

AUTOMOBILE CRASHES
THROUGH THIN ICE

Oscar Bahnmiller Had Mighty Unpleasant Experience At Pleasant Lake, Wednesday Morning.

Oscar Bahnmiller had a mighty unpleasant experience Wednesday morning when he drove his automobile out on the ice at Pleasant Lake, Freedom township, and the machine broke through the thin ice. Fishermen on the lake rescued Mr. Bahnmiller, who was obliged to stand up on the seat of the machine to keep above the water.

Mr. Bahnmiller was going out on the lake to fish and intended to drive out on the ice as others had done, but unfortunately chose a place where the ice cutters had been working only a few days before and where the ice had frozen only a little and was too thin to support the automobile.

The top of the machine is all that showed above the water and it will take considerable effort to recover the car from the lake.

POTATOES GOING UP?

Advising Michigan farmers to hold their potatoes, Daniel Dean, nationally known potato specialist from New York state, predicted an early and decided rise in the wholesale price of tubers in addressing the annual meeting of the Michigan Potato Producers' association in Lansing Tuesday, in connection with the Michigan Agricultural college farmers' week.

Figures showing that there were only about one-seventh more potatoes on hand in the country January 1 than a year ago were presented by Mr. Dean, who based his claim on recently released reports from the federal bureau of markets. Last year the retail price went as high as $4 to $6 a bushel, whereas at the present time potatoes are bringing the producer only a fraction of a dollar.

Mr. and Mrs. Pierce have gone to New York city for their wedding journey, and on their return will be at home after March 1st, at 501 Union street, Jackson.

HARD CIDER IN GRASS LAKE

Alleged Sale to School Boys Results in Investigation and Arrest.

Complaint that Grass Lake high school boys had been sold hard cider caused an investigation by the sheriff's department which resulted in the arrest of Frank McCoy at noon Tuesday. Undersheriff Veri Kutt in company with corporal White of the state police and inspector Van Loomis of the state food and drug department, following a report made by deputy sheriff John Smith of Grass Lake, entered the home of McCoy near the school building and arrested the man on a warrant previously secured.

Accusations are made that others beside McCoy have been engaged in the practice of selling hard cider and wine beyond the legal limit in alcoholic content, to students of the high school and attention has been attracted by the actions of the boys after leaving the place.

WOMEN LEARN TEXTILE TESTING

Special Laboratory Is Demonstrating Simple Methods For Visitors At M. A. C. Woman's Congress.

Simple methods of testing materials, using only the ordinary apparatus a woman has in her own kitchen, and the common household chemicals, such as lye and washing soda, have been demonstrated this week to the women attending the housewives congress at the M. A. C. farmers' week at East Lansing.

Four demonstrations daily, with college students in the home economics division taking part in the work, were given, and housewives at the congress showed keen interest in the results.

Exhibits of wool, cotton, linen, and silk, in the piece and made up into garments, illustrated the differences in material brought out in the demonstrations. Michigan women at the meetings found out interesting facts about what their clothes are made of, and learned, also, to judge materials when they buy.

TELLS HOW SHE OVERCAME COUGH, NERVOUS SPELLS AND INDIGESTION FOLLOWING LONG SPELL SICKNESS

Lungs Were Weak, Coughed Constantly. Food Did Not Digest Well.

DOCTOR SAID TO TAKE HYPO-COD

"My whole system was out of order and I felt weak as a kitten. My stomach was all upset and unable to digest food right. Food would sour and cause me all kinds of trouble. I was a nervous wreck, and added to all my other troubles I had an awful cough and couldn't sleep nights. Friends told me to take Hypo-Cod, so I showed a bottle to my doctor and he said I should keep taking it as it was a very good tonic and because my lungs were weak and nerves were bad. I took it regularly, and I know what a wonderful tonic it is. You have no idea what a wonderful difference it makes in your strength and health. I sleep fine. It strengthened and built me up wonderfully. I have an excellent appetite now. I've felt so good and so well ever since that I guess I've recommended Hypo-Cod to a dozen friends. Hypo-Cod speaks for itself. All you have to do is try it. I'm glad to recommend it to every sick person," declared Mrs. Henrietta Forbes (New street address) 4417 Grandly (old number 285), Detroit, Mich.

FEAR EXTINCTION OF HOLLY

Botanists Say That Within Another Generation It May Be as Rare as the Mistletoe.

Christmas holly, that merriest and most beloved of all growing bushes, is threatened with extinction, according to a warning sounded by lovers of a red Christmas. Once growing profusely in southern New Jersey and Maryland, it has been swept from those states by the ruthless cutters for the city markets, and must now be sought in the swamps of Virginia and North Carolina, where already the supply is growing less beautiful each year. The Gulf states have been similarly shorn to provide holly for New Orleans, St. Louis and Chicago.

Within another generation, botanists say, holly will be as rare as mistletoe, which used to grow in abundance on the Atlantic seaboard as far north as Raritan bay, but has now practically ceased to exist as a Christmas decoration. When will the American people learn that the bounty of their fields and woodlands is not limitless?—New York Tribune.

Glad but Confusing New Year.
"I wish you a happy First of January, Nineteen Hundred and Twenty-one!" exclaimed the person who is genial but precise.

CHAPTER XI—Continued.

"It's all quite easy," Gardiner continued. "And if it should fall there are a dozen other ways just as easy. But we won't let it fall. We mustn't let it fall on your account."

"On my account? What more account than yours?"

"Well, you see, Harris, no doubt, has your letter showed away some where, and it would make bad evidence for you. I don't think it mentions me at all. Besides, I know a way through a pass in these mountains, and if it doesn't turn out right—why, I'm glad I know the way. You see, I've nothing to lose, and nobody to worry over me. But it's different with you, Harris. You have a wife and a fine farm down in Manitoba, and it would be inconvenient for you to slip away without notice. So I say that on your account we mustn't let it fall."

"You didn't say nothing about that before," Harris said.

"You mustn't expect me to do your private thinking as well as that of the firm," Gardiner retorted. "You had the facts—why didn't you patch them together for yourself? You're in a mess now if things don't go right. But, as I said, I'm going to stick with you and see that they do go right."

They rode along in silence in the gathering darkness. Had they been able to read each other's minds they would have been astonished at the coincidence of thought. Gardiner was planning to make away with the money when he got out of the building. Why should he divide with Riles? Riles, who would only hand it on, and who had plenty of money already? Not at all. Riles might use him for his share, if he wanted to—and could find him, to serve notice! On the other hand, Riles' slow wits had quickened to the point of perceiving that there lay before him a chance of making $20,000 instead of $10,000. If he only had the nerve to strike at the strategic moment. When he got the Harrises out of the shack, by hook or crook he would leave them and follow Gardiner. He was much more than Gardiner's match in strength and he had little fear of the revolver, provided he could take his adversary unawares. If the worst came to the worst, and he could not give the Harrises the slip, he would take them with him, and they would all come upon Gardiner red-handed with the loot. Then he would explain to Harris how he had discovered Gardiner's plot and frustrated it. . . . The idea grew upon Riles, and he rode along in a frame of mind bordering upon cheerfulness.

It was now quite dark, and the horses picked their steps carefully along the hill side trails. At last Gardiner drew up and pointed to a heavy clump of trees. A faint glimmer of light shone through it.

"That's the shack," he whispered. "They have a lantern there. We better get off the road and tether our horses in this copse."

They turned down a narrow ravine with scarce room to walk single file between the branching trees. They tied the horses where the woods closed all about them, and there seemed no chance of discovery.

"Quietly, now," said Gardiner, as they stole toward the old building. "Things seem to be working out as we planned, but we must make sure of every detail, so that we can change the attack if necessary."

The two men stole up the rough road leading to the hut. The glow of the lantern came from the building, shining in a long, falling wedge from the sashless window, but seemed strangely obscure about the door. As they approached this mystery was revealed; a blanket was seen to hang over the doorway.

"That's a good sign," whispered Gardiner. "One, or both of them, are sleeping. That's why they feel the cold. If they had stayed awake they would have built a fire and perhaps walked about outside."

They paused for a moment to listen. The night was moonless and starry, except where a bank of clouds came drifting up from the southwest. A moist breeze, swelling of soft, mountain snow, gently stirred the trees about them. But from the shanty no sound could be discerned. They approached nearer, and still nearer.

"Now, you go to the door, and I'll take the window," Gardiner ordered. "Shove the blanket aside a little and size up the situation before you speak. We must make sure they're there, and there alone."

Gardiner waited until he saw Riles fumbling carefully with the blanket that hung in the doorway. Then he darted quickly to the window.

While Allan sat in the little cabin he gradually became oppressed with a sense of great loneliness. From time to time he looked at the face of his sleeping father, and suddenly the shadowy streaks like a knife that cut the face of an old man, Allan could see plainly the deepening furrows in his strong, still handsome face. He looked a vast tenderness mingled with his loneliness; he would have stooped and caressed him had he not feared to disturb his slumbers. He looked upon the sleeping man now, with the wealth of a lifetime's labor at his side, and the bond of trust and confidence between them seemed so tight it brought the moisture to his eyes. He thought of the past years; of their labor on the farm together—hard labor, but always relieved by their comradeship and mutual ambitions.

His memory carried him still further back—back to the days when he was a little child, and in the mirror of the darkness he could see his own small figure trudging in the track of the plow and hanging to the rein ends that dropped from the knot on his father's ample back. Back to the old sod shanty, with its sweet smell of comfort when the snow beat against the little window and the wind roared in the rattling stove pipe, and his mother sat by the fire and piled her dying needles. Old pillows stole into his brain; a deep peace compassed him, and consciousness faded thinner and thinner into the sea of the infinite. . . .

Allan sat up in a sudden, cold chill of terror. Had he been asleep? What cold breath of dread had crossed his path? He was no coward; the sense of fear was almost unknown to him, but now it enveloped him, stifled him, set his teeth chattering and his limbs quaking. He had heard nothing, seen nothing. The gun was in his hands as it had lain when last he remembered it; his father slept by his side, and near the wall lay the precious satchel. And yet he shook in absolute, unreasoning, unfeeling terror.

Allan Sat Up in a Sudden Cold Chill of Terror. Had He Been Asleep?

soning, unfounded terror. His eyes wandered from the lantern to the door—to the blanket hanging limply in the doorway; and there they stared and stayed as though held in the spell of a serpent. Subconsciously, certainly without any direction of will of his own, he raised the shot gun to his shoulder and kept it trained on the sagging blanket. . . . The blanket seemed to move! It swayed at first as though a light breeze had touched it and yet not as though a breeze had touched it. The impulse seemed too far up—about the height of a man's shoulder. The blood had gone from Allan's face; he was as one in a trance, obeying some iron law outside the realm of the will and the reason. He cocked his gun and tightened his finger on the trigger, and watched. . . . And then, so plain that it must have been real, he saw stealthily fingers feeling their way about the blanket.

In an instant he was wide awake, and wondering terribly what had happened. The explosion blew out the lantern, and the building was in utter darkness. His father was clambering to his feet with "Allan, what is it? What is it, Allan?" The blanket had been torn from its hangings as by a heavy weight, and something was writhing in it in the doorway. Allan sprang up and would have rushed upon it, but in the darkness he collided with another man. His fingers found his adversary's arm and ran up to his throat, but before they could fasten in a fatal grip there was another flash of light, and a hot pang stabbed him in the breast. There was a strange gurgling in his lungs, a choking in his throat, a spinning dizziness in his head, as he staggered over the mass in the doorway and fell into the night.

Gardiner had reached the window just in time to see Allan's gun trained on the doorway. For an instant he stood dumbfounded; there was something uncanny in the sight of the young man sitting there in silent, absolute readiness for the attack. He drew back to warn Riles, but he was too late. At that moment the gun spoke; there was the sound of a heavy body falling, and stifled noises bore ample evidence of the accuracy of Allan's aim. But even in that moment of uncertainty Gardiner had not lost thought of their purpose, and his quick eye took in the sleeping form of John Harris and the location of the leather bag beside the wall. Without an instant's hesitation he vaulted through the window and, revolver in hand, began to steel his way softly toward the treasure.

He had not taken three steps when Allan plunged full force into him. He staggered with the shock, but recovered himself only to find the young farmer's strong fingers clutching for his throat. It had been no part of Gardiner's plan that there should be bloodshed in the carrying out of the robbery, but he was a man of quick decision, who accepted conditions as he found them. . . . A slight pressure on the trigger, and Allan fell, clutching the door.

Gardiner regained his sense of location, and slipped silently to the wall. Harris was rushing about the rotten floor in the darkness, crying, "What is it, Allan? For God's sake, what has happened? Are you shot?" and for his own noise he could not hear Gardiner's stealthy movements. Gardiner's hand fell on a log of the wall, and his keen fingers traced their own way along it. Five steps, he judged, and the bag would be at his feet. At the fifth step his toe touched an object on the floor; he leaned over and raised the body in his hand.

By this time his eyes had responded to the intense darkness, and he could discern a square of grayer gloom where the window admitted the night. He moved rapidly and silently toward it, but almost with the last step his foot slipped through a broken spot on the floor, and he staggered and fell. The revolver was thrown from his grasp, but he was able to pitch the bag through the window as he crashed to the floor.

The sound arrested Harris, and before Gardiner could extricate himself the farmer was upon him. At first he seemed to think it was Allan, and felt about in the darkness without attempting to defend himself. This gave Gardiner an opportunity; he was able to clasp his arms about Harris' shins, and with a quick turn of the body, cast his adversary headlong to the floor. At the same moment he freed himself from his entanglement and made another dash for the window.

But Harris, still numbed from his heavy sleep, now realized that some kind of tragedy had occurred, and guessed enough to believe that Allan was a victim. From his prostrate position, with one powerful leg he interrupted Gardiner's flight, and the next moment the two men were rolling on the floor in each other's arms. Harris was much the stronger man of the two, but Gardiner was active and had some skill in wrestling. Besides, Harris had been taken wholly by surprise, and had no idea who his antagonist was, while Gardiner had full knowledge of all the circumstances, and the struggle was less uneven than might have been supposed. Fiercely cursing the luck that had thrown the revolver from his hand, Gardiner sought in the darkness for his adversary's throat, nose, or eyes. Harris, seizing the younger man by the waist, lifted him bodily from the floor and crashed him down again upon it, but the next instant Gardiner had one of his hands in both of his, and bringing his knee down with great force on Harris' elbow, compelled him, at the risk of a broken arm, to turn face downwards on the floor. Gardiner again wrenched violently to break free, but Harris' grip was too much for him, so with the quickness and fury of a tiger he threw himself upon the farmer's back and wrapped his free arm about his throat. With his air partially cut off Harris released the grip of his other hand, and Gardiner instantly took advantage of this move to bring both arms to bear on Harris' throat. Things began to go badly with the farmer; face downwards on the floor, he was unable to shake his adversary off, and was losing strength rapidly with his choking. Gardiner no longer sought an opportunity to break away; his blood was up and he was in the fight to the finish, ruled at last by his heart instead of his head. Had he been content merely to retain his present advantage unconsciousness would soon have overcome his victim, but he tried to improve his grip, and the attempt proved disastrous. His thumb, seeking better vantage, fell into Harris' snoring mouth. Harris was no more depraved than most of mankind, but when fighting for life, and choking to death in the hands of an unknown enemy, he was ready to seize any advantage, and with a great effort he brought his jaws together upon the intruder.

Lake's Peculiar Migration.
Near Valdosta, in Georgia, there is a lake three miles long and three-quarters of a mile wide, with an average depth of twelve feet of water which disappears every three or four years and then comes back again. It disappears into natural subterranean passages, taking two or three weeks in the process and leaving a beautiful sandy basin. After a month or so the water begins to come back, and in a couple of weeks it is the same old lake.

HOW WOMEN AVOID SURGICAL OPERATIONS

Some Are Extremely Necessary, Others May Not Be

Every Woman Should Give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a Trial First

Chicago, Ill.—"I was in bed with a female trouble and inflammation and had four doctors but none of them did me any good. They all said I would have to have an operation. A druggist's wife told me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I took 12 bottles, never missing a dose and at the end of that time I was perfectly well. I have never had occasion to take it again as I have been so well. I have a six room flat and do all my work. My two sisters are taking the Compound upon my recommendation and you may publish my letter. (It is the gospel truth and I will write to any one who wants a personal letter.)—Mrs. E. H. HAYDOCK, 624 St. Lawrence Ave., Chicago, Ill.

A Vermont woman adds her testimony to the long line of those fortunate women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, after it had been decided an operation was necessary:

Burlington, Vt.—"I suffered with female trouble, and had a number of doctors who said that I would never be any better until I had an operation. I was so bad I could hardly walk across the floor and could not do a thing. My sister-in-law induced me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it certainly has helped me wonderfully. I keep house and do my work and have a small child. I have recommended Vegetable Compound to a number of my friends and you may publish my testimonial."—Mrs. H. R. SARON, Apple Tree Point Farm, Burlington, Vt.

In hospitals are many women who are there for surgical operations, and there is nothing a woman dreads more than the thought of an operation, and the long weary months of recovery and restoration to strength if it is successful. It is very true that female troubles may through neglect reach a stage where an operation is the only resource, but most of the commoner ailments, tumors or growths, although the symptoms may appear the same. When disturbing ailments first appear take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to relieve the present distress and prevent more serious troubles. In fact, many letters have been received from women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound after operations have been advised by attending physicians.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Private Text-Book upon "Ailments Peculiar to Women" will be sent to you free upon request. Write to The Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Massachusetts. This book contains valuable information.

Catarrhal Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. Catarrhal Deafness requires constitutional treatment. HALL'S CATARRH MEDICINE is a constitutional remedy. Catarrhal Deafness is caused by an inflammation of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result. Unless the inflammation can be reduced, your hearing may be destroyed forever. HALL'S CATARRH MEDICINE acts through the blood on the mucous surface of the system, thus reducing the inflammation and restoring normal conditions.

Effects of Constipation.

Constipation causes a stoppage of the sewerage system of the body.
The poisonous refuse matter that should be carried away is retained by the system and often poisons the blood and causes numerous disorders.
No one can afford to neglect his bowels. A dose of Chamberlain's Tablets will afford relief. Avoid drastic cathartics as they take too much water out of the system and their use is likely to be followed by constipation. Adv.Ed. Brown was in Detroit, Wednes-

LINER "ADS" EFFECTIVE.

One of the most effective forms of advertising is in the "liner" or classified column where a n investment of a few cents is certain to give prompt results. Tribune liner ads are always run under the heading, "Wants, For Sale, To Rent," in the same position on the front page where they are easy to find and invariably catch the eye.
Only five cents the line for the first insertion, 2½ cents the line for each subsequent insertion. Next time you want to buy something, or have something for sale or rent, try a Tribune
liner.Don't Forget to Renew
