harboring the adult worms in their intestines will become badly infested with the eggs. Pigs farrowed and kept in such places are certain to pick up many of these eggs, and even suckling pigs are liable to swallow eggs present in dirt adhering to the teats of the sows.

Investigations by the bureau have proved that after the eggs have been swallowed and have hatched in the intestine the young worms do not immediately settle down, but penetrate the wall of the intestine and travel to the liver and the lungs. From the lungs they crawl up the windpipe and then down the esophagus and return to the intestine. Only after they have passed through the lungs do they establish themselves in the intestine and grow to maturity.

May Cause Pneumonia.

In passing through the lungs the young worms cause more or less damage to these organs. Pneumonia may result and the animal may die about a week or ten days after infection. Symptoms of this pneumonia among pigs are commonly known as "thumps." Not all cases of "thumps" come from this source but the worms are frequently the cause. Young pigs are more susceptible than older pigs to infection and are also more likely to suffer severely from migration of the young worms through the lungs.

There is no treatment for the lung stage of the parasite. If the pig survives he may later be treated with worm remedies to remove the worms from the intestine. In such cases, however, it commonly happens that the animal has been so seriously injured by the worms during their migration through the lungs that even after their expulsion from the intestine the pig is unable to make up for the setback he has received, although he does better than if allowed to go untreated.

CO-OPERATIVE GRAIN CONCERNS ASSISTED

Bureau of Markets Ready to Make Timely Suggestions.

Furnishes Specimen Copies of By-Laws and Indicates Proper Methods of Organization and Administration of Companies.

In the United States there are some 13,000 co-operative marketing associations. To many of them the bureau of markets, United States department of agriculture, has given valuable assistance by furnishing specimen copies of by-laws and by indicating proper methods of organization and administration.

"The Organization of Co-operative Grain Elevator Companies" is the title of Bulletin No. 560, issued by the United States department of agriculture upon this subject. The bulletin is addressed to those who desire assistance in the formation of co-operative grain elevators, but the subject matter is treated in a manner that makes the bulletin of interest to those engaged in other lines of co-operative endeavor as well. The scope of the pamphlet is limited to matters regarded as fundamental and general, and it is intended that the suggestions and recommendations be considered with reference to and in connection with special co-operative laws and the laws governing corporations in each of the several states of the Union.

The bulletin points out that the success of any organization, whether co-operative or for private profit, rests upon social or economic need, a sound organization plan, and efficient management. It then details the various factors that produce these basic conditions. It dwells upon the organization of joint stock companies, private corporations of the capital stock form, and co-operative associations incorporated under special co-operative law, the three common forms of organization of farmers' elevator enterprises in the United States.

Under the chapter of preliminary survey, matters of local conditions, prospective membership, capital, volume of business, and methods of survey are covered. Then the processes of actual organization are discussed and a suggested form of by-laws given. The bulletin also contains some general suggestions regarding the selection of the plant, the choice of directors and a manager, a maintenance agreement, emergency capital, and speculative tendencies.

The pamphlet has been written by experts in matters of co-operative associations. It is the composite result of actual experience, and should prove of valuable assistance to those interested in co-operative marketing. The bulletin may be had upon request of the United States department of agriculture, Washington, D. C.

SUNDRY ADVANTAGES OF FALL-SOWN OATS

Department of Agriculture Gives Timely Hints in Bulletin.

Under Climatic Conditions in Many States Crop Usually Yields Better and Matures Earlier—Poor Land Can Be Used.

Fall seeding of oats has numerous advantages over spring seeding where the fall-sown varieties can be successfully grown, as in the states of South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Mississippi and Louisiana; in Virginia and North Carolina, except in the Piedmont and mountain sections; and in southern and eastern Texas, according to specialists of the United States department of agriculture, in Farmers' Bulletin 1119, entitled "Fall-Sown Oats."

Under climatic conditions in these states the fall-sown crop usually yields better and matures earlier. The land can usually be prepared in better shape in the fall than in the spring. Fall seeding interferes less with other work. Poorer land and less fertilizer can be used. The fall-sown crop furnishes a cover for the soil during the winter and prevents washing.

The bulletin sets forth the varieties of oats that can best be grown in the South and details the soils and fertilizers that should be used. It is recommended that, wherever possible, oats should follow a cultivated crop. One of the best rotations for the cotton-growing sections is: First year, cotton; second year, corn with cowpeas planted at the last cultivation; third year, fall-sown oats, followed by cowpeas. Outside the cotton-growing section a good rotation, including oats, is: First year, corn with cowpeas in the corn; second year, oats, with clover or grass seeded in the oats; third year, meadow or pasture. Other arrangements are also suggested.

The bulletin "sets forth the preparation of the land, the preparation of the seed, the treatment of the seed for smut, the sowing of the seed, methods of seeding, treatment of the land after seeding, methods of harvesting, and the utilization of the crop."

Farmers' Bulletin 1119 can be had upon request of the United States department of agriculture, Washington, D. C.

LIVE STOCK NOTES

Watch the horses and see that they do not have sore necks.

An acre of alfalfa or clover, when properly fed, is said to make as much pork as an acre of corn.

The cleaning and disinfection of railroad stock cars is an important means of preventing the spread of infectious diseases of live stock.

SAY "DIAMOND DYES"

Don't streak or ruin your material in a poor dye. Insist on "Diamond Dyes." Easy directions in package.

"FREEZONE"

Lift Off Corns! No Pain!

Doesn't hurt a bit! Drop a little "Freezone" on an aching corn, instantly that corn stops hurting, then shortly you lift it right off with fingers. Truly! Your druggist sells a tiny bottle of "Freezone" for a few cents, sufficient to remove every hard corn, soft corn, or corn between the toes, and the calluses, without soreness or irritation.

Puts I Will In You Easy to Get Strong

Everyone wants more pep and surety needs it this hot weather. Hot weather takes away the appetite and makes one feel listless, lifeless, miserable, even when you have a strong stomach, but for those who have weak stomachs, it is really a dangerous, trying time.

Be on the safe side this kind of weather and help nature all you can, by taking an Etonic tablet about half an hour before you eat and one or two an hour after you eat; it will be of wonderful benefit. Etonic simply takes up the excess acids, poisons and gases, and carries them right out of the body. With the cause of the trouble removed, of course you will feel fit and fine—full of pep all the time. Etonic will cool feverish mouth and stomach and give you a good appetite, even in hot weather.

Get a big box at your druggist's for a trifling cost and let Etonic help you for a few days; then you will never be without it. Adv.

Pampered Individual.

"What is Dolly's income?" "I don't know; probably about a third of what he spends every year."

"How long can a man keep up that sort of thing?"

"In Dolly's case he can keep it up as long as his rich wife thinks he's too precious to work."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Some men don't want to talk about justice after they get it.

OATS BEST CROP

Statistics Show Advantages Over Corn Growing.

On Comparatively Cheap Land in Western Canada Farmers Get Record Yields—Cost Per Acre Much Less Than Corn.

How much more does it cost to grow an acre of corn than to grow an acre of oats? To get a proper comparison it is necessary to take an illustration from a farm on which both crops are grown successfully. An example has just been brought to the writer's attention of the comparative cost of growing corn and oats on a Minnesota farm. It is furnished by Albert Inner, a well-known farmer in Cottonwood county, Minn., in an article which appeared in the Cottonwood Citizen.

Mr. Inner says: "I had a curiosity to know how much it would cost to raise an acre of oats and corn. To find out I kept account, during the year, of the time required and the cash expended to grow the above mentioned crops." His figures show that it cost him $31.49 to grow an acre of corn and $13.13 to grow an acre of oats, or a difference of $18.36 an acre in favor of oats.

Provided the respective crop yields are not altogether out of proportion to the cost of growing the crop, this seems to be a good argument in favor of growing oats. But to grow oats successfully it is not necessary to use $150 or $200 land. In western Canada some of the best oat-growing land in the world can be bought for about $20 an acre. On this land good yields and a high quality of grain is obtainable.

Fifty to sixty bushels to the acre in properly prepared land is a fair average yield for oats in western Canada in a normal season but yields of up to 100 bushels, and even more, to the acre have been frequent in good years. The quality of oats grown in western Canada is attested by the fact that at all the international exhibitions for many years past oats grown in western Canada have been awarded the leading prizes. There is no record of oats grown in western Canada that have weighed as much as 48 pounds to the measured bushel, and the domain grain inspector is authority for the statement that 85 per cent of the oats examined by him in western Canada weigh more than 42 pounds to the measured bushel. The standard weight for a bushel of oats is 34 pounds.

Samples of these oats weighing upward of 45 pounds to the bushel are on exhibition at the Canadian government information bureau, located in various cities in the United States.—Advertisement.

Children Cry For

Special Care of Baby.

That Baby should have a bed of its own all are agreed. Yet it is more reasonable for an infant to sleep with grown-ups than to use a man's medicine in an attempt to regulate the delicate organism of that same infant. Either practice is to be shunned. Neither would be tolerated by specialists in children's diseases.

Your Physician will tell you that Baby's medicine must be prepared with even greater care than Baby's food.

A Baby's stomach when in good health is too often disarranged by improper food. Could you for a moment, then, think of giving to your ailing child anything but a medicine especially prepared for infants and children? Don't be deceived.

Make a mental note of this—It is important, Mothers, that you should remember that to function well, the digestive organs of your Baby must receive special care. No Baby is so abnormal that the desired results may be had from the use of medicines primarily prepared for grown-ups.

JUDGE EMORY E. LELAND

is a candidate for Judge of Probate on the Republican Ticket at the Primary election to be held on August 31, 1920. The patrons of the Probate office are pleased that Judge Leland has become a candidate. He has been courteous, painstaking and efficient. His experience in that office is of great value to the people of Washtenaw County and particularly to the people having business in that court. Important estates are settled there and have always received his prompt and careful attention. The voters of Washtenaw County could do no better than to renominate and re-elect Mr. Leland to the office of Judge of Probate. A vote for him at the Primary for this office will be greatly appreciated.

JACOB F. FAHRNER,
Republican Candidate for Prosecuting Attorney, Second Term.

To Voters of the County of Washtenaw: The duties of the office of prosecuting attorney which I now hold, require that I spend most of my time at the county seat, and make it impossible for me to see as many of the people as I would like regarding my candidacy for a second term. I am therefore taking this means of advising you that I am a candidate for a second term as prosecuting attorney of Washtenaw county.

In a recent address given to a large body of Washtenaw people, Judge George W. Sample of the circuit court said: "Mr. Fahrner has made a splendid prosecutor, and should be re-elected."

If you feel that I merit your support, for a second term, I shall be glad to have you vote for me at the polls on August 31st.

Very respectfully,
Jacob F. Fahrner.

Catarrrhal Deafness Cannot Be Cured by local application, as they cannot reach the diseased portions of the ear. There is only one way to cure Catarrrhal deafness and that is by a constitutional remedy. Catarrrhal deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a running sound of imperfection hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result. Unless the inflammation can be reduced and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Many cases of deafness are caused by catarrh, which is an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh medicine acts through the blood on the mucous surfaces of the system.

We will give one hundred dollars for any case of catarrhal deafness that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Medicine. Circulars free. All druggists, 75c.

A Great Remedy.

The merits of Chamberlain's Colic and Diarrhoea Remedy are well known and appreciated, but there is occasionally a man who has no acquaintance with them and should read the following by F. H. Dear, a hotel man at Danbury, Mont. "Four years ago I used Chamberlain's Colic and Diarrhoea Remedy with such wonderful results that I have since recommended it to my friends." Adv.

A Traveling Man's Experience.

You may learn something from the following by W. H. Ireland, a traveling salesman of Louisville, Ky. "In the summer of 1888 I had a severe attack of cholera morbus. I gave the hotel porter fifty cents and told him to buy me a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic and Diarrhoea Remedy and to take no substitute. I took a double dose of it according to the directions and went to sleep. At five o'clock the next morning I was called by my order and took a train for my next stopping place, a well man." Adv.

For Probate Judge

JOHN D. THOMAS

Republican Ticket

The Day is August 31st

1920

His name will be found on a Republican ballot, only, and you can call for a Republican ballot.

It will be under the heading: "PROBATE JUDGE."

He has practiced law in Washtenaw County for eight years.

In order to secure the necessary funds to complete his education in the University of Michigan, it was necessary for him to do clerical work and typewriting for others.

As Justice of the Peace of the City of Ann Arbor for the past seven years, he has handled nearly 7,000 cases of all kinds, from which he has learned the characteristics of all mankind.

He was re-elected to the position he holds as Justice of the Peace by a majority of 1,380 votes. Out of 3,600 votes cast he received 2,250, approximately.

He is qualified in every respect to make a good Probate Judge.

As he desires to take a step forward he surely will be thankful to you, if you will call for a Republican ballot and mark in front of his name for Probate Judge.

What we are doing to make Telephone Service Better

Hardly a week passes that does not see some plan or device in operation, or a prospect, that will make the telephone service more as we both would have it.

During the past three and one half years, for instance, more than 10,000 miles of additional telephone wires have been strung in Michigan. These additional lines have added greatly to the scope and quality of long distance and toll services.

A new cable connecting the upper and lower peninsulas of Michigan has also been placed. This cable has added greatly to the long distance service which we are giving Michigan.

More than 6,000 private switchboards have been installed in Michigan to date and as many more as can be procured will be placed at the disposal of subscribers desiring them this year.

All of these improvements and additions have been put through in the face of the most difficult material delivery conditions Michigan has ever experienced.

Great attention is being given the work in our operator training schools in cities throughout Michigan, that these young women may come to their tasks proficient, and with a full understanding of their responsibilities.

And so it is throughout every department of the business. Difficulties are being experienced. The results are not always all that we wish. But we will keep at work until we have overcome every obstacle to good service.
