

WILL KEEP ROADS OPEN

Chelsea Will Not Benefit Much By The Plans For Road Opening This Winter.

The county road commissioners plan to keep approximately 150 miles of county roads open and clear of snow this winter, extending only as far west from Ann Arbor as Dexter, so that Chelsea will be seven miles from an "open" road and will not get much benefit from the work this winter. When the Territorial road is completed we will have a year around road, at least east and west.

Regarding the work this winter, J. J. Cox, county road engineer, said Saturday.

"We will employ the usual methods for clearance, that is, tractors, scrapers and trucks with plows affixed. We believe that this will enable us to keep all of our county roads open throughout the winter, and special work will be placed on the following county roads: Ann Arbor to Whitmore Lake; Dexter to Ann Arbor; Ann Arbor to Ypsilanti; Ypsilanti to the county line; Chicago road from Ypsilanti to Clinton; Saline west through Manchester to the county line; the road south of Ypsilanti to Whittaker; Packard road to Ypsilanti; the Pontiac road to Ann Arbor; and the Salem-Ann Arbor road.

"Aside for the problem of keeping the roads open to traffic, another utilitarian purpose is served. Snow removal will reduce materially highway maintenance expense. With the first snow fall the driver evinces a tendency to follow in the tracks ahead. When the first freeze comes these ruts are deepened, and as a result only a small portion of the highway bears the brunt of the traffic for days and weeks.

"The constant strain causes cracks in the paving, brick, concrete or other material, and the melting ice in the spring reveals two long ragged lines of broken highway, which frequently require the rebuilding of virtually the entire width."

HUNT RABBITS WITH HAMMER.

Two Lima township school boys have developed a system of hunting rabbits whereby a hammer is their only weapon—plus their skill in stalking the game and in using the hammer. The system, as explained to us, is that after locating the game, one boy takes the hammer and goes around the rabbits to a point well ahead of them. The other boy then moves forward driving the game ahead of him and towards the first boy and as the rabbits run by the lad with the hammer, he throws it with such accuracy that he usually gets the game, at least one, some times two rabbits. It doesn't sound very efficient, but we do know that these two lads recently went out and cut a Christmas tree and killed two rabbits, as described above, in less than an hour's time.

WHAT ARE VITAMINES?

Frequent Question That Is Answered Best By What They Do.

"What are vitamins?"

This is a question asked repeatedly since the importance of these compounds in foods has come into prominence, but no definite answer has yet been given. Investigations by scientists at universities, agricultural experiment stations, and institutions for medical research have revealed much information regarding the function of vitamins in body maintenance and building, and the parts of the various foods in which they are to be found.

That vitamins are compounds absolutely essential in the food, in order to maintain the weight of the body and produce growth, has been definitely proved. The lack of vitamins causes deficiency diseases, so named because they are due to lack of something in the diet. Vitamins are present and are needed in such small quantities in the food that chemists have not yet been able to isolate them from the many other compounds which are in foods. For this reason, we know very little of the actual character of vitamins.

Three Types of Vitamins? According to a statement by Dr. Carl O. Johns, formerly in charge of nutrition work in the Bureau of Chemistry, United States Department of Agriculture, vitamins have been classified into three different types depending upon the functions which they have in promoting well-being and growth.

The first type is known as water-soluble vitamins, and these are necessary in order to obtain growth from food. Lack of these causes beri-beri, which manifests itself by disease of the nervous system and by other symptoms. These vitamins are found in seeds, in green plants, in certain bulbs and fleshy roots and fruits, and in milk and eggs, as well as in certain organs in the animal body. The seeds referred to include beans, nuts, and the various cereal grains. When cereals are very highly milled in order to obtain a very white flour, a large part of the vitamins may be removed. Vitamins are lost, also, when rice is polished in order to remove the outer layers which contain the most vitamins. It is for this reason that a diet consisting mainly of polished rice may cause beri-beri, while unpolished rice does not cause this disease.

The second type is known as fat-soluble vitamins and these are found in butter, eggs, milk, and in certain animal organs such as the heart, kidneys, and liver, and to some extent in other fats as well as in green vegetables. They exist, also, in smaller quantities in certain seeds. When fat soluble vitamins are absent from the diet, animals and man are subject to a disease of the eyes, which appears to be related to xerophthalmia and which, if prolonged, may produce blindness.

Best Source in Vegetables. The third type is known as antiscorbutic vitamins—that is, those which prevent scurvy, which manifests itself by disease of the bones as well as in other ways. These vitamins are found in oranges, grapefruit, lemons, and other citrus fruits, and in green vegetables, such as tomatoes, spinach, and lettuce, and in eggs and raw milk. The drying of vegetables frequently destroys the activity of the antiscorbutic vitamins. The best source of vitamins in the leafy parts of vegetables, and is one of the reasons why spinach, lettuce, and cabbage are valuable foods.

The usual Friday's edition of the Tribune will be omitted this week, in order that the office force may enjoy the Christmas holiday, which would be impossible were we to issue the regular number of papers. The decision to omit the Friday issue rather than that of the following Tuesday was influenced by the fact that the mails are now crowded with Christmas parcels and will be less congested by next Tuesday.

JOHN F. WALTRONS.

John F. Waltrons, prominent farmer, citizen, and president of the Farmers & Merchants bank of Chelsea since its organization in 1908, died Sunday, December 19, 1920, at his farm home in Lima township, following a long and painful illness. He was 74 years, six months and 19 days of age.

Mr. Waltrons was born in Athens county, Ohio, May 30, 1846. When only 10 years of age he was bereft of a father's care, his mother being left in straitened circumstances with six dependent children, and John, the eldest, was sent out into the world to make his own living.

He came to the home of his grandfather in Sharon township, Michigan, and was hired out to work on a farm, but soon returned to Ohio. After two years, he returned to Michigan and had since made his home in this vicinity. February 27, 1864, he enlisted in Co. H 10th Michigan Cavalry, and served until the end of the Civil war. Mr. Waltrons was united in marriage with Miss Ada E. Jewett of Lima, October 21, 1869, and came to the old Jewett homestead, which has been his home for over 50 years.

He was a member of the Congregational church of Chelsea, and had the distinction of being the oldest member of Olive Lodge F. & A. M., having been made a Mason in 1870. He was a member of the Royal Arch Masons, Ann Arbor Commandery No. 19, K. T.; Moslem temple of Detroit; and of the O. E. S. of this place. He was an active member of R. F. Carpenter Post G. A. R., of Chelsea, and for many years was post commander.

His widow, one son, Roland B. Waltrons of Sylvan, and one granddaughter, Miss Rowena Waltrons, are left to mourn their loss.

The funeral was held from the home this afternoon at 1:30 o'clock. Rev. P. W. Dierberger conducting the service. Interment at Vermont cemetery, Sylvan.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS

Brief Items of Interest in Chelsea And Vicinity, From Nearby Towns and Localities.

LAKELAND—The postoffice here has been discontinued. Patrons of the office now get their mail from Hamburg.

YPSILANTI—Fire, starting from the furnace of the State Normal college heating plant about four o'clock Saturday morning partially destroyed that building, the damage being estimated at between $5,000 and $10,000. Repairs will be rushed so that the college will reopen as usual after the holidays.

MANCHESTER—The new chemical apparatus ordered some time ago by the common council, has arrived, and though it has not been given a thorough try-out, looks fit for the use intended. It is a double-tank machine mounted on a Ford truck chassis and is equipped with ladders, hand extinguishers, buckets, etc., also, and has room for carrying 1,000 feet of standard fire hose.—Enterprise.

PINCKNEY—The fire engine has arrived and a demonstration of its work was given Wednesday. The hose was stretched from the pond to Main street and a good strong stream of water was thrown. It is expected that the work of putting in the reservoirs in different parts of the town will begin soon and then the town will be ready to accept the lower fire insurance rates that we will have with good fire protection.—Dispatch.

CLINTON—This village was visited by burglars Tuesday night, the clothing store of Westgate, Condra & Company being the victim. The quick efficient work of the thieves showed them to be experts at the job. A small hole was cut in the glass of the south window so that the catch could be turned, then it was easy to raise the window, crawl in and get busy packing the loot. Among the things taken were several suits, overcoats, lots of shirts, sweaters, three suit cases, two dozen hats, one bathrobe, besides a lot of small articles.—Local.

The Homesteader

By ROBERT J. C. STEAD

"I have tried," said Harris, "and it's no use. She's got those notions like Dutch-quilting work, and twilights and sunsets and all that kind of thing. There's no use talking with her; reason don't count for anything."

"I suppose you know best," he answered, "but it seems—hang it, it's against all reason that you two—that this should happen."

"Of course it is. That's what I said a minute ago. But reason don't count just now. But you have your ink with her, and give her any help you can if she wants 't get away at once."

Allan found his mother in her room, packing a trunk and gently weeping into it. He laid his hand upon her, and presently he found her work-worn frame resting in his strong arms.

"You're not going to leave us, mother, are you?" he said. "You wouldn't do that?"

"Not if it could be helped. Allan, but there's to help. Your father has set his heart on more land, and more work, and giving up this home, and I might as well go first as last. More and more he is giving his love to work instead of to his family. Perhaps when I am away for a while he'll come to himself. That's our only hope."

The boy stood helpless in this condition. He knew something of the depth of the nature of his parents, and he knew that beneath an unobtrusive exterior they cherished in secret a love proportionate to the strength of their character.

So he comforted his mother with such words as he could. Loyalty to his father forbade laying any of the blame on those shoulders, and to blame his mother was unthinkable; so with unconscious wisdom he spoke not of blame at all.

"Of course, while we are away, why shouldn't you have a visit?" he said. "Here you have been chained down to this farm ever since I can remember, and before. And then, when I get settled on my own homestead, you'll come and keep house for me, won't you?"

"You're sure you'll want me?" she asked, greatly comforted by his mood. "Perhaps you'll be getting your own homestead, too."

Ribes took the suggestion of a few days' delay with poor grace. "Yes, an' while you're chusing up an' down for a housekeeper the Yankies get all the homesteads. They're countin' in right now by the train load, grabbin' up everythin' in sight. We'll monkey round here till the summer's over, an' then go out an' get a sand farm, or something like. Couldn't you wife do her visitin' no other time?"

"I'll tell you, Ribes," said Harris, who had no desire to pursue a topic which might lead him into deep water, "you go ahead out and get the lay of the land, and I'll follow you within a week. I'll do that, for sure, and I'll stand part of your expenses for going ahead, sooth' you will be kind of representin' me."

The last touch was a stroke of diplomacy. The suggestion that Harris should pay part of his expenses swept away Ribes' bad humor, and he agreed to go on the date originally planned, and got what he called "a bed on the easy money," while Harris completed his arrangements at home.

When Harris returned home the next forenoon he found that Mary had already left for Plainville. He sat down and tried to think, but the house was very quiet, and the silence oppressed him.

As fate would have it, Ribes selected as the base of his homestead operations the very foothill town to which Deulah Harris had come a few weeks before. He sought out the cheapest hotel, and having thrown his few belongings on the bed, betook himself to the bar room, which seemed the chief center of activity, not only of the hotel itself, but of the little town.

Ribes debated with himself whether the occasion justified the expenditure of 10 cents for a drink when a hand was placed on his shoulder, and a voice said, "Have one with me, neighbor." He found himself addressed by a man of about his own age, shorter and somewhat lighter of frame and with a growing hint of coquetry.

"You're lookin' for land?" inquired the stranger, when both were leaning easily next to each other. "Well, maybe I am, and maybe I ain't," said Ribes guardedly. He had heard something of the ways of confidence men and was determined not to be taken for an easy mark.

"A man of some judgment I see," said his new acquaintance, quite unabashed. "Well, I don't blame you for keepin' your own counsel. The rash of people and money into the West has brought all kinds of boaters in its train. Why—with growin' confidence—the other night—"

What happened the other night remained un told, for at that moment came a clattering of horse's hoofs on the wooden walk at the door, and a moment later a gayly arrayed cowboy rode right into the room, his horse prancing and bounding from side to side to clear the crowd away, then turning up to the bar as though it were his manger. Ribes expected trouble, and was surprised when the feet evoked a cheer from the bystanders.

"That's Horsa-bach, George," said the man in the pepper-and-salt. "They say he sleeps on his back. Ribes right into a bar as a matter of course, and maybe shoots a few bottles off the shelves—as a demonstration to fore he goes out. But he always settles, and nobody minds his little peculiarities."

"Who's there?" he demanded. "Gentleman to see Mr. Ribes," said the porter.

"Well, shoot 'im in. The door ain't locked," said Ribes. In considerable wonderment as to who his visitor might be.

The door opened, and a well-dressed man of average height, with carefully combed hair and clean-shaven face, save for a light mustache, stood revealed in the uncertain glow of the match with which Ribes was endeavoring to find his lamp.

"Hello, Hiram," he said quietly. "Well, if it ain't Gardiner! He exclaimed.

"You didn't figure on seeing me here, did you?" At first glance Ribes did not recognize him, and he raised the oil lamp to turn the light better on the stranger's face.

"Well, if it ain't Gardiner!" he exclaimed. "Where in Sam Hill did you come from?"

"It's a big country, Hiram," he said with a touch of bitterness, "but not big enough for a fellow to lose himself in." He sat down on the side of the bed and lit a cigar, tendering another to Ribes, and the two men puffed in silence for a few minutes.

"Yes, I've lit a lot of trail since I saw you last," he continued, "and when you're in the shadow of the Rockies you're a long piece from Plainville. How's the old buzz? Dead as ever?"

"About the same," said Ribes. "You don't seem 't be wuth' no love on it." "Nothing to speak of," said the other, stolidly flicking the ash from his cigar. "Nothing to speak of. You know I got a raw deal these Hiram, and it ain't likely I'd get enthusiastic over it."

"Well, when a fellow goes up against the law he has 't clear out," said Ribes with great candor. "That's his funeral. As for me, I ain't got nothin' agen Plainville. You made a little money there yourself, didn't you?"

The first woman to fly from Paris to Morocco, a distance of about 1,100 miles, made the flight in two days.

The Red Hat

By FREDERICK HART

The hat was red—a particularly distressful shade of red. Nellie Bates shuddered as she contemplated herself in the mirror. And the dress—she didn't like it at all. Why, oh, why, if there must be girls on magazine covers, she thought, must they wear such awful clothes? And yet they didn't look so awful when they were transferred to the artist's canvas or printed and smiling from thousands of newspapers.

But while she didn't at all mind posing for these saccharine misses, she did object to wearing clothes which did not harmonize with her appearance.

For Nellie knew particularly well just what did harmonize. She was pretty—there was no denying that—and she had studied herself in the light of the examples she saw around her every day on Fifth Avenue and others avenues. She knew—oh, she knew!

But money was money, and she had not gained her far-famed glory as the model for all the pretty girls on the magazine covers without making artistic sacrifices that cut her to the core. She loathed the hats and the gowns.

They were good-looking enough, in their place, but their place was distinctly not on Nellie. So she thought, and her unusually smiling face reflected her thought as she stepped from the dressing room into the big, airy studio.

Arthur Warren was mixing colors on his palette when she appeared, and he merely looked up with a brief "Good morning, Miss Bates," as she entered.

As impersonal as that! Heavens, thought Nellie, how could he be anything else with that hat in the foreground? Anybody would be impersonal to a hat like that.

Of course, she didn't want him not to be impersonal—certainly not! He was her employer, and she was to pose for him so that he could make thousands and thousands of dollars by selling her counterfeit presentation to editors for the covers of their midsummer numbers.

And he was a gentleman, even if he did have nice eyes. No, that wasn't what she meant; she meant that he did have nice eyes, even if he was a gentleman. What an awful hat! She swept to the model's stand defiantly. It was set with a tea-wagon on which was an entrancing outlay of glittering china and silver. "Tea! It was the fifth time that week she had posed at a tea-wagon. "If all the tea I'm supposed to have drunk," thought Nellie, "were laid end to end it would fill the Atlantic ocean and stop over on the Rocky mountains!" From which it may be deducted that Nellie's ideas were a trifle mixed.

"Ah—Miss Bates—" Arthur Warren's even voice broke in on her jangled thoughts, "will you please move that tea-wagon over toward you a little. There—that's it. Now sit in that big willow chair and offer me a cup of tea. I want to get the position worked out—there! that's good! Can you hold that for a minute?"

Miss Bates could and would. She held the tea out, smiling mechanically; but her grin was a grim of rage.

man of understanding. Also he was no more proof than any of us would have been against the girl's pleadings. He held her in his arms, rocking her to and fro as though she were a tired child, and murmured words of comfort in her ear. Presently she fell asleep, and he laid her on the couch while he rang up a doctor.

"Nervous breakdown," commented the doctor crisply. "Nothing serious, but—must be careful. Lots of rest and outdoor exercise. No work for a while. Diet—" here he launched into a highly technical discussion, to which Warren paid no attention.

Four hours later little Nellie Bates woke to find herself in a wonderful pink room, pinker than any room she had ever imagined. A white-capped nurse was standing by the bed in which Nellie lay, and all around her were flowers. The nurse smiled at her as she opened her eyes, and tipped from manure of low voices outside her door, and then Arthur Warren came into the room, shut the door softly behind him and came to the bedside.

"Where am I?" asked Nellie. "You're at my country place, dear," replied Arthur, "and you're going to stay here till you get well."

Strange to say, neither of them seemed to notice that he had said "dear." Nellie asked another question. "How did I get here?" "You had a nervous breakdown this morning—something about a red hat," replied Warren, "and so I lugged you out here for a while. My aunt, a most estimable lady, is going to stay with you and act as combined head nurse and chaperon. You're all right—a good rest will put you on your feet again. And you shall stay here till you're well."

Nellie looked up at him. He surely had nice eyes, she thought. And he was looking at her and smiling in a queer sort of way—not at all the way he usually looked at her in the studio; and she was suddenly conscious of a desire to say a great many things to him; but all she managed was a feeble moan, as he turned away to leave the room.

At the sound he was back at the bedside like a flash. "Is anything the matter?" he asked anxiously. "Nothing," said Nellie, in a faint voice. "That is—except—how long can I—?" How ridiculous! The words wouldn't seem to get out.

"Yes?" encouraged Warren. "How long can I—stay here?" Arthur Warren hesitated. Then he suddenly sank to his knees beside the bed and caught her hands in his.

"Nellie, dear, you can stay just as long as you want. I didn't know until this morning that I loved you—but I know it now and I've got to tell you. You can stay here just as long as you want."

Nellie drew him down to her. "Oh, Arthur, dear," she murmured, "I think I'd like to stay always."

KREMOLA MAKES THE SKIN BEAUTIFUL.
W. N. U. DETROIT, NO. 52-1920.

WHEN BIRDS OF FASHION FLY SOUTH

IN JANUARY, when our migratory birds of fashion prepare to journey South, the young woman's fancy turns—far from lightly—to thoughts of clothes. She knows that its going to tax her resourcefulness to play up to the wonderful parade of beautiful apparel that is to be found in the show places, and that of all things she cannot afford to look ordinary. And she knows also that money alone cannot solve her problems, although it will go a long way toward doing so.

By way of helping out a little, here are two handsome afternoon frocks that merit approval, and one of them is shown with a hat and veil. This one is made of panne velvet and matching embroidered net—or a net top lace—both very ingeniously draped in a skirt that is made in one with a simple but subtle bodice. One can imagine this in a rich brown or taupe color, or in black, and be sure to fall in love with it in any case.

A corsage at the waistline—a bit of silk frill, ostrich plumes, and a spray of foliage—stray downward over the skirt. The turban is almost covered with sprays of uncurled ostrich plumes that sweep across the hat and droop at the right to the shoulder and are veiled with handsome lace.

The less pretentious dress at the left, of velours, with its very handsome embroidery in self color, need not fear comparisons. There is much careful handwork here on a simply designed and graceful model, and every woman capitulates to such a dress.

It is made up of the elements that spell success and makes an appropriate gown for afternoon or dinner. It is quite equal to supporting a handsome hat, finding itself in the proper company with the best milliner has to offer.

Just Average Hats

TAKING hats "by and large"—just average hats—that are now discharging their responsibility as mid-winter head coverings, we come to the cheerful conclusion that their standards of beauty have advanced, in millinery, as in some other things, Americans were thrown upon their own resources during the war and the effect on designers appears to have been stimulating. They have become more or less self-reliant.

Five hats such as a stroll along the streets of any busy city will reveal on the head of shoppers or prom-naders, are shown here. They include three models made of velvet, one of duvetyne and one of brocade and fur. Ingeniously draped velvet turbans have been, and continue to be, great favorites with women of conservatism and elegant taste. Such a turban appears at the upper left of the picture, with velvet laid in folds across the front, draped over the crown and arranged in a pretty chou at the right with two quills thrust through it. The saucy, small hat with brim sharply upturned, shown next to it is simply covered with velvet and has a most unpretentious sash and bow of narrow ribbon about the crown. Its cheerful conclusion that their standards of beauty have advanced, in millinery, as in some other things, Americans were thrown upon their own resources during the war and the effect on designers appears to have been stimulating. They have become more or less self-reliant.

The rich and handsome hat of gold brocade and seal fur needs no ornament. But hats of this kind often have a handsome jeweled pin thrust in the brim at one side.

IMPROVED ROADS IN INDIANA
Order issued by State Highway Commission Requiring Standardization of Plans.

Uniform road construction is expected throughout Indiana as a result of an order issued by the state highway commission requiring the standardization of road plans and specifications for county highways which are subject to the approval of the commission. The regulation became effective July 1 and covers all county road projects submitted to the commission for approval.

The regulation is similar to the federal order requiring the use of standardized plans and specifications by the state for all roads for which government aid is expected. The action of the commission extends the use of the approved standards to the roads which will be built in Indiana under the provisions of the county unit road law, by which the state shares the cost.

Officials of the commission have compiled the standards for the Indiana roads, which are identical with the requirements made of the state by the federal government. The standards will apply to all county-aid projects proposed under the state highway law, the county unit road law, and the free gravel road law.

Many counties of the state already have adopted the commission standards voluntarily to keep their road construction up to the specifications prescribed by the federal and state engineers.

Members of the commission, in discussing the regulation, declared that it will have the effect of standardizing road construction throughout Indiana.

ROMANS AND GOOD HIGHWAYS

Roads Built Two Thousand Years Ago Are Still in Active Service—How Constructed.

Two thousand years ago the Romans built roads, some of which are still in active service. These roads have lasted through the centuries simply because of their massive construction.

The Romans built four successive courses or layers on the earth subgrade, carefully prepared and drained. First came the statumen or foundation, then the rudus, next the nucleus, and finally the pavimentum or wearing surface, says a writer. The statumen consisted of large flat stones, while the two intervening courses were built of smaller stones laid in lime mortar.

To carry the chariot and packhorse traffic of Roman times, these roads were seemingly ridiculously heavy, yet the wisdom of the builders was amply demonstrated by the 800 years during which the Roman road system formed the backbone of the transportation system of what was the greatest empire of all time.

We can learn a mighty profitable lesson from the Romans, and if we take the lesson to heart now, standing as we do on the threshold of a new highway era, we shall save ourselves much pecuniary sorrow.

HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENT SURE

Both Republican and Democratic Parties Pledged to Assist in Good Roads Development.

Regardless of which party wins out in the presidential election this fall, American motorists can rest assured that highway development will be continued. In their platforms, both the Republican and Democratic parties have placed themselves flatly on record as favoring liberal federal appropriations to assist in good road work.

The definite action of both parties proves conclusively that motor transportation has been recognized as a definite factor in the nation's economic fabric and that everything will be done to utilize its value to the utmost.

THE MODEL GUEST

"MY COUSIN James is coming here to spend a week," announced the landlady, "and I can't say I'm overjoyed. He's the most unsatisfactory visitor I ever saw. You can hardly get a word out of him. He isn't a bit like his brother Jeremiah, who is full of fun, and the best company imaginable."

"Your remarks show how little true greatness is appreciated in a moral family boarding house, where the damages are collected in advance," observed the star boarder. "In my opinion, James is the model visitor. If I had my own household, with a charming bride to pour the imitation coffee, and a vine and figtree in a jardiniere, I'd send a special delivery letter to James, asking him to come and stay for ten years or more."

"There's something restful and soothing about that gifted man. He never bothers anybody. No one has to waste precious moments entertaining him. It isn't necessary to discuss the weather predictions, or dig up a lot of statistics about the crops. In order to make James have a good time, you don't have to show him the old push photograph album, and describe the ancestry of the melancholy affidios whose pictures appear therein. Nearly all visitors are bores, my dear Mrs. Jiggers, because they have to be entertained. Somebody has to sit up with them and thrash out last year's gossip. They have no initiative or referendum. They have no resources of their own. In order to have a pleasant visit, they need help."

"Your cousin James is a man after my own heart. I remember his last visit quite well. He came in the evening, and after supper he took a chair on the porch. Knowing he was a guest, I felt it my duty to entertain him in the conventional way. I dragged my chair close up to his and remarked that it was a pleasant evening, but the presence of a cloud bank in the northwest almost convinced me that there would be rain within twelve hours, in which case, I proceeded, there would be much jubilation among the honest old farmers, whose crops were suffering for moisture.

"James listened to my remarks and then looked at me, in a sad, reproachful way, as though he thought it a shameful thing that imbeciles should be at large, and then he took his chair to the opposite end of the porch without having said a word. I must confess that I felt like a counterfeit kopeck for a few minutes, but the more I considered the matter, the more I admired and respected that remarkable man.

"He used to go downtown every morning and buy a paper backed novel, or a fiction magazine, and then he'd read it all day, and when he was done with his literature he left it where the boarders could get it. I didn't hear him say ten words during his visit, yet you say, Mrs. Jiggers, that he is an unsatisfactory guest. Elderly landladies, whose intellects have been warped by long years of parsimony, are hard to please.

"Jeremiah, whom you describe as jolly and agreeable, should be suppressed. He has collected all the old cheese stories ever manufactured, and insists upon telling them. He has a horrible habit of making puns, and considers himself a humorist, because of it. You couldn't bribe him to sit down with a book or magazine and behave himself. He has to be entertained every minute of his time, and the only way you can entertain him is by letting him do the entertaining.

"He is a genial old fellow who thinks he is a privileged character, and everybody's pet. The last time he was here he went into my sumptuous apartment and used my razor to shave the southeast quarter section of his countenance. His whiskers are full of barbed wire, and the razor was ruined. When I spoke to him about it he thought it funny. Yet you refer to such a man as an agreeable visitor. I blush for you, Mrs. Jiggers."

In Moderation.
"Would you advise a candidate to stay on his front porch?"
"Yes," answered Senator Sorghum; "but only part of the time; just long enough to take care of his voice and get together a good bunch of speeches for delivery on tour."

Just It.
"I thought you said you had a fine ending to your automobile trip." "So I had." "Your chauffeur told me you were arrested for speeding." "Well, wouldn't you call a windup in the police court a fine ending?"

Weighted With a Watch.
The watch of Charles V. which was one of the earliest of these time-pieces, weighed twenty-seven pounds. It was a good deal like a clock of the present day.

A Puzzle.
Billy and Mary stopped in the house next door to see the new talking machine. After they heard a piece or two, Mary started to look it over, and said: "It's not like ours."

Mrs. Case asked: "What kind of machine have you?"

Mary engaged in deep thought. At last she exclaimed: "It's a Scotch collic."

Mrs. Case said: "Why, I never heard tell of that kind of a talking machine."

Billy spoke up, saying: "Mary is always getting things wrong; it's a fox terrier. If you don't think I'm right, Mrs. Case, you go over and look at the picture on it."

Saving Mother.
Two bread rolls were left on the plate, and as it was passed Richard took the largest one.

A troubled conscience immediately caused him to look at his mother, whose stern countenance spoke plainer than words.

"Well, mamma," he said, although not a word had been spoken, "I didn't want you to be the hog."

A Change for Company.
In a North side meat market a woman and her little boy stood at the counter awaiting the preparation of an order of lamb chops. While the cutter was frenching the chops and getting them ready for their little white pants the boy pulled his mother down to whisper into her ear, "Mamma, aren't you going to get some weinies?" "S-s-s, Lawrence," she admonished, "we have to have something different for company."—Publishers' Auxiliary.

The Natural.
"Pop, what do they clean the teeth of a winter gale with?"
"I don't know, unless it is with an ice pick, sonny."

A Fitting Title.
"That rich farmer has a barrel of money."
"Yes; a regular flower barrel."

NEARLY FATAL ACCIDENT

Young Ladies Struck by Train But Escape From Their Wrecked Carriage Unhurt.

Returning from their daily session at the Gorman school in Manchester, Wednesday morning, Misses Helen Steinway and Clara Renaud of Freedom, driving a horse and carriage, were struck by the east-bound train on the Ypsilanti branch at the crossing on Jefferson street just east of the residence of Dr. Lowery, but escaped without much injury.

Approaching the crossing, evidently neither of the girls heard the train until it was upon them. At the scream of the whistle the horse wheeled about and the train caught the rear of the carriage, dragging or pushing it along between the track and the high bank of the cut at that point, the horse making desperate efforts to keep ahead. By the time the train was stopped the carriage was a wreck but the young ladies were found to be unhurt except for a severe fright. The horse had disappeared. Good fortune certainly smiled on the two girls that day. They are daughters of William Steinway and Louis Renaud of Freedom—Esterprise.

O. T. HOOVER NEW POSTMASTER

O. T. Hoover took charge of the Chelsea postoffice yesterday, succeeding Chauncey Hummel, who had held the office for nearly six years, past.

Mr. Hummel took the office March 16, 1915, when it was rated as a "third class" office and the equipment was owned by the postmaster. During his incumbency the office has attained the rank of "second class," and the fixtures are furnished by the person who leases the building to the government. Mr. Hummel and his assistants have given a very satisfactory service, especially when it is remembered that during the recent war many additional duties were added upon the postmasters.

The present postmaster, Mr. Hoover, needs no introduction to the patrons of the Chelsea office as he was postmaster for twelve years and one month previous to Mr. Hummel's incumbency.

The present clerks in the postoffice will continue under Mr. Hoover, and for fifteen days, during the holiday rush, an additional clerk, George Naeckel, will be on duty.

He was a man of unusual intellect and was a former member of the Michigan legislature.

DODGIES LIVED IN MANCHESTER

Probably few, if any citizens of Western Washtenaw county are aware of the fact that Horace E. Dodge, head of the Dodge Brothers Motor company of Detroit, who died at Palm Beach, Florida, and was buried in Woodlawn cemetery, Detroit, Wednesday, was a resident of Manchester when a small boy. His brother, John, who died recently, was a Manchester boy, also. Their parents lived in what was then called Soulesville, but moved from there many years ago.
