

"PLEDGE OF A LEGION"

Fine Memorial Day Sermon Delivered
On Sunday, May 29th, By Rev.
P. W. Dierberger.

Following is the Memorial Day sermon delivered on Sunday, May 29th, at the Congregational church by the pastor, Rev. P. W. Dierberger. The text is from Exodus, twelfth chapter and fourteenth verse; "And this day shall be unto you a memorial; and ye shall keep it a feast to the Lord throughout your generations; ye shall keep it a feast by an ordinance forever."

This text and chapter tells of the institution of the Jewish Passover. It was a memorial in celebration of a great deliverance. The Jewish people were to observe it annually. It was full of religious meaning and it became one of the foremost holy days of the Jewish year.

Though ours is not a specifically religious memorial day, as was theirs, yet the words of this text may well be applied to us in view of our purpose to observe tomorrow, our National Holy Day.

This annual tribute of flowers is certainly a very beautiful custom and one we hope will never cease to be observed. It will not affect the dead, but it will greatly affect and bless the living. Flowers are a most exquisite materialization of God's ideas. He has woven them as embroidery for Nature's garments, but most of all to furnish man with a token of his love. It was certainly a very beautiful thought born in the heart of a woman, and first practiced by women, of strewn the graves of the soldier dead with these beautiful tokens of love. Memorial Day is a day of love, the day when we recount the valorous deeds of those who sleep in the silent camp.

Tribute to G. A. R.
For you, The Grand Army of the Republic, we have the profoundest reverence, and the keenest sense of appreciation. For what we are in the greatness and glory of a United Republic, we owe to you. The championship of our peace was upon you, and with your stripes we have been healed. Your vicarious sufferings have delivered us from the pangs of national death. You carried the spear that we might carry the pruning hook. You yielded the sword that we might guide the plowshare. In observing this Memorial Day we observe in you a more practical, tangible, real memorial of the valor and heroism of the hardships and self-sacrifice and the unstinted patriotism which this day commemorates. You endured hardships as good soldiers and without faltering; you faced the enemy's shot and shell so that the flag of our country might not be rent in twain. When Abraham Lincoln called for men to pluck our glorious flag from the dust and plant it again upon ramparts from which it had been hurled by ruthless hands, you leaped to the front and cried, "Here am I, send me!" Out of the muck and mire the brave boys in blue lifted the soiled emblem of our Nation's glory and purging it of its stain and shame in the crimson fountain of their own blood, gave it back unrent and unsullied to a reunited people.

Listen To The Call of The Flag.
Memorial Day is a day when we listen good to the call of our flag. This good flag is the emblem of a Republic that has never been known to retreat. Why should it retreat? The Republic is the highest form of civilization and civilization must advance. The Republic's young men are the most virile and unwarlike of the world and they part for enterprise worthy of their powers. The Republic's preparation is the self discipline of more than a century and that preparedness has found its task. The Republic's opportunity is as noble as its strength and that opportunity is here. The Republic's duty is as sacred as its opportunity is real and Americans never desert their duty.

So we follow the flag for it is the only flag that has never known defeat. Where the flag leads we follow for we know that the hand that bears it onward is the unseen hand of God. We follow the flag and independence is ours. We follow the flag and nationality is ours. We follow the flag and tyranny falls and barbarism is subdued. We follow the flag at Trenton and Valley Forge, at Saratoga and upon the Crimée sea. At Bunker's Point and Chancellorsville, at Gettysburg and Missionary Ridge, at Santiago and Maru Bay, in France and Flanders, at Chateau Thierry and St. Mihiel, and everywhere and always it means a larger liberty, nobler opportunity and a greater happiness. So today we pledge anew our devotion to the flag, knowing that if God leads, and we follow the flag, the Republic shall never retreat.

"Wave, Starry Flag, on high!
Float in the sunny sky,
Stream over the stormy tide!
For every stripe of saffron hue
And every star in the field of blue
Ten thousand of the brave and true
Have laid them down and died."

New Meaning of Memorial Day.
But Memorial Day has taken on a new meaning. It has grown in significance by virtue of the fact that we have passed through another war. Our young men have been called upon to consecrate themselves at the altar of our country. Out of this last war there has been given to our nation a new organization, The American Legion, whose purpose it is to perpetuate all that has made America great and glorious. The Legion's Pledge to America is contained in the preamble to its constitution. "For God and Country, we associate ourselves together for the following purposes: To uphold and defend the constitution of the United States of America; to maintain law and order; to foster and perpetuate a one hundred per cent Americanism; to preserve the memories and incidents of our association in the great war; to inculcate a sense of individual obligation to the community, state and nation; to combat the autocracy of both the classes and the masses; to make right the master of might; to promote peace and good will on earth; to safeguard and transmit to posterity the principles of justice, freedom and democracy; to consecrate and sanctify our comradeship by our devotion to mutual helpfulness."

The Legion Pledge.
It is a pledge to maintain the American Spirit. America is not the name of so much territory. It is a living spirit, born in travail, grown in the rough school of bitter experience, a living spirit which has purpose, pride and conscience, knows why it wishes to live and to what end; knows how it comes to be respected of the world, and hopes to retain that respect by living on with the light of Lincoln's love of man and Roosevelt's love of duty as its old and new testament. It is more important that this American shall live than that we Americans shall live. The American Legion promises to perpetuate this America.

To be good Americans we must love liberty. To love liberty is to value it properly. The whole foundation of America is liberty. Liberty is more precious than dollars. At least four of our wars were fought for liberty: the Revolutionary war to win self-government; the Civil war to win liberty for the slaves; the Spanish-American war to win liberty for Cuba; and the World war to win liberty for the world.

It is a pledge to inculcate a sense of individual obligation to the community, state and nation. It is a pledge to promote peace and good will on earth. Favoring the naval holiday we should urge it with vigor upon our law makers at Washington. So long as there are armies and armaments there will be war. I cannot agree to disarmament by example, but I do favor disarmament by agreement among the nations.

It is a pledge to mutual helpfulness. Helpfulness is one of the fruits of Christianity. Christ was the helper, concerning whom it was said, "He went everywhere doing good."

"THE KID."

"The Kid," which will be the attraction at the Princess theatre next week is the most striking venture of Charlie Chaplin into the field of six-reel attractions. The production is about three times the length of the comedian's previous pictures and is considerably more than three times funnier than anything he has done. The story has a real plot, and the humor is caused by situations in a real story and is doubly laughable because of the comic antics Chaplin can always be counted upon in any situation.

The story carries so much delicious humor that it would be a comedy hit, but with Chaplin in the role of the foster father of "The Kid" the production is the fastest laugh-sustainer that has ever been issued in the form of motion picture. It is deservedly designated as First National's six reels of joy.

Do not depend on anyone else to tell you about it. You won't be able to understand them because of the laughing memories it will cause. Adv.

What Henry Ford Says About Machine Power Farming

"In the tractor the farmer now has a machine in which is harnessed one of the most adaptable, efficient, economical sources of power in the world—the internal combustion engine.

"The tractor will multiply the productive capacity of each individual farm worker from three to four times over.

"It will put the farmer on a par with the city manufacturer. It will put his produce-producing factory—for that is what a farm is—on an efficient production basis.

"It will enable each worker to earn so much more that he can be paid more and still leave a greater profit for the man who hires him. It will enable the farmer to work fewer hours in the day, giving him more time to enjoy life.

"I believe the tractor will make farming what it ought to be—the most pleasant, the most healthful, the most profitable business on earth."

ANOTHER WOMAN ESCAPES

Mrs. McCumber Avoided a Serious Operation by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in Time

Georgetown, Ill.—"After my first baby was born I suffered so with my left side that I could not walk across the floor unless I was all humped over, holding to my side. I doctored with several doctors but found no relief and they said I would have to have an operation. My mother insisted on my taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I soon found relief. Now I can do all my own work and it is the Vegetable Compound that has saved me from an operation. I cannot praise your medicine too highly and I tell all of my friends and neighbors what the Compound did for me."—Mrs. MARGARET MCCUMBER, 27 S. Franklin St., Georgetown, Illinois.

Mrs. McCumber is one of the unnumbered thousands of housewives who struggle to keep about their daily tasks, while suffering from ailments peculiar to women with backaches, stomachs, headaches, bearing-down pains and nervousness, and if every such woman should profit by her experience and give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial they would get well.

An Adventure Romance

BY GEORGE AGNEW CHAMBERLAIN

PART IV.

The Ascent to Mars.

When Mr. Robert Hervey Randolph, alias Slim Hervey, chauffeur, also Patrick O'Reilly, ex-driver of the Village Cab Company, No. 1894, studied the vehicle, disconcerted to the curb in front of the Poppy Club and, as a result of his criminal negligence, in conjunction with Miss Margaret Chamberlain, Randolph's respectable position as chauffeur, he had that young lady to the middle of the sidewalk on her hands and knees, he helped her to get on a spontaneous impulse to help her to her feet and administer every kind of first aid that the occasion seemed to demand.

Two considerations, however, shied from the double-barreled temptations of Edith's and Robert's light on the wheel, as it were, and deflected his flight from west to east with a sharp turn due south at the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Sixth avenue. In the first place, out of the corner of his eye he had seen his one-time friends, Mr. Neutron, Mr. Verries and Mr. Berry descending the shallow cliff from steps in an avalanche; in the second place, he suddenly recollected that Miss Thornton was an heiress, high above his present station and intent, as he had gathered from between the lines in various advertisements in the local press referring to the location of his person, on thinking and otherwise recompensing him for turning to the right in a matter of ten thousand dollars a year, unearned increment.

As he gazed for one too brief second down into the pleading eyes and adorably eager face of this lovely vision on her hands and knees, which it seemed unbelievable he had once held in his arms, only the oft-repeated favorite poem of his nurse:

I could not love thee, dear, so much Loved I not honor more.

kept him from facing the avalanche of ridicule and giving the eternally searching Diogenes with his lantern a run for his money. As previously stated, it was not to be. Mr. Randolph turned from the waiting arms of the sweetest temptation ever resisted by man and made his swift way to the subterranean of Mr. Tourke O'Shaughnessy, foreman-manager of the Village Cab company.

"Tourke," said Mr. Randolph, "I'm through. Smashed up the two off wheels of my wagon on the curb in front of the Poppy Club. Dock me thirty, please, and make out my pay check."

"Through, Slim? Whadda ya mean?" said Mr. O'Shaughnessy. "Think I'm goin' to sack you for a skid on a day like this? Pay for your fun, kid, but take another wagon."

Robert Randolph, alias Slim Hervey, shook his head.

"You don't understand," he said.

"I—I've lost my nerve."

"Lost your nerve?" gasped Mr. O'Shaughnessy. "Whadda ya mean by tellin' me a lie like that? Come on, now; draw a map! Did ye kill the insider?"

"Oh, no," said Slim; "that's just it. I mean, the young lady is very much all right."

"I begin to get you," murmured Tourke. "Skirt on your truck, eh?"

A look of pity followed by one of loyalty crept into his eyes. "Look here, Slim," he continued. "I know that tryin' to trick a female is like playin' hockey with a stick of dynamite, but we got a lot of high cards to draw to. First shot out of the box, all the boys here is for you. Then there's your friend, the Force. I want to tell you, Slim, you're the first driver I ever had that could flatten out a cop on a busy day and make him think it was a joke."

"Thanks," said Mr. Randolph, but shook his head sadly.

"Now, listen," resumed Mr. O'Shaughnessy. "I'm goin' to have the boys up here as they come in and put 'em on. In the internet, you slip out for a makeup. Get Sally Palmer round the corner to tune your face down to the color of your freckles, do a little job on yer eyebrows, an' fix a deep scar in the upper lip of yer speakin' tube. Get me?"

Mr. Randolph's widely placed blue eyes narrowed in an effort to examine the proposition shrewdly from all angles, and the light of hope was just beginning to dawn across the trouble in his honest face when there came a sharp knock on the door, followed promptly by the rattle of the loose knob and the unceremonious entry of one birdlike, bald-headed, dapper corporation lawyer and two corpulent gum-shoe plainclothes men.

"Yere! Wat the—" exclaimed the outraged Mr. O'Shaughnessy.

The legal light paid him no heed and advanced on the fast-witting Slim Hervey with outstretched hand.

"Interfere!" he cried hoarsely. "My dear boy, I'm glad to see you!"

"Tourke, the old bank, Slim," warned Mr. O'Shaughnessy. "The bank that they're tryin' to serve papers on yer. Now, gent, show yer warrant or I'll call the boys and you take the consequences."

"I guess it's all right, Tourke," said Slim weakly. "They aren't going to pull me, exactly."

"I don't care whether they think they're goin' to pinch you or not," murmured Mr. O'Shaughnessy, fixing malignant eyes on the two heavy-lidded forces of the small lawyer. "I never did like the smell of fat. Suddenly he roared: 'Hey! Boy!'"

The two bulls, strayed into impalpable pastures, turned, stepped cat-footed to the door, and took the flight of steps in three. They cannot be blamed, for they had recognized in Mr. O'Shaughnessy the man who had once been arrested for pushing over with one hand a Ford that had crowded him.

"Now, Robert," said the legal personage, apparently quite oblivious of the desertion of his supporters, "I just want to talk with you. May I sit down?"

"Certainly, Mr. Milgums," said Robert, apathetically.

"Excuse me," murmured Mr. O'Shaughnessy. "Did I or didn't I get the name correct?"

"I beg your pardon, Tourke," said Robert. "Mr. Robert Milgums; Mr. Tourke O'Shaughnessy." He pronounced it "O'Shaughnessy" to the delight of the owner's ears, long accustomed to the correct intonation of the exotic patronymic.

"I did hear correct," said Mr. O'Shaughnessy, as he rose and tipped out from the room. "I leave you."

"Tourke," said Mr. Randolph, "I'm through."

gents to your family affairs," he added from the door, his eyes drinking a last view of the brain king he had dared to call a runt.

During the next half-hour, Mr. Milgums delivered himself of an assorted lot of special pleading that he could have sold on the market almost any day for fifty thousand dollars, but the sole judge and object of his efforts sat sat swinging one putted leg in midair, as though fanning aside the valuable streams of golden words, and continued puffing at one cigarette after another, each lighted from the butt of its predecessor.

"It's no use, Mr. Milgums," said Robert, at last. "The truth is, and you know it, that a meeting between myself and Pam—Miss Thornton, at the present time and under the exceptional conditions, could only bring about complications beyond the capability of any one of us to handle. Her proposal that she divide her income with me is so absurd that I am amazed at your importuning at your hardhearted in even mentioning it."

Mr. Milgums wiped his brow for the first time in many years.

"I don't mind you calling me 'impudent,' Robert," he said mockingly. "Call me anything you please. Only"—and his voice rose gradually to a surprising volume—"don't forget that I promised one of the dearest, most unspoiled, lovable, and wholly adorable young persons that it's ever been my privilege to assure of the impossible that I would bring you to her, and by the holy mackerel, I will! I have to hold you by one ear with my teeth."

Mr. Randolph took his latest cigarette from his mouth during this strictly illegal peroration, and allowed his lips to spread into a broad smile.

"Mr. Milgums," he said, "I always did like you; now I've got a deeper feeling. They call it love. I admit to the human end of you that the only thing that keeps me from rushing straight away to call on the lady you have so accurately described is the fact that I haven't money and she has."

"But what about the job I offered you?" interjected Mr. Milgums.

"I was coming to that," said Mr. Randolph. "I'm not keen on charity from you any more than from Miss Thornton, but more than that—I wouldn't bury myself in your stuffy old skyscraper at any cash price known to man. In the first place, you belong to the most ungrateful of all professions, and, in the second, you make money too slowly."

"Make money too slowly?" gasped Mr. Milgums, forgetting today and tomorrow and their affairs for the first time in three weeks, and remembering, for a change, and with a twinge of his hardened conscience, the size of his fat retainer. "Ha!"

But Mr. Randolph allowed him no time for indulgence in vocal mirth.

"That's what I said," he continued, unmoved. "To meet Miss Thornton face to face and unshamed, I feel that I must have a capital of at least a hundred thousand."

He said his mind in thought for a moment. When he raised it again, the widely placed blue eyes were closed. So was the saddle of faint freckles across his nose; so was the guarantee of honesty across his open face, but superimposed over all was a new look of sudden resolution.

"You will please tell Miss Thornton," he resumed, "that I shall do myself the honor of calling on her one week from the day after tomorrow at four in the afternoon. There is a condition, however, and it is that I be left alone without any mental reservation by her and you and your agents during the intervening time."

"One hundred thousand in nine days," murmured Mr. Milgums skeptically. His great brain hung poised in thought for some time, but finally he nodded his acceptance of Robert's terms of capitulation and promptly left the room.

Mr. O'Shaughnessy presently returned and found his favorite driver sunk in strenuous reverie.

"Well, Mr.—or—Robert, are you goin' back to the folks?"

Mr. Randolph raised his head and smiled.

"Call me 'Slim,' please, Tourke—'Slim Hervey,' for awhile yet. I've decided to accept your offer of another wagon for a week or two—that is, if you realize you'll be doing me just a thin, unornamental favor."

"Sure, kid!" said Mr. O'Shaughnessy, flushing, as does all his kind on the verge of gratitude. "That's all right."

"Thanks a lot!" said Mr. Randolph. "And do you mind if I take the Wall Street beat for a while? I need money."

"Why, Slim, what's got ye? Ye know that's the rottenest short-run stand in town. Now, of it's money you want—"

Mr. O'Shaughnessy reached slowly down into his capacious trousers pocket, his eyes, meanwhile, studying Mr. Randolph's physiognomy with a shrewd glint that had forestalled many a clever attempt at a touch in years gone by.

"Yes, money," said Mr. Randolph pensively; "a hundred thousand dollars' worth."

Tourke's face underwent a startling change, as though it had tumbled down a whole ladder of emotions until it landed with a jolt on a solid platform of infinite pity.

"Take any heat ye like, boy, while ye can hold the wheel," he said, at the same time jamming the brakes down on his too generous hand. "An' be sure your ol' friend Tourke ain't goin' to forget to come to the hospital to see you"—he finished almost with a sob—"often."

For five restless, heart-breaking days, Mr. Randolph and his cab were at the beck and call of every short-horn curb-broker that wanted his friends and customers to see him start away from the scene of others' labors in a taxi. The vast assurance that had graced him when he allowed Mr. Milgums to infer that nine days was plenty in which to pick up a hundred thousand dollars and that he also flung a remark made some weeks before to a Miss Madge Van Toller to the effect that the great thing nowadays was to avoid having too much money had been gradually worn to a ragged frazzle.

Mr. Randolph was on the point of trying to persuade himself that he was giving way to the too constant strain rather than to any defect in his philosophy of the easiness of wealth when an excited and hatless elevator boy rushed up and said:

"Here, youse! Mr. Emboupoint Morgan's car has froze. Ring your ol' fire alarm."

Mr. Randolph almost knocked over a fare that was attempting to get aside, "Engaged!" he growled, as he stooped to "turn her over."

Seventeen-Pound Trout?

Trouit vary greatly within the species, according to the nature of the waters they inhabit. The variations being manifested in their color, size, form and fin development, says the American Forestry Magazine. As to their weight, Mr. Hallock, a famous American fisherman, claims to have known of one that weighed seventeen pounds, while as a rule they do not run over three or four pounds.

GOOD ROADS

REVENUE FOR ROAD BUILDING

Registration and License Fees in 1930 Amounted to $102,031,106—Increase in Cars.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A total of 9,211,235 automobiles, including commercial vehicles, were registered last year in the 48 states and District of Columbia, according to figures compiled by the bureau of public roads of the United States Department of Agriculture in a study of revenue available for road-building purposes. There were also registered a total of 228,145 motorcycles. The registration and license fees, including those for chauffeurs, operators and dealers, amounted to $102,031,106. As compared with 1929, the data for 1930 revealed an increase of 22 per cent, or 1,615,824 automobiles. This increase alone adds but 4 per cent of being equal to the total registrations of the United States six years ago.

In 1920 in the state of New York alone the number of automobiles registered, including commercial vehicles, exceeded the total cars registered in the whole of the United States in 1910. Furthermore, the revenues derived from registration in the state of New York in 1920 were about equal to the entire registration revenues of the United States for 1913.

The use made of revenues has changed with the passing of years. In 1900 the total registrations were approximately 48,000 cars, paying a gross revenue of about $193,000. (Arizona in 1920 paid approximately this amount.) In 1900 the gross registration revenues were equal to less than three-tenths of 1 per cent of the total rural road and bridge expenditures for that year.

The registration revenues in 1920 were equal to about 25 per cent of the total rural road and bridge expenditures for the calendar year 1919. In 1900 practically none of the motor-vehicle revenues was applied to road maintenance or construction, while in 1920 56 per cent, or a total of $97,907,100.00, was used for this purpose. The remaining 4 per cent not applied to road work was expended very largely for number plates and in carrying out the provisions of the motor vehicle registration laws in the several states. Of the total amount applied to road work 79 per cent, or $77,531,582.57, was expended under the control or supervision of the several state highway departments.

FARMER AND GOOD HIGHWAYS

Improved Roads Make Farm Only a Suburb and Land Has Increased Greatly in Value.

The biggest booster for good roads in the country today is the farmer. A few years ago he felt that the portion of his taxes used in the construction of important highways represented a benefit only to the motoring tourist and the city automobile owner. The farmer argued that he was paying for their pleasures, and the result was a superstition against the good roads movement, which, unfortunately, has not as yet been entirely overcome in some sections of the country.

Now, however, when the farmer finds that his land has trebled in value; when the merchandise for which he has telephoned in the morning can be delivered by noon of the same day; when the market for his own produce is brought hours nearer; when the winter and its following spring thaw possess no terrors for him—all this because of the improved highway which makes his farm only a suburb, as it were, of the nearest city—he naturally becomes a hard-working and hard-voting enthusiast for good roads.—Lester's.

HIGHWAY COSTS ARE HIGHER

Expense of Road Construction in 1920 Twice as Much as in 1917, According to Expert.

Every kind of road cost about twice as much to build in 1920 as it did in 1917, according to the chief of the bureau of public roads, United States Department of agriculture, and highway construction suffered more than any other class of work through railroad congestion, strikes, labor troubles and material shortages.

SEES FRANCE KINGDOM AGAIN

Scarcely Also Points Out That Present Leaders Are Reincarnation of Country's Great Men.

Considerable attention is being paid to the revelations of Marguerite Volz, who predicts that France will have a king in 15 years, and that the divinity will appear in France, observes the Living Age. M. Clemenceau is a reincarnation of Robespierre, and M. Millerand of Louis XIV. Maurice Barres was once Lanton. Debussy was not only Mozart, but also Michael Angelo and Peter the Great. Paul Adam, the fine French writer who recently died, was, in former life, Socrates.

Regularly Mlle. Volz summons to her the great men of history—presumably those who are not reincarnated—such as Plinius, Homer and Plutarch. She is compelled to spend 12,000 francs a year for candles and incense in order to preserve the right vibratory atmosphere which makes possible these revelations. Sans commentaires.

OBJECT LESSON WAS SPOILED

One Small Pupil at Least Misunderstood Just What Teacher Had Intended to Impress.

The fifth-grade teacher was fond of the young principal and it was often rumored that he was engaged to her. They managed to keep it a secret from the children, yet most of them were suspicious. One way she showed her affection was by the way she co-operated with him in all his pet schemes. So when he started a movement against smoking she promptly began to help him out.

First she demanded that all her boys who smoked bring to her all the tobacco they had in their pockets. They did it and it was a goodly supply. Taking the box which held it, she said to one of the boys, "You take this down to Mr. T—"

A little boy in the rear of the room piped out: "Teacher, my sister, Bess, she's goin' to give her beau tobacco for his birthday, too."

"Ole," said the preacher to the Swedish bridegroom-to-be, "do you take Hilda Sorgeson for your lawful wedded wife, for better or for worse?" "Oh, well," replied Ole gloomily, "Aye s'pose Aye get little of each."—The American Legion Weekly.

Delia through Clinton and evening last week we found the streets in that pretty village dusty with a too liberal coating of road oil. We presume that road oiling has its advantages, but we can't say we fancy that method of dust laying. We prefer the chloride flakes used here, and we note that the two highway between Lansing and Detroit has been so treated during the past few weeks. To our mind, chloride is not nearly so dirty as oil, and quite as effective.

Non-Parallel Wheels

When wheels are not parallel (a common fault, especially of front wheels,) tires must be dragged over the ground, so to speak, since they revolve at an angle to the direction in which the car is travelling.

Ordinary tires wear away rapidly as a result of such abuse, but Michelin stand up so long that only carelessness can account for failure to detect the trouble before the tire is vitally affected. This is due to the greater toughness, thickness and breadth of the Michelin Tread. Come in and compare Michelin with other tires in these important points.
