

TRAIL OF PIONEER BOYD

Travel in 1834 Was Beseet With Many Hardships and Privations.

Travel in the pioneer days of Michigan was beset with many difficulties as is evidenced by a sketch written by the late Harvey C. Boyd, an old settler in Lima and Sylvan townships, and father of Darwin and Homer H. Boyd, who are still residents of Sylvan township.

The sketch was written for and published in the Boyd family history, from which the following is an extract:

"In the fall of 1834, my father, journey and myself resolved upon a journey to what was called the far west, then a territory, now the State of Michigan. We left our beautiful home in Benton, N. Y., and took the stage from the little village of Geneva, N. Y., in the month of October. The day was quite stormy and continued so until we reached the City of Buffalo, when the weather became cold and pleasant. We ate our supper at what was called the Farmer's Hotel, and then went out to ascertain when the first boat would leave for Detroit. We learned it was the William Merry and the hour of departure was to be nine o'clock that same evening. We soon took our baggage and were soon on board, but found the lake very rough and there was plenty of sea-sickness among the passengers.

At the proper time the boat cast off her hawser and we set sail for Detroit. When off Erie, Pa., one of the boat wheels became partially disabled and we were obliged to run back to Port Ebinaw for repairs—fourteen miles from Buffalo on the Canadian side. Here we cast anchor and kept up steam and passed a quiet Saturday night, with a strong wind blowing from the southwest down the lake. Sunday morning came and the wind had changed to the northwest and the lake was still.

"The Captain finding his fuel short, went ashore and bought some five hundred fence rails and ordered them on board. Monday morning came at last, and found many of the passengers uneasy, when the Captain gave orders to start again, but a short distance out we were obliged to return again. The passengers remained quiet for another night and on Tuesday morning we set sail again and arrived at Erie in the afternoon.

"Upon our arrival at Erie the Captain found our provisions were short, and he ordered the steward to go on shore and purchase more, which he did from the other steamers and boats in the harbor. At this time the wind rose like a hurricane and we were obliged to go into the harbor for safety. We soon made tack and sailed in and came to with our bow off the pier and there made fast. Here we laid for 36 hours before the storm ceased. Then we again started for Detroit reaching there just one hour less than a week after leaving Buffalo, and in the mean time we had suffered the loss of only one meal and that was caused by the dishes not being able to be kept on the table long enough to partake of the food they contained, or had contained.

"We did not stay long in Detroit, but immediately set out for Washtenaw County in Michigan, the place of our destination. We were nine days in reaching Lima (in that county), and then soon left there for the southwest corner of Livingston and the southeast corner of Ingham counties, where we knew of a large tract of government lands that had not been taken up. When we reached there, we were not prepared to buy, but soon fell under the hospitality of Mr. Rogers, an old acquaintance of ours and stayed there all night. The next morning I was up early before day-break, ready to go deer hunting, having brought my trusty rifle all the way from York state for that purpose. Placing the rifle upon my shoulder I set out with the other hunters. I had not gone more than a fourth of a mile when I saw a deer in sight. I soon placed myself in position and as the deer came within range, I raised my rifle and fired. The deer made one or two bounds, stopped short, looked back as I reloaded my rifle, and grasping my hunting knife as the noble animal staggered and fell. I then rushed up and applied the knife to his throat, and with the aid of the other hunters drew him to the trail, and returned in time for breakfast, which to me was a bountiful meal. The news soon spread around the household, and the family came with smiling faces at the thought of a fine piece of venison for the noon day meal.

"As soon as our breakfast was over we yoked up the steers and hitched them to a sled and brought the deer to the house, where we properly dressed it for the family use. After accomplishing this the hunters and I started out again in search of more game. We had not gone far before I saw four ducks coming near, and they alighted in the head of a crooked brook, on the banks of which we were standing, and as they came around the bend, the four were in a straight line toward me. I quickly grasped my rifle, took aim and fired, killing two and wounding the third, thus making meat plenty for the present. I spent the rest of the day in land-viewing.

"The next day we returned to Lima and resolved to buy improved lands. My father bargained for one hundred acres at that place, and eighty acres more about two miles north of the same, and then returned our foot steps toward York State with the intention of selling there (which was down in Benton, N. Y.) and then returned back to Michigan and fulfilled our contract there."

Editor's note—The Boyd's settled first on the farm in Lima now the home of Frank McMillen, and later on the Frank Gramer place, also in Lima, and finally in Sylvan township on the farm now owned by Dr. Lyons.

"HUNGRY—HUNGRY."

Synopsis.—Disappointed because of the seemingly barren outlook of his position as a school teacher in a Canadian town, John Harris determines to leave it, take up land in Manitoba and become a "homesteader." Mary, the girl whom he loves, declares she will accompany him. They are married and set out for the unknown country. They select a homestead, build a house and begin their life work of making the prairie fertile farm land. Returning from selling his first crop, Harris finds his wife despondent almost to insanity from loneliness and with the immediate expectation of becoming a mother. A son is born to them, to whom they give the name of Allan. The story now jumps forward twenty-five years. Harris is prosperous and all four getting rich. Mary is still young and saddened over the change in her husband. Allan works with his father. Beulah, the pretty daughter, is rebellious at the school in town like Jim Trevers is an unusual bird man.

CHAPTER IV—Continued.

"Jim," she said, after a while, when the noise of the milking was drowned in the creamy froth, "I'm getting near the end of this kind of thing. Father's getting more and more set on money all the time. He thinks I should have along to pile up more beside what he's got already, but I'm not going to do it much longer. I'm not afraid of work, or hardship either. I'd live in a shack if I had to, I'd—"

"Would you live in a shack?" said Jim. She shot a quick look at him. But he was quietly sniffing into his milk pail, and she decided to treat his question impersonally. "Yes, I'd live in a shack, too, if I had to. I put in my first years in a farmhouse, and there was more real happiness romping up and down the land than there is now. In those days everybody was so poor that money didn't count. . . . It's different now."

Jim did not pursue the subject, and the milking was completed in silence. Jim finished first, and presently the rising hum of the cream separator was heard from the kitchen.

"There he goes, winding his arm off—for me," said the girl, as she rose from the last row. "Poor Jim—I wish I knew whether it's just human kindness makes him do it, or whether—" She stopped, coloring a little over the thought that had almost escaped into words.

When the heavy grind of the separator was finished Jim went quietly to his own room, but the girl put on a clean dress and walked out through the garden. At the lower gate she stopped to pick a flower, which she held for a moment to her face; then, looking lightly with it in her fingers, she slipped the latch and continued along the path leading down into the ravine. To the right lay the bench where the farmhouse had stood, not so much as a mound now marking the spot; but the thoughts of the girl turned yearningly to it, and to the days of the lonely but not unhappy childhood which it had sheltered.

Presently she reached the water, and her quick ear caught the sound of a trucknet slipping gently into the stream from the reeds on the opposite bank; she could see the widening wake where he played his swift way across the pond. Then her own figure stood up before her, graceful and lithe as the willows on the bank. She surveyed it a minute, then flicked the flower at her face in the water, and turned slowly homeward. She was not unhappy, but a dull sense of loss oppressed her—a sense that the world was a very rich and very beautiful, and that she was forgetting neither on its richness nor its beauty. There was a stirring of music and poetry in her soul, but neither music nor poetry found expression. And presently she discovered she was thinking about Jim Trevers.

Her mother sat in the dining room, knitting by the light of the hanging lamp. Her face seemed very pale and lonely in the soft glow. "Don't you think you have done enough?" said the girl, slipping into a sitting posture on the floor by her mother's knee. "You work, work, work, all the time. I suppose they'll have to let you work in heaven."

"We value our work more as we grow older," said the mother. "It helps to keep us from thinking." "There you go!" exclaimed the girl; but there was a tenderness in her voice. "Worrying again. I wish they'd stay home for a change." The mother patted her needles in silence. "Slip away to bed, Beulah," she said at length. "I will wait up for a while."

Late in the night the girl heard heavy footsteps in the kitchen and bursts of loud but indistinct talking.

CHAPTER V.

Notwithstanding Harris' late hours the household was early next the following morning. At five o'clock Jim asked Beulah, as the two women busied themselves with the morning work in the kitchen.

"Say, Jim, honestly, what makes you do it?"

"Dear knows," said her mother, wearily. "I hope he doesn't take it in his head to go out there, too."

"Who, Dad? Oh, he wouldn't do that. His heart's quite wrapped up in the farm here. I wish he'd mow up a bit and let it peek out at times."

"I'm not so sure. I'm beginning to think it's the money that's in the farm your father's heart is set on. If the money was to be made somewhere else his heart would soon shift. Here I've stayed and saved until I'm an—old woman, and what better are we for it? We've better things to eat and more things to wear and a bigger house to keep clean, and your father thinks we ought to be satisfied. But he isn't satisfied himself. He's shoving harder than ever, and now he's got this notion about going West. Oh, you'll see it will come to that. He knows our life isn't complete, and he thinks more money will complete it. All the experience of twenty years hasn't taught him any better."

Beulah stood aghast at this outburst, and when her mother paused and looked at her, and she saw the unbidden welts of water gathering in the tender eyes, the girl could no longer restrain herself. With a cry she flung her arms about her mother's neck, and for a few moments the two forgot their habitual restraint and were but naked souls mingling together.

"Your father is hungry," said the mother. "Hungry—hungry, and he thinks that more land, more money, more success, will fill him. And in the meantime he's forgetting the things that would satisfy—the love that was ours, the little dove—Oh, child, what am I saying? What an unfaithful creature I am! You must forget, Beulah, you must forget these words—words of shame they are!"

"The shame is his," declared the girl, defiantly, "and I won't stand this nonsense about homesteading again—I just won't stand it. If he says anything more about it I'll—I'll fly off, that's what I'll do. And I've a few remarks for him about Riles that won't keep much longer. The old budget—he's at the bottom of all this."

"You mustn't quarrel with your father, dearie, you mustn't do that." "I'm not going to quarrel with him, but I'm going to say some things that need saying. And if it comes to a showdown, and he must go—well, he must, but you and I will stay with the old farm, won't we, mother?"

"There, there now," the mother said, gently stroking her daughter's hair. "Let us forget this, and remember how much we have to be thankful for. We have our health, and our home, and the bright sunshine, and—I declare," she interrupted, catching a glimpse of something through the window, "if the cows haven't broken from the lower pasture and are all through the outfield! You'll have to take Collie and get them back, somehow, or bring them up to the corral."

Pulling a sun-bonnet upon her head Beulah called the dog, which came leaping upon her with boisterous affection, and hurried down the path to the field where the cows stood almost lost in a jungle of green oats. She soon located the breach in the fence and, with the help of the dog, quickly turned the cows toward it. But since! Just as victory seemed assured a rabbit was frightened from its hiding-place in the green oats and sailed forth in graceful bounds across the pasture. The dog, of course, concluded that the capture of the rabbit was of much more vital importance to the Harris homestead than driving any number of stupid cattle, and darted across the field in pursuit, vanishing his breath in sharp, eager yelps as he went. Whereupon the cows turned outward again, not boisterously nor insolently, but with a calm persistence that steadily wore out the girl's strength and patience. She was in no joyous mood at best, and the pervasiveness of things aggravated her beyond endurance. Her callings to the cattle became more and more mournful, and presently ended in a sob.

"There, now, Beulah, don't worry; we will have them in a minute," said a quiet voice, and looking about she found Jim almost at her elbow, his sun-bonnet smiling playfully about his white teeth. "I was down at the creek filling the tank when I saw you had a little rebellion on your hands, and I thought re-enforcements might be in order."

"You might've hollered farther back," she said, half reproachfully, but there was a light of appreciation in her eye when she dared raise it toward him. "I'm afraid I was beginning to be very—foolish."

She tripped again on the treacherous buckboard, but he held her arm in a strong grasp against which the weight of her slim figure seemed but as a feather blown against a wall. Then they set about their task, but the sober-eyed cows had no thought of being easily deprived of their feast, and it was some time before they were all turned back into the pasture and the fence temporarily repaired behind them.

"I can't thank you enough," Beulah was saying. "You just keep piling one kindness on top of another. Say, Jim, honest, what makes you do it?"

But at that moment the keen blast of an engine whistle came cutting through the air—a long clear note, followed by a series of toots in rapid succession.

"I guess they're running short of water," said Jim. "I must bustle." So saying he ran to the ford of the creek where the tank-wagon was still standing, and in a minute his strong frame was swaying back and forth to the rhythmic clanking of the pump.

Meanwhile other things were transpiring. Harris had returned from town the night before with the fixed intention of paying an early visit to the Farther West. He and Riles had spent more time than they should breasting the village bar, while the latter drew a picture of rising color of the possibilities which the new lands afforded. Harris was not a man who abused himself with liquor, and Riles, too, rarely forgot that indulgence was expensive, and had to be paid for in cash. Moreover, Allan occasioned his father some uneasiness. He was young, and had not yet learned the self-control to be expected in later life. More than once of late Allan had crossed the boundary of modernity and John Harris was by no means indifferent to the welfare of his only son. Indeed, the bond between the two was so real and so intense that Harris had never been able to bring himself to contemplate their separation, and the boy had not even so much as thought of establishing a home of his own. The idea of homesteading together assured further years of close relationship between father and son, and the younger man felt in wholehearted with it.

But Jim smiled and said: "No accident at all, I have merely decided to go home—standing."

STILL KEEN ON AIR TRAFFIC

Germany Actively at Work Building Airships—Monster Zeppelin Said to Be in Contemplation.

A few weeks ago Germany delivered a brand-new Zeppelin, the largest yet built, to France and another new Zeppelin to Great Britain. Yet we are told by the Airplane that Herr Cossmann, the director general of the Zeppelin interests, recently returned from the United States after negotiating with certain firms regarding transatlantic air traffic. Negotiations have also been carried on with Holland, Sweden and the United States for the construction of airships on an international basis. It is rumored that a new type Zeppelin airship, with a load capacity of 60 tons, accommodation for 500 passengers and fuel capacity for a voyage three times the length of the Atlantic crossing is to be evolved.—Scientific American.

THIS GRAIN TRULY "GOLDEN"

How Discovery of Prolific Gold Field Was Made in Mysore, State of India.

One of the world's most prolific gold fields at the present time is in the Kolar district (Mysore state) of India. Discovery of it was made in a curious way. In prosperous years, when the gods favored the valley with an ample harvest of rice, grains of gold were found now and then on rice ears. This greatly mystified the natives, who ascribed the gold to supernatural powers. What probably happened was that these grains, derived from the gravelly soil, lodged on the young rice plants when they were being grown in nurseries (for subsequent transplantation to the fields) and hoarded at intervals with water.

The strange occurrence, at first deemed supernatural, led to the discovery that the gravels of the valley were rich in gold, brought down from the mountains. Since then the Kolar district has contributed largely to the world's supply of the yellow metal.

Unusual Styles in Negligees

A Gaudy many women have the dramatic instinct that makes them enjoy masquerading in unusual styles, some of which are commended from remote countries and some of them original or even bizarre creations which find inspiration near home. Fabrics, passing whims of fashion, and current events lend a hand in the evolution of the latter and occasionally the garb of other lands is worked out in the fabrics of our own country, and more or less modified to suit ourselves. There is just one place where the woman of good taste in dress can afford to indulge her whims and fancies to her heart's content, and that is within the four walls of home.

Very definitely borrowed from the Orient in its style, the distinctive garment at the right of the picture above, is fashioned of a purely American "Standard" brocade and plain satin. The designer has accomplished a unique pantalon effect in the satin and an odd and graceful drapery of the brocade.

The negligee at the left is a brilliant affair in which a material known as Pan Ondulay—a heavy crepe-like silk—is simply draped. One arm is covered with the most ample of sleeves and the other is uncovered. A wide sash of plain satin ribbon goes over the shoulder and a twisted girdle of it makes a luxurious rope in effect. White glass beads in a wide lattice pattern, add a frosty glitter. All this glitter of beads and sheen of silk makes the monstrous and sinister looking spider, embroidered in black beads, a horribly fascinating beastie. He seizes and holds the attention as if it were caught in his web, and that is what he was put there for. His presence might be dispensed with, for this is a quite practical style in negligees which was originally designed for exhibition purposes—hence the spider.

Dinner and Dance Frocks

SOME fabrics are so decorative in themselves that the plainest they are made up the better the effect. They cannot be made the background for embellishment and must play the star role themselves. Such a fabric appears in the skirt of the dinner dress, which makes a handsome dance frock as well, that is portrayed above. One of those heavy, crepe, two-toned silks, that are so highly lustrous and so supple, was chosen for the full round skirt, that has its fullness disposed of at the waist line in deep, free plaits at the front and back.

Plain satin seems to be always chosen when another fabric must be combined with these two-toned silks, and plain satin it is in the case of the bodice for this dress. The satin is chosen in one of the two colors represented in the skirt. Imagine this skirt in sapphire or bright navy blue and henna, in which case the bodice would be in matching blue satin. Or, in black and green, the bodice in black—in turquoise and American beauty—with the bodice in turquoise. The bodice is cut surplice fashion and extended into long sash ends that tie in a bow at the left side, one end hanging half way down the skirt and the other a little below its hem.

The bodice might employ one of the crepe weaves of silk, corresponding with the skirt, in a solid color, instead of satin. Its edges at the neck and front are outlined with a narrow tinsel and silk border of embroidery. To place it in the class of the gorgeous skirt its creator has worked out an embroidered motif in tinsel and silk that finds place on the left shoulder and over the right bust. It appears also on the long sash end. These handsome embroidered motifs dash off the frock with an important chic touch. For evening there are very pretty metallic lace dance caps to be worn with such frocks.

DETROIT LADY SAYS HYPO-COD IS GREAT

Made Me Feel Twenty Years Younger—I Feel Fine Now.

STOPPED NERVOUSNESS

"For about eighteen months I was in a rundown, nervous condition and tried about everything on earth with no results until I took Earle's Hypo-Cod. No wonder I gladly endorse this tonic when I can. I felt drowsy, sleepy and bad and yet after getting into bed I couldn't get to sleep. I'd toss and roll half the night. My appetite was poor. My strength had vanished and I was in poor health all around. Lots of things would upset my stomach and I was right much discouraged. A friend had taken it with good results so I started and now—Well to make a long story short—I think it is great. I feel twenty years younger. Eat great big meals and sleep nights as well as I ever did in my life. I never dreamed anything in the world could do so much good in such a short time. I recommend Earle's Hypo-Cod all over the neighborhood," declared Mrs. Ida Wright, 11 Manson Ave., Detroit, Mich.

Weak, frail, nervous people should not go through the winter in that condition if it is possible for them to build themselves up with a good tonic. They are almost sure to have colds, coughs and winter ills even if they do not really become sick ahead.

Drop in at the drug store tonight and ask your druggist about this new tonic, read the formula on bottle. Druggists, chemists and experts assert that it is an ideal tonic and builder. Take home a bottle and see how nicely it does the work.—Adm.

Women of Middle Age

Owing to modern methods of living not one woman in a thousand approaches this perfectly natural change in her life without experiencing a train of very annoying and sometimes painful symptoms. Those dreadful hot flashes, smothering spells, fainting spells, nervous troubles and irregularities are symptoms that should have prompt attention. These two letters prove what a successful remedy Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is for women at this time of life.

These Two Women Helped During Change of Life.

Taunton, Mass.—"I could not eat or sleep for six months, had fainting spells and could not walk without help for three months, caused by female trouble. My cousin, who was a doctor, told me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it helped me greatly. Then during the Change of Life I used the same remedy. I am seventy years old now and am able to do my own housework and walk one mile to church every Sunday morning and evening. I am recommending the Vegetable Compound to my friends having the same troubles as I had. Your remedy is the best on earth. I cannot find words to express my gratitude for it."—Mrs. Susan C. Staples, 157 B School St., Taunton, Mass.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"I want to let you know what good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done me. I had organic troubles and am going through the Change of Life. I was taken with a pain in my side and a bad headache. I could not lie down, could not eat or sleep. I suffered something terrible and the doctor's medicine did me no good at all—my pains got worse instead of better. I began taking the Vegetable Compound and felt a change from the first. Now I feel fine and advise any one going through the Change of Life to try it, for it cured me after I had given up all hopes of getting better. I will tell any one who writes to me the good it has done me."—Mrs. Margaret Danz, 743 N. 26th St., Philadelphia, Pa.

ORIGINATED IN DAINTY VERSE

Expression That Is Considered Slightly Vulgar Today Traced to Poet Cowper.

Some of the crudest expressions in the English tongue had their origin in poetry, and even religious commands. Among these the phrase, "to go the whole hog," is a striking example. Today it is looked upon as a vulgarity. Yet the words were obtained directly from a poem by Cowper, whose title is the pretty term, "Love of the World Reproved." The poem is the versifying of an Arabian story that seems well founded in fact. Mohammed in giving forth his laws declared that a certain part of the pig should not be eaten, but he forgot to mention just what part it was that he thought unclean. His followers, to make sure of not violating his commands, debarred the whole pig. As there were many, however, who were deeply fond of pork, they met and agreed that one would eat the steaks, one the chops, one the feet, and so on, until the whole pig had been eaten, and thus but one of the fenslers could be made to suffer for the sin. As Cowper says: "They thought it hard from the whole pig to be debarred," and adds: "With sophistry, their sauce they sweeten, till quite from tail to snout, 'tis eaten."

Lucky is the woman who can tell a lie when she hears it.

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It

Applicants for Insurance Often Rejected.

Judging from reports from druggists who are constantly in direct touch with the public, there is one preparation that has been very successful in overcoming these conditions. The mild and healing influence of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its remarkable record of success.

An examining physician for one of the prominent Life Insurance Companies, in an interview on the subject, made the astonishing statement that one reason why so many applicants for insurance are rejected is because kidney trouble is so common to the American people, and the large majority of those whose applications are declined do not even suspect that they have the disease. It is on sale at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes, medium and large.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing be sure and mention this paper.—Adm.

HE NEEDED NO INTERPRETER

Up-to-Dateness of Chinese Official Rather Surprised This Pittsburgh Banker.

A banker who had visited China several times on important financial missions thinks the "heavenly Chinese" is not only intelligent but that he has a delicate sense of humor, as well. He tells this one on himself:

"I called on an important Chinese official for a conference and, supposing he knew no more of English than I did Chinese, I took an interpreter. When we arrived at the office of the official I told my business to the interpreter, expecting him to translate my statement to the Chinaman and then to repeat the reply to me in English. However, I had hardly finished speaking to the interpreter when the Chinaman, with a humorous twinkle in his eyes leaned over and said to me, in perfect English: 'Mr. Jones, please tell me who is pitching for Pittsburgh this year.'—Wall Street Journal.

The Inquisitive Mind.

"When this man arrives," said the earnest orator, "we may expect glad times with all our wishes gratified."

"Who's he talking about, father?" asked the boy who is large for his age; "the candidate, or Santa Claus?"

"Reds" Win S. S. Contest.

The Sunday school contest, which has been continuing for the past three months, came to a close November 7th. During the time the attendance has doubled, many new members have been added, and interest in various lines has been shown. Members worked faithfully, giving musical and literary numbers, memorizing chapters from the Bible, answering correctly the assigned questions. One marked characteristic of the contest has been the increased familiarity with the Bible. A showing of Bibles always shows above 90% of the members carrying them. There was no breathless silence when the final decision was announced on Sunday for the victory of the "Reds" had been secured for several weeks; however, the "Blues" had endeavored to make as good a showing as possible even the air of expectancy was lacking, the spirit of good feeling on both sides kept the winners humble and the losers cheerful. The final score was "Blues" 1920, "Reds" 2118. The date for the contest banquet has been set for November 26th.

Sunday, November 12th; public service at 10:30, Rev. W. H. Harris will preach. Sunday school at 12. The first three questions of the special questions will be asked. A verse reading contest will follow. There will be special musical numbers.
