WIRE REPLACING OLD-TIME FENCE

Stone Walls, Split Rails and Hedges Rapidly Being Discarded by Farm Owners.

MOST IMPORTANT ELEMENTS

Essential That Ends and Corners Be Erected Firm and Solid—Posts Should Be Large Enough to Give Needed Strength.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Of all the changes wrought in the farming industry during the last century none is more noticeable than that in fencing, say specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture. All over the Eastern United States there are hundreds of miles of stone-wall fences which are monuments to the patience and thoroughness of earlier generations. Overlapping this territory, and extending west, are found fences of split rails, with their familiar weeds and berry bushes in the angles, while still further west, where there was neither wood nor stone, are seen osage orange and other hedges. These are natural productions of the time.

The farmer usually finds today that barbed-wire or woven-wire fence will best serve his ends for new construction, and at the same time cost least. Barbed wire is used on large stock ranges where the loss of one or two animals through wire cutting is not serious, but for the farmer with fine horses, or a selected herd of cattle, large mesh woven-wire fences are coming more into use.

Ends and Corners.

The manner in which the fence is erected has much to do with its service. The ends and corners are by far the most important elements of a fence. It is essential that they remain firm and solid in order to hold the fence rigid. The first thing to consider is placing the corners. The posts used should be large enough to give sufficient strength; they should be set deep enough to prevent heaving by the action of frost; they should be braced from each direction of tension by a stout rail about 12 feet long.

Metal and concrete posts are on the market, but a great many farmers cling to wooden ones. The line posts should be approximately 4 inches in diameter. Various woods are used, including osage orange, locust, red cedar, mulberry and burr oak. They should be thoroughly seasoned and the bark removed, and to get the longest life should be dipped in creosote at a temperature of about 220 degrees, long enough for the preservative to penetrate the wood. These posts are best set in the spring after the frost is out and when the ground is soft. On level ground they may be driven with a maul, but in depressions should be anchored down by 2 by 4 cross pieces spiked on the bottom of the post before setting. The distance between posts depends on the location of the fence and the numbers and kinds of stock to be turned, the average in field fences being about 20 feet.

Attaching the Wire After It Has Been Stretched.

To construct a woven-wire fence properly it is necessary to have a woven-wire stretcher, a single-wire stretcher to be used in attaching the fence to the end posts, a pair of wire cutters, a barbed-wire stretcher, a splicing tool, and hammers for stapling and fastening the wire. Barbed and woven wire may be unrolled by attaching the reel to the back of a wagon or by running a bar through the core and drawing it along with a horse.

Stretching the Wire.

After the wire is unrolled it should be drawn up to the line of posts and freed from gathering trash. The stretchers are then attached and the line wires drawn until they are so taut that they can just be pressed together. Some slack may be allowed for uneven ground. In fastening the wire on the posts the line wire should be kept as nearly horizontal as possible and allowed to follow small irregularities in the ground. The staples should permit horizontal movement of the wire, allowing the weight of the fence to come directly on the corner posts, thus taking care of contraction and expansion due to weather conditions. A woven-wire fence is not complete without a strand of barbed wire above it. This prevents the stock from reaching the top and crawling it down.

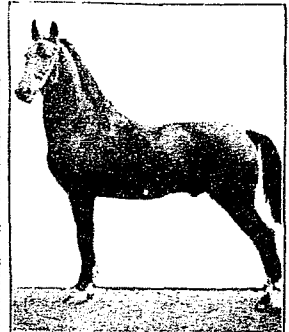

FINEST HORSES USED IN GOVERNMENT STUD

Troubadour of Willowmoor Won Ribbon at Chicago Show.

Morgan Stallion McMahon Was Made Champion at Vermont 1920 Fair—Excellent Records Made by Other Animals.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The United States Department of Agriculture's stud of Morgan horses at Middlebury, Vt., contains excellent specimens of the Morgan breed. This fact was demonstrated when Troubadour of Willowmoor, the premier stallion at the farm, won the Morgan stallion class at the 1919 International show at Chicago. At the 1920 Vermont state fair the Morgan stallion McMahon was made champion. McMahon is sired by Scotland, a stallion bred by the late Joseph Battell and for the past several years owned by the Department of Agriculture. Scotland and McMahon's dam, Beauty, are both sired by General Gates, for many years at the head of the government farm stud. McMahon is a full brother of Heather, winner of the mare championship at the Vermont state fair in 1916. The Reserve champion at the last Vermont state fair was sired by Bennington, who was bred and has since remained the property of the government. Bennington is also sired by General Gates and out of a mare purchased in Kentucky. Castor, a gelding bred by the United States Morgan horse farm, is sired by General Gates, and out of Babe, by Bob Morgan. Castor finished both the 1919 and 1920 endurance rides of 200 miles, and is still a sound, useful horse at farm work, under saddle, or in light harness.

Dolly, a registered Morgan mare that finished sixth in the 1920 endurance contest was bred on the remount plan under the supervision of the Department of Agriculture, and received her preparation at the United States Morgan horse farm. Dolly is sired by Dewey, also a Morgan horse farm product, being a full brother to Bennington.

START GARDEN EARLY

An early beginning in preparing the land and planting gardens is of much importance. Regardless of the seasons it is well to get an early start. That "planting over" may sometimes be necessary cannot be denied. But little is lost when garden land must be planted over, for the labor necessary to prepare the land is always well employed. Much is lost if early maturing vegetables are planted too late. Get your garden land ready and plant on time.

LOSS FROM INFERIOR SEEDS

Farmer Is Cautioned to Make Test in Home Germinator in Advance of Planting.

American farmers suffer losses every year through inferior seed. The United States Department of Agriculture finds, if seed is foul with weeds or if the seeds are dead, the loss cannot be made up once the crop is in the ground. If a crop is to be planted in April, discovery of poor seed in May does no good. The remedy is to test seeds in a home germinator in advance of planting.

Small samples of seed are counted out and sown in moist soil in some shallow receptacle like a kitchen plate. The plate may be kept near the stove or anywhere to maintain a temperature conducive to germination. When the plants have had time to sprout, a count of the results will give a good indication of the value of the seed.

New Ideas in All-Day Frocks

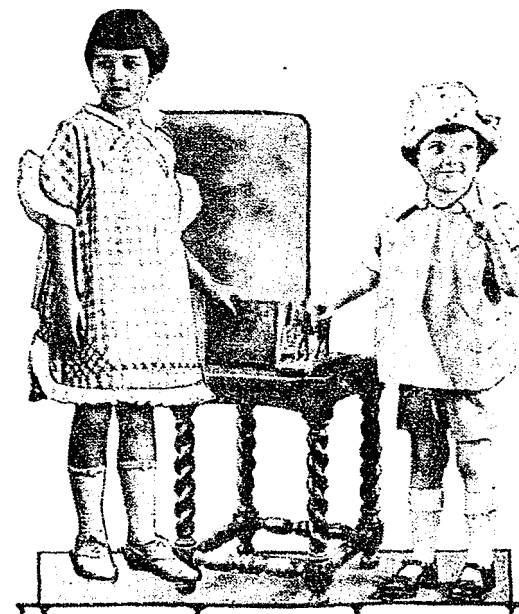

THE diverse occupations and activities of the modern woman's day make a frock suited to every hour of it about impossible of accomplishment. Therefore "all-day," as a description, is to be taken with some limitations—it really means the greater part of a day. But crepe-de-chine, Canton crepe and similar weaves have inspired creators of frocks to make models that come as near to answering for all-day wear as we are likely to ever come.

Two of these all-day frocks, as shown in the illustration, are unpretentious, but elegant models in which one recognizes many of this season's style points and either of them might be developed in crepe-de-chine, Canton crepe or other supple weaves of silk. The frock pictured at the left must be imagined in a dark color of crepe-de-chine, and a good quality. It is one of many that insure its success by refusing to depart from straight lines. The bottom of the skirt is enriched with a wide band of embroidery in silk, like the dress in color, and narrower bands finish the sleeves. The loose girde across the front, fastening with a large buckle, the very long opening at the front, the handsome lace chemise and the underlined waist line, all emphasize the adoption of good points in the new modes by the designer of this frock. Another straight-line dress asserts its approval of deep slashes forming panels in the tunic, in accordance with a much-slashed mode. For these slashes appear in suits as well as dresses, in tunics and the skirt portion of coats, among the handsomest models. Each of the slashes in the dress pictured is outlined with a border of embroidery and a narrow embroidered border defines the collar and the turned-back cuffs that finish gracefully three-quarter length sleeves. The crowning glory of this dress is presented in its wide girde, made of the material and finished with a handsome fringe, that is adjusted in the approved fashion about the waist.

Confirming Early Rumors

THE air is full of the talk of coronations for summer frocks, both for grownups and children. Rumors of morning and porch dresses of "gingham, Swiss organza and plain chambray vying with colored linens are confirmed in all the recent displays. Gingham have invaded the realm of sports clothes also; the best grades of it make handsome skirts for wear with sweaters and sweaters, for all sorts of outdoor, and it is found in company, with tulle in party, informal afternoon frocks. The feminine public appears to be newly awakened to the character and virtues of their old favorite in fabrics, and in demanding much of it. Naturally gingham lead in the review of children's clothes.

For the little folks very small checks, combining white with a color, small plaits and crossbars, in soft colors, make up into dainty frocks. White lawn, white cordelle, rick-rack braid and plain colored chambrays are called upon to furnish embellishments and cross-stitch embroidery finds itself very much at home on the checked gingham. Sprightly organza trills are as welcome as spring flowers on many little frocks and others make themselves charming with applique flowers or simple embroideries. One of the checked gingham—in a blue and white check that is larger than the average—is shown in the novel little frock pictured here. The sleeves and bottom of the skirt are split in order to display more of the ruffling and the cross-stitch and ruffling stitch, used as a finish all in plain blue cotton. (There are several variations of this model—in one of them the sleeves are not split.)

There are some lovely shades of color among the plain linens that are making their cheerful presence felt in the displays of children's clothes; they include cherry red, apricot, After blue, yellow and green, and are not monopolized by the female of the species. Small boys find themselves resplendent in colored linen suits with plain white underclothes, or in colored chambrays or heavier cottons. The suit pictured is a practical affair in which a little chap can enjoy himself this summer.

"Chick" Evans, the brilliant golfer, was talking at a golf club dinner in Chicago about Sunday golf.

"To deprive the modern player," continued Mr. Evans, "of his Sunday golf—the only day in the week that some men can play—is a great hardship."

Smiling, the great golfer added whimsically:

GEORGE AGNEW CHAMBERLAIN

COPYRIGHT THE BOBBY-MERRILL COMPANY

PAMELA THORNTON.

Synopsis.—Robert Hervey Randolph, young New York man-about-town, leaves the home of his sweetheart, Midge Van Teller, charged because of her refusal of his proposal of marriage. His income, $1000 a year, which he must surrender to a certain Miss Imogene Pamela Thornton (whom he has seen only as a small girl ten years before) is found, is not considered by the girl of his heart adequate to modern needs. In a "don't care" mood Randolph enters a taxi, unseen by the driver, and is driven to the stage door of a theater. A man he knows, Duke Deemer, induces a girl to enter the cab. Deemer, attending to follow, is pushed back by Randolph and the cab moves on. His new acquaintance tells Randolph she is a chorus girl, and has lost her position. She is in distress, even hungry, and he takes her to his apartment.

PART I—Continued.

The girl considered gravely for a moment; then her face broke into a rippling smile that swept up and settled in her eyes. She reached for a cushion, put it at her back, tucked one foot under herself, and waved the other in the same fashion as had Miss Van Teller earlier in the evening. "Now talk," she said.

"Do you like me?" asked Mr. Randolph.

She nodded her head.

"You're not afraid to be here?"

She shook her head.

"Have you ever been in a man's room before?"

She looked him straight in the eyes and made no other sign.

It was Mr. Randolph's turn to flush.

"Then," he said, "if you like me and if you're not afraid, please begin at the start and tell me all about it."

The girl's eyes fell and sought the floor. Her face slowly paled to the shade of her somber thoughts. She was no longer pretty; she was beautiful, with a revealing transparency that made her seem unfeigned, a disenchanted spirit of sincerity and truth, indubitably pure.

"I had a nurse once," she said, in a low voice, "and a wire-haired terrier, a show-dog and a darling. His name was Sport."

She raised solemn eyes to Randolph's face as though measuring his powers of understanding. "My nurse died and then, one day, I had to sell Sport; I wasn't old enough to sell myself."

She stopped speaking with an unmistakable finality. Randolph was overwhelmed by the flood of information that this slip of a girl had packed into two-score words. A life-story in four lines and a revelation of the heart thrown in for good measure! Over and above that, he had to reckon with the confirmation of a suspicion which had been slowly establishing itself in his mind that he had met her before, that not for the first time this night had those soft lips, curved for merry words, cried, "My, what a bump!" within his hearing.

So many considerations pressed to his immediate attention that he awoke to the actual present too late to stem the tide of tears that suddenly rose to the girl's eyes.

"Oh," she sobbed, "what is to become of me? I was so happy here, if you hadn't made me think!"

If anything has been said in the course of these pages to give the impression that Mr. Randolph was modeled after Joseph or even out of ice or packed with probity to the exclusion of red blood, forget it. At the sight of those tears, he slid the length of the couch to first base, fielded the girl in his arms, switched her round so that she lay across his knees, drew her face against his shoulder, and rocked her gently.

"You poor little," he said softly, "what a devil of a time you've had! But believe me when I tell you it's all over. This is the night that starts your old happy sun into the blue sky again. Don't worry."

She stopped crying and looked up into the honest face so close to her own, puzzling as to how just those words could have come from it; but the world had taught her a hard lesson in varying standards. She drew a long quivering sigh.

"If you could only wait until I love you, body and soul," she breathed.

"What on earth do you mean?" asked Mr. Randolph.

"Why, then it wouldn't be so bad—so ugly."

"I don't get you," remarked Robert Hervey.

"A man told me just a little while ago that he was making a catalogue of reasons why women give themselves," she continued. "He had eleven, and yet he was one of the 'best men I've met.' He talked to me as though he were showing me a way 'at I must travel alone.'"

"Really?" said Mr. Randolph, stifling perceptibly.

"The lowest reason of all was for cold cash," she went on, as though he had not spoken. "Then came the glitter of precious stones, and after that, silk underwear."

"Silk underwear?" exclaimed Mr. Randolph, mystified and interested in spite of himself.

"Of course you couldn't understand that," she said, "not unless you had seen some poor girl bury her face in crepe de chine and lace, trouble to try them on, and then sob because she had to wear clothes over them."

"Look here," said Mr. Randolph, shuddering at the pity of it: "we'll pass on to the next, if you don't mind."

"Curiosity comes next," resumed the girl obediently. "A woman is weak until she knows everything. Then comes a funny one that you won't understand at all. It's called 'Because.'"

"Because he had on a coat that reminded her of an old coat that a man she had loved used to wear."

"My dear girl—" protested Mr. Randolph.

"I said they weren't interesting," she reminded him dispassionately. Her eyes widened. "And now," she continued, "we go up and up—spite that stabs its own heart; the lonely soul; consuming fire, and last and greatest reason of all, just love." Her eyes glowed to some distant focus. "If all myself, my honor, my past, and my future dissolve to the single drop of a present moment in the crystal cup of love, then let me give myself to a lover's lips for, once drained, nothing will be left upon which to hang the badge of shame—nothing remain in all the world but the spirit and—and the sacrifice."

"Girl," said Mr. Randolph, crushing her to him as though he snatched her back from just beyond his grasp, "where is your mind wandering? What have you been thinking? That I was asking you to—give yourself to me?"

Her eyes came suddenly to his face. "Yes," she said, "I thought that."

He stared at her for a long silent moment, his lips wavering nervously between pity and severity. A flush swept over her face, and into her eyes came a look of fear. "You don't want me?" she whispered; then, as he did not speak: "Kiss me. I wish you to kiss me."

There was something in her insistence that clutched at his heart and bent him forward. He drew her head up slowly to meet his lips and kissed her as lightly, as impersonally as brother ever saluted sister, but far more fearfully. Immediately her body went limp in his arms, turned to a dead weight of unspiced flesh.

"It is true," she murmured, desperately. "You don't really want me and I can never love you now."

Randolph awoke to that still cry. He shook her, seized her head in both his hands, and forced her eyes to meet the blaze in his.

"You generous, careless, adorable little fool!" he growled. "Why, you're the most desirable and precious bundle of lovable charm that robber man ever trembled to hold in sacrilegious arms!"

She stared at him amazed.

"Why don't you kiss the way you talk?" she demanded.

"Because there's no reason for your desperate barrier, my dear Imogene Pamela Thornton."

In one little motion she was out of his arms, on her feet, back to the fire, head upthrown.

"How dare you—how dare you call me by that name?" She was transformed; her eyes flashed with such a light as made the blaze in his own a paltry thing. "Do you think she would be in your arms?" She asked, gulping out the words. "Vivienne Vivienne"—her lips curled in distaste at the name—"ah, yes; poor despairing thing! But Pamela Thornton! Oh, who are you? Why did you?" She dropped her face in her hands and sobbed as though her heart had broken.

Randolph did not leap to comfort her this time; he did not even watch her. With his eyes on the edges of fire that peeped from between and round her ankles, he began to talk.

"I know you; I know Sport; I know Maggie. Just once I met you all, and I've never forgotten. I couldn't." He stilled crookedly. "You and I sat down so hard together and you cried out, 'My, what a bump!' and laughed and laughed—just like tonight, back there at the stage-door of the 'Crocodile.'"

Pamela stopped crying.

"So you were that awfully nice boy," she said, disclosing tear-stained cheeks and looking him over as though she were inventing a long list of points of deterioration.

Robert Hervey Randolph, six feet tall, frocked-nosed, open-faced, blue-eyed and broad-shouldered, looked up at her almost appealingly as if his whole sun and substance were crying out to be appraised at face value but no less.

"That's me," he said rapidly. "My name is Robert Hervey Randolph. Some people call me 'Bob,' some 'Hervey,' and the sly ones say 'Randey.'"

"And I shall call you 'Mr. Randolph,'" said Miss Thornton bravely, and then broke into: "After—after I've thanked you again and—again from my heart. I'm going now."

"That's a very good guess," said Robert, smiling happily—he didn't know exactly why. "I'm the one that's going, after you promise me that you'll stay here until ten o'clock tomorrow. But before we come to that, please don't thank me ever. It's selfish, but I'd simply love to have you remember me as Bob or Hervey or, at the very worst, Randey. Won't you?"

She looked this way and that before she let her face ripple to its wondrous smile.

"I'll go as far as Randey," she conceded mischievously; then the smile went and the shadow came. "But I really can't stay here, you know."

Mr. Randolph leaped to his feet, reached her in a single stride and caught her by both wrists. "Look at me!" he said. "If you won't promise to stay here without a break till ten o'clock tomorrow and thereafter at your pleasure, I'll stay myself and hold you. Now, do you or don't you? One—two—"

"I do."

"Do what?" inquired Robert.

"I promise."

"Make yourself absolutely at home, then," he said, as he dropped her hands and turned toward the door.

"I feel like Christmas eve," said Miss Thornton meekly. "Won't you please tell me what's going to happen?"

"You've guessed it—Christmas," he answered optimistically, tossed the latch-key on the table, and left her.

She can be excused for spying upon him from the curtained window. She saw him awake the cabman, and then watched the pantomime of a long colloquy.

"Oh!" she moaned. "No wonder! The awful, awful price of those horrid clock things! Why did I let him tell it to wait?"

Presently she was amazed to see both the driver and Mr. Randolph disappear into the dark recesses of the cab and close after them its door. For twenty breathless minutes she watched, tormented by the thought that they had retired to have it out where they wouldn't be disturbed by the police. But at last they issued—both of them. Mr. Randolph proceeded to crank the car and then, walking rather strangely, went off, headed west; the driver mounted his box, threw in the clutch, and scurried to the east as though he were off to meet the morning.

"Strange doings!" thought Miss Imogene Pamela Thornton, as she turned from the window to start on a private, conducted voyage of discovery.

Strange doings, indeed, and stranger still could Imogene Pamela have heard as well as seen. This is what really happened: Mr. Randolph awoke the cabman gently but thoroughly; then he said:

"Look here: I want to buy your wagon."

"Gowan, boss; wot d'yer take me for? Here I'm freezin' most to del' for two mortal hours and a gent like you starts right in kickin' on the clock without even readin' it!"

"Shucks!" said Mr. Randolph.

"What's bittin' you? Never mind the meter-reading; here's twenty for you to forget that. Now tell me: Who owns your buzz-wagon? You?"

"Now, the Village Cab company," replied the saturnine cabman as he stuffed the twenty-dollar bill into his trousers pocket.

"Well," said Mr. Randolph, "you and I are about the same build and I've got a proposition for you. Change clothes, hand me over your cab, and take two hundred dollars to see your self to another job."

The driver showed no surprise; he contemplated the offer with half-closed eyes and dubiously working lips.

"Slim Hervey," taxi-driver.

PITTSBURG MAN MAKES WONDERFUL STATEMENT

Declares Tanlac Enabled Him to Eat Better, Sleep Better and Work Better.—Has Gained Thirty Pounds.

HARRY M. ALLEN
Of Pittsburgh, Pa.

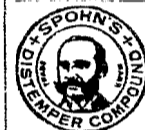

"I consider Tanlac the greatest medicine in the world, for I have actually gained 30 pounds in weight since I began taking it. It has simply filled me with new life and energy and for the first time in years I can sit down to the table and enjoy three square meals a day like other people. In fact, Tanlac has made me eat better, feel better, sleep better and work better, and I guess that's all a man can expect of a medicine."

"Before I took Tanlac, I was off 25 pounds in weight and was so badly run down I was hardly able to do my work. Nothing seemed to agree with my stomach. I would always have an uncomfortable bloated up feeling in my stomach, and although I tried many kinds of medicines, I never got relief until I took Tanlac."

"I also suffered considerably at times from Rheumatism, but this has all disappeared. In fact, this wonderful medicine has made a new man out of me in every way. I feel years younger and can do as much work as in any day of my life."

"Of course, I am only too glad to give you my testimonial because I want other people who are suffering as I did to take this medicine and get relief."

The above remarkable statement was made by Harry M. Allen, residing at 1000 Saint Martin Street, Pittsburgh, Pa., a well known employee of the Oliver Iron & Steel Company of that city. Mr. Allen is a well known member of the United Presbyterian Church and is highly respected by all who know him. Tanlac is sold by leading druggists everywhere.—Adv.

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It

Applicants for Insurance Often Rejected.

Judging from reports from druggists who are constantly in direct touch with the public, there is one preparation that has been very successful in overcoming these conditions. The mild and healing influence of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its remarkable record of success.

An examining physician for one of the prominent Life Insurance Companies, in an interview on the subject, made the astonishing statement that one reason why so many applicants for insurance are rejected is because kidney trouble is so common to the American people, and the large majority of those whose applications are declined do not even suspect that they have the disease. It is on sale at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes, medium and large.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing be sure and mention this paper.—Adv.

Catarthal Deafness Cannot Be Cured by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. Catarrhal Deafness requires constitutional treatment. HALE'S CATARRH MEDICINE is a constitutional remedy. Catarrhal Deafness is caused by an inflammation of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or infected hearing, and when it is entirely blocked, deafness is the result. Unless the inflammation can be reduced, your hearing may be destroyed forever. HALE'S CATARRH MEDICINE acts through the blood on the mucous surface of the system, thus reducing the inflammation and restoring normal conditions.

SUFFERING?

Most of the pain we suffer is unnecessary. Why continue to endure it—to sacrifice your youth, beauty, and enjoyment to it?

The combination of simple harmless medicines found in Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills is especially effective in relieving pain without bad after-effects.

For more than thirty-five years sufferers from headache, neuralgia, backache, toothache, sciatica and pains from other causes have found relief by taking these pills.

Why don't you try them?
