

RAILROAD JACK WAS HERE

Railroad Jack, an interesting character in Southern Michigan for 20 years, visited Chelsea Wednesday. Jack was en route to Detroit from a visit to his boyhood home at Oskosh, Wisconsin, and stopped here between rides. Jack spurns the railroads now days and travels by automobile exclusively, depending wholly upon the kindness of passing drivers to carry him from place to place, but he still carries his bed with him and sleeps out of doors. He does not use tea or coffee, nor tobacco, and his diet is very simple. Yesterday for dinner he ate several raw tomatoes, part of a loaf of rye bread and drank a quart of milk. He is past 52 years of age and is still as spry and active as many younger men.

Jack's particular stunt is giving brief biographical sketches, including dates, of the leading historical characters, entirely from memory. The editor of the Tribune asked him about a dozen noted historical characters, and with one exception he answered with almost incredible quickness. The one exception was a well known German engineer, Walschwerdt, who invented the locomotive valve gear now so commonly used on American railroads.

At present he is making an exhaustive study of the Fordson tractor and while in Chelsea made his headquarters at Palmer's garage, local Ford and Fordson dealer.

HUNT-LEHMAN.

Miss Pauline Helen Hunt of Cleveland and Dr. Ira Alfred Lehman of Highland Park were united in marriage on Saturday, August 21, 1920. The groom is a former Sharon boy, and a son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Lehman. He is a graduate of the Chelsea high school, and of the dental department at the University of Michigan.

CLINTON—H. H. Halladay of Clinton has been named by G. W. Dickinson, secretary-manager of the Michigan State fair, to have charge of all sanitation work at the fair this year. Sept. 5-12.—Local.

COMMUNITY PICNIC SEPT. 1.

The general committee in charge of the county community picnic hope to make the dinner a special feature. Everyone is asked, upon arriving at the grounds at Whitnore Lake, to turn over all food stuffs to the general committee as their contribution to the county community dinner. The general committee in turn will have paper plates enough for all attending and will prepare and serve the dinner to everyone present. The general committee will also furnish lemonade, coffee and cream. The menu, which all are asked help supply, is as follows, and each small group which attends should bring enough of the following for one or more than their own group or family: Potato salad, sandwiches, sugar for coffee, choice of baked beans or meat loaf, and some contribution to dessert; either cake or pudding or fried-cakes. Each group should come prepared with their own silver and cups.

In order to make this community dinner a real success everyone should conform to the menu as outlined and should make their contributions to the general committee in charge. It is hoped that no family will sit down with their own basket off by themselves, but that all shall take part in making the affair a real big family affair.

A STATE SENATOR HELPS MAKE YOUR LAWS AND SPEND YOUR MONEY.

ARTHUR J. WATERS

Our Republican Candidate of Manchester, Mich., commands your consideration before you vote. He is the candidate of no "frame up," clique or faction. He carries a free lance and if elected will well serve a free people.

He is interested in agriculture and is an active lawyer. He served in the Legislature of 1905-7, and while there took first action for the direct election of United States Senators. He is a graduate of the U. of M. of 1890, and has been president of the village of Manchester for five terms.

He says the basic law of our commonwealth is, "Religion, morality and knowledge, being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education must forever be encouraged;" but he further says that there are many items in the heavy $17,000,000.00 tax imposed by our latest Legislature that you as well have been omitted and he doubts the wisdom of Act No. 26, 1919, which creates a little standing army for Michigan of less than 200 men at a cost to the taxpayers of $736,420.00, and he calls attention to the fact that his honorable opponent must have been asleep at the switch when this bill passed appropriating $11,920.00 to pay for one captain, ten corporals and two troopers more than the bill authorized.

Do not be fooled; there is no question of "wet or dry;" that has been settled by federal and state constitutions and the Volstead Act beyond the power of the State Senate. Nero fiddled while Rome burned, do not likewise. You may not be from Missouri, but make them show you before you vote why at one time or another a school of Music is necessary to make your laws and spread your tax.

Our candidate is not "too proud to fight" for what he thinks is right.

The home, the farm and the honest laborer must be protected: A square Deal, All Men Up and No Men Down, is our slogan.

Say by your vote on Aug. 31st that to the good old counties of Oakland and Washtenaw are not going to Sink, but that you will trust them in more secure and peaceful waters.

Respectfully submitted, Senatorial Campaign Com.—Political Adv.

DENTER TOWNSHIP ITEMS.

Light frosts, but no damage. It is reported James Gregory had one thousand bushels of wheat.

There is a little excitement about Henry Ford locating a factory in the village.

While going to the village with his cream, Tuesday, Mr. and Mrs. John Harper's auto slid in to the ditch on the state road and tipped over. Neither was hurt nor the auto broken, but the cream took to the ditch for Dexter.

Sergeant Albert Kramer, police detective and wife, Joe Hannon and his friend, Miss Anne Eisenack, all of Detroit, spent on Thursday till Monday afternoon with Mr. and Mrs. John Harper "having a good time on the farm and lathing in the lake." Saturday the three women and the three men started to enjoy a ride to the house on a load of marsh hay but just as the load reached the hard land the hay slid off and so did the haymakers. No one was seriously hurt. All were laughing when they dug themselves from under the hay except Miss Eisenack, and she slid between the hay and the rack and hurt her shoulder, so she said when she got up, but she had her hand too far down to indicate it was her shoulder. Before leaving for home they called at Overlook farm and took snap shots of the flock of turkeys, ducks and geese, also of Springfield Longfellow, the registered Durco stock hog and Pink, the Polad-Durham that heads the herd; and we must not forget that Lady the Misses driving her horse, was also snapped in several positions.

Dan Reilly's machine is on North Lake road threshing this week.

Henry Aldrich returned to Howell last week, after spending six weeks with his niece, Mrs. Grace Ferris.

Mrs. Minna Harper had a slight stroke of paralysis last Saturday afternoon. She is under the doctor's care at present.

"Why I Put Up With Rats for Years," Writes N. Windsor, Farmer.

"Years ago I bought some rat poison, which nearly killed our fine watch dog. It so scared us that we suffered a long time with rats until my neighbors told me about RAT-SNAP. That's the sure rat killer and a safe one." Three sizes, 25c, 50c, $1.00. Sold and guaranteed by Chelsea Hardware Company. Adv.

800 Russian Children Saved by American Red Cross

DOUGHBODY BIG BROTHERS

A SIBERIAN EXPRESS

NURSES AIDS

HOSPITAL PATIENTS

HER OLDEST BROTHER

VLADIVOSTOK.—A colony of nearly 800 Russian children has left here bound for Petrograd, via San Francisco and the Panama canal. They are returning to mothers, fathers, sisters and brothers from whom they have been separated more than two years. The repatriation and "re-education" is being made by the American Red Cross, which has cared for the children during the last 15 months, first in camps in the interior of Siberia, later at a home made for them on Russian Island, Vladivostok harbor.

This journey will write the last chapter in a history of wandering and adventure in a revolution-torn country that can hardly be matched in the whole record of world upheaval during the last six years. It seems almost a tale out of the Old Testament, and a thousand years from now, it's perhaps not too much to say, the Russians, with their dramatic instinct and mysticism, will have made it a part of their rich folk lore.

When the revolution moved toward its height in the Great White Empire, many fathers and mothers of Petrograd looked at their already orphaned children, considered future possibilities, gathered them into groups of 20, 30, 100, with nurses and teachers, and sent them away to the peaceful, rich shores of Siberia "for a few months until the trouble blows over."

Time came to return home. But between the children and their parents there had risen a barrier of fire; a dead line formed of the long battle fronts of the opposed bolsheviks and Czech armies. Months passed. Winter arrived. Clothing had become rags. Funds were exhausted. Hunger and spreading war horrors confronted the wanderers.

Then the Omsk government came into being. Instructors and nurses of the young people appealed to this power for aid, and the Omsk regime passed the appeal along to "The Greatest Mother in the World," who opened her arms and gathered them to her broad bosom.

Group after group was taken over by the American Red Cross, which established colonies in western Siberia and apparently solved the problem of feeding and housing its young charges. But the battle line swung eastward and the bolsheviks captured town after town where American Red Cross activities were in full operation. With less than 24 hours' headway the first group was evacuated, then the next and the next, until all were out of danger.

What, though, was to be done with them? Where find housing and supplies and permanent safety? One answer—Vladivostok, thousands of miles farther east.

Three trains of especially-equipped box cars with a guard detachment of American doughboys, transported the precious cargo on a journey lasting several weeks through a country stripped bare of provisions. It may be said that ingenuity was taxed to the utmost during the course of the enterprise, in obtaining supplies, avoiding disease epidemics and successfully evading other troubles. Arrived at Vladivostok, the children whose ages range from three to seventeen years, were held in quarantine for the required period, then moved to Russian Island, about six miles from the city, where military barracks were made suitable for housing the colony. Here, with most of the Russian instructors and nurses who left home with them, and with additional American personnel, as well as German and Austrian prisoners of war to do the heavy work, they have been given the best of care ever since.

The colony has a definite, a hospital and primary school classes. The older children come daily into the city to attend the commercial school, the Brown school for girls and the gymnasium (high school). Natural talents, such as art and music, are cultivated. Thirteen of the larger girls took the course of training which fitted them to be nurse's aids in the American Red Cross hospital here, and a number of others are in charge of the colony sewing room in which the children's clothing is made.

In a group of several hundred young people it is to be expected many will show exceptional qualities of temperament and ability. Several of these children have remarkably fine voices. One little girl, whose mother is a professional dancer, has a gift for the stage that would charm the most artistic audiences. Still another paints beautifully. The genius for mechanics possessed by many of the boys is shown in their toys, whittled out of bits of wood with whatever sharp-edged tool they can find.

Associated with the colony—hangers-on who have such pitiable histories they could not be turned away—are several interesting children gathered up incidentally by the Red Cross people. One is a girl of sixteen, who joined an evacuation train on the Journey here and offered to do any kind of work if she might only be permitted to stay with the colony. Another is a child of about twelve, who with her two little brothers wandered all the way from the region of the Black sea so early in the great war that she has forgotten her home town, the names of her parents and her own age. It is estimated 6,000 children were sent eastward from Petrograd. All trace of hundreds of them has been lost.

Before the flight from Omsk became necessary the Red Cross maintained a colony at Turzoyak, Siberia. Into the colony wandered two ragged, famished children. The girl said she was nine years old—and that is literally all she could tell about herself. All she could tell about her companion, a younger boy, was that he was her "oldest brother." What those two children had been through can hardly be imagined. One group of five of these miserable little refugees appeared at Vladivostok—a girl and her four brothers. She was "little mother" of the outfit. One had lost a leg. They were orphaned and homeless. These five children had made their way over the 4,000 miles between Omsk and Vladivostok. How they managed it is of course a mystery.

The Red Cross personnel who will accompany the children on their journey home are: Rily H. Allen, Honolulu; Dr. William T. Berger, Cleveland; Carl J. Bramhall, Seattle; Mrs. Hannah B. Campbell, Santa Cruz, Cal.; Dr. Herbert M. Coulter, South Pasadena, Cal.; Dr. Hal W. Davison, Astoria; Mrs. Davison (nee Natalie Beklundova, Russian nurse); Frank A. Helgala, Jacksonville, Fla.; Dr. Harry O. Esersole, Los Angeles; Florence Farmer, nurse, Anacostia, D. C.; Dr. Charles H. Gano, Pittsburgh; Clarence F. Rowland, Buffalo; Miss Stacy M. Snow, Seattle, and Ward D. Walker, Manila.

this the rulers of the land decided to send out colonies. For this purpose every tenth man was chosen by lot, or as many men were appointed as had been born in the country during the course of one year. Sometimes those who were destined for colonization were selected by the magistrate and again others offered themselves voluntarily. Arms were given them and also implements for the most necessary occupations. Afterward a sacrifice was prepared, and the departing company was recommended to the favor and protection of some god. The colonists embarked, sought for land, and upon some remote shore founded a town which remained connected with the mother country only by the worship of the common deity and by the sentiment of ancient friendship. They often offered each other mutual aid against foreign conquerors or the oppressive tyranny of some usurping citizen.

An ancient pearl was valued by Phly at $100,000.

COLONISTS CHOSEN BY LOT
Extremely Simple Device by Which Ancient Italy Ridd itself of Its Surplus Population.

When the population of Italy in the was perhaps scarcely equal to that which the former kingdom of Naples had, and the natives, having no knowledge of agriculture, demanded more space for their pastoral and hunting habits, families and civil disturbances arose. In consequence of

At the Fashion Show

FASHION shows are abroad in the land and those in the large cities are repeated on the screen everywhere, so that she who runs—to the movies—may read the story of fall styles. By these means we have a chance to compare the efforts of American producers of women's apparel with early imports and with photographs of French productions that have not actually reached us. If we start out by conceding the French to be masters, we must conclude that Americans are the most apt and progressive of pupils. The admirable features in French gowns are present and quite as admirably managed in those of American manufacture and an independence of ideas has rejected whatever is not suited to us.

It is the part of wisdom to borrow that which is beautiful and characteristic in the dress of other nations.

The frock shown at the left of the two pictured here may have come to us by way of France but it started in Russia. An underskirt of black satin, with large overlapping rings embroidered around it, is glimpsed below an overskirt of blue serge joined to a blouse. Both open at the left side and reveal the satin from shoulder to hem with smaller embroidered rings as a decoration. Tassels fall along each side of the opening and there is a long narrow sash of the serge.

Long waistlines and full skirts are preferred for fall and these are set forth very attractively in the dress at the right. In this frock a semi-fitted bodice is joined to a long tunic and opens over a vest of net and lace. A border of satin at the bottom of the tunic is cut in points. There is a collar of broadcated satin and cuffs of it finish the sleeves.

New Silk Gowns, Gay or Sedate

TWO afternoon frocks of widely different styles, but both employing taffeta and lace in combination, present themselves together in the picture above and invite comparison. One of them, with femininity of thought, is a fussy little affair of silk and cream-colored lace that has appropriated apron drapery at the front and panner effect at the sides, elaborating both these simple and quaint ideas until they are hardly to be recognized. It has a plain straight underskirt which does its useful part as a foundation for eccentric drapery. The bodice is smooth fitting and extended over the waistline where it is wrinkled in the semblance of a giraffe. Elbow sleeves, ending in frothy puffs of lace and a square neck, also finished with a lace puff, are in keeping with the panther silhouette which gives this gay dress its character.

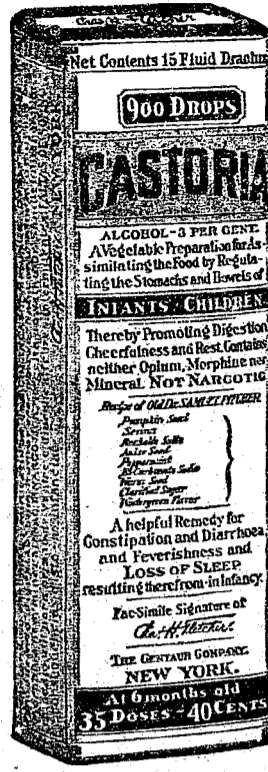

Not a detail of the costume but what plays its part to sustain the style of the frock. Such a costume will re-enforce the personality of light-hearted youth and make the gravest of young persons look gay. There are many colors in which this frock can be successfully developed, but, in any case, it is intended for a youthful wearer.

The other dress of black taffeta and black lace has a long tunic of lace banded with taffeta that hangs full and straight over the underskirt. It has a Quaker bodice with wide silk fichu and a giraffe of taffeta tied in a bow at the back. The sleeves are hardly elbow length. Perhaps the wearer is one of those fortunate young women who possess pretty elbows. This frock is one of the new models for fall, youthful and demure looking, and it would be just as alluring made in a color with lace dyed to match the silk.

Crops Very Brief.
A southern plantation owner was inquiring of one of his renters the condition of the crops. The renter was true to type in her love for unusual words.

"How is your crop coming along, amily?" was the question.

"Briefly, Mister Smith, briefly," was her reply. "Ise mighty 'frid you is going, to have to produce my rent this fall."

HONEYMOON SURELY AT END
Brute's Retort Proved That The Arrows of Cupid Must Have Lost Their Sharpness.

Sad it is when the brief story of the honeymoon departs, leaving only the prospect of the endless monotony of ordinary life ahead.

But that was where the Smiths stood. Their honeymoon had soon waned under the stress of modern life. In fact, Mrs. Smith was already adopting the policy of masterly inactivity; even hubby's most loving endearment couldn't get a kind word out of her.

The tiff happened on Wednesday, and lasted till Sunday morning, when he, attired for his usual stroll, asked her:

"What is for dinner today, my dear?"

His suave voice and winning smile earned for him a brief retort. The lady replied with more force than grace:

"Oh, rats!"

But he was not caught unawares. With a sweet smile he countered with the remark:

"Well, don't cook one for me, darling; I think I'll have dinner out!"

Contradiction.
Witness—He looked me straight in the eye and—
Lawyer—There, sir, you're flatly contradicted your former statement.
Witness—How's that?
Lawyer—You said before that he bent his gaze on you. Will you please explain how he could look you straight in the eye with a bent gaze?—London Tit-Bits.

Against Contraband.
"How was it the authorities allowed the sale of the cargo which had been damaged by water?"
"Why shouldn't they allow it?"
"Doesn't the law forbid the sale now of 'wet' goods?"

Natural Infirmity.
"Your untruthful friend seems to be lying low of late."
"I suppose he has to lie some way."

Father and Daughter Get Relief by Eatonic

R. J. Powell, Sweetwater, Texas, says, "Eatonic helped me at once, but it was my daughter who got the marvelous benefits. She could not even take a drink of water without awful misery, but it relieved her; she is feeling much better. All this from one box, so send me four more at once."

Hundreds of people now take eatonic; one or two tablets after each meal keeps them in good health, feeling fine, full of pep. Eatonic simply takes up the excess acidity and poisons and carries them right out of the system. Of course, when the cause of the misery is removed, the sufferer cannot help but get well.

You will find it a quick, sure relief for heartburn, indigestion, sour, acid, gassy, bloated stomach. It costs but a trifle and your druggist will supply you. If you don't feel well, you give eatonic a test. Adv.

SCORE ONE FOR DIPLOMACY
Will Be General Agreement That Little Joe Deserved the Treat He Was Looking For.

Little Joe had been told that he could not go to grandmother's house before the end of the week. And he wished very much to go right away, for grandmother had a new kind of cooky. He coaxed mother, but to no avail, so he decided to try strategy. "Mother," he said sweetly, "when I get to be grown and away from home I'm still a-coming to come back and see you every day."

Mother was delighted. "That will be grand," she said. "I do hope you will remember that promise."

"Yes," Joe was positive, "and if anything should happen that I couldn't come any day I'm going to be sure to send your grandchildren to make up for me, so you'll know I remembered you."

He made the trip to grandmother's house that afternoon.

CHAPTER X—Continued.

"It looks like you were guilty from reading the morning papers," he answered with a grin. "But I don't believe all I read. They've made out a strong case against you, though."

"I didn't do it!" I cried passionately. "If you didn't, who did?"

"It must have been Mr. Wick."

"There you go, jumping at conclusions. Why not Claire Bradford?"

"Why do you mention her? Do you suspect her?"

"If she didn't do it, why did she come down here to see you?"

"How did you know she was here?"

"I was watching you all the time you were talking to her."

"But how did you know who she was?"

"I saw the other one this morning. They look alike."

"But how did you know which sister it was?"

"You didn't seem to get along well enough in your talk for it to be Barbara," he answered with another grin.

It had not been my intention to reveal even to him Claire Bradford's second visit to my apartment, but I saw how foolish it would be of me to attempt to deceive or to withhold any information from such a shrewd observer.

Without reserve and with the utmost detail I proceeded to relate everything that had happened since I had seen him the afternoon before.

I told of my discovery of the secret panel in my room and of the blind passageway into which it apparently led, of Barbara's having made the perilous journey over the window ledge to inspect my find, of the screams we had heard, followed by the shot of how Barbara had died back by the way she came, and I had run downstairs and with Wick had discovered the body.

I told him every detail so far as I could remember it, winding up with my catching Claire Bradford leaving my apartment, just before my arrest and the finding of the revolver.

"You don't think the detectives themselves planted the gun on you?" he asked. "I've heard of them doing things like that."

He spoke with such an air of innocence that I had to smile. I doubt if there were many tricks of detectives that Gorman did not know all about.

"They had no opportunity whatever. Neither of them had been near the dresser before, and I was watching them every moment."

"Well, who did hide the revolver there, if they didn't?"

"I don't know."

"Could Wick have done it?"

"I was with him every moment after we discovered the body."

"Maybe it was Claire Bradford?"

I shook my head.

"I thought at first it might have been she, but I'm convinced since talking with her that it was not. She's either entirely innocent or else the most wonderful actress in the world."

"I think we can leave her out of it," ventured Gorman.

"That leaves only Wick."

Gorman shook his head positively.

"No, Wick didn't do it. He's a bad one all right, and he has done time, but he's only a tool."

"Wick has done time!" I exclaimed. "How did you find that out? What have you learned about him?"

Gorman grinned at my eager questioning.

"I don't know much about him yet, but I'm sure he's an ex-con. While you were in court this morning," he explained, "I went up to the Grand-stand to take a look at things for myself. Wick showed me through the Lutan apartment, thinking I was from the coroner's office. I spotted him at once. A crook that has done time is always sure to give himself away."

"How?" I asked.

"Well," said Gorman judicially, "men's businesses leave their marks on them. A clergyman don't have to be wearing a high vest for you to spot him, and nobody ever took a dancing teacher for a puglist. A man that has looked at as many crooks as I have knows them by instinct, and then there's little ways you can tell. As I was going up to the apartment with Wick he just naturally fell into step with me, showing he had been used to marching with other prisoners. He talks, too, without moving his lips. That's a sure sign. They learn that in prison so they can talk without the guards knowing it."

"That's so," I cried. "It struck me that there was something funny about the way Wick talked, but I couldn't have told just what it was."

"Wick's a crook, all right, but I think he comes from somewhere upstate or maybe out West, but he isn't intelligent enough to be anything more than a runner for the gang."

"Well, what's your theory?" I asked.

"If Wick didn't murder Miss Lutan, who did?"

"I don't know yet. Wick ain't big sport. Big jobs take big men to

I saw there was no use in my thinking further about the passageway. His mind was stubbornly made up that it could not exist. He was the only friend I had in all the great city, and I must leave it to him to work the thing out in his own way.

"What about a lawyer?" I asked. "Didn't the court assign you one?"

"Yes, but he took it for granted that I was guilty, so I got rid of him."

"Well, there ain't much a lawyer could do yet. I'll dig up one when we need him. It'll be no possible in a murder case, so there is nothing for you to do but to sit tight and take it as easy as you can. By the way, have you heard anything from old Gaston since you were arrested?"

"Not a word," I answered. "I have not the least idea where he is or how to reach him."

"Humph, that's funny," said Gorman abstractedly. "Good-by, I'll see you again tomorrow."

He pounded on the cell door, and a guard released him, leaving me alone to ponder over my plight, and especially over his last question. What had he meant by it?

Where was old Rufus Gaston? Once more suspicion of my aged relative shot through my brain. Was it possible that he was the mastermind behind all this plotting? Gorman had insisted that the arch criminal behind Wick and the others must be some man of intellect. My great-uncle Rufus had brains. Out of a clear sky he had summoned me to live in the Granddeck and then had mysteriously disappeared. Certainly he had had opportunities for knowing Wick and the telephone girl. Barbara had recalled once having heard her father speak of him in disparaging terms. Had it been he who was plotting against the Bradfords and had brought me into the case as a scapegoat?

Was old Rufus Gaston the mastermind? Where was he?

CHAPTER XI.

Fortunately for me, there had recently been a wave of public criticism of the courts for the long delays in bringing criminal cases to trial, and the district attorney was moving with all celerity to bring my case to a conclusion.

An indictment against me for the murder of Daisy Lutan had been quickly found and the date had been already set for the trial—one week hence—so that the period of my incarceration and doubt as to my ultimate fate seemed likely to be very brief.

Utterly absurd as the situation was, accused of murdering a woman whom I never had seen and hardly had heard of until I saw her lying dead in her apartment, conscious as I was of my entire innocence in the matter, still, as in the solitude of my cell I reviewed the case, I found myself feeling the ordeal of a trial for murder with considerable apprehension.

Circumstances certainly looked much against me. There was absolutely no way in which I could refute the testimony of the two detectives that they had found the revolver with one chamber discharged in the drawer of my dresser. I myself had seen them find it. While Gorman still held that there was a possibility that they themselves had put it there, I knew that neither of them had been near the dresser after I had admitted them to my rooms. The only person whom I had the slightest ground for suspecting was Claire Bradford, yet what motive could she have had?

Wick undoubtedly would testify that he had met me at the door of the Lutan apartment directly after he had heard the shot. He might say that I appeared to be greatly excited. This would be the exact truth. There was even the possibility that he might swear that the evening before I had taken her out to dinner and had been questioning her about the other tenants in the house. Even though we knew that she was a tool of Wick and was the wife of Lefty Moore, the burglar, unless Gorman was able to discover that she herself had a criminal record, it seemed utterly hopeless to attempt to confute her statements.

It would also militate against me that at the time of the murder I was out of a job and almost without funds. They were likely, too, to bring out the fact that I had been discreditably discharged from the only position I had held in New York. The only man who knew anything about the matter, Mr. Wood, the head of the firm, had been suddenly called to France in connection with an order for munitions, and was not expected to return for several months. The fact would weigh against me, too, that I would be unable to offer the testimony of any character witnesses. Birge and Koller, my classmates with whom I had roomed ever since I had come to New York, were "somewhere in France" with the American troops and could not possibly aid me.

All of this was pointed out to me by John McGregor, a young attorney whom Gorman had employed for me. While Gorman and I had, I think, succeeded in convincing him of my innocence, the fact that he was continually citing the difficulties in the way of our proving it made me realize that he was very dubious as to the outcome.

Each Time I Read Anew the Pencilled Lines My Heart Rejoiced.

tragedy seemed thus far to have escaped my mother's notice and the fact that Barbara still believed in my innocence and trusted me absolutely. A day or two after my arrest Gorman had managed to see her and had told her that it was my wish that she keep entirely quiet her knowledge of the affair and that she should make no attempt whatever to communicate with me while I was in prison. He had brought back with him a hastily pencilled note which often in my cell I read and re-read:

"Dear Mr. Nelson: "I'm so sorry to hear of your trouble and the absurd charges against you. I'll do whatever you wish, of course. I trust you absolutely. If anything I can tell will aid you at any time, I am ready to speak—cost what it may. I know you are innocent and must soon be freed. Hoping to see you.

"With all confidence, "B. H."

Each time I read anew the pencilled lines, my heart rejoiced. Come what may, I felt sure that Barbara's heart was mine. I joyed to know that come out of prison to her though I might, she would be glad to see me. Joyfully would I have gone to the electric chair rather than have her fair name in the least smirched by scandal in trying to defend me. She alone could prove an alibi for me, but no one must ever know it.

What would a scandal-loving world say if the fact became public that she had been alone with me in my apartment near midnight? If only by the sacrifice of her good name could I go free, then let me stay in my cell. Let me even go to the electric chair. I would not have my life at the loss of my beloved's reputation.

One other thing I had kept from my lawyer—my discovery of the passageway between the walls in my great-uncle's apartment. If I could not get Gorman to believe in this secret passage, which I was convinced had some connection with the mysteries and the whisperings at the Granddeck, there was little likelihood that McGregor would believe my tale either. Given one single hour in my quarters at the Granddeck and I would have discovered whether it led and who used it, but once a man is charged with murder, his hands are tied. It was futile for me to mention it again, even to the detective or to my lawyer, until such time as I could show it to them and convince them that I knew what I was talking about.

Facts for Sick Women

Reliable Information. All American women know of the great success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in restoring to health women who suffered from ailments peculiar to their sex, yet there are some who are skeptical and do not realize that all that is claimed for it is absolutely true—if they did, our laboratory would not be half large enough to supply the demand, though today it is the largest in the country used for the manufacture of one particular medicine.

The Facts contained in the following two letters should prove of benefit to many women:

Buffalo, N. Y.—"I suffered with organic inflammation and displacement. When lying I had such pain and bearing down that I was not able to stand up, and it hurt me to walk or go up or down stairs. I was going to a doctor without any result and he said the safest thing would be to have an operation. I met a lady who told me she had saved her life on one time, and it put me in a wonderful condition in a couple of weeks, so I can keep on working. I work in a department store and have to stand on my feet all day and I do not have any more pains. I surely recommend your Vegetable Compound to all my friends and you may use these facts as a testimonial.—Mrs. J. T. Tassan, 820 N. St., Sacramento, Calif.
